LOSSES BY RELIGION.

The following is a well authenticated fact. An aged couple in the vicinity of London, who in early part of life were poor, but who by the blessings of God upon their industry, enjoyed a comfortable independency, in their old age, were called upon by a Christian minister, who solicited their contributions to a charity. The old lady was disposed to make out some excuse and to answer in the negative, both for her husband and herself: and therefore replied, "Why sir, we have lost a deal by religion since we began; my husband knows that very well. Have we not, Thomas?" Thomas, after a long and solemn pause replied, "Yes, Mary, we have lost a deal by our religion! I have lost a deal by my religion. Before I had got religion, Mary, I had got a water pail in which I carried water, and that you know, I lost many years ago. And then I had an old slouched hat, a patched old coat, and mended shoes and stockings; but I have lost them also long ago. And Mary, you know, that poor as I was, I had a habit of getting drunk and quarrelling with you; and that you know I have lost. An I then I had a burdened conscience and a wicked heart; and then I had ten thousand guilty feelings and fears—but all are lost—comepletely lost, & like a millstone cast into the depths of the sea. And Mary, you have been a loser too, though not so great a loser as myself. Before we got religion, Mary, you had got a washing tray in which you washed for hire—and God Almighty blessed your industry. But since we got religion, you have lost your washing tray—and you had got a gown and bonnet much the worse for wear, though they were all you had to wear—but you have lost them long ago—and you had many an aching heart concerning me, at times, but those you happily have lost. And I could even wish that you had lost as much as I have lost, and even more; for what we lose by our religion, Mary, will be our eternal gain" I need not add that the preacher did not go away without substantial proof that both Thomas and Mary, deemed their losses or religion their most weighty obligations to the goodness of Almighty God.—*Ct. On Every One Minding His Own Business.

"Mind your own business," is an expression very often in use, and not unfrequently it would be as properly applied to the speaker as to the person to whom it is addressed.

Sometimes it is spoken very opportunely, and sometimes it had much better be withheld; for those who neglect their own business are not exactly the proper persons to correct others for disregarding theirs. Yet still, without reflecting whether we are faulty in this respect or not, we are all too ready to cry out to those who intrude upon, or among us, "Mind your own business;" for true it is that we see a small hole in our neighbour's coat plainer than we do a large one in our own.

We are, indeed, most of us a great deal disposed to neglect our own business, as well as to intermeddle in the business of others

Whenever we spread an evil report, the truth of which is doubtful, but which must by its publicity do some one an injury, we are travelling out of our way to do mischief.

"Beware of such aspersing tongue
As some weak people do,
But ever hope that story wrong
Which ought not to be true."

It would be a better deed to hide a fault than to publish it. It would be better to correct failings of our own than to make known those of our neighbours; therefore, by spreading an evil report, we are not minding our own business.

Whenever we engage in quarrels, undertake to settle differences without being asked, or waste our time in pursuing idle and visionary projects; in each and all these cases, we are not minding our own business.

Every one has business of some kind or other, which he ought to attend to; and whether it be a family, a town, a country, or a kingdom, it is sure to be under better management when every member of it minds his own business.

When is it that we are dissatisfied with ourselves? that our affairs get into confusion? that we are behind-hand in what we have undertaken to do? Why, when we have been idle, thoughtless, or foolish; when, in short, we have not minded our own business.

Look at the world around you; there are, doubtless, many instances wherein sickness, accident, and misfortune, have brought down the richest, the wisest, and the most industrious members of the community to poverty: but if all those who are in circumstances of comfort were to be placed on one side, and all those who have been reduced to rags, want, and misery, on the other, the greater part of the distresses of the latter, were they inquired into, would be found owing to this—that they have not minded their own business.

Depend upon it, it is an excellent thing to mind your own business; by doing this you may be more respected, more useful, more benevolent, and ten times more happy. Do this, and things will go on right; neglect it, and every thing will go on wrong. If you have any love to your neighbour, or any respect for yourself, mind your own business.

Drunkards, and gamesters, and libertines, are sure, one day or other, to be overtaken by the dreadful effects of their folly, intemperance, and wickedness; but is this to be wondered at? No: it is the natural consequence of not minding their own business.

How is it likely that if we do not mind our own business, any one will mind it for us? If neither we nor other people attend to our affairs, disorder and ruin will soon be written legibly upon them; and whether we read it or not, disorder and ruin will inevitably follow. Show me a man who does not mind his own business, and I will show you one who will soon be in trouble

But do you ask me if it be wrong to do a kindness to another? to bear the burden of the weak? to watch by the bed-side of a sick neighbour? to relieve the destitute? to instruct the ignorant? to warn the careless? and to read the Bible to the blind and unlearned? I reply, that is a part of your business to do these things according to your ability; for it is the business of every one to do what he can for the glory of God, and for the welfare of mankind; therefore, in doing these things you are really minding your own business.

It ought to be considered by every man to be a part of his business to make others happy. "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly;" and a Christian man cannot but feel interested in the temporal and spiritual prosperity of his neighbours. You may reprove your neighbour, encourage him, serve him, and love him, and yet mind your own business.

Fail not, then, to follow His bright example, who when he was on earth "went about doing good," Acts x. 38; remembering that it is your business on earth to prepare for heaven. Employ every talent you possess usefully; pray in the Saviour's name fervently; read the Scripture frequently, and confide in its promises firmly. Do these things, and you shall not fail to find in life and death, in time and eternity, the advantages of having minded your own business.

A HAPPY DISPOSITION finds materials for enjoyment every where—in the city, or in the country—in society or in solitude—in the theatre, or the forest—in the hum of the multitude, or the silence of the mountains, are all alike materials of reflection and elements of pleasure. It is one mode of pleasure to listen to the music of Don Giovanni: in a theatre, glittering with light, and crowded with elegance and beauty; it is another to glide at sunset over the bosom of a lonely lake, where no sounds disturb the silence, but the motion of the boat through the waters. A happy disposition derives pleasure from both; a discontented temper from neither.

ADVANTAGES OF SCIENCE.—Mr. Holbrook, of Medway, the celebraten bell-founder, who has put up a clock upon the Baptist church in this town the present week, gave us a little incident of his life, which is worth relating, if for nothing more than to show the importance of a knowledge of chemistry. An immense pile of cinders and dross had accumulated near his foundry, which was supposed to be entirely worthless, and was used to fill up stone walls, &c. A foreigner who happened to be in town, examined the pile one day, and offered $100 for it. So large a price excited Mr. H's. suspicions, that the cinders might contain valuable metal, and he declined selling it. The man then offered $200, which of course confirmed his opinion, and after a little parley, the stranger acknowledged that he was acquainted with a process by which valuable metal might be extracted from the cinders, which he offered to divulge for a small compensation. A furnace and apparatus were constructed according to his direction, and when the whole pile was run through, the mass of neglected rubbish yielded a nett profit of thirteen thousand dollars. So much for knowing how to do it.—Lynn Freeman.

LIGHT DIET.—A doctor advised one of his patients to be very abstemious in his mode of living, and to take nothing for a certain time but barley water. What was his astonishment, one day, when he entered the room of the aforesaid patient, at finding him discussing the merits of a bottle of Scotch ale.

"Did I not tell you," said the physician, "to take nothing but barley water?"

"I don't know what you call barley water, "said the patient, "I but call it, ure barley water."

Remarkable Rescue from the Grave.

The following instance of Providential interference is inscribed on a tombstone at Green Bay:—

"DIEU SUR TOUT."

"Here lies the body of Lewis Galdy, Esq. who departed this life at Fort Hoya, the 22d of December, 1736, aged 80. He was born at Montpelier, in France, but left that country for his religion, and came and settled in this island, where he was swallowed up in the great earthquake in the year 1692, and by the providence of God, was by another shock thrown into the sea, and miraculously saved by swimming, until a boat took him up. He lived many years after in great reputation, beloved by all who knew him, and much lamented at his death."

The Life Hat.—At Dover, a novel exhibition took place at the mouth of the harbour, when hats of the above description were given by a gentleman of this town to some ten or twelve fishermen, who jumped into the water with them to test their utility. The men remained in the water about a quarter of an hour, rolling about like so many porpoises in perfect security, to the manifest amusement of a considerable concourse of the inhabitants and visiters, who had assembled on the pier heads to witness the exhibition.

The hat is attached to the person of the wearer by a ribbon, and is taken hold of by him, and held or fastened under his chin, or over his chest, and thus he floats with the greatest ease. —Kent Herald.

ANECDOTE OF JOHN ADAMS. We find in Whitney's History of the town of Quincy, Mass., the following anecdote of the boyhood of the elder Adams, which may provoke a smile, as well as illustrate the economy and simplicity of those early times in New England. The public school in Quincy was taught for many years by a Mrs. Belcher—"It was custom with her to carry her corn to mill herself, except when some one of her scholars lent her a helping hand. John Adams, (one of the number) afterwards President of the United States, was a favorite among the rest, and when he carried the corn, she gave him as a reward three coppers, and charged him at the same time to keep his money to buy land with. It is unnecessary to add how well he profited by early instruction."

PERILOUS SITUATION.

Dr. Judd, of Honolulu, who accompanied the Scientific Corps of the Exploring Squadron in their excursions on Hawaii, had a most wonderful escape from an awful death. He had descended into the crater of Kilauea, to obtain some specimens of the liquid lava. Not succeeding in procuring any at the great lake, (as it is called,) he approached one of the smaller ones, or chimneys, and descended a few feet into it. While gathering specimens, the lake became suddenly active, and discharged a jet of lava into the air far above his head, but which most fortunately fell in the opposite direction from him. He then commenced making his way out, before another should follow, but the ascent was far more difficult than the descent. He became alarmed, and called on five natives who had accompanied him to the spot for assistance. The heat had become so great that they were frightened and retreated with the exception of one man, who threw himself flat upon the bank, and reaching over his right hand, enabled the doctor to reach the top. But before he reached the brink, his clothes was burnt by hot air, and he would have been scalded had he not been protected by woollen garments. The native in stooping over, had his face and hands blistered. They both had barely time to leave the spot, when the lake filled up and poured out a stream of liquid lava.

Great Eruption of the Volcano of Kilauea, Sandwich Islands.

On the 30th of May the people of Puna observed the appearance of smoke and fire in the interior, a mountainous and desolate region of that district. Thinking that the fire might be the burning of some jungle, they took little notice of it until the next day, Sabbath, when the meetings in the different villages were thrown into confusion by sudden and grand exhibitions of fire, on a scale so large and fearful as to leave them no room to doubt the cause of the phenomenon. The fire augmented during the day and night; but it did not seem to flow off rapidly in any direction. All were in consternation, as it was expected that the molten flood would pour itself down from its height of four thousand feet to the coast, and no one knew to what point it would flow, or what devastation would attend its fiery course. On June 1st, the stream began to flow off in a northeasterly direction, and on June the 3d, at evening, the burning river reached the sea, having averaged about half a mile an hour in its progress. The rapidity of the flow was very unequal, being modified by the inequalities of the surface, over which the stream passed. Sometimes it is supposed to have moved five miles an hour, and at other times, owing to obstructions, making no apparent progress, except in filling up deep valleys, and in swelling over or breaking away hills and precipices.

But I will return to the source of the eruption. This is in a forest, and in the bottom of an ancient wooded crater, about four hundred feet deep, and probably eight miles east from Kilauea. The region being uninhabited, and covered with a thicket, it was some time before the place was discovered, and up to this time, though several foreigners have attempted it, no one, except myself, has reached the spot. From Kilauea to this place the lava flows in a subterranean gallery, probably at the depth of a thousand feet, but its course can be distinctly traced all the way by the rending of the crust of the earth into innumerable fissures, and by the emission of smoke, steam, and gasses. The eruption in this old crater is small, and from this place the stream disappears again for the distance of a mile or two, when the lava again gushed up and spread over an area of about fifty acres. Again it passes under ground for two or three miles, when it re-appears in another old wooded crater, consuming the forest, and partly filling up the basin. Once more it disappears, and following in a subterranean channel, cracks and breaks the earth, opening fissures from six inches to ten or twelve feet in width, and sometimes splitting the trunk of a tree so exactly that its legs stand astride at the fissure. At some places it is impossible to trace the subterranean stream, on account of the impenetrable thicket under which it passes. After following under ground several miles perhaps six or eight, it again broke out like an overwhelming flood, and sweeping forest, plantation, and every thing before it, rolled down with resistless energy to the sea, where, leaping a precipice of forty or fifty feet it poured itself in one vast cataract of fire into the deep below, with loud detonations, fearful hissings, and a thousand unearthly and indescribable sounds. Imagine to yourself a river of fused minerals, of the breadth and depth of Niagara and of a deep gory red, falling in one embla zoned sheet, one raging torrent, into the ocean! The scene, as described by eye witnesses, was terribly sublime. Two mighty agencies in collision! Two antagonist and gigantic forces in combat, and producing effects on a scale of conceivably grand! The atmosphere in all directions was filled with ashes, spray, gasses, &c.; while the burning lava, as it fell into the water, was shivered into millions of minute particles, and, being thrown back into the air, fell in showers of sand on all the surrounding country. The coast was extended into the sea for a quarter of a mile, and a new cape were formed. Three hills of scoria and sand were also formed in the sea, the lowest about two hundred, and the highest about three hundred feet.

For three weeks this terrific river disgorged itself into the sea with little abatement. Multitudes of fishes were killed, and the waters of the ocean were heated for twenty miles along the coast. The breadth of the stream, where it fell into the sea, is about half a mile, but inland it varies from one to four or five miles in width, conforming itself, like a river, to the face of the country over which it flowed. Indeed, if you can imagine the Mississippi, converted into liquid fire, of the consistency of fused iron, and moving onward, sometimes rapidly, sometimes sluggishly; now widening into a sea, and anon rushing through a narrow defile, winding its way through mighty forests and ancient solitudes, you will get some idea of the spectacle here exhibited. The depth of the stream will probably vary from ten to two hundred feet, according to the inequalities of the surface over which it passed. During the flow, night was converted into day on the eastern Hawaii. The light rose and spread like the morning upon the mountains, and its glare was seen on the oposite side of the island. It was also distinctly visible for more than one hundred miles at sea; and at the distance of forty miles fine print could be read at midnight. The brilliancy of the light was like a blazing firmament, and the scene is said to have been one of unrivalled sublimity.

The whole course of the stream from Kilauea to the sea is about forty miles. Its mouth is about twenty-five miles from Hilo station. The ground over which it flowed descends at the rate of one hundred feet to the mile. The crust is now cooled, and may be traversed with care, though scalding streams, pungent gasses and smoke are still emitted in many places.

In pursuing my way for nearly two days over this mighty, smouldering mass, I was more and more impressed at every step with the wonderful scene. Hills had been melted down like wax; ravines and deep valleys had been filled; and majestic forests had disappeared like a feather in the flames. In some places the molten stream parted and flowed in separate channels for a considerable distance, and then re-uniting, formed islands of various sizes, from one to fifty acres, with trees still standing, but seared and blighted by the intense heat. On the outer edge of the lava, where the stream was more shallow and the heat less vehement, and where of course the liquid mass was cooled soonest the trees were mowed down like grass before the scythe, and left charred, crisped, smouldering, and only half consumed. As the lava flowed around the trunks of large trees on the outskirts of the stream, the melted mass stiffened and consolidated before the trunk was consumed, and when this was affected, the top of the tree fell, and lay unconsumed on the crust, while the hole which marked the place of the trunk, remains as smooth and perfect as the calibre of a cannon. These holes are innumerable, and I found them to measure from ten to forty feet deep, but as I remarked before, they are in the more shallow parts of the lava, the trees being entirely consumed where it was deeper. During the flow of the eruption, the great crater of Kilauea sunk about three hundred feet, and her fires became nearly extinct, one lake only, out of many, being left active in this mighty caldron. This, with other facts that have been named demonstrates that the eruption was the disgorgement of the fires of Kilauea. The open lake in the old crater, is at present intensely active, and the fires are increasing, as is evident from the glare visible at our station and from the testimony of visiters.

During the early part of the eruption, slight and repeated shocks of earthquake were felt, for several successive days, near the scene of action. These shocks were not noticed at Hilo.

Through the directing hand of a kind Providence no lives were lost, and but little property was consumed during this amazing flood of fiery ruin. The stream passed over an almost uninhabited desert. A few little hamlets were consumed, and a few plantations were destroyed; but the inhabitants forewarned, fled and escaped. During the progress of the eruption some of the people in Puna spent most of their time in prayer and religious meetings, some flew in consternation from the face of the all devouring element, others wandering along its margin, marking with idle curiosity its daily progress, while another class still coolly pursued their usual vocations, unawed by the burning fury as it rolled along within a mile of their doors. It was literally true that they ate, drank, bought, sold, planted, builded, apparently indifferent to the roar of consuming forests, the sight of devouring fire, the startling detonations, the hissing of escaping steam, the rending of the earth, the shivering and melting of gigantic rocks, the raging and dashing of the fiery waves, the bellowings, the murmurings, the unearthly mutterings coming up from a burning deep. They went carelessly on amid the rain of ashes, sand, and fiery scintillations, gazing vacantly on the fearful and ever-varying appearance of the atmosphere, murky, black, livid, blazing, the sudden rising of lofty pillars of flame, the upward curling of ten thousand columns of smoke, and their majestic roll in those dingy, luride or parti-colored clouds. All these moving phenomena were regarded by them as the fall of a shower, or the running of a brook; while to others they were as the tokens of a burning world, the departing heavens, and the coming Judge.

I will just remark here, that while the stream was flowing, it might be approached within a few yards on the windward side, while at the leeward no one could live within the distance of many miles, on account of the smoke, the impregnation of the atmosphere with pungent and deadly gases, and the fiery showers which were constantly descending, and destroying all vegetable life. During the progress of the descending stream, it would often fall into some fissure, and forcing itself into apertures and under massive rocks, and even hillocks and extended plats of ground, and lifting them from their ancient beds, bear them with all their superincumbent mass of soil, trees, &c., on its viscous and livid bosom, like a raft on the water. When the fused mass was sluggish, it had a gory appearance like clotted blood, and when it was active, it resembled fresh and clotted blood mingled & thrown into violent agitation. Sometimes the flowing lava would find a subterranean gallery, diverging at right angles from the main channel, and pressing into it, would flow off unobserved, till meeting with some obstruction in its dark passage, when, by its expansive force, it would raise the crust of the earth into a dome-like hill of fifteen or twenty feet in height, and then, bursting this shell, pour itself out in a fiery torrent aroun'. A man who was standing at a considerable distance from the main stream, and intensely gazing on the absorbing scene before him, found himself suddenly raised to the height of ten or fifteen feet above the common level around him, and he had just time to escape from his dangerous position, when the earth opened where he had stood, and a stream of fire gushed out.—Missionary Herald.

From the Louisville Weekly Journal.

A MOST SINGULAR CHARACTER.—We extract from Memoirs of the Life of Roscoe, the following very curious account of a human phenomenon, which has no equal in the records of philology:

Nearly at the same time with the illustrations of the Life of Lorenzo de Medici, the little memoir of an extraordinary person appeared, under the title of a "Memoir of Richard Roberts Jones, of Aberbaron, in the country of Caernaryon, in North Wales, exhibiting a remarkable instance of a partial power and cultivation of intellect." This most singular person, who is still living, and who continues to display a love of learning and an extent of erudition seldom exhibited within the walls of schools or universities, united with a want of common sense amounting almost to idiocy, and a squalor and wretchedness of appearance of which a common medicant would be ashamed, was first introduced to the notice of Mr. Roscoe in the early part of the year 1806. The impression which his extraordinary appearance and acquirements made upon Mr. Roscoe at this time is described in the following letter to Dr. Parr, who had unfortunately left Allerton just before the appearance there of the Welsh scholar:

"Your letter found me in conversation with one of the most extraordinary beings that ever occurred to my notice, a poor Welsh fishman, as ragged as a colt, and as uncouth as any being that has a semblance of humanity. But beneath such an exterior is a mind cultivated not only beyond all reasonable expectation, but beyond all probable conception. In his fishing boat, on the coast of Wales, at an age little more than twenty, he has acquired the Greek, the Hebrew, and the Latin languages; has read the Iliad, Hesiod, Theocritus, &c.; studied the refinements of Greek pronunciation, and examined the connexion of that language with the Hebrew. He reads Latin with the utmost facility, and translates it either into Welsh or English. I asked him if he knew Italian; he answered me, and he carried on our conversation in that language.

"He is well disposed, modest, truly pious, and intelligent, but in his exterior motions is certainly like no other creature on earth. He has just entered the room with a wallet of books in all languages and, on my speaking to him, saluted me with a sort of courtesy instead of a bow. Yet the expression of his features speaks his mind; and, if shaved and decked, he might not appear so frightful as at present. He has now left the country, where he says he is persecuted, and thrown himself upon our benevolence, of which he thinks he had some proof on one of his visits here with some fish. What I shall do with him I know not; but I have promised him help and protection, which he shall have; and, if I find I can assist in rendering the very extraordinary talents, with which God has been pleased to endow this humble child of indigence, useful to himself or others, I shall have no small pleasure in doing it. If, on futher experience, I find him as deserving as he seems to be at present, I shall most probably take advantage, of your friendship, and intrude upon you for your advice respecting him. At present, I assure you, I think it one of the most extraordinnary circumstances that ever fell in my way; but, as first impressions are often incorrect, and I have yet seen but little of him, I will trouble you no longer respecting him at present, than to request your kind permission to mention him to you again, should I find him entitled to your advice and favor."

This extraordinary being was immediately taken by Mr. Roscoe under his protection. His rags were replaced by decent clothing, and a comfortable bed was prepared for him at night. So little however, was he accustomed to the usages of civilized life, that, instead of getting into the bed, he crept under it. Such, also was his attachment to the squalid habits in which he had lived, that it was with the utmost difficulty he could be persuaded to submit to those ablutions which were absolutely necessary to render a near conversation with him agreeable, or indeed safe.

At Allerton many persons of distinguished learning had an opportunity of witnessing the extraordinary attainments of Richard Roberts, who never failed to leave an impression of the singular powers of his intellect upon their minds. It was during the visit of Mr. Cone and Dr. Parr at Allerton, in the year 1813, that the following incident, related in the memoir, occurred:

One of his friends happened to have a party to dinner, several of whom were persons of considerable literary distinction; when, by the misunderstanding of a message after dinner, the door opened; and to the equal surprise of both the host and his guests, Richard entered the room, his whole dress and appearance being grotesque in the highest degree. The curiosity of the company was excited; and, after the mistake to which his introduction was owing had been explained, he was asked several questions in French, to which he gave ready and correct answers. The conversation was then changed to Italian, in which he acquitted himself with equal readiness. To this succeeded an inquiry into his knowledge of Latin and Greek, in which languages he read and translated some passages to the satisfaction of the persons present. One of the party then proceeded to examine him more particularly, when the following dialouge occurred:

Q. As you seem to have made no little proficiency in languages, pray tell me what means you take in acquiring a language?

A. It is according to what the nature of the language is.

Q. How would you set about acquiring a modern language?

A. If it was Spanish, for instance, I would take a vocabulary of the language, and examine what words correspond with or resemble the words in any other language with which I was acquainted; as, for instance, the Latin, French, or Italian; and those words I would strike out of the vocabulary, learning only such as were the original or peculiar words of the Spanish tongue; and then, by the assistance of a grammar, I should soon be able to attain a knowledge of that language.

All the party admitted that was a most judicious and excellent method: and Richard withdrew, with expressions of approbation from all present.

It was on a previous day, during the same visit, that Richard had an interview with Dr. Parr, who immediately plunged into the darkest recesses of ancient learning. The refinements of the Greek language, and the work of the critics who had illustrated it, were entered into, and gradually the conversation changed to the Hebrew, its peculiar construction and analogous tongues. Here Richard had evidently the advantage; and after an attempted inroad into the Chaldee, the doctor rather precipitately retreated, leaving a token of his liberality in the hands of the poor scholar. Richard, being afterwards asked what he thought of the learned person with whom he had been conversing, replied, "He is less ignorant than most men."

Many are the singular and amusing anecdotes recorded of Richard in his memoir, which concludes with a short comparison between the subject of it and the famous Moses Mendelsohon and the learned Magliabaci.

TWO WAYS AND THEIR END.

John Newton, speaking of the best mode of opposing some peculiar error, wisely said, "fill the bushel with wheat, and then there will be no room for the chaff." It had been well for the cause of truth and piety, and philanthropy, if the spirit of this rule had been more observed. True, this quiet, unpretending, plodding way of doing good brings in but a small return of worldly applause.

There are two very distinct methods by which different men undertake to enlighten and direct the public mind, and they are followed by their peculiar, but very different results. One method is, "speaking the truth in love," not in pretence but in reality, "by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God," by each one endeavoring to "please his neighbor for his good to edification." and never displeasing him except when the preservation of a good conscience before God absolutely requires it. The employment of a man who acts on this rule, is to hold up, explain, and illustrate the truth, and affectionately, and earnestly, to urge it on the attention of men. He would delight in this, more than in showing the fallacy of what he conceived to be the opposite error and if his sense of duty compelled him to do the latter, he would endeavor to do it without heaping odium on him who held it. And he would be careful not to wound the feelings, injure the character, nor destroy the influence, of a fellow laborer in the cause of truth, though imperfect, nor of any one, unless convinced that he is a bad man, and his influence bad. He would always prefer to encourage what is good, rather than to censure what is wrong; knowing that encouragement, delicately, generously, discreetly bestowed, in the spirit of Paul, for instance, possesses immense power for good, while censure and reproach, administered with the greatest wisdom of which erring man is capable, is apt to stir up strife and ill blood.

Such a course of conduct is followed by its peculiar reward. The man who pursues it, will enjoy peace of mind, and an approving conscience. He will have as few enemies as a conscientious discharge of his duties will admit, and even those who reject his views and principles, will respect his character. While they feel severely reproved by his upright, consistent life, & for this reason would almost wish they could find cause to hate him, they will yet inwardly admire him, and often give the strongest proofs of their confidence. He will also have friends worth possessing. His friends will not be the blustering, the censorious, the radical, and the rash, but the modest, the prudent, the mild, the truly wise and the good. They may be cautious, but they will be strong in their attachments; they may be few in number, but they will be worth more than a multitude; they may be quiet in their demeanor, but their proofs of friendship will be more than a cordial to his soul.

Such a course, too, will not be without its effects on the man's own character and happiness. He may not be canonized, at least while he lives, as a martyr or a saint. But he will possess a tender, benevolent, and large heart. By long exercise, the graces of forbearance, patience and charity will become habitual, and their practice easy and delightful. He will be peculiarly happy in witnessing the influence and value of the character which he has so long, and with so much crucifixion of the old man, been cultivating. He will find that his opinions have weight, and that a word from him often effects more than whole speeches from others of a different character.

There is another method, the opposite of this, which if followed will also be attended with its peculiar results. To avoid the appearance of falling into that method, we will not characterize it with epithets of our own, but give our meaning by illustrations. If you are a temperance man you must call every man who makes use of any fermented or distilled drink in any quantity, "a drunkard."—If you wish to warn people against the errors of the Baptists, you must harp on close communion—if against those of the Pedobaptists, you must talk about baby sprinkling. If you deplore the existence of slavery, you must call the owner of a slave a "man-stealer," if you believe that certain measures are adapted to do it away, you must convince every one who cannot agree with you of his error by calling him pro-slavery; accuse him of bowing down to southern influence, and whatever may be the purity and excellence of his character, you must somehow make out that he is a truckling, time-serving man; if you disapprove the principles and measures of the abolitionists, you must show your enlightened charity, by calling them fanatics, incendiaries and cut-throats.

You may think that this method of opposing what you conceive to be error, proves your conscientious faithfulness and clearer discernment; others will be as likely to attribute it to your want of kindness and good sense. The world has discovered that a man may rebuke, and find fault, and call hard names, without a very great share of the milk of human kindness, or of devoted piety, and they will not class you with prophets nor apostles, nor even with reformers and martyrs for this quality alone. So that you may expect that if you pursue this course you will draw around you men of the same unamiable stamp, who are willing to abuse and be abused for every difference of opinion. You must not be surprised that men who prize the right of private judgment, men of amiable, delicate, and elevated feelings, stand aloof.

Your own character, too, will speedily suffer the blighting influence of this course. Sit down from day to day, and search out and set in order words of biting edge, with which to inflict pain on a brother, a fellow-man, and rest assured your heart will speedily become unfeeling and jealous, and your breath as sour as an east wind. You will soon become unable to discover any good qualities in those who do not agree with you in theory, and join with you in action. You will be exposed to the perpetual mortification that your efforts produce an effect contrary to that which you desire. You will become misanthropic, selfrighteous and unhappy. Oh, how bitter will be the closing reflections of that man who has spent a life in pulling down, while he has built nothing up, as he surveys the desolations of his own heart!

"From the Colored American."

A few years ago we attended a quarterly meeting of the Methodist church, not far from Philadelphia. About two-fifths of the church members, and indeed of the audience, were colored people. On the second day the house became so much crowded that the Presiding Elder, proposed worshiping under some large spreading oaks, which grew near the church. The proposal was conceded to, the benches were taken from the church, and the white people comfortably seated in the shade, while some blocks, and boards, and poles, were prepared for the colored people, beneath the scorching rays of an August sun.

But "God is no respecter of persons." He permitted his burning sun to pass on in his diurnal course, and by three o'clock, his oblique, yet scorching rays, fell upon the long haired, pale faced brethren.

At this the Rev. Presiding Elder, forgetting that God maketh his sun to rise (shine) upon the "EVIL" as well as the good; turned round with more self importance, than Joshua of old did—not to the sun, to command him TO STAND STILL, OR GO BACK; but to his sable-faced auditors, and cried out in THUNDER TONES—YOU COLORED PEOPLE—GET UP! and come round here in the SUN!!—and let the white people take the SHADE!!!

This story may want proof, it is at hand. There is a Methodist minister who holds a charge in this city, who was present, and can bear testimony to the facts.

FASHIONABLE LITERATURE.

The literature of the day too often heeds not the serpent and his sting, if the flowers that hide them be but fair; but God's book exposes all the movings of the temper.

THE KONDAHS.

We are really at a loss, as to the whereabouts of the Kondahs. It is now some months since they have deigned to shew us either their faces or their kinjahs. In fact, we can tell nothing about them. The titular chief, to whose hands they committed a nominal and unsteady rule, after the death of the renowned Boson, proved at once his incapacity to govern their restless and turbulent spirits, and each one appeared to be wandering in his own way, doing just what seemed good in his sight. There was however, some little show of government kept up for some months, but at length, the whole fabric seems to have tumbled into ruins.

From the time of the sad event at Heddington, where the marauders received so shameful, but merited drubbing, their visits became less frequent to the Colony, and the number at each succeeding visit manifestly lessened. They appeared shy and timid, as if conscious of having committed an unprovoked injury, and apprehensive of further punishment. They now appear to have forsaken us entirely. The question is, where have they gone?

Wherever they be, they are, if practicable, prosecuting their old and cherished avocation—plundering for the purpose of trade. They are shrewd calculators—they have long learned that it is more profitable to steal an article, and sell it at a high price, than it is to purchase it in the first place, and afterwards sell it for a fair consideration.

Beyond Boporah to the North and East, there lay an inviting field for their adventure, promising in case of success a glorious harvest. Boson, it is said, had himself cast a longing look towards this quarter, and more than once assayed to enter. He however invariably met a repulse, never having been able to penetrate but a short distance beyond his own territory. These tribes are said to be rich in cattle, horses, gold, ivory, and such fruits, vegetables and grain as are found in these regions. The country is open, well watered and adapted to pasturage. One fact connected with it—namely, its being open, affording them sites for towns in large plains—may be in part the cause of Boson's defeats. The secret of the success of Kondah warfare lies in the skill & adroitness in surprising and ambuscade. They never think of a manly and open encounter. There is also but little doubt that these tribes are more numerous and warlike, and better prepared for either offensive or defensive operations, than those nearer the seaboard. Possessing horses, they may have a numerous and efficent cavalry, than which, we can conceive of nothing calculated to strike greater terror into a Kondah army; one tenth of which is armed with muskets, and nine tenths merely with thongs to secure the booty.

It was from these tribes that the Kondahs obtained all the cattle, gold, and ivory which they got by fair trade.—There is no doubt the colonial trade with these people would by this time have become extensive and profitable, were it not for the selfish policy pursued by the intervening tribes. It has been their aim to keep them as ignorant of the coast as possible, so as to keep the trade in their own hands by acting as a kind of commercial channel between us. From reports which have reached us respecting the resources of this country—and from the fact that we have occasionally found among them a falatah, whom we knew in Sierra Leone, and who are known to be as a body, the itinerant merchants of this part of the coast, we infer that the tribes in the region referred to, carry on an extensive commerce both to the North and South, and probably with tribes still farther in the interior. There is no doubt their gold and cattle reach Sierra Leone on the North, and probably as far as Bambarra and Dahomy on the South. Their ivory and cloths have usually found an outlet at Galinas, Cape Mount and this place.

It is among these people that the vagrant Kondahs are most probably absorbed. Unable longer to pursue successfully their predatory course, they have dispersed themselves among these more numerous and powerful tribes, and taken to a more nomaidic kind of life. If so they may yet become the means of opening a more direct and extensive communication between this rich country and the colony.

It is very certain that the communication between the coast and the interior is closed at the present time. We have made very careful enquiries and have learned satisfactorily that at no point on this part of the coast, is ivory in any large quantities to be obtained. A large quantity of ivory has been exported from the colony within the space of a few months, but it has been obtained from other points along the coast, and from hunters almost immediately on the seaboard.

Awfully sudden death.—The uncertainty of life was most alarmingly inculcated upon the inhabitants of Millsburgh, on Sabbath last, the 13th inst. A woman who had been engaged in preparing dinner for the family had just finished and was placing a dish on the table, when suddenly coughing she ruptured a bloodvessel, and died before the neighbours alarmed by the shrieks of the inmates could could reach the house.

DIED

On the 15th, inst., in this place, Mr. James R. Oliver, jr. In his death we have an affecting illustration of the uncertainty of life—a fact too often unheeded. His illness was short and severe. Only a week before his death, he appeared to enjoy uncommonly good health—so much so, as to attract the attention of those around him. He is now in his grave, from which he seems to iterate to the young and thoughtless, the solemn admonition of the Saviour; Watch, for ye know not the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

IMPROVIDENCE—EXTRAVAGANCE.

The ideas of the bulk of men on the above subjects, are as various as they are inadequate. Each one defines improvidence and extravagance by the degree to which he indulges in the articles, in which they are manifested. We have heard of men worth thousands, who, when ordered by a physician to take a few pennys worth of medicine to save their lives, declare they could not be guilty of such extravagance. But such instances are rare. Men (and especially we Liberians) are more inclined to a criminal improvidence and extravagance, than to a sordid parsimony. We can fix our eye upon no one in the colony guilty of the sin of penuriousness. We appear to shun it as deadly poison—the bane not only of respectability but of happiness. Although we might easily enumerate, somewhat above a half dozon courses of our improvidance, yet we shall content ourselves at present with mentioning only one. This is the article of—

Dress. Here we sin most egregiously. Too often the ardour of our people in pursuit of factitious ornaments for their persons, has led them into the most serious difficulties. Each one is anxious if not to outdress, at least to equal his neighbour, in the superority of the cut and fabric of his covering. Each lady is anxious that her gown should have more colors than her neighbour's. Mrs. A. has a new gown, therefore Mrs. B. must have one, to show that she too can afford it. Mrs. C. has the latest fashion, therefore Mrs. D. who, although she has just completed a new one, with huge sleeves and reefed skirts, must have one also because that Protetis, fashion, has decreed an alteration in the make.

In following these senseless fashions, few stop to reflect whether they are consistent in so doing, whether they can really afford it. Too frequently the vilest and most dishonest means are resorted to, to indulge this vain desire for show and splendour in a dress, and not unfrequently some henpecked husbands have been forced to expend the last farthing for a party coloured garment, which was as much suited to their condition as a mitre to that of a clown. It were well indeed if this was the worst of the case. Perhaps the dress was purchased when there was not a meal of provisions in the house, or the poor simpleton driven by one whom he should control to contract for a superfluity, a debt which at the time his judgement told him, he would not be able to liquidate.

There are three things we would commend to the attention of the devotees of fashion. The first is:—that an inordinate passion for this kind of display, is an unequivocal indication of a little mind. Great minds despise it. The second is:—consistency. To see a lady in a silk gown issue from a thatched hut on Sunday, and scrambling for a bunch of cassado on Monday, is horrible incongruity. The third is:—honesty. The man who will in either his own, or the case of others, for whom he has to provide, indulge in needless superfluity of dress, while there are just debts against him, he is unable to pay, is but a small remove in the scale of morals from him, who would rifle anothers pocket. The passion for dress is gaining ground in our colony, and it will assuredly bring a host of evils in its train. In the eager race, Christians are in danger of forgetting their obligations to their churches, and parents theirs to provide for their children; and those unable by honest means to flutter in the gaudy throngs of fashion, will not stick at any thing to enable them to do so.

BAPTISTS.

From the Almanac and Baptist Register for this year, kindly sent us with other periodicals, by Rev. F. Adams of Baltimore, we glean the following items of intelligence.

There are in the United State and the British provinces, 7,898 Baptist Churches, 4,741 ministers, and 573,502 members. The nett increase of the past year is 46,958 members. The foregoing does not include the Free-Will, the Seventh-Day, nor the Six-Principle Baptist. These together are said to contain at least 50,000.

The following is a list of Baptist periodicals.

POETRY.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God."

Behold, O man! intelligent created man,
"The thousand thousand glorious stars, that nightly rise, Spangling the hemisphere." Boasting might of mind, say
What whence and wherefore are they all. Even tell of one,
Is't fixed? or speeds it light like through the air
A satelite or planet true to its centre?
Or yet perchance itself a sun (central diamond Gleaming far off in the pure cerulean ground,)
Whose satellited planets roam the sky unseen
Still mocking human vision, though since first the stars
Creation early greeted and together sang
Their light has earthward sped its way nor reached it yet.

Or tell if starry spheres give fallen rebellious man
A home;—if other worlds e'er saw their sun at noon,
Grow pale and dark;—if e'er their temple veil was rent,
Ground trembled, or rocks from their deep foundations heaved,
And riven to their topmost pinnacle. Did aught
But earth e'er crucify; or aught saw earth and Heaven,
For man's Redemption, see the mighty Saviour die?
Canst thou not tell! weak man! How lost in vain attempts
Of the vast immensity of creation,
And the vaster vastness of the mystery of grace,
To grasp in all.

And Infidel, what sayest thou?
"There is no God," no heaven nor hell—no God that made
Earth, firmament and thee! And on them all who threw Gleamings of immortality so legible. Oh lie not to thyself
Whose deathless conscience sets the seal of Heavenly truth
To all God's revelation. Christian, happier thou
Who sees, where human science fails, thy God alone:
Thunder and rain, light, life and beauty come from Him,
Who guides the universe of suns—who also binds
The host of stars invisible and visible,
Planets, satellites and comets, harmonious all,
In every system, each to his peculiar orb.
Then O my soul, let worlds recede and fade to view,
"God only I perceive! God only I adore."

SOPHIA.

THE BURIAL GROUND AT SIDON.

BY MARY HOWIT.

The dead are every where!
The mountain side—the plain—the woods profound,
All the wide earth—the fertile and the fair,
Is one vast burial ground!

Within the populous street,
In solitary homes, in places high,
In pleasure's dome, where pomp and luxury meet,
Men bow themselves to die.

The old man at his door,
The unwearied child murmuring its wordless song;
The bondman and the free; the rich, the poor—
All, all to death belong.

The sunlight gilds the walls
Of knightly sepulchres inwrought with brass;
And the long shadow of the cypress falls
Athwart the common grass.

The living of gone time
Builded their glorious cities by the sea,
And awful in their greatness sat sublime,
As if no change could be.

There was the eloquent tongue;
The poet's heart; the sage's soul was there;
And lovely woman, with their children young,
The faithful and the fair.

They were, but they are not;
Suns rose and set, and each put on her bloom,
Whilst men, submiting to the common lot,
Went down into the tomb.

And still amid the wrecks
Of mighty generations passed away.
Earth's boonest growth, the fragrant wild-flower decks
The tomb of yesterday.

And in the twilight deep,
Go veiled woman forth, like her who went,
Sister of Nazareth, to the grave to weep,
To breathe the low lament.

The dead are every where
Where'er is love, or tenderness, or faith;
Where'er is power, pomp, pleasure, pride, where
Life is or was, is death.

The life of most women is a comedy in three acts: The first is devoted to love; the second to pleasure; and the third to devotion.

We have heard it said, "The picture is so like him, you can see it and rain."

Professor Espy, the celebrated "Storm King," left this city yesterday afternoon for Philadelphia & Washington, after a very successful visit to this city. We understand that he intends to present a petition to Congress for aid in developing his theory, & we really hope he will be successful in winning the attention which he deserves. Mr. Russell, the artist in School street, has just finished an admirable miniature likeness of Professor Espy, which may be seen at his room. We have also seen a likeness of the Professor, executed by Mrs. Russell, which is scarcely less perfect than beautiful. Mr. R. and his wife both excel in this difficult art.

POETRY.

THE RAINBOW.

BY THOMAS CAMPBELL.

The evening was glorious, and light through tthe trees
Played the sunshine and rain-drops, the birds and the breeze;
The landscape, outstretching in loveliness, lay
On the lap of the year, in the beauty of May.

For the queen of the spring, as she passed down the vale,
Left her robe on the trees, and her breath on the gale;
And the smile of her promise gave joy to the hours,
And flush in her footsteps sprang herbage and flowers.

The skies, like a banner in sunset unfol'ed,
O'er the west threw their splendor of azure and golu;
But one cloud at a distance rose dense, and increased,
Till its margin of black touched the zenith and east.

We gazed on the scenes, while around us they g[illegible] w'd,
When a [illegible] of beauty appeared on the cloud;
'Tw[illegible] the sun, as at mid-day we view,
[illegible]hat rolls nightly through star-light

[illegible] in the van of the storm!
And the eye and the heart hailed its beautiful form;
For it looked not severe, like an angel of wrath,
But its garment of brightness illumed its dark path.

In the form of its grandeur sublimely it stood
O'er the river, the village, the field, and the wood;
And river, field, village, and woodlands grew bright,
As conscious they gave and afforded delight.

'Twas the bow of Omnipotence; bent in His hand,
Whose grasp st[illegible]ea'n the universe spanned;
'Twas the presence of God, in a symbol sublime;
His vow from the flood to the exit of time!

Not dreadful, as when in the whirlwind he pleads,
When storms are his chariots, and lightnings his steeds,
The black clouds his banner of vengeance unfurled,
And thunder his voice to a guilt-stricken world;—

In the breath of his presence, when thousands expire,
And seas boil with fury, and rocks burn with fire,
And the sword, and the plague-spot, with death strew the plain,
And vultures, and wolves, are the graves of the slain;

Not such was that rainbow, that beautiful one!
Whose arch was refraction, its key-stone—the sun;
A pavilion it seemed which the Deity graced,
And Justice and Mercy met there and embraced.

A while, and it sweetly bent over the gloom,
Like Love o'er a death couch, or Hope o'er the tomb;
Then left the dark scene; whence it slowly retired,
As Love had just vanished, or Hope had expired.

I gazed not alone on that source of my song;
To all who beheld it these verses belong;
Its presence to all was the path of the Lord!
Each full heart expanded—grew warm, and adored!

Like a visit—the converse of friends—of a day,
That bow, from my sight passed forever away;
Like that visit, that converse, that day—to my heart,
That bow from remembrance can never depart.

'Tis a picture in memory distinctly defined
With the strong and imperishing colors of mind;
A part of my being beyond my control,
Beheld on that cloud, and transcribed on my soul!

THE WATCHER.

BY MRS HALE.

The night was dark and fearful,
The blast swept wailing by,
When a watcher, pale and tearful,
Look'd forth with anxious eye;
How wishfully she gazeth—
No gleam of morn is there;
And the look to heaven she raiseth,
'Tis the agony of prayer.

Within that dwelling lonely,
Where want and darkness reign,
Her precious child, her only,
Lay moaning in his pain;
And death alone can free him—
She feels that this must be;
But oh! for morn to see him
Smile once again on me!"

A hundred lights are glancing
In yonder mansion fair,
And merry feet are dancing—
They heed not mourning there;
Oh young and joyous creatures,
One lamp from out your store,
Would give that poor boy's features
To his mother's gaze once more.

The morning sun is shining—
She heedeth not its ray;
Beside her dead, reclining,
The pale, dead mother lay;
And [illegible] her lips were wreathing,
[illegible] of hope and love,
[illegible] she still were breathing—
[illegible] light for us above"

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Baptist Banner and Western Pioneer.

ON THE MORALS AND LITERATURE OF THE YANKEES.

Brother Peck:—All the New England States, (to leave out Maine,) have not so much territory as Illinois; much of the territory of these States is covered with water, marshes, st ms of mountains, &c., leaving a small portion only, that can be cultivated: the soil of that portion is sandy and barren, and the climate very unfavorable to agriculture. The people are, therefore, a manufacturing people, they necessarily become local and provincial: which has a great bearing on their morals and literature. From the sterility of the soil and climate, they have to labor very hard, for what an Illinoian would think half pay: they are therefore driven to habits of strict economy, that western people know noting about. They have received it from their ancestors, and they transmit it to their children. All their thoughts, time, and labor are employed with reference to dollars and cents. Even the wealthy, from habit, are not exempt from this rule. Propose any thing novel to fifty yankees, and the first idea they all will have about it, is: "What profit will it be to me." They, therefore, have no idlers, loafers and loungers; they have no sports, games, or parties of amusements; they very seldom have social parties; no convivality! and their conversational powers are not good. In fine they must work, and consequently have not the time for idleness, vice, or to cultivate the social virtues. There is, then, a standard of morals and learning to which they all come; they are all moral from educatian and habit; and they are all learned in some branch of mechanics, science, or letters. They educate their children, raise them, and put them to some trade or profession in reference to their profit, in dollars and cents. Having this in view in all their raising, they do not give culture to the finer faculties of the soul; they become more phlegmatic in their temperament, as they grow up, and of course less excitable, than the people of the south and west; less sentient, less irrascible, but more philosophic, steady, deliberate and grave. From their local and mechanical habits, male and female, their physical systems are more robust than southern people. They travel none, mix, and intermarry none with strangers, which gives them a oneness of character, of body and mind. There is then a regular current of morals among them. They are not religious one day and irreligious the next, by feeling, as we are; they are the same thing all the while. They all go to church, most belong to some church, but they scarcely manifest strong feelings in religion. Much of all this has grown out of the practice of reading manuscript sermons: very few ministers preach extempore. And from the fact of the ardor and warmth of youth having been restrained by too cramped and too long a theological training; the preacher has the theory and philosophy of the gospel without unction or pathos. Very few of the preachers of New England, are what we would call good speakers. They have, upon the whole, no more religious enjoyment than we have; we, of the west, are sometimes much higher in our religious enjoyments, than they ever are, sometimes we are much lower than they ever are, on an aggregate we are about the same. Notwithstanding they are so regularly moral, and so little excitable. New England produces more enthusiasts, fanatics, and religious monomaniacs, than any other section of the United States. Abolitionism among them, is a species of religious monomania, from the same cause; I found few Abolitionists in the east, but what were so, from local influence, ignorance of the institutions of the South, or an over balance of veneration and benevolence, propelled by fanaticism, amounting to religious monomania. Some, or all these, enter deeply, into the composition of the great apostle of equality, John Q. Adams.

The same geographical causes mould their literature. Their literature is of the solid, scientific, moral character, they have but little taste for romantic reading, neither does, Algebra, Mathematics, or any science of an abstract ideal character, receive much of their attention from the mere love of these sciences. It must be something that can be worked into practical use. They are partial to the languages, because the demand for teachers is great, they make profit by it; therefore, it is a favorite study. More than half our literature in the south and west, is for pleasure or amusement, or simply to know, music especially. I never heard of a yankee that cultivated music, only so far as he expected to make profit by teaching it. To cultivate any branch of polite literature merely as a matter of accomplishment, is something that never entered the head of a "down easter." They have more colleges, and about those colleges more learned men than we have in the west; those learned men are however only learned in the languages or sciences, but about the practical, common things of life, they are not learned. The mechanic, for instance, that makes pegs for books, all his life time, knows all about that business, while he remains ignorant of all other branches of business; equally so with him who digs Greek roots all his life: he knows all about that business. I visited several of the most celebrated institutions of literature in New England, among others, the University at Cambridge: and I was surprised to find such profound ignorance of many things practical, and common in the west. Among the Professors, one man of a literary character, with whom I conversed, about the west, very knowingly asked "is Illinois north or south of New Orleans? Even the learned are always "guessing." I heard the phrases "guess" and "sheuld think" used so often, and so ungrammatical, that even they have become offensive to me. I was introduced to a circle of intelligent men and women, in a town in New England, on one occasion, when I observed, as a common place remark, to one of the gentlemen, 'a very unpleasant day," "I should guess it is," replied he. I addressed myself to a lady on the other side of me, "it gives me the exquite pleasure to enjoy your hospitality." "I should think it had ought," she replied. The reply of six intelligent gentlemen and ladies, to words I spoke, was, "guess," "had ought," or "should think," and on one occasion at sea, with a family of the best caste, I observed, "in the west, we frequently preach out in the woods, under the boughs of trees," whereupon every one let fall knife and fork; and all exclaimed at the same time, "now I want to know." While such phrases are frequent in the higher circles, the commonality have hundreds; many of them, that I never understood. They have, as aforesaid, more colleges, and about those colleges, more learned men, but the main portion of the community have not so much practical knowledge of men and things as we have. Shrewdness is peculiar to them, but common sense is only a common affair among them. From local and physical causes, there seems to be a diminution in mental and physical vigor, in the New England population, compaired with their forefathers.

In their religious feelings they have a great interest for the west, and in fact for all the world. They have a true missionary spirit, had they the wealth of the middle southern and western States, they would send the gospel to the whole world, in less than ten years. They are strictly honest in their professions of charity to their fallen man in heathen lands, they prove it by liberal contributions to give them the gospel,

Yours, as ever,

W. F. BOYAKIN.

The following spicy article from the Boston Courier, will give our readers some idea of the Established Church in England. How striking the contrast between such ministerial labors, and those of Christ and his apostles. We devoutly pray hat our country may never be cursed with such a ministry.

THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH IN ENGLAND.—It has long been a standing reproch against us in the mouths of the high Tory partisans of the English hierarchy, that we have no established church. To take their word for it, this is the bane and scandal of American institutions—enough to stamp the whole country as unchristain and reprobate. Religion, according to them, is inseparable from the mitre; the Christain graces cannot live out of lawn sleeves; and tithes and stipends must be made the corner stones of all sound doctrine.

While we lend an ear to these plausible charges against our morals and religion, let us see what sort of a system is that which they recommend for our adoption. We will say nothing of the 5000 sinecures of the Church of England, nor of the £20 000 a year of the Archbishop of Canterbury. But as an instance to show how the comfortable fat livings of the church are bought and sold upon speculation, like ships, cargoes, we quote the following advertisement from the London Times:—

"TO THE CLERGY.—An incumbent would resign directly, with patron's consent, to one not under 46 years of age, a beautiful living a perfect gem, one of the prettiest things in England, with excellent new free-stone-front house, facing a park, in the county of Somerset, at the skirts of a small market town, with every necessary of life cheap; productive garden, lawn, pleasure-ground, wall-fruit;—six acres of pasture adjoining, coach-house, stabling for six horses, outhouses!—no trouble as to income—duty easy, most healthy, roads and society good,—the whole worth £280 a year. Terms—Incoming incumbent to pay down £1900,—to indemnify present incumbent's outlay on the spot, and for his fixtures, and his old wine, worth £180; also, for live stock, including three cows, horses, and pony-carriage:—piano forte, by Stoddar, cost 85 guineas; hand-organ, by flight, cost £38; plate and linen, and a few pictures."

This is about as comfortable a picture as we ever saw, of ministerial labors. Who can wonder at the total absence of religion in this benighted western region, where we have no fat voluptuaries to teach us the way we should go, with their "perfect gems"—"pleasure-grounds"—"wall-fruit"—"easy duty"—"old wine"—"pony-carriages"—"piano"—and "hand-organ by Flight!"

THE HONEST MAN.

He looks, not to what he might do, but what he should do. Justice is the first guide; to which he makes expediency always subservient, although the latter is the second law of his actions. He would rather complain than offend; and hates sin more for the deformity of it than its danger. His simple uprightness works in him that confidence, which often wrongs him, and gives advantage to the subtle and designing; when he grieves more at their faithlessness than at his own credulity. He hath but one heart, and that lies open to sight; and were it not discreet he would not avoid a witness of his thoughts. His word is his bond, and his yea his oath, which he will not violate through fear, or to avoid loss. The untowardness of events may cause him to blame his want of prudence, but can never cause him to eat his promise; neither saith he "This I saw not," but rather, "This I said." When he is made his friend's executor, he defrays debts, pays legacies, and scorneth to gain by widows and orphans, or to ransack graves; and therefore he will be true to a dead friend, because he sees him not, and abhors to take advantage of the incapacity of those who cannot call him to account. All his dealings are square, and above board: he suppresseth not the fault of what he sells, and restores the overseen gain of an erroneous reckoning which by chance he have made. He esteems a bribe venomous, though it come gilded over with the color and gratuity, or the usual compliments of office; without which he is always ready to perform the duties of his station, satisfied with the lawful remuneration it yields him. His cheeks are never stained with the blushes of recantation;—neither doth his tongue falter to make good a lie with the secret glosses of double or reserved senses: and when his name is traduced, his innocence bears him out with courage; then, lo, he goes on in the plain way of truth, and will either triumph in his innocency, or suffer with it. His conscience overates his providence, so as in all things, good or ill, he regards the motives of his actions rather than their immediate effect upon his temporal interests. If he sees what he ought to do, he leaves to God the care of what shall follow. He never loads himself with burdens above his strength, and no consideration of apparent advantage can induce him to undertake a business which his friends do not give the means of fairly carrying on; and once bound, what he can he will do; and he is careful not to will or wish what he cannot do. His ear is the sanctuary of his absent friend's name, of his present friend's secret: neither of them can miscarry in his trust, and he is faithful to vindicate the honor of his friend. If he has committed wrongs in his youth, he remembers to repay them with that interest which he would not himself accept. He would rather want than borrow, and beg than not pay. He remembers "the wicked borrow, and pay not again" And if, from unforseen circumstances, he becomes insolvent, he is not satifed that bankruptcy should discharge him from all obligations to his creditors; nor is he content with fruitless wishes, but uses every effort to pay those debts which are justly due from him. His fair professions are without dissembling; and he loves actions above words. Finally, he hates falsehood in words or deeds worse than death; he is a faithful defendant of truth; no man's enemy; and it is a question whether he is more another man's friend, or his own. And if there was no heaven, yet he would be virtuous—Bishop Hall.

TEMPER.

How inconceivably would the social and public happiness of man be improved by the universal prevalence of good temper! The principal evils of life are not inevitable. They do not arise from poverty which cannot be averted, or pain and sickness which cannot be avoided, but from the affliction of bad temper. We suffer from the ebullitions of others, and, what is worse, we suffer from our own. The passionate, the fretful and peevish, the irritable, the provoking, the envious, not only scare peace from their own bosoms, but drive it from their firesides, and neighborhoods. Like the ocean, they are never at rest, but foaming, roaring, & "casting up mire and dirt." Evil temper is a fiend, which on its entrance, has converted a happy house into a Bedlam, alienated the dearest friends, and clouded the most pleasing prospects of worldly enjoyment

"How happy," said Lorenzo, "must Philander be; his estate is large; his house, garden, and park are furnished with every luxury which invention could suggest, or wealth purchase; his wife is beautiful and intelligent, and his children are growing up around him in health and manly beauty." But how mistaken was Lorenzo; true happiness was a stranger to Philander's house; passionate and fretful, he would neither be happy himself nor suffer those around him to be happy. His servants hated him, his children feared and avoided him, and his wife was rendered discontented and peevish by his unreasonable petulence. The inevitable ills of life might be endured with comparitive ease, were it not for the perpetual annoyances from this source. What is poverty to a mind which is exempt from envy and peevishness? And what is pain to one whose mind is at peace? But evils of this kind are indefinitely increased in magnitude and exigency, where they fall upon one who has not learned to control and subdue his own temper.

Serenity of temper beautifies the countenance, and counteracts a mere defect in features, it beams forth so pleasantly as to attract general admiration; while on the contrary, the most regular and beatiful features are distorted by the scowl which a bad temper imprints upon them

Who then wishes to be beautiful and beloved, a blessing to themselves and to all around them? let them cultivate a temper, which shall neither annoy others nor disturb their neighbors; and never let it be forgotten, that in order to success, the holy aids to religion must be sought.—Presbyterian.

LETTER FROM EUROPE.

Great Meeting on the Corn Laws—Number of Ministers present—Great public interest—Character of the Discussions—Sufferings of the poor described, illustrating the oppressive nature of the Corn Laws—Means proposed to effect their repeal.

LONDON, Sept. 3, 1841

In my last communication, I was just able to announce the meeting of the conference of christian ministers on the Corn Laws, in Manchester. That remarkable convocation has since performed the task assigned to it, and, in the opinion that an assembly so entirely unprecedented with respect to its composition and its objects, must possess an interest bounded only by the limits of the globe itself, I proceed to make it the subject of the present communication.

The Conference was held in the town of Manchester, in a beautiful and spacious building, which was appropriately fitted up for the occasion. The sittings commenced on Tuesday morning, August 17, at ten o'clock, and closed on Friday evening, August the 20; so that thanks to our railways and locomotives, those of the ministers who came from the remotest parts of tho kingdom, were enabled to perform their usual Sabbath labors. The number of ministers present was 636, of whom, on analyzing the list, I find 276 were Independents, 182 Baptists, 52 Presbyterians, (Scottish and English,) 59 Methodist, (of various sorts, but including two only of the old Wesleyan body,) 23 Unitarians, 10 Roman Catholics, 2 Church of England, 2 Church of Scotland, the rest belonging to various minor sects. Nothing, you may be sure, but a very urgent case, could have brought together so diverse a collection of men. You will observe, however, that the great bulk of the Conference consisted of truly evangelical ministers. But the 636 who assembled, numerous though they were, afford but an inadequate notion of the feeling which is abroad amongst ministers of the gospel on the subject of the Corn Laws. There were not fewer than 1500 answers to the invitation, all which, with the exception of half a dozen, (including the Rev Doctor Chalmers, and the Rev. Hugh Mc Neil, of Liverpool,) were fovorable to the design. Nearly 700 pledged themselves to attend; the other 800 were prevented from attending by various causes, but principally by the inability of their churches, through these very Corn Laws, to pay their expenses. From 460 ministers, were received detailed written answers to a string of practical questions, relating to the operation of the Corn Laws: the valuable information thus accumulated, will, when carefully digested be published.

The members of the Conference were entertained at the houses of the leading inhabitants of Manchester, without distinction of sect, either in the hosts, or their guests. A particular friend of mine was at the house of an Alderman of the Borough, a Churchman, who assigned as his reason for adhering to the establishment, that it required cleansing too much for him to leave it yet. This gentleman began life as a working weaver, and is now with a million of money or more. He told my friend that he had never less than between £200,000 and £250,000 in cotton goods afloat upon the sea, and that the repeal of the Corn Laws, would not add less than £6000 or £7000 a year to his clear income.—This may serve to inculcate the vast extension of the field of employment, which would be consequent on the repeal of the Corn Laws.

Manchester was full of strangers during the Conference, bnt thousands went away unable to get into the hall, which overflowed the whole time.—Amongst the working men the sensation produced was remarkable; all looked upon the members of the meeting as so many angels from heaven sent for their deliverance. The moral effect of the movement upon the minds of the poor will be highly beneficial.

The Conference sat twice each day, from 9 to 1, and from 4 to 9 or 10.

The Rev. Dr. Cox, the leading minister of our denomination was chosen provisional chairman, and for each of the successive days, chairmen were appointed in the following order:—the Rev. Thomas Adkins, of Southamton, a highly respectable Independent minister, eloquent, warm-hearted, and well informed; the Rev. William Chaplain, of Bishop Stortford, an aged Independent minister, possessing much weight of character and sound intelligence, and, as coming out of the great agricultusal country of Essex, peculiarly well acquainted with the state and feelings of farmers and operative husbandmen; the Rev. Dr. Cox, of Hackney, an accomplished scholar, capable of taking large views possessing the tenderest sympathies, and well-known and highly respected by many of our leading Whig statesmen, and lastly, the Rev. Thomas Spencer, M. A., a beneficient clergyman of the Established Church, who has distinguished himself by his firm and discriminating attachment to the interest of the poor. Each of them made a speech on taking and another on leaving the chair, and all of them acquitted temselves with eminent tact and discretion.

The first day was occupied in settling preliminaries, and hearing speeches on the general question, but chiefly with details of facts derived from personal observation and experience. On the second day, after a speech from Mr. Curtis, from Ohio, resolutions were moved, discussed, and carried. The third day passed in receiving deputations from the Mancherter operatives, and in eliciting from them the facts of their case, and in adopting resolutions, petitions and addresses. On the fourth day, other resolutions were adopted, and a deputation from the great Anti Corn Law league was received

Perhaps never was more business done in so short a time and with such perfect unanimity.—The only question on which the slightest difference of opinion was manifested, related to prayer. On taking the chair provisionally, Dr. Cox, called for a prayer from the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, our accomplished historian, and the Independent minister of Kensington, upon whose ministry several of the Whig nobility are occasional attendants Dr V. obeyed, after which it appeared that the Roman Catholic priests and the Unitarian ministers objected, and in deference to them it was agreed that in future devotional exercises should take place elsewhere. With this exception, there was not a jarring vote in all the proceeding of the Conference.

I will just indicate the prominent features in the four days' discussion. The venerable and learned Dr. J. Pye Smith, read a masterly paper in indication of the calling, constitution, and objects of the Conference. The Rev. J. W. Massie, who was mainly instrumental in convoking the meeting, gave an account of what had been done by the provisional committee, and stated facts as to the results of their labors. Mr. Richard Cobden, Mr. P. J. Stockport, was introduced to make a speech, exposit ory of the general question. The Earl of Duice, a large land proprietor, was present during the whole proceedings, and declared that he had no idea till then of the powerful bearings of the question on morals and religion, although previously convinced of the impolicy and injurious character of restrictions on importation of foreign corn.—Mr. Curtis, from Ohio, strikingly illustrated the baneful influence of the Corn Laws upon the commerce of England and America. Dr. Vaughan, distinguished himself by an admirable historical speech on the futility of apprehensions from a state of dependence for food upon foreign countries, instancing Phenicia and Venice in their palmy days. The Rev. Thomas Spencer made some admirable remarks in defence of ministers of the gospel caring for the poor, and contended that to do so was to be "a successor of the apostles indeed." The Rev. J. E. Giles, Baptist minister of Leeds, handled in an effective style, the commercial view of the question, as did the Rev. Dr. Payne its relations to the science of political econmy, of which he maintained it was the duty of every minister to be a student. Many other speeches of singular excellence were delivered, but I have not space to enumerate them. Suffice it to say, that the members of the Conference fully proved their mental competency to the task undertaken. I must not omit, however, to mention that on the last day Mr. George Thompson addressed the Conference with electrical effect.

But the most important part of the proceedings consisted in the facts detailed from the personal experience. So full were the ministers of information as to the distress in their several localities, that it was found impossible to hear a tithe of what they had to offer. Nearly a hundred of them, however, made brief statements, which drew tears from every eye. It appeared that in many instances whole families had not tasted flesh for years, that 3*s*. to 5*s*. a week was frequently a family's whole income for full work, that multitudes of children were detained from Sunday schools, and multitudes of adults from public worship, by want of decent clothing, that contributions to religious institutions were rapidly declining, and that amongst the masses the difficulty of obtaining a bare livelihood had wholly suppressed all considerations of eternity. And besides all this deep and deplorable distress, it was stated that in many of the manufacturing districts, there were thousands wholly devoid of the means of living and exposed to inevitable starvation. And this was clearly traced both by the sufferers themselves, and their advocates, to the Corn Laws.—The statements of the ministers were effectingly confirmed by those of a deputation of Manchester weavers, who stated that several thousands of their body were entirely without employ, and that when emyloyed they had but a shilling a day for fourteen hours work.

Such being the state of our working population, especially in the manufacting districts, you will be able to anticipate the tone adopted by the Conference in its address to the Queen, its petitions to Parliament, its address to the people of England, and its various resolutions. You will find them at length in the patriot and other English juornals. I must content myself with assuring you that the members of the Conference have concealed from no party in the state its conviction and its intention. They have plainly declared that in their deliberate judgment, the Corn Laws are incompatible with morality and religion, that without their repeal the people cannot live, nor the public peace be maintained, and that they, as ministers of religion, shall feel it to be their duty to insist until a free trade in corn has received the sanction of the legislature. And they are in earnest. In conformity with the suggestion of the Conference, Monday next will be set apart, in thousands of churches, as a day of humiliation & prayer on account of our national sins and our national sufferings In the mean time the members are kindling in their several localities the holy fire of a benevolent patriotism; petitions by thousands will flow into Parliament, and, before many months, a socond Conference, four times as numerous as the first, will be convened in the metropolist itself. These are movements which Sir Robert Peel, who has this day received the seal of office from his predecessors, will not be able to resist, and although the Tory papers affect to pour contempt upon them, their effect will soon be seen. Once let the religious public of England be fairly roused, and no prudent government will fail to yield their just and reasonable demands. I confess that I look forward to the repeal of the obnoxious Corn Laws, at no distant period, as an event which shall bind England and America by a chain of mutual interest, which nothing will be able to dissolve. Brethren, pray for us.

INFORMATION WANTED.—The editor of the Boston Daily Mail ask the following questions of his readers.

Did you ever know a lady with white teeth to put her hand-over them when she laughed?

Did you ever know a gay lad and a sprighly lass who could't pick berries into one basket?

Did you ever know a woman that never had any thing stolen from her clothes yard?

Did you ever know a young lady who was too weak to stank up during prayer time at church, who could not dance all night without being tired at all?

Did you ever know a young man to hold a skein of yarn for his favorite to wind, without getting it stranegly tangled?

Did you ever know a man with a shocking bad hat, a long beard, and a ragged coat, who could find a respectable hotel that was not full?

Did you ever know a very prettey young lady that had not a cousin to wait upon her to lectures and parties?

Did you ever know a young lady that did not have some very curious piece of sewing, that she wouldn't let the young gentleman see?

VERY DEAF.—One day last week, a man was fishing in a pond near Chichester when the owner came up to nim, and ordered him off; the man playing the deaf ear, answered in return, that the fish would not bite, and that he did not think there was anything in the pond but carp. The owner was so enraged at the fellow's answer that he threatened to throw him in the pond, when the intruder offered to lend him one of his rods to fish with. Unable to suppress his anger, the proprietor ran up to him for the purpose of giving him a ducking, but at the moment the deaf man bobbed his head down, and the incensed gentleman's foot slipping, he fell headlong into the water, a depth of 6 feet, and was obliged to call upon the deaf man to assist him in getting out, who told him he did not expect to catch such a large fish in the pond, or he would have brought a larger line.

READING.

MR. EDITOR,—The age in which we live, is often spoken of as a reading age: and yet when we reflect upon the small amount of information acquired, we are led to the supposition that there is something wrong some where. It may not be altogether unprofitable if we inquire briefly, where lies the error? In the first place, to acquire information, sufficient time should be allotted every work, to give it a fair, and thorough perusal.

The amount of time usually spent in reading, (or rather looking over,) pages to the amount of one hundred, should all be spent in the perusal of twenty-five. A work should be read, whether aloud, or silently, in a slow, and cautious manner; every word should be correctly pronounced; every stop faithfuily regarded; every emphatic word, or sentence, distinctly observed, and the meaning of every word deeply impressed on the mind. The reader should always have by his side a Dictionary; and when a word of which he does not understand the definition occurs, he should turn to the word, and endeavor to fix the meaning of it in his mind; by this means a greater amount of information would be attained, in one quarter the number of pages, which are now to so great an extent, merely looked at, and hurried over, as though life, and death, depended upon the number of pages to be read in a limited space of time Every idea of the author should be examined, and the reader should inquire whether the idea, correspond with sound philosophical truth; if so they should be cordially received, and if not they should be peremptorily rejected.

In the second place, readers should choose works of standard merit. Too much time is thrown away in reading those works, which contain not one particle of truth, or literary information, and are only circulated to defraud the ignorant and unwary of their money, and what is far worse of those golden moments, which should be better, and more profitably employed. The money also that flows free as water, for novel and useless works, would furnish an amount of literary information, hardly credible. Works of standard merit are in circulation, and at prices which bring them within the reach of almost every individual; if these works were encouraged as they should be, and to the extent they justly merit; other works would be circulated, and the pens of able and distinguished men would be cheerfully employed to increase the stock in the market; and we should soon have an assortment of literary works in circulation, that would astonish even the most enlightened, and refined.

Who will set the example in bringing about this desirable state of things in the reading community? I would suggest that it commence in the church among Christians; I speak of the church and of Christians universally. Choose for your own use, and the use of your families, (I would not say always religious) but always valuable books. Books of standard merit. Books from which may be obtained information profitable to yourselves, to your families, and that will enable you to be useful to your fellow men around you. Choose such works when you would make a present to a friend; works of sterling value, that will enlighten the mind, and shed abroad a healthful, and delightsome influence. I have suggested that this work commence with Christians, because they are the light of the world, and the salt of the earth. AMICUS.

How many sensible men of thirty there are in the world, wha have not yet discovered that they are not men of genius!

A GHOST STORY.

It has been said

"There is a tear for all who die,"

Who that has seen the weeping train following a departed friend to his long rest in the tomb—who that has heard the overflowings of grief from a heart that feels as alone a mother's heart can feel, when her offspring has been taken suddenly away, and heard the cry, "Give, O give me back my child"—who that has seen and heard these things, can doubt the sentiment is true.—And particularly when we have been led to observe, that where the warmest affections cluster around an object, the hold of that darling object on life seems lessened, the powerful hand which is over all agitates but the frame and the spirit has gone, as the early dew drop falls from the shaken flower.

'Tis consoling thus to think, tears shall flow for us when we are dead. This cheers the adventurous sea-boy when he wakes from a startling dream that he is dying in a stranger land. He sits beneath and above the starry sky—or perhaps among the clouds that are bursting thunder about him, whose lurid streams roll harmless from the rigging, and how hardly at such times, can he help turning to his long forsaken home; and his fond, his doating mother is in a moment present to his view, he sees the big tear trembling in her eye, and fancies he hears the fervent prayer for her wandering sea-faring boy, then can he feelingly say "Yes a mother's tears stream for me who am as dead to her."

There is poetry in real life, and there is too, good reader, real life without poetry. The sentiment at the head of our sheet is beautifully poetic, and when we use it we should speak of the poetry that is in real life, but I shall endeavour to give you an instance of real life without poetry.

It is a mistaken opinion that hospitals furnish so greatly enhanced advantages to the recovery of invalids. In this remark I allude more particularly to the part performed by the attendands.—That in institutions of the kind, the first and ablest medical advice is rendered there cannot be a shadow of doubt.—Those who have been so unfortunate as to be obliged to seek in hospitals, relief from the various and complicated ills, that flesh is heir to, as well as those who have been in any way much connected with them, know that there a place is found where sympathy seldom comes—where misery reigns, and death is a frequent visitor. This remark is sustained by facts:—who has the unhappy maniac to care for her wants, but a strong and heartless man who rudely secures her in her cell? who that aged female to watch her knawing ulcer?—or who that tall well-formed youth, to guard the progress of his intensely burning fever?—The character (as it is not unfrequently found) of attendants employed in these public institutions, and also some other interesting facts may be illustrated in the following brief story.

The narration I take from the individual to whom it happened, of its authenticity there can be no question. Beside the character of the individual, for veracity, I rely more on its truth, from the belief with which I am impressed that similar cases have not unfrequently occurred, and perhaps with still more unhappy results: Perhaps I may at some future day furnish you with another.

A poor man was admitted to the Royal Hospital in Dublin.—His had not always been the lot to be pressed hard with poverty, he once moved among those reputed rich, and received the homage so lavishly bestowed on those who can boast a larger share of this world's vanities than many around them. His ships had gone, and returned again and again laden with the rich products.

"From India's coral strand;"

and

"Where Afric's sunny fountains
Roll down their golden sand."

But in an ill starred hour, misfortunes came one after another, till he was reduced to less than many a beggar's portion.—And as afflictions come not singly, he saw one and another & another of his friends die around him.—Those false friends too, who reflected only the glitter of his gold, but had no sympathy in the hour of trouble, all fell off to dance their attendance to some one less unfortunate than he. Ships returned from bankrupting voyages, commissioned agents proved recreant, bills were protested, and all the sequelae of writs, judgments, executions and the bailiffs hammer wound up the once flourishing concern.

From long and close application to business his frame seemed little able to withstand so severe a shock;—He was soon seized with an inflamation, which threatened rapidly to carry him to his grave. After a few days of raging fever, he died.

For those unacquainted with Hospital regulations, I may briefly state it is common to have a place of temporary deposit for the dead, where friends may come and claim them, to render the last tribute required by the body, that of burial. The coffin lids are not firmly fastened, in order that they may be readily shoved one side to expose the deceased to those who seek to recognize their friends. It is also customary to guard this dead house, as it is called, that no bodies shall be stolen away.

The man we have said, died as soon as his eyes were closed and before the feverish heat had radiated from his body the sympathizing attendants divided among themselves to every one a portion of his scanty vesture. His coat—his vest, his hat, in fact every item of clothing was apportioned by some one to his own use, and the denuded man wrapped in an apology for a winding sheet, was thrown into a coffin and put in the dead house. Dark night always fearful to the timorous came on, and with it came the turn of the person who related the story to stand sentry at the dead house. At the appointed hour he took his wonted stand and resorted to all the common methods by which the timid and superstitious are prone, to while away the dark hours, and keep up their courage. He alternately whistled and sang, then listened intently with an ear all alive to even the spring of a cricket, then walked and whistled again till the hour of his watch had well nigh passed.

He was standing in his guard box looking out of a small window through which he could see full before him the door of the house, when he observed the door to move a little way open, again it moved a little farther and in it stood the man in his winding sheet, who had been placed there during the day. Fear and sudden trembling now seized on every tissue of his body—yet still he reasoned, he only fancied the ghostly form and rubbed his eyes to dissipate the illusion; a moment more, and he was doubly terrified by a voice crying "halloo' halloo guard don't be afraid, give me my cl thes I am cold." Feeling his strength giving away, the guard now rushed out and quickly passing the door, ran as for his life while fear gave slowness to the rapidity of his flight—The appartion followed as closely as possible upon his heels till both reached a large apartment in the main building where numbers of sleepy guards were waiting the hour for duty. The guard stumbled in, uttered a shriek and fell breathless; the man behind tottered in and fell over him on the floor. The unusual and sudden intrusion alarmed the inmates, and being equally horror struck with the affrighted guard, they could no more ask than he could give any explanation of the scene before them—when the ghost took upon himself to request them not to fear, it was himself in reality, that he only wanted his clothes, he was shrivering with the cold. If possible reader you may imagine, for I shall not attempt to describe the terror—the almost annihilation of these attendants when the pale form in the winding sheet, said to one "give me my coat—you have it" to another "where is my vest" to a third "you have my stockings" and "my boots are on the feet of Mr ——Thus he proceeded to designate without error the very men who had taken his clothing and to claim of each the identical article he had chosen or that had fallen to his lot. Strange and impossible as the relation may seem it is indeed true.

This is probably the nearest mortal man ever came to seeing a ghost. It is however not necessary to suppose this was the ghost of the coffined man—nor to argue from it that departed souls are conversant with all that is transacting on the earth, and that they may act as guardian angels or tormenting spirits. Yet I am far from being disposed to deny that departed friends may be as fully acquainted with the joys and ills of earthly sojourners as we are, on the contrary it is indeed a consolation to feel that this may be so.

It is scracely worth the while to detain you my readers by such reflections. I am satisfied the truth as it was has already impressed itself on your minds. That the man exhausted from the violence of his disease, had fallen into a stupor in which he was perfectly conscious of every word spoken, and every act concerning the disposition of his body, and though thus conscious that he was laid out, coffined & about to be buried, every effort to move a muscle, or emit a single sound proved unavailing. But after he had lain in the dead house several hours he recovered his powers and the scene followed which you have been reading.

MR. EDITOR:—Sir, if you please, you may give publicity to the following amusing anecdote.

There lived some where in the world, not many years since, a wealthy sage.—He and his partner in life had lived many years together, and had accumulated much of this world's goods; and were the parents of several very promising children. Among them was a favorite son. The old man desirous of seeing his son do well in life, and also being anxious to give him a trade by which he thought his son could obtain a livelihood, placed him under the tuition of a notable rouge, to learn perfectly the art of stealing. So when the days of his apprenticeship were ended, the son returned home to his parents, a complete master of his thieving trade.

Not many days after the return of this youth to his father's dwelling, a market-man was seen passing along the road, (for the sage's dwelling stood near the main road), with a very fat hog on his shoulder, wending his way to the market of a neighboring village, not far distant from that place.

The father said, son, "Have you learned your trade?" "yes, sir replied he!" "there goes a man with a very fat hog, can't you go and steal it from him?" "yes, sir," says he, "I can steal it from him!" "Well," says the father, "if you can, I will give you five thousand dollars.

Now, the great question agitated by the father, and all the by-standers, how was this theft to be effected without a detection of the perpetrator; for there was no apparent way of effecting it without going directly up to the man, and take the hog from him by main force. The sun was shining in its meredian splendor.

The youth being an adept in the art of stealing, suffered the market-man to pass on a head; he then put on a splendid pair of shoes, and by a near cut through the woods, (in disguise of course), preceeded the market-man some distance, and then he took off one of his shoes and threw it into the road. He then secreted himself in the thickets to await the arrival of the traveller, and to hear what he would say about the elegant shoe lying in the road.

When the traveller arrived where the shoe was, he said, "dear me, here is a very good shoe, I wish I had the fellow to it; but it is not worth while to pick this up, for I expect some person has lost it." The man passed on without carrying the shoe.

The youth hearing this, as soon as the man had gone quite out of sight, came into the road and picked up the shoe which he had thrown there; and again by a direct route, preceeded the weary hogman and threw the fellow shoe into the road, and in like manner secreted himself to await the traveller. Here his project was to end:—duck or no dinner.

Soon after the man arrived, wagging under his heavy hog. "Oh!" "dear me," he exclaimed, "here is the fellow shoe to the one I have just left behind me; how sorry I am that I did not bring that shoe along with me:" "I will go back and get it," says he. So the hogman down with his hog along side of the road, and the shoe, and started in search of the one he had left behind him; well pleased with the luck he had met.

So while the market-man was gone off in search of the shoe he had left behind, the crafty youth availed himself of the opportunity, crawls forward from his place of concealment,—shoulders the hog,—stalks most majestically off through the woods, and arriving at his abode, his father said, "my son have you got it?" "yes father, did I not tell you that I am master of my trade?"

His father immediately gave him the $5000, and off he went forth to the world, with a good bulk of ill gotten gain, after having deprived the poor market-man of his hard earned property, as does a many a one is this day and time. So much for being master of his trade.

MR. TEAGE.

Permit me through your paper to present my respects to the several colonists whose communications to me, the past year have remained unanswered. They may rest assured that this seeming neglect has not arisen from a want of respect, but from a continual press of business, greatly increased by the late difficulties in the colony, on the happy settlement of which allow me to congratulate all the colonists.

Yours Truly.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AMERICAN COLONIZATION SOCIETY.

Colonization Rooms,
Washington City,
December 14, 1841.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee and several members of the Board of Directors of the American Colonization Society, now in the city, held at the above place and time, the despatches of Lieut. Governor J. J. Roberts, detailing the circumstances of the death of the late Thomas Buchanan, Governor of the Commonwealth of Liberia, having been read, the following preamble and resolutions were passed unanimously; viz.—

WHEREAS, God in the wise administration of his government, has seen fit to remove by death the late Thomas Buchanan, Governor of the Commonwealth of Liberia, in whom centered the hopes of the friends of Colonization in this country, and the expectation and confidence of the citizens of Liberia, and has thus left a nation and a race to mourn his irreparable loss;

Resolved,—That with humanity and reverence, we acknowledge the hand of an All-wise and overruling God, in this afflicting dispensation.

Resolved,—That we sincerely condole with the afflicted mother and relatives of our late Governor, and that as a testimony of our sympathy and sorrow, we will wear crape on the left arm for the space of thirty days.

Resolved,—That we deeply sympathise with the citizens of Liberia, in the loss which they have sustained, and that we commend them to the protection and kind care of "Him who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," and will not forsake any who put their trust in him.

Resolved,—That we feel called upon to redouble our diligence and zeal in the prosecution of that noble cause for the promotion of which Governor Buchanan gave his valuable life.

Resolved,—That we assure the American public of the great confidence which we repose in the Lieut. Governor, General J. J. Roberts, on whom the administration of the government of the Commonwealth now devolves, for the time being, and that we trust the colony will steadily advance in prosperity and general improvement.

Resolved,—That the Rev. George W. Bethune of Philadelphia, be respectfully requested to deliver a funeral discourse on the death of Governor Buchanan, at the anniversary of the American Colonization Society, on the 8th Proximo.

Resolved,—That it be recommended to all the clergy friendly to the scheme of colonization, to preach a sermon with reference to the death of Governor Buchanan, on Sabbath the 23rd, of January next, and take up a collection in aid of the cause to which he was so much devoted.—

Resolved,—That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the friends of the late Governor Buchanan; and that they be published in the various newspapers in this country, and sent to the colony for insertion in the papers published there.

A true copy from the records.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, MAR. 17, 1842.

HIS MAJESTY PAH-KO-ROO.

His Majesty, King Pah-ko-roo, has been pleased to honor us with a commission. He has sent his insignia of royalty—his sceptre. This emblem of African Royalty, (unlike that of other countries, which we believe is always straight), is nothing more nor less than the tail of an Elephant. The one in question, is tricked off in the best stile of native artists. The long bristly hair is stripped off nearly to the end, where it is suffered to remain, and the more thick and profuse the greater the value, & the greater the integrity of the emblem. The denuded bone is then encased about half way in the strong cartilagenous derms of the crocidile, encircled at intervals by bands of plaited party-colored leather. The upper end to the extremity is enveloped in scarlet velvet, stitched with black and red leather, and in such a manner as to let the brustles project from the upper and under sides as well as from the end. The whole is surmounted by a stout leathern cap in shape of a cone. A cord of plaited leather with a sliding loop to attach it securely to his Majesty's wrist, completes the emblem.

The message accompanying it, was;—"King say you must send em white man country, and put all him hand (handle) for silber, (silver), and put king name dare, all same King Boson before. I be King now, I want do King fash. Any money he ketch I can pay you." We intend doing ourselves the honor of sending it to England, and having it mounted and inscribed as requested.

ARRIVAL OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

On Monday, the 28th, ultimo, His Excellency, Gov. J. J. Roberts, arrived in the colonial schooner Regulus, from his tour of inspection of the leeward settlements. His departure from the Regulus was announced by a salute from the vessel, and at 9 o'clock the succeeding morning, he was congratulated on his appointment by a salute of 21 guns from Central Fort.

DINNER TO GOVERNOR ROBERTS.

When the Commission reached this place, His Excellency was at the leeward, as soon as the news of its arrival transpired, proposals were made by some of his political and private friends to invite him to a dinner on his return. Preparations were accordingly made. A subscriptoin was opened and tickets issued at four dollars each. Each subscriber was allowed to take two ladies to a party to be given on the evening of the day of the dinner. On Friday the fourth instant, the gentlemen sat down to a substantial and elegant dinner. The table was laid in the government garden, under a canopy formed for the occasion. In vain did Sol assay to dart his askant rays beneath the cool retreat. The managers all provident of comfort, had provided against every annoyance. For a defence again t the burning phase of the sun, a screen composed of American and Colonial flags was suspended carelessly from the canopy, which while it effectually protected from heat, waved gracefully to the passing breeze and formed a tasteful drapery to the whole.

Here, protected alike from gazing eyes and longing throats, with ample room, the gentlemen appeared to rise to the very acme of enjoyment in the "feast of reason and flow of soul."

Colonel John N. Lewis presided, supported by Major Yates on his right. There were some toasts drank, one of which is so good, we will venture to record it. It was by Mr. Ciples.

Pointing to the American and Colonial flags at his back, he said; "The Stars and the Cross. The stars announced the birth of Christ, and the Cross the Redemption of mankind." It will be recollected that the Liberia flag bears the cross. The gentlemen arose at 6 o'clock P. M. and at 7 reassembled with the ladies at government house. The party was large but highly agreeable. The inspiration of the presence of ladies, kept as usual the the ball of innocent mirth and gayety constantly moving, and it was eleven o'clock before the party commenced to retire.

AN AFRICAN EDITOR.

To perpetrate an editorial, he seats himself—not in the cushioned boidoir of the literate idler—nor in the fashionable bower of the poet, but in a little sooty apartment of six by eight. Beneath his dingy foolscap a portionof deal, lies supinely on an empty barrel. A few odds and ends of books and newspapers lie in hopeless confusion around. At his side an inkstand—not of china—nor of bronze, but the small end of a cow's horn—on his left a quiver of quills rifled from the upper surface of a porcupine.

In one corner stands a billet of camwood, its opposite is occupied by what once contained flour. The walls are duly chalked—not with mechanical designs—nor geometrical diagrams—but with mathematical mementoes of the kroos of potatoes of which he has relieved the farmer. This is his blotter ledger, he keeps none.

But the boy comes for copy. He draws up a well hacked trestle, for which he is indebted to the carelessness of the carpenter, and seats himself in front of the barrel. Seizing the fearful quill, he thus begins.—The press the omnipotent press is the most powerful engine which it has ever been the lot of mortals to possess.—It is the SCOURGE of tyrants—the pillar of religion and the PALLADIUM of civil liberty. From it as from an impregnable rampart the fearless independent, editor—There is no cassado for breakfast sir.—Well go, and get some and don'te bother me. I have no money sir—don't I know that—tell Crako to let you have a kroo. He says he won't. We have not paid him for the other yet, and he wants the money. Plague the fellow what can he mean. Can't you borrow some?—No, sir: I've tried, and they say we owe now more than we'll ever pay. Well go and collect some money. I have carried out the bills sir. Have you collected any money? No, sir: Why? Mr.———says he has no money, and you need not be afraid of the small amount. Mr.———says he don'te like the paper now—you are too polite with the Mr.——says your paper is scurrilous Mr.———says there is too much religion in it, & too little politics Mr.———says there is too much politics and too little religion, and Mr.———says you have insulted his father's tenth cousin. They say they will not take the paper any longer, and they will pay when they get the money.—That will do, go and call again in an hour for copy.

The editor resumes.—And though there is no class of men to whom the world is under more immense obligation, yet there is none—Jumbo has come to get his pay for the palm oil sir.—Be gone sir, don't you see I am engaged—there is none we repeat that is doomed to a more hopeless. The rats have gnawed the roller sir.—Well cast another. We have no molasses sir.—Well shut up the office, and go to dinner.

Clerical Refinement.—A Liberia parson (whom we will not name) was called on to fasten a couple in the cords of wedlock. He attended; and after spelling out the ceremony as a child would the fable of the wolf and the kid, by way ot addition said to the groom, "dare is you wife, now buss her."

A Novel case.—Not long since a hopeless scapegrace applied to the clerk of the court for license to marry. He paid the fee, and had scarcely retired when a matron some thirty years, his senior, called to make some inquiries on the subject. She found the license had been issued, but to her dismay, that not hers, but the name of another had been inscerted. She immediately gave chase after the faithless swain. She found him, and commenced at the top of her lungs a full diapason of reproach for his treacherry. It was long, she rattled away before he could prevail upon her to say 'yes.' And then after courting her so long and borrowing from her the dollar to pay for the license, for him to try to marry another woman, shows, said she that you are the grandest rascal that ever lived. Not a word did the youth reply, but with the utmost nonchalance went on incorporating into his physical man a hugh sour-sop which he had filched from some tree. Delivered of her bile the enraged spinster turned away, when the ungallant lover planted the remainder of the sop full upon the neck of his mistress. This was the signal for another concert which she exceuted to the infinite satisfaction of a rabble of boys, which by this time had collected around.

Millsburg.—This settlement is progressing. We paid it a visit a few days ago, and were pleased to note the evident favourable improvement in the manner and means of living. Allowing for the extra effort which had been most probably made to meet the occasion (it being quarterly meeting) there was certainly a greater profusion of the necessaries and comforts of life, than we ever witnessed before on a similar occasion. The people are better contented and more elated with hopes of the future, than in any past time. As far as their means will allow, they have gone into the sugar business and from the success of their inexperienced efforts the past year, they seem confident of hereafter doing the thing handsomely. Rev. Mr. Wilson at the manual labour farm of the M. E. Mission at White Plains will make 4000 pounds, and Mr. Williss has made 1000 pounds. All this has been done with an inefficient temporary affair of a mill which they borrowed from Mr. Moore. Other persons have made enough for their own use during the coming year, and they have all reserved enough cane for the next planting. The sugar is of good quality, well granulated and heavy body. This much will be saved to the colony.

TIGHT LACING.

It is said that the French fashionables have discarded tight lacing; and that the Grecian models which are only the fair and beautiful proportions of nature, are henceforth to be standards of fashions for ladies' waists, instead of the wasp, hour-glass &c.

Round the loud timbrel o'er hill, valley and sea,
The tape strings are broken, and the women are free.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

From the tone of President Tyler's message we learn that a demand will probably be made on the British government, for reparation or for satisfation for insults offered by English cruisers in searching and detaining suspected American vessels on this coast.

A CARAVAN.

A caravan of Kondahs and Mandingoes has lately paid us a visit. It brought a fair quantity of wood ivory and cloths. The Kondahs, especially, complain loudly of the impediment, thrown in the way of the slave trade at Cape Mount and Gallinas. They say a koffle of some 20 or 30 slaves sent from Boporah has been waiting at Cape Mount more than a month, but has been unable to find a market. They assign that as the reason why they have come in with wood and ivory to look little tobacco for smoke and powder for kill meat.

MURDER AND ROBBERRY.

Two Americans, resident at Sinoe, had been engaged by Rev. Mr. Canfield to saw timber for his contemplated mission house at Settra Kroo. While on their way by land, they passed through an intermediate native hamlet, and rather incautiously exposed a parcel of tobacco, which they had taken to defray the expenses of their journey. Three natives, large herculean fellows, left the town in company with them, professing to be journeying to the same place. They kept together for about six miles, when the natives suddenly halted and demanded their tobacco, axes &c. The Americans remonstrated. The natives leveled their pieces and fired. One of the Americans, Shuman, fell, and Williams dropped his baggage and took to the bush. Shuman was killed dead. Williams, though seriously wounded, made his way home through the woods, and arrived in a state of complete exhaustion.

An alarm was given by the Americans, and the natives of Sinoe joined them in pursuit of the murderers. They were found to be Neffoos, and were arrested by the Bloo-Ballees, (Doin, the native dialect) and delivered over to the Americans. His Excellency, Governor Roberts, happened to be there at the time.

To redeem them from death, which the Americans were strongly inclined to inflict upon them, their tribe has agreed to pay in twelve months, the sum of One Thousand Dollars, and to defray the expenses of the prisoners' confinement, until that time. In default of payment, they are to be disposed of according to the pleasure of the Governr.

AFRICAN COFFEE.

It is stated, we believe, by our friend Doct. Johnson of Basa Cove, in a letter to Honorable S. Wilkeson, that the average production of the African tree is five pounds. This may be the average production of one species of the African tree. There is another apd the best kind, which yields triple quantity. Our friend Mars, has a tree standing near his house, from which he gathered in one season, two and a half bushels in the husk, which weighed when cleansed and dried, seventeen pounds and two ounces. Can any one inform us what is the average produce of a tree in the West Indies?

Not Quite.—In an American paper of late date, we find "Mr. Teage died at Sierra Leone, on the 13th of August last." We admit that we are sometimes fond of notoriety; but we are not dead yet, although much exhausted from depletion. It rests with our subscribers to revive us by timely application of their arrearages.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

In looking over my returns, I was struck with the remark of a man of much practical wisdom, and one of the best farmers in the Commonwealth. He says "that a farmer should produce upon his farm all those supplies for his family which the farm can be made to yield." In this case, this is done within doors and without; for there the spinning wheel has not forgotten to turn round, nor the shuttle to speed its flight. In this cottage, whose neat and beautiful arrangements cannot be suppassed, the clothing, the bedding, and the carpeting were all the product of their own fields and flocks. I shall not soon forget the unpretending and hearty hospitality of these enviable dwellings. I have slept many a time under a silken canopy, and trodden many a carpet as soft as the pride of eastern luxury could make it; but never with anything like the sentiment of honest pride and independence with which I saw here the floors spread with carpets made from their own flocks, which for fineness and beauty the foot of a princess need not disdain; and on a cold night slept in woollen sheets from their own looms, as soft as the shawls of Cashmere; and wiped my face with towels spun with their own hands from their own flax, of a whiteness as transparent and delicate as the drifted snow. In such beautiful examples of domestic management, it is delightful to see with how limited means the best comforts and luxuries of life may be purchased. Nor were these instances few. The country of Berkshire abounds with examples of this domestic comfort and independence. Much to be regretted will be the change which has already invaded many parts of the State, when under the pretence of superior cheapness, these household fabrics shall give place to the more showy but flimsy products of foreign industry; and the healthy exercise of domestic labor and household cares shall be deemed degrading in our wives and daughters, and exchanged for the idleness and frivolities of pride and luxury.

I agree entirely in the sentiment above expressed, that every farmer should, as far as possible, supply the wants of his family from his own farm. He shou'd supply himself with bread, meat, vegetables, milk, butter, cheese and clothing, as far as his farm can be made to do it. He can almost always do it at a less expense than he can purchase these supplies. The labor requisite for this purpose may often be given at times when it would not otherwise be occupied; and by hands for which there might otherwise be no employment. The sentiment of self respect and self-dependence inspired by such a course, is a great gain. The satisfaction of eating bread raised by one's own labor is not small; and various and important moral influences, which I shall not now discuss, render it altogether desirable; though in some cases the same amount of labor consumed in their production, if applied in other ways, would purchase a larger amount of the same supplies. Though the supply of our own great wants from our own farms might seem, however, in some cases, to be a pecuniary loss, it is always in the end a moral gain with which the pecuniary loss is not to be put in competition.—Colman,s Survey.

Mrs. Jones the Female Impostor.—All our readers without doubt remember the performances of one Mrs. Jones, in Rochester some months ago, who by large stories of high connections in England induced a young man named Hunter to become her husband, whom she plundered of what little money he had, involved him largely in debt, and then decamped. A communication in the Rochester Evening post states that she has been performing similar impositions in Toronto. She there represented herself as a head cook in the late Sir Astley Cooper's establishment, who she said had left her an aunuity of £100. This soon increased to £300, and a man named Lanesboro, believed her story and married her. A letter from Toronto to the Post gives the following summary of her exploits, and adds that she has since been heard of at Albany.

"After having deceived her husband by stories about £100,000 being left her, and that Lord Liverpool had sent over his steward to bring her home; after having got a number of others to credit her story and trust her with money; after having, in the midst of sickness, given assurance to the attending minister, of her Christain resignation and pious trust in her Redeemer; after having enjoyed herself by driving in a carriage, under a contract to buy it; after having prepared her husband with the necessaries to go to London, to attend to her business; after having borrowed a pair of boots of the wife of the tailor that made her husband's fine clothes; after having gulled every body, she decamped quietly by the Transit one morning in the first of this week, just before her husband was to have started for England. I suppose she has carried off about £300, and has gone to play off the same game of cheating on the gullables of some other place."

A Brilliant Stucco Whitewash.—Many have probably often heard of the brilliant and lasting whitewash upon the east end of the President's House at Washington city. The following is a correct receipt for making it.

Take clean lumps of well burnt lime, (say five or six quarts,) slack the same with hot water in a tub,—covered, to keep in the steam—pass it in the fluid from through a fine sieve; add one fourth of a pound of whiting or burnt alum, pulverized; one pound of good sugar; three pints of rice flour, made into a thin and well boiled paste, and one pound of clean glue, dissolved by first soaking it well, and then putting it into a small kettle, which should again be put into a larger one filled with water, and placed over a slow fire. Add five gallons of hot water to the whole mixture.

This wash is applied where particular neatness is required, with a painter's brush. It must be put on while warm, if upon the outside of the building—if within doors, cold. It will retain its brilliancy for many years. There is nothing of the kind that will compare with it. About one pint of this mixture will cover a square yard upon the outside of a house, if properly applied. If a larger quantity than five gallons is wanted, the same propotions must be observed in preparing. Colouring matter may be added to give it any required shade.—Genessee Farmer.

RETORT.

Madame D. had a magnificient cat. M. de C. amused himself one day by shooting it for want of something else to shoot. Madame D. caused to be set in her own house, and in the houses of her friends all sorts of mouse traps; and when three or four hundred mice were caught, she had them put into a box, which was forwarded to Madame de C. at her county house. The lady eagerly opened the box herself, expecting to find in it some new modes, the mice jumped out and presently filled the house; while at the bottom of the box was found a note addressed to Madame C.—"Madame, your husband has killed my cat—I send you my mice.

Which is Nobler?—It is easier to be a martyr than a Christian. Men can suffer death for conscience sake, when they are fully persuaded that the momentary pangs they must endure are but the precursors of unsullied and endless happiness. And some, there is reason to believe, have gone to the stake with firm and exulting heart, when the true spirit of the gospel was not in them: for they were sustained by the thought of the glory of martyrdom. But to bear the cross daily; to endure the pangs of insult and scorn and self-denial; to resist the temptations of sin in its thousand alluring forms; to keep the heart with all diligence; to love our enemies and bless them that curse us; to show forth at all times meekness and gentleness and temperance and patience;—this is not easy although it is a nobler achievement. Yet men sing the praises of the martyr; and the Christian having trod a lowly path, where the thorns pierced his feet and the storms beat on his head, yet turned him not aside, goes down to the grave unsung. There is one, however, who records his name, and at the great day it will be found written in the Book of Life.—Ohio Observer.

"Use moderation in your manner of living, and in this way seek relief from the increasing expense of the times in which we live, rather than by engaging in more extensive and often hazardous schemes of trade. By these latter means the mind becomes encumbered, and unfitted for religious service, yea often for religious thought, and for breathing daily after spiritual riches, which are to be enjoyed in close communion with God. Consider how distant that state which would give up all to Him, if required, is from that which indulges itself in ease to the full extent of its power, or is endeavouring by multiplied adventures in trade to acquire that power which it covets for the purpose of worldly enjoyment."

"An humble mind seldon exercises itself in great matters; its attention is to real requiring; and these relate, for the most part, to the day of small things"

THE SCENE ON MOUNT TABOR,

At the Transfiguration.

'Tis evening upon Tabor's hill;
And, like a sheet of gold beneath,
Reflecting forest, star and rill,
Sleeps, bright and bright, Genesareth,
Yet still four way-worn pilgrims climb,
Tabor, thy precipice sublime.

And now, with fainting steps and slow,
The four have reached the summit plain
And now their wearied limbs they throw
Amid the harvest's yellow grain—
But one alone is kneeling there
With lip and heart in mighty prayer,

And now has sunk the last red beam;
—Still on the ground the three are strown,
In the deep sleep that knows no dream:
Still one is kneeling there, alone,
Still fix'd beneath the dark'ning sky,
With clasping hands and heavenward eye.

'Tis now night and silence o'er the land;
In town and palace all is sleep,
From Salem's towers to Syria's sand,
Each glance glows on Tabor's steep;
And angels on gold and purple wing,
Pay homage to their pilgrim King

And two, of splendor's richest tide,
Are floating o'er the mountain's brow,
And now they worship at his side.
Are these thy vassals, Man of woe!
Light folds thee like a regal robe,
Light crowns thee, Monarch of the globe!

They speak the living words of heaven,
O death absorbed in victory,
O Satan quelled, and sin forgiven,
Of man redeemed, and nature free,
Of mercy's starry diadem,
And earth illumined by its beam!

The sleepers wake, their startled gaze
Sees lamp of more than star or sun,
And, flowing to its central blaze,
Pilgrim no more—the Mighty One
And Israel's chief, and Israel's seer,
Elijah, Moses, bending there.

Are those the forms of holy time,
The wanderers in our vale of tears?
They stand in manhood's truest prime,
Unnamed by woe, unworn by years—
The cherub crown, the cherub palm,
Their trophies o'er the mortal foe.

Veiling the glory-dazzling eyes,
Cries Peter's heart in ecstacy,
"Here let three tabernacles rise,
The first and mightiest, Lord, to thee?"
But hark! the thunders awful roll
Bows to the dust his ardent soul.

Down stoops the cloudy canopy,
And all are wrapp'd in light divine!
And shall not faith's exulting eye
Thus see the second advent shine,
And waking in the world alone,
Behold the pomp, the King, the throne!

A SISTER'S LOVE.

[The words adopted to the air, "Hours there were"]

Absent brother, since we parted,
Thou, to seek some foreign shore,
Many a sigh my heart has started,
For the days I now deplore;
Days in which thy love alighted,
On affection's altar free—
But alas! thy sister slighted
Sighs in vain for them and thee.

Yet, in fancy naught is sweeter,
Than to seek the ocean wide,
There behold thy image greater,
And to dote when by her side;
There revive and fondly cherish
Every past, fraternal scene,
Scenes tho' gone, yet ne'er will perish
While they live in mem'ry green.

When the last farewell was taken,
And thy voice was heard no more,
Anguish it would waken
Ne'er had known or felt before;
Hope and Love are ever turning,
Their fond looks toward the sea,
While my anxious heart is yearning—
Is it, brother, well with thee?

Is thy bed upon the billows,
Sorrow'd pillow'd on thy breast,
Or, dost thou for my home-pillow,
Vainly sigh for its sweet rest?
From the deep does fond emotion
Heave unheard the longing sigh,
As around upon the ocean
Thine eye can find no mother nigh?

Or, in some lone hour,
When thy brow upon thy hand,
Felt new power, was God's own power,
Shielding, there, though far from land;
And when foreign skies were shining,
And thine home was far and dim,
Was there then no sweet entwining
Round thy heart, of love to Him?

Patient now I wait the turning
Of thy ship unto our shore;
Haste, brother, hearts are burning
For thy safe return once more;
Come, and claim a household greeting.
Cheer a mourning sister's sight,
Be it soon—as days are fleeting,
More than sweet as sleep at night. W. A.

THE OCEAN DEAD.

I've traversed the dark heaving waste of the ocean,
When naught met my gaze save the deep and the skies,
I have seen it in calm, and in fearful commotion,
When waters like mountains billowed mountains on high.
Now deep in the vale, the proud ship's course was wending,
While closely around her the waves were contending,
And high o'er the bulwarks in mad rage descending,
Their dash mingled in, with the sailor's loud cries.

Oh! when the wind-god, through the shrouds has been shrieking,
And the dark clouds flow quickly along the concave;
When the masts in the hurley have kept constant creaking,
I have thought of the dead, 'neath the dark stormy wave;
All lonely,—deserted,—their names are unnumbered;
No coffin or tomb, their clay unincumbered;
How many, alas! in death's cold arms have slumbered—
The dark yawning ocean alone for their grave.

Then I've felt for the sad fate of those fondly cherished,
And oft I have followed them o'er the wide main;
The sunshine,—the storm,—e'en the moments they perished,
Have swept o'er my fancy again and again.
I have seen the lone barque through the mad billows steering,
I saw her hard struggling, the high wave careening,
But ne'er—again, to those wild heights appearing—,
In the bosom of the ocean her wreck is now lain.

Then! ah then! who could paint the deep horror and anguish,
As the angel of death flew exultingly by:
The pencil must falter, and its vigor must languish,
When it strives to depict the dread scene to the eye.
The rush to the deck,—the embrace and deep sighing,—
The still, death appalled,—the wild yell of the flying,
The prayer from the last gurgling breath of the dying,
As struggling he feels that no haven is nigh.

Farewell to each spirit; could friendship in kindness,
Have bent at thy couch o'er thy thin wasted frame,
When death's icy fingers had struck thee with blindness,
Have cheered the deep midnight with love's holy flame;
Could she have poured balm on thy pangs quickly darting,
To thy pillow close pressed thee when wildered and startling,
While tear-flowe adown to think thee departing,
How blest had been such an exit to claim.

Yet what is no more than common o'er thee,
And no friend could sustain thy cold clay in the sod,
Holy seraphs were nigh in thy last hour, that saw thee,
To herald thy name to the courts of their God.
And where'er thou wert lain, neath the blue surgy billow,
With the sea flowers around thee, the rock for thy pillow,
Or calmly reposing beneath some green willow,
The spirit alive would rise from its clod.

But go not, fond mourner, thy mind wrung with madness,
To sit and to watch on the wave-cabin shore;
Other sails for awhile may relieve thy deep sadness,
But the wife thy loved one shall ne'er return more.
Far away in mid ocean, where the petrel is sweeping,
Deep down with the coral that loved one is sleeping,
And the Periwinkle o'er him, their fond vigils keeping.
They sing o'er the lost one whose fate you deplore.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "ANTI" MAN.

If this designation be a novel one, it will, nevertheless, be readily recognized. There are such men. They are not to be found just now in as great numbers, as a few years since; but enough, too many by far, abide unto this present day. Those who are left are the representatives of those who have disappeared; and combining their own Antiism with that of their predecessors, are even more uneasy and mischievous.

The "Anti" man is of the lineage of Ishmael. His hand is against every man. He holds fellowship with none but Ishmaelites—his own sect. He is never at peace, but when he is at war. Nothing is right, unless every thing is wrong. He is always unhappy, but never less so than when in deepest distress. Where others see no occasion for sorrow, he finds the most. His eyes are magnifiers, and little things become great, and great things mountains. His fancy is creative, and troubles are made when they cannot be found, and evils conjured only that they may be laid.

The "Anti" man is not confined to any one profession, or department of society. He is in church or state; in public or private walks; in the quiet village, or the stirring city; wherever any thing can be found with two sides to it, he is on the one where he can be the most alone.

Send him to congress. His eye speedily discovers that every thing is wrong, and must be reformed. His own friends are as far from being right as his foes; and forgetful of the better part of valor, discretion, he declares war on every thing, or any thing that comes up first. Are appropriations asked to put the country in a state of defence, he opposes the extravagance of the Administration. Are none desired, he is shocked at the improvidence that takes no thought for the future. He must be in the opposition come what will. He is an "Anti" man, and might with the Roman, at the opening of every speech, cry out, "My voice is still for war." He never sleeps in a majority. If the adjournment leaves him in one over night, he embraces the first opportunity to "define his position," and satisfy the world that he was opposed to the measure for which he was compelled to vote.

Send him to an ecclesiastical court. He finds a field broad and abundant. Evils in the church are so numerous and great that he is amazed at the indifference which has slept over them until he waked up. He finds trouble where nobody ever saw it before; and dangers stand thick where all was first as calm as summer sunset. An apostle could not be more zealous for reform. The "church," says he, "is an Anti-Sin Society," and therefore must make war on every thing wrong. Resolutions are the patent modern means of putting down sin; and therefore, instead of trusting to the gospel preached in love, as the remedy, he would resolve it out of the church, and out of the world.

In the pulpit, the "Anti" man is at home. He can there fight and always be sure of victory. No one opposes, and he can raise a Hydra and stamp his heads one by one to the dust, until his people are amazed at his fervor; and think their minister is of a truth a Boanerges. He can form societies, with an "Anti" as their prefix; and these he can multiply to his heart's content. If he is opposed, so much the better. The more opposition, the more evidence that he is right. Even if he is overthrown, he can be on his back and cry persecution, till the tables turn.

Make him an Editor. From the height on which he stands, the world is spread out before him, and to his distorted vision it is all wrong. He must write it right. He goes to work valiantly and selects his objects of attack. These are rapidly multiplied around him, as his boldness and eye-sight increase. He first makes war on the common enemy; but finding that in this he is not peculiar, he turns his arms against his friends. It is not enough for him to put down acknowledged evils; to overthrow the infidel, Socinian, or Universalist. Others have won such victories as well as he. His organ of combativeness indicates the destiny for which he was born. He must be a reformer and overturn old things, and introduce new schemes that shall call him father. True, the wise and good are satisfied with things as they are; the cause of truth and righteousness is on the advance, and souls are daily added unto the church. But the good might be done better, if it were done in his way. And so he fights. His friends and Christ's friends remonstrate; they tell him that the gospel is peace on earth; that the Spirit flies from the realm of noise and strife; that the wicked triumph when the pious quarrel; but what is that to him. How can he see any thing as it ought to be seen, with such a beam in his eye. He hopes to ride on the waves of discord to influence and power, and perhaps a more sordid motive than this may be in his heart. But whatever be the motive, the "Anti" man must make mischief wherever he is.

As a private member of a church he is a source of continual trouble, embroiling the congregation incessantly; as an officer he makes more, because he has more power; as a minister he is even worse, as his calling and consequence offer wider fields; and as an Editor his power for evil is bounded only by the extent of his intellect, and the number of his readers.

We have had no one in particular to sit for his portrait; but unless we are greatly mistaken, it is not altogether a fancy sketch. —New York Observer

ANCIENT MONEY.

Before the invasion of Julius Cæsar, the natives of England had tin plates, iron plates and bars, which were money, and their only money. On the authority of Seneca, a curious account is given of a period when leather, appropriately stamped to give it a certain legal character, was the only current money. At a comparatively recent date in the annals of Europe, Edward the second, who had in 1250, at the siege of Milan, actually paid his troops with leather money.—Nearly the same circumstance occurred in England during the great wars of the barons. In the course of 1350, King John, for the ransom of his royal person, promised to pay Edward the Third of England 3,000,000 of gold crowns. In order to fulfill the obligation, he was reduced to the mortifying necessity of paying the expenses of the palace in leather money, in the centre of each piece there being a little bright coin of silver. In that reign is found the origin of the ravestied honor of boyhood, called—conferring a leather medal. The Imposing ceremonies accompanying a presentation, gave full force, dignity, and value to a leather jewel which noblemen were probably proud and gratified to receive at the hand of majesty.

So late as 1574, there was an immence issue of money in Holland stamped on small sheets of paste board. But further back in the vista of years, Numa Pompilius, the second King of Rome, who reigned 672 years before the Christian era, made money out of wood as well as leather; a knowledge of which might have influenced King John in the bold project of substituting the tanned hide of an animal for gold and silver, well known to his subjects to be exceedingly precious.

Both gold and silver appear to have been in extensive circulation in Egypt, soon after their efficacy was understood in Asia. From thence they were introduced into Carthage and Greece; and finally travelling further and further in a westerly direction, the city of Rome discovered the importance of legalising their circulation.

Weight having always been of the first importance in early times, the shape of money appears to have been regarded with perfect indifference for a series of ages.

When the bits and portions of metal received as precious, were extensively circulated, it is quite probable that each possessor shaped them to suit his own conception as practised to some extent at this time in remote places in the East Indies:—the payer away cuts off parts with shears, till he obtains, by exact weight, the stipulated amount. It was thus that men travelled with the evidence of their possessions in a sack. But great inconvenience must have resulted from this often tedious process; and as nations advanced in civilization and the economic arts, a certain mark or impression on certain sized pieces was acknowledged to be the sign of a certain weight. This facilitated negotiations, and encouraged to further improvements, both in the shape, weight, and beauty of the external device.

By and by the profile of the king, the date of the coinage, and the record of important events, gave still more completeness and character to the circulating article of exchange.

ANECDOTE OF MEHEMET ALI.

A short time since a young man, had been sent over to obtain a knowledge of engineering. On arriving here his mind became enlightened, and he was led to embrace the Christian faith. On his return to Alexandria, he made no scruple of avowing his new sentiments, although he was surrounded by a host of persecutions;—these persons, however, one day brought him before Mehemet Ali, saying, 'We beg to bring a case before your highness in which you will be called to act as supreme judge; this man was a Mahommedan by birth and faith; he was sent to England, where he abandoned his own religion, and embraced that of the christians; and, therefore, by our law he ought to die; all that is necessary is to enter into a judicial course of inquiry, to bring forward facts, and to establish and authenticate them; and, then, if the case be proved, it remains with your highness to enforce the penalties of the law.' Well, the case was gone through, the facts were all proved, till at length, the young man was asked by Mehemet Ali, 'Have you embraced Christianity?' The young man got up, and with an intrepidity, which a consciousness of being right inspired, & with the grace of God, which, when it finds its way to the heart, always enables a man to face his greatest enemies, said, 'I am a Christian.' The next question by Mehemet Ali was, 'Why did you embrace Christianity?'—When he made this noble reply: Do you ask me why I embraced Christianity? my reason is this; I embraced it, because I believed it to be true. His enemies around him then said, 'What need have we of further argument: he has acknowledged his guilt; nothing remains now but that your highness should pronounce the sentence.' Mehemet Ali said, all the circumstances that have been brought forward have been clearly established; but, with respect to this young man, I beg leave to state that I know him well; I was sent to England to learn engineering; he learnt that science; he came back again, has been employed in that service, and has proved himself a valuable member of society; I find him still in that place where I employed him. It appears that he has changed his religion, but I do not find that in doing so, he has acted from any unworthy motive; he continues to perform his duties satisfactorily, and with reference to his change in religion—I shall leave him to settle that matter between God and his own conscience." The young man is now going about the streets of Alexandria, a noble monument of the liberality of Mehemet Ali.—London & India Gazette.

ORIENTAL DESPOTISM.—There is a quiet bearing in the Persians nobility which I have never seen in any other, a sort of respectful terror, if I may so say, at the approch of majesty. They have a religious respect for their sovereigns, whom they call "Kepleh Alum," or asylum of the world. They are thus taught by Sadi, who says of him, "Even if all should be vice in thy slave, any vice approved of by the prince becomes a virtue; he who does not think with the sovereign, washes his hand in his own blood." "If the king should say, in broad day it is night, it is necessary to exclaim immediately, behold the moon & stars."—Fowler's Three Years in Persia.

LIBERIA HERALD.

TRAVELLING IN OLDEN TIMES.

A writer in the Newark Sentinel has furnished some interesting information on this subject, which he has collected with great care from various sources. We give the following extracts.

The first advertisement respecting the transportation on the route which I have met with, is in Andrew Bradford's Philadelphia "Mercury of March, 1732–2. It is as following:

"This is to give Notice unto Gentlemen Merchants, Tradesmen, Travellers, and others, that Solomon Smith and James Moore of Burlington, keepeth two Stage Waggons intending to go from Burlington to Amboy, and back from Amboy to Burlington again, Once every Week or oft'er if that Business presents. They have also a very good store-house, very Commodious for the Storing of any sort of Merchants Goods free from any Charges, where good Care will be taken of all sort of Goods."

About this time also a line ran by the way of New Brunswick, and in 1734 the first line via Bordentown was established, running from South River, the proprietor of which would be at New York "once a week if wind and weather permit, and come to the old ship."

In 1744 the stage wagons between New Brunswick and Trenton ran twice a week.

In October, 1750, a new line was established the owner of which resided at Perth Amboy. He informed all gentlemen and ladies "who have occasion to transport themselves, goods, wares, or merchandise from New York to Philadelphia," that he had a "stage boat" well fitted for the purpose, which, "wind and weather permitting," (that never forgotten proviso,) would leave New York every Wednesday for the ferry at Amboy on Thursday—where, on Friday, a stage wagon would be ready to proceed immediately to Bordentown—where they would take another stage boat for Philadelphia—nothing being said (very wisely) of the time when they might expect to arrive there. He states, however, that the passages are made in forty-eight hours less time than by any other line. This was probably the case, for the route was so well patronised, that in 1752, they carried passengers twice a week, instead of once, endeavouring "to use people in the best manner;" keeping them, be it observed, from five to seven days on the way!

The success of this line seems to have led to opposition in 1751, originating in Philadelphia, which professed to go through in twenty-four or thirty hours, but which nevertheless appears to have required the same number of days as the other. Great dependence was placed upon the attraction of the passage boat between Amboy and New York, described as having "a fine commodious cabin, fitted up with a tea-table, and sundry other articles."

In 1756, a stage line between Philadelphia and New Xork, via Trenton and Perth Amboy, was established, intended to run through in three days. This was followed in 1765, by another, to start twice a week—but nine years had worked no increase of speed. The following year, a third line of "good stage wagons," with "the seats on springs," was set up, to go through in two days in summer, and three in winter. These wagons were modestly called "Flying Machines," and the title soon became a favorite with all the stage proprietors. These lines ran, I believe, by the way of Blazing Star Ferry, and put an end to the transportation of passengers on the old Amboy route.

From 1765 to 1768, attempts were made by the legislature to raise funds by lottery for shortening and improving the great thoroughfares, but without success. Governor Franklin, alluding to them in a speech to the Assembly, in 1768, states that "even those which lie between the two principal trading cities in North America, are seldom passable without danger or difficulty." Such being the condition of the roads, it was a great improvement to have John Mercereau's "flying machine," in 1772, leave Paulus Hook three times a week, with a reasonable expectation that passengers would arrive in Philadephia in one day and a half. This time, however, was probably found too short, for two days were required by him in 1773–4.

The mails, being carried on horseback, moved with rather greater speed than passengers, but they had been a long time acquiring it To Col. John Hamilton, son of Gov. Andrew Hamilton, of New Jersey, (himself at one time acting Governor as President of the Council,) were the Colonies indebted for devising the scheme by which the post-office was established. This was in the year 1764.—He obtained a patent for it, and afterwards sold his right to the crown. It is presumed that an attempt was soon made to carry the mails regularly, but speed was little regarded.

In 1704—"in the pleasant month of May"—a New York paper says, "the last storm has put our Pennsylvania post a week behind, and is not yet come in."

In 1717, "advices from Boston to Williamsburgh, in Virgina, were completed in four weeks from March to December, and in double that time in the other months of the year;" but there is some probability that the mails south of Philadelphia did not continue to be carried regularly some time thereafter.

About 1720, the post set out from Philadelphia every Friday, left letters at Burlington and Perth Amboy, and arrived at New York on Saturday night—leaving there Monday morning on his peregrination eastward.

In 1722, a Philadelphia paper states that the New York post was three days behind his time, and not yet arrived.

In 1729, the mail between the two cities went once a week in summer, and once a fortnight in winter; and this continued to be the case till 1754, when Dr. Franklin became superintendent, and improved the condition of the post office materially. In October, notice is given that until Christmas, the post would leave the two cities three times a week, at 8 o'clock, A. M., and arrive the next day at about 5 o'clock, P M., making 33 hours. After Christmas, "being frequently delayed in crossing New York Bay," (the route was via Blazing Star Ferry,) would leave only twice a week. Further improvements were made in the following years, & in 1764, "if weather permitted," the mails were to leave every alternate day, and go through in less than twenty-four hours; and such was the rate at which they travelled until the Revolution put a stop to their regular transsition.

In 1791, there were only six offices in New Jersey—Newark, Elizabeth, (now Rahway,) Brunswick, Princeton, and Trenton The total of their receipts for the year ending October 5th, 1791, was $530, of which the post-master received $108 20—leaving $421 80 as the nett revenue.

What a change, Mr Editor, has come over the face of the country since the time I referred to; and with so many more facilities than were possessed by our forefathers, how great should be our improvement in all things connected with the diffusion of knowledge and intelligence among the people!

THE LESSON:

A TALE OF DOMESTIC LIFE.

BY SKETCHER

Three young ladies were seated in a richly furnished apartment. They were the Misses Amanda and Emma Ellis, and their cousin Deliah Carleton. The latter was engaged in the womanly occupation of sewing; the two former in discussing, critically, a ball at which all three had been present the preceding evening.

"I don't like that Mr. Barton, at all," said Miss Amanda, continuing the conversation,

"Nor I either," responded Miss Emma, who was the eldest.

"And why not, cousins?" asked Deliah, "I am sure he is handsome enough is he not?"

"Yes, but—"

"But what coz?" said she to Emma, who had spoken last. "Surely his manners are pleasing and language polished—without affectation."

"Yes, yes, but for all that, he is vulgar," said Emma, pettishly, "vulgar in his ideas."

'Vulgar!' exclaimed Deliah, 'you must again allow me to differ with you coz,' she continued looking into her cousin's face with a smile, 'I think he is quite refined—more so than Mr. Price or Mr. Brown, and many of the other gentlemen.'

'Only think of comparing Mr Barton with Mr. Price or Mr. Brown,—to gentlemen!' exclaimed Miss Amanda Ellis. 'Why, Mr. Barton is a mechanic!'

'Well, suppose he is, dear,' said her cousin, 'does that make him vulgar, or less respectable? For my part I think a mechanic can be as much a gentleman (in the true sense of the word) as a milionaire.'

'Well I declare, cousin 'Lile, you do have some of the funniest notions; said Miss Amanda, 'just for all the world like pa; he thinks one man just as good as another, even though he be a laborer.'

'Yes,' said Emma, 'I do wish he would be a little more circumspect, and find better company for his daughters than mechanics. It is his fault that Mr. Barton comes here: he gives such pressing invitatious. I suppose he wants me, or you, Amanda. Would n't it make a fine paragraph for the paper?—Miss Amanda, (or Emma,) daughter of James Ellis, merchant, to Mr. Chas. Barton, mechanic. Oh, dear!' and the spoiled beauty (for both sisters possessed great personal attractions) threw herself back upon the sofa and laughed heartily, as also did her sister.

'Well well, girls,' said Mr. Ellis, who, hidden by the half open door of the apartment, had been an unobserved listener to the conversation, and who now entered the room, 'you may laugh now, but you may live to regret that you did not try to obtain Mr. Barton for a husband.—Mark that,'—and the old gentleman taking his hat left the apartment.

'Who would have thought that pa was listening!' said Miss Amanda, 'but I do n't care'

'I declare, if there is not Mr. Barton on the steps!' exclaimed Emma, who was looking through the blinds. 'Come, come, she continued, addressing her sister, let us go up stairs to the other parlor, and leave cousin Lile to entertain him: it will be a pleasure to her, for she is partial to mechanics,' and the sisters left the room.

The object of the foregoing conversation was a young man whom Mr. Ellis had introduced to his daughters, and neice, some months before, as a master mechanic. But unlike their father, who valued a man for his character, and not for his money, the Misses Ellis were great sticklers for respectability—their standard for which was riches—and the consequence was, as we have seen, that Mr. Barton did not stand any too high in their good graces. Mr. Ellis knew that a false estimate of respectability was a predominant fault in his daughters' characters, and he determined to give them a practical and salutary lesson. How he succeeded, the sequal of our story will show.

A few moments after the sisters had left the room, Mr. Barton entered. He was about the middle height, with a fine figure, regular features, and intelligent countenance. His eyes were of deep blue—his eye-brows finely arched, and his forehead high and white, from which the jet black hair was pushed back, displaying its fine proportions He was certainly a handsome man, which fact, even the Misses Ellis did not attempt to deny, and the ease and politeness with which he greeted Miss Carleton, spoke his claim to that which that lady herself had awarded him—the title of gentleman.

He was soon seated, and in conversation with Deliah. Deliah Carleton was a charming girl. It is true that she did not exhibit the exquisite proportions, and the regular features of her two cousins; but there was ever a sunny smile upon her face, and cheerful sparkle in her clear light blue eye, and she had such light and bounding spirits, that made her appear, if not as beautiful as her cousins, at least more bewitching; at least so thought Mr. Barton as he gazed upon her laughing countenance. How much better, thought he, would it be to possess her for a wife dependant as she is upon her uncle, and dowerless as she would be, than either of the Misses Ellis with their spoiled tempers, and their fortunes. Thinking thus, is to be wondered at that he left her with a half formed determination to win her love if it lay within his power.

When Deliah appeared at the dinner table that day, many were the meaning and inquisitive glances her cousins cast upon her. At last, unable to restrain their loved habit of 'running' their cousin, they spoke.

'I hope you spent a very pleasant morning, cousin, said Miss Amanda, with a mock, arch look.

'A very interesting tete-a-tete, was it not?' whispered Emma across the table.

'I spent the morning very pleasantly,' answered Deliah, blushing slightly.

'Oh! I dare say,' said Emma sarcastically, 'I suppose he gave you a dissertation on mechanics, did he not coz.'

'Well, and suppose he did?' said Mr. Ellis, who had been listening patiently, but into whose honest face the color now rose. Is it not better to listen to that, than to the senseless conversation of the foplings, half men, half monkeys, who disgrace humanity?' and the old man cast such a look upon his daughters as made them quail beneath it

'But never mind, Lile,' he continued in a softer voice, and patting his neice's rosy cheek, never mind, Mr. Barton is worth three or four such would-be-gentlemen as Mr. Price, & Mr. Brown, and in more ways that one. Mark that girls! He is worth two or three such in more ways than one.' The last sentence he addressed to his daughters.

Days, weeks, and months rolled by, and Mr. Barton had become a frequent visitor at Mr Ellis'. It was very evident that he was paying 'particular' attentions to Deliah Carleton, and it was also plain, to see that they were not unacceptable. This fact furnished an ample subject for the sisters' sarcastic remarks. As for their father, whenever they indulged in them in his presence a knowing smile would play upon his face, and he would repeat to them his assertion, that they would some day wish they had obtained Mr. Barton for a husband.

Thus things continued for some time. At length one morning about three months subsequent to the period when our story commences Mr. Ellis entered the parlor where his daughters were sitting, with a light step, and sparkling

'Well, girls, what do you think of it?' said he rubbing his hands in glee.

'What?' asked both the young ladies in a breath.

'The wedding we're going to have.'

'The wedding! what wedding?'

'Your cousin's.'

'Deliah's.'

'Yes. She is going to honor the mechanic with her hand. What do you think of it pa'

'I don't think much of it, said Miss Emma with a toss of her head.'

'Nor I,' said Amanda.

'You don't eh? Well suppose I was to tell you she is going to marry a man worth two hundred thousand dollars, would that alter your positions?'

'Why, what do you mean, pa?'

'Listen and I will tell you girls,' said the gentleman bending upon his daughters a grave and somewhat stern look. The father of Barton to whom your cousin is soon to be married was an old friend of mine; we were mates in boyhood. He was apprenticed to a carpenter's trade about the same time I entered the counting house. Soon after he finished learning his trade he went to Baltimore, and there started business for himself and where he married Being possessed of genius, and having a good education, from a common mechanic and builder he soon became an architect; and so subsequently amased a large fortune. Knowing the reverses of fortune to which all are liable, he resolved to make his son a good architect, so that if ever the fickle dame should desert him, he would have wherewithal to earn honestly his daily bread. He succeeded. A year or two ago he died, leaving his son the whole fortune—his wife being already dead, Charles being an only child. About six months ago Charles came to this city on a visit to me, called upon me as his father's friend In the course of conversation I asked him why he was not married. He said that he never yet met with a young lady that he thought worthy of calling his wife, that he could find enough who would marry him for the sake of his money, but that such a one he would never marry. I told him I would introduce him to some of our city ladies, and see if he could not find one among them to suit him He required then that I should conceal his wealth, and introduce him only as a master mechanic. I acquiesced, and knowing your false estimate of respectability, I embraced the opportunity of teaching you a salutary lesson. I knew when I brought him home with me, and introduced him, that neither of you would be his chosen, because I was certain that you would not stoop so low as to marry a master mechanic, but the event which will soon take place, I easily foresaw. Your cousin knew nothing of his wealth until to day. I see you look surprised, girls, but did I not tell you that you would be sorry some day you did not obtain him for a husband? And did I not tell you he was worth two or three such ninny-hammers as Mr. Price and Brown, in more ways than one? Remember, girls, that wealth is a false standard by which to judge of respectability & worth. Not that a rich man may not be respectable, but that very often he who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow, is more of a gentleman than he who counts his thousands.'

And they did remember it. For in after years they showed in their choice of husbands that they had not forgotten their honest old father's lesson.—Portland Tribune.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

MONROVIA, APRIL 4, 1842.

To the Honorable,

The Members of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Liberia.

GENTLEMEN:—You are now assembled for the discharge of the duties, with which the people of this Commonwealth have charged you.

We find great occasion to rejoice in the general welfare of the Colony: we are in the enjoyment of the blessings of peace; civil and religious harmony exist, and future prospects are opening before us: through the past year, and up to the present time, peace has been in our borders. Our civil and religious institutions are exerting a most happy influence over the natives around us, they acknowledge our superiority, and are daily adopting our customs.

Although diseases within the last few months have visited our land, and deprived us of some valuable citizens, (and with them our most excellent Chief Magistrate); at present the general health of the people is good, and we are called upon to renew our thanks and our devotion to our Heavenly Parent, who has continued his mercies and blessings towards us. If we find ourselves increasing in wealth, (for the past season has been one of unexampled success to our merchants & agriculturalists), in knowledge (which I sincerely hope is the case), and in every thing which promotes human and social happiness, let us ever remember our dependence for all these blessings on the merciful dispensation of Divine Providence: remembering that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Since the last session of the Legislature, nothing special has occurred to disturb our friendly relations with foreigners or the native tribes around us.

Some little difficulty has arisen between the Colonial Authorities and some British traders on this coast, on the subject of jurisdiction over, and propriety of claim to the territory of Bassa Cove in the County of Grand Bassa.

Captain Denman, R. N. Sometime in October last, commenced a correspondence with me on this subject, which correspondence with one subsequently between honorable L. Sheridan and Lieutenant Seagram will be laid before you

Captain Denman in his correspondence claims Bassa Cove on the following grounds:

1. That Mr. Spence a British trader, purchased Bassa Cove prior to any purchase made by this Government; and

2. That as British traders had for a long series of years, carried on an undisturbed trade with the natives of that place, we have no right now to insist upon their compliance with any regulations made by the Government of Liberia."

The position taken by Captain Denman, seems to me altogether untenable.

In the first place, Captain Spence's executors have failed to produce documents to establish the right of property; and secondly, I am fully convinced that Mr. Spence can have no territorial claim: And if there be any claim at all, it is only such as is sometimes given to foreigners by the natives on this coast, viz:—the right to occupy a small lot of land for the time being, on which to erect factories to facilitate their trade. Now admit that Captain Spence had such a claim, or even admit that he had purchased the land he occupied in fee simple, will it be pretended that he exercised political power by establishing a government over the territory? Or will it be insisted upon that any such power was ceded to him by the natives? No! I think not.

But on the other hand, the natives of that county have not only ceded to us the territory, but also the right to exercise political power and control over the persons and property within its territorial limits. Now it follows that if Captain Spence or any other foreigner, have property within that territory, they are bound to subscribe to the regulations of the Government, that is entitled to exercise political jurisdiction over it. That the right of soil may be in one, and that of political power in another. While the enjoyment of the former is not inconsistent with the exercise of the latter, is a principle generally admitted.

This subject is one, gentlemen, of vital importance to our very existence, and deserves your serious attention. Not that the trade at Bassa Cove is of such importance; nor that we wish to exclude British more than other traders, from any intercourse with the natives of that place for the purpose of trade. This is not the case. But carry out the principle, let it be once established that these men are admitted into our territory above the law, beyond our judicial control, and the axe is laid at the root of the tree. Our political existence is at an end.

It will be the means first, of opening a thoroughfare for the clandestine introduction of foreign merchandise into other parts of the colony, without any possibility of controlling it. Secondly, it would close the door to the suppression of vice and immorality; the peace & good order of our community would be destroyed, and the government soon annihilated. And thirdly, could not the lawless slavers claim this very spot up to the year 1822, on the same principle of "undisturbed trade for a long series of years?" Certainly they could. These, gentlemen, are some of the results that would grow out of such an admission.

But may we charitably hope these are not the results aimed at by these claimants.

But it must be considered that Bassa Cove is one of our regularly constituted ports of entry, where vessels of all nations (engaged in a legitimate trade) are permitted to enter and carry on a peaceable and undisturbed traffic, only being required to conform to the laws of the commonwealth, and a compliance with the regulations of the port, which impose no hard duties. Printed copies of the port regulations are before the public. I say when we consider this, it is difficult to determine what can be the present or ultimate wish of these traders. Can it be that they think thus to tamper with us, because they think we are too weak to enforce our laws? Or, can it be that they think the British Government will countenance this interference?

Let them think what they please on this subject, I cannot believe, gentlemen, that the British Government will tolerate such conduct in her subjects. No! the British Government is too magnanimous; they have no wish to oppress us. I would, therefore, recommend (rather than come into collision with any of Her Majesty's subjects, which we have heretofore studiously avoided) That we through the American Colonization Society, lay this subject as speedily as possible before Her Majesty's Government, begging that Her Majesty's naval officers on this coast, be instructed to protect us from this improper interference of British traders, and that we be left in the peaceable enjoyment of our territory and political jurisdiction.

I would next call your attention to our judiciary, which in some particulars, is defective.

First, that there are difficulties likely to arise before the Courts of Quarter Session, for the want of more definite distinction between the proceeding of these Courts as Courts of law; and a Court for the Probate of Wills, &c. &c.

Secondly, that many cases of offences against the Commonwealth must originate in the Superior Courts; this arrangement (in such a community as ours) is calculated to delay justice and create unnecessary expense. For persons charged with larceny &c. &c., however vague and uncertain, are bound either to find security for their appearance at the next Session of the Superior Court, or be imprisoned at the charge of State. And as this Court only meets semiannually, should an accusation be brought against any individual immediately after its adjournment, however innocent, he must undergo the embarrassment of finding security or remain in prison for several months.

At present many of our laws are vague and indefinite. And as it is important that they should be so constructed as to meet the poorest capacity, I would recommend that the Acts of the Legislature for 1839, 1840 and 1841, be compiled (striking out such as have been abrogated) and republished with the Acts of the present session, in one volume.

I would further recommend that the third section of an Act passed January 1841 to establish a currency in the Commonwealth of Liberia, be so amended as to make engraved bills redeemable with specie, camwood, ivory, or good bills of exchange. This recommendation is made Gentlemen, after a mature and deliberate consideration.—I have seen with regret the embarrassment of some of our merchants the past season; several of them have not been able to meet their engagements with the Collector, for the want of a sufficient circulation of these bills, (the only legal tender.) This arises from the fact that they are only redeemable with specie—consequently the Society's Agent have been compelled to limit their circulation by the means within his reach to redeem them. Whereas if they were redeemable with specie, camwood, ivory, or good bills of exchange, merchants or others having produce could have it exchanged for these bills, either for their convenience, or to meet their demands at the Treasury, without embarrassing the means provided for their redemption. Situated as we are it is impossible for any length of time to back our issues with specie. The small remittances from America will not meet our demands when scarcely a foreign vessel leaves the colony without taking away more or less a quantity of specie, which is exchanged for merchandise—which merchandise is again exchanged with the natives for African produce, thus leaving us without any means to replenish our specie Treasury.

I have heard with some surprise that an attempt will be made at this session of the Legislature to reduce the Tariff, in this I hope I have been misinformed. For to reduce our revenue at this time would at once paralize our efforts to erect Public buildings, and such other public improvements as our situation at present demands.

It is true our Treasury at present is not Bankrupt; we are able to meet our contingent expenses, but, very soon, we shall have more than this to do, Public buildings are now about being erected.

The light house on Cape Messurado will be completed in a few days; for the erection of which the Legislature in 1839 appropriated $500— and up to this time not one dollar for that purpose have been drawn from the public Treasury. A court house has just been commenced, which is designed to be a neat and commodious edifice, 50 feet long, 34 feet wide and two stories high, and will require an appropriation of at least three thousand dollars. In addition to this we need immediately a Jail house, and other necessary public improvements. How, gentlemen, can these things be accomplished, or even the absolute, and necessary expenses of the officers of Government be discharged without an adequate revenue (which at present is scarcely more than sufficient.) Our annual revenue according to the Treasurer's last account rendered 31st March, may be estimated at about $2000—the ordinary expenses of the Government according to the present system will require annually about $1500 leaving an annual balance of $500 to be applied to improvements. Since the last session of the Legislature, some acquisition of territory have been made to the Colony—we have purchased from the Natives, and they have formally ceded to this Commonwealth the territorial right, and judicial control over two sections of country south east of this, known as Grand Battoo and Barbarra, and we are now in treaty with the natives for two other valuable points; * * * * * It may be proper to mention here that some time in the early part of last year, an arrangement was entered into between the Board of Directors of the American Colonization Society, and the Mississippi Colonization Society, constituting Sinoe an integral part of this Commonwealth, consequently subject to the constitution and laws of the colony, and entitled to representation.

Having thus briefly hinted at a few of the most important subjects that may claim your attention.—I would in conclusion remind you, Gentlemen, that you are now assembled to deliberate on matters of the highest importance, for the welfare of this infant Republic, on you in a very great degree depends the future happiness of our fellow citizens. For should you be moved by any mean, and base principle—and have so imposed on your constituents as to have yourselves returned to this house for any sordid, or avaricious purposes hundreds may rise up to curse you—this I hope will not apply to any gentleman before me. No! I feel assured that every member of this house is actuated by higher and nobler feelings.

Though some of our citizens have thought proper to impugn our motives by circulating insinuations, that some of you have procured your election to his house, and will prolong this session to the utmost extent, for no other purpose than to procure the amount allowed their representatives. Now Gentlemen is the time to show your magnanimity—throw this foul aspersion back in their teeth by your first Act. Pass a resolution reducing your pay, or that you will only receive pay for a stated time. Above all, Gentlemen, let moderation, and decorum mark all your proceedings, in which may you have Divine assistance—that the Acts of this session may be a blessing to mankind.

I am Gentlemen,

Your obt. servant,

JOSEPH J. ROBERTS.

COMMUNICATION.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD.

Marshall, March 12th, 1842.

MR. EDITOR:

In perusing Africa's Luminary, under date of the 18th of February last; I happened to cast my eye on the sketch of a letter published, and which is said to be from S. Wilkeson to Doct. Johnson, requesting him to give all possible information of the success of the farmers in Liberia; particularly their improvement in raising coffee. I also saw published Doct. J's answer to S. W. and under it a small piece of editorial, headed "Remarks contradicting Doct. J's favourable observations on farming." In this piece of editorial, it is said "that Doct. J's views on the present state of agriculture in the Colony are altogether incorrect, and that to clear an acre of land and plant it, would cost from twenty-five to fifty dollars, and to make the lowest calculation, it would not be less than fifteen dollars."

Now Mr. Editor, I will endeavour to give the public some idea of the expenses of farming in this Colony; but in doing this, it is not my object to exalt one man's opinion and throw away the other, but merely to inform your readers of the state of things in a true light.

In 1838 I made an attempt to farm at Little Bassa, (while residing there) accordingly I cleared off seven acres of land and planted it down in rice, and when I had gathered in my grain, I found that the whole of my expenses in making the crop amounted to fifty bars; equal in value (to the natives) to fifty dollars.

In 1839 I made another attempt, and cleared off ten acres; five of which I put down in rice, and the other five in cassado; but in consequence of a war between the natives and Americans, I had to abandon my farm and give it over to destruction. The expense of what I had done amounted to forty bars, equal to twelve dollars.

The third attempt I made to farm, was in 1841 at Marshall. I then cleared fourteen and a half acres; seven and a half I put down in rice—five in cassados, and the remainder of the ground cleared I planted with sweet potatoes. The products of which, I have been for the last eight months and am now subsisting upon. The planting of these fourteen and a half acres cost me three hundred bars, equal in value to one hundred dollars.

I have now this season, exclusive of last year's farm, cleared off, but not yet planted, about twenty acres. The cost of which is one hundred bars, or forty-five dollars.

Thus, Mr. Editor, is what I have ventured to do myself, and it is what I beg you to publish, so that those who may have a desire to make a trial of the virtue of our fertile soil, may be encouraged; and by and by you shall hear that scores are forsaking the pursuit of the billet of camwood, and a tooth of ivory, and are expecting in a few years with a sheave in their hand to halloo with a prevailing voice to their friends to come over and help them.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, APRIL 29, 1842.

LEGISLATURE OF LIBERIA.

The Legislature to whose convention we had looked forward with so much anxiety, has convened and dismissed, and of their matchless achievements, each one may say with Cæsar, vini vidi vici, for as they met difficulties they bowed obeisance and passed them, leaving them to provide for themselves.

Some things were, it is true attempted. An alteration was made in some branches of the Judiciary. The Superior (?) Courts were abolished and a Circuit Court established. The matter was, however, reconsidered, and in a short time by a fell swoop, the Circuit Court was swept away and the Superior Courts again by a unanimous vote given a local habitation and a name.

Some babyish efforts were made to raise a revenue—or in other words, to crush the commerce of the colony, and drive away foreign traders, by a resolution to increase the already intolerable duties of five per. cent. to eight per. cent. This resolution, as of right it ought, went to the right-about, and we are still permitted to breathe with the galling yoke of five per. cent. advalorem. And as advalorem in Liberia means 100 per. cent. on the cost of goods, we are graciously permitted to trade by paying 10 per. cent. direct duties with all other cost and charges as a mild addendum.

We have neither room nor leisure at the present to discuss this matter; we shall however, avail ourselves of the first spare moment to demonstrate the foolishness and the ruinous tendency in both a political and moral point of view, of these Anti-Republican and unjust burdens.

There has been a change made in the circulating medium of the colony. The engraved bills which before were redeemable in specie, are now redeemable in camwood.

This, although not a complete reform, is somewhat better than before; as the merchants can now pay their duties, which before they could not do. This will also enable the Governor to put a larger amount in circulation, with a more ready means of redemption. The idea of making silver the circulating medium, is preposterous. We have no mint, and no commerce to command specie. Those vessels that come here are in search of the article. They seldom think of bringing it to exchange for produce.

The Legislature dismissed, we believe, with pretty good feelings.

EXCURSION.

We treated ourselves a few days ago, with an excursion to Mama's Town. Our good folks here have not arisen to the full perception of the benefit of an occasional aquatic excursion. After weeks of dull rounds of ordinary camwood and similar deadening avocations, an excursion in the country is truly exhilarating and refreshing.

Old Mama, was as usual ceremonious and formal. We saw her as we approached the landing, cautiously eyeing the boat from the angle of a house. We no sooner struck the landing than she precipitately retired, and when we next saw her, she was gravely seated in her hall of reception. To rise on the approach of Ladies is no part of African dignity, she therefore stolidly kept her seat although the ladies were in near approach of her. As soon, however as we approached (being a favorite of old Mama's) she arose came forward, and gave the cordial African welcome, by pressing our right hand between both of hers. Then followed the snap of the finger with all the party. This concluded, the old woman conducted us to a house which she had allotted for our occupation. Notwithstanding our approach to the town was rapid, this house the best in the town was ready cleared and prepared before we were ready to enter upon its occupancy.

This house, we are inclined to believe, was erected for the express purpose of accommodating strangers. It is finished in the best style of native workmanship. It contains two apartments. In both there are ottomans—that is banks of earth thrown up in form of sofas, which are intended for an occasional lounge, or for sleeping at night. The ceilings are in the finest style of taste and fashion, arched and fluted with bamboo. The walls and floor like the couches, are of a greenish colored clay, rubbed hard and smoth.

In this imperfectly described apartment, we deposited ourselves and our stores: and after refreshing ourselves with a few moments rest, we farther refreshed ourselves with the contents of our baskets. The natives as usual stood around, extremely surprised at our burdening ourselves with the incumbrances of knives and forks, when each of us was blest with nature's own production of two hands and ten fingers.

Old Mama was summoned to join in our repast, but refused to eat in our presence, she was therefore supplied separately with a portion which she took away, and served out in small portions to her dependants, leaving only a meagre share for herself.

The situation of Mama's town is one of the handsomest that we have seen. It stands on the extreme point of the island, about a half mile from the bar. The noble St. Paul sweeps gracefully around it. The water is clear and deep, and embosomed by noble trees which dip their green foliage in the refreshing stream. There is almost always a pleasant breeze from the sea, which sweeping over the waters is sufficiently cool for one who has been twenty years in the climate.

We rowed down to the bar, back again up the stream and landed on the opposite side. On approaching the landing the boys espied a tree burdened with fruit, (monkey apple) bending down to the surface of the water, as if to keep it cool and ready for use. As soon as we struck the shore, a general race commenced, and soon like monkeys each one returned with a modicum of the spoil, The ladies made an excursion some distance up the "path" gathering flowers, while we contented ourselves with joining the boys in devouring the fruit.

We arrived home about 7 o'clock in the evening after a day of pleasant and refreshing recreation.

RAINY SEASON,

The rainy season is fast approaching. The natives we have heard, are profiting by the sad experience of the past year, and have determined not to neglect their crops this season. The dense and murky clouds of smoke that we occasionally see curling up the heavens, proclaim their attention to the farms. There is one thing, and only one that we fear. The great security that is given to the slave trade by the use of the American flag, and the refusal of the United States to grant the British Cruisers the right of search will, we are almost confident, lead to the establishment of baracoons and slave factories in every part of the country, and by consequence to general confusion and war. It is impossible to keep the country quiet while the slave trade is actively carried on, and it is impossible to put it down while the flag of America protects it. The whole British navy would be inefficient for the purpose, for all that the slaver has to do when he is pursued is to hoist the American flag, and that secures him a safe transition for his cargo of flesh and blood.

THUNDER STORM.

To day (28th,) we have been visited with the most awful thunder storm, and furious tornado that we have ever witnessed.

The cloud arose in the east black and murky, and advancing around to the North, broke with a violence that uprooted trees, twisting the tops from others, bearing them along like feathers on the gale, prostrating houses, & burying the inmates under the ruins. Most fortunately no fatalities occurred. The loss of household stuff and a few bruises were the worst accidents. The escapes were truly miraculous.

LAUNCH.

On Saturday the 16th, inst. the fine coppered and copper fastened schooner "PEDLAR" was launched from the ship yard on "Spice Island." She is own by Messrs Payne and Yates, whose sagacity first discovered this island as the most suitable for building. Our old friend Draper is the architect, who in this instance, has sustained his reputation as a good workman. She measures about 19 tons. As soon as was convenient after she plunged into her native element, we stepped on board and united in, to us the most interesting part of the services, viz:—in the discussion of numerous articles which go by the sobriquette of "pies," "cakes," "oysters," "hams," &c. &c. This fact has lengthened the notice, which fact we would have all our friends remember.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN REVEY.

The following letter announces the mournful tidings of the death of our beloved brother Revey. In respect to the character of the deceased, little need be said. He was known to all in the colony. His inoffensive and gentle manners, his meekness, piety and strict integrity had endeared him to all who knew him.

Brother Revey left this place a few years ago, and became a member of the government of Cape Palmas. His conduct rendered perfect satisfaction to those interested, and he retained his office until his death.

He was ordered of his master, to gather a church in that place; which was composed of Baptist immigrants from America, and of some whom he baptised there on a profession of their faith. Over these few he became the Pastor. How he loved them, and how his affection was reciprocated, will be best seen from the following letter to

Harper, Palmas.

March 28th 1842.

BROTHER TEAGE.

DEAR SIR:—Please favour me so much as to publish the mournful tidings of the death of the Rev. Jno. Revey. From your long and intimate acquaintance with him, you can but feel that in his death the Church and colonies have sustained an inestimable loss.

The Rev. John Revey late founder and Pastor of the first Baptist Church in this place, departed this life on Monday 14th instant, at 12 o'clock, aged thirty eight.

It is not for me to enlarge on the life and worth of the departed saint; nor do I feel the least uneasiness in being compelled to resign that into the hands of his nearest friends, which duty and affection urge me to perform. No, for I am fully pursuaded they will do justice to his memory.

But to be altogether silent might subject me to the censure of the inquisitive: to avoid which; I have only to remark, that his end was that peace and composure in death which characterize the faithful; that as he lived, so he died. He had not to prepare upon a bed of affliction, to appear before the Judge of all the earth, for he lived prepared. He said "if he had to prepare for death while afflicted with pain as he was, he feared he would never be prepared—that the bed of affliction was no place to pray."

His daily deportment was such as secured him the esteem of all with whom he became acquainted. For his humility, patience and inoffensiveness, he was admired by all.

When he became concious that his dissolution was at hand, he was not dismayed. He could look forward to that moment with perfect resignation to the will of God, and say, "my faith is upon Jesus Christ; I am a sinner, and as such I merit nothing. If I am saved, it will be purely of grace, free unmerited grace!"

On the Saturday night before his death, he called the members of his Church who were in the house, and bade them seat themselves by his bedside, and hear what their Pastor had to say to them. [Oh! the thought of parting with a Pastor; an only speaker in the Church of Christ! he is going, and there is none to succeed him; none to whom he could say, "feed my sheep!"] He spake as far as I can at present recollect, as follows. "I have something to say to you, but I fear I have put it off too long. Your Paster is going to die and leave you; live in love with each other. I am certain the Church was planted here by Jesus Christ, and I am sure he will take care of it.—Now am I receiving the consolation of that gospel, which I have been endeavonring to preach to you weekly. The work which God gave me to do, is finished, and now I am prepared to die."

"Welcome death the end of fear,
I am prepared to go."

Upon being asked on Sunday night, how he felt, he replied, "I feel quite comfortable in death." At noon seizing his wife by the hand and pressing it with a smile, his spirit took its everlasting flight, leaving upon our minds the following impression

Now I calmly die and leave you'
To the guardian care of God?
He'll support, and he'll defend you;
Though I lie beneath the sod.

Much more might be given to show the state of his mind at this critical period, but I presume enough has been said to satisfy the minds of those who inquire, that his death was that of the righteous; that his spirit is now an inhabitant of that celestial mansion which Jesus had prepared for him; and that he is one among that number who have gone up "through great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." OCCUPATIONS.

There is not a more foolish notion afloat in the world, than the one that it is the occupation that gives character to the man. One's occupation, as the means of 'getting a living,' as the phrase goes, is precisely as high and creditable as another, provided that it be honorable and in accordance with the laws of God and man. The man who holds the plough, hammers his iron, or drives his peg to support his family with the necessaries and comforts of life, is not a wit below the one who measures tape behind the counter, mystifies the law at the bar, or presides at the councils of the nation. There is a vulgar and most pernicious feeling abroad in the community on this subject. Fathers must educate their sons for one of what is called 'the learned professions.' Daughters must marry a lawyer, a doctor, a clergyman, or a merchant. Horror! the good lady would as soon think of marrying her daughter to a Winnebagoo, as to a homely, industrious, and honorable mechanic. Why, the family would be disgraced, the name dishonored. No! no! The business of a carpenter, a blacksmith, or a farmer, is not so respectable as that of shaving notes, drawing stolidity from the desk, peddling rotten wood or pills; or selling snuff and tobacco. And yet, the duties of all the learned professions, as well as those of a merchantile, are performed for the same reason that a shoemaker waxes his thread, and the farmer plants his potatoes, viz: to obtain a living! Still a set of miserable, upstart fools, who are almost universally low bred people themselves, people who have begun life in the ditch, endeavor to establish in society artificial distinctions which they hope will elevate them above the common mass from which they were taken, and give to them an importance when innate worth and honesty could not commend them. Labor is labor. Honest labor is honest labor. Honest and honorable labor are the same whether perfotmed by the King or the beggar, and is just as honorable in the one as the other.

It is true, that all men by habit and by taste are not fitted to pursue the same vocations, and there are natural divisions not distinctions, as the word is commonly used, created by harmony and taste: This is as it should be; and fits us for a discharge of all the peculiar duties that devolve upon us as members of society. But to say that because a man performs any given duty, however humble, though necessary, degrades him or renders him less meritorious than his neighbor, who performs another duty, yet not more faithfully, is to say that we still adhere to the monarchial principles of the old world.

Let the father educate his son to some honorable calling, and if he has predilections for any particular business, as is often the case, let him follow it, if it be possible—it is the man that ennobles the business, not the business that ennobles the man! and not spend a thought upon the distinctions in occupations, honorable and honest, that fools have attempted to build up. Let children be taught to be honorable, honest, and upright, to set a proper value upon the riches of a world which is only at best, but a bubble, blown into existence to-day to burst to-morrow, and to understand that the only true and real distinctions in society are those of virtue and vice, and that the only true and enduring riches are an intellect duly cultivated, affections schooled, and a heart that knows no guile. [Spirit of the Age.

THE MUSIC OF NATURE.

Nature, thro' all her depths, is replete with music, varied in its tones and rich in its melody. There is music in the stillness of the twilight hour—in the voices of the balmy breeze as it sighs amid the sufring leaves of the star-lit grove, or sleeps upon the calm bosom of the reposing waters; in the bubbling of the island fountain and the thunderings of the foaming cataract—in the riplings of the mountain rill and the majestic voice of the storm-stirred sea. There is music in the joyous symphonies of the glad songsters of the grove beneath and the mutterings of the pealing thunders above. In heaven—on earth—in the out-spread skies and the invisible air;—in the solitary dell and on the high mountain's cloud-veiled top where human footsteps have never left an echo—in the deepest cells of the passion-stirred heart and the inanimate depths of the material world, in the dim rays of earth and the beam of those Celestial Lights which gem the high firmament and light the Angels to their evenorisons; in the tones of woman's voice on earth and the devotions of the pure spirits of the better land; in all, thro' all and over all, and forever vibrating the rich music of universal harmony and the deep tones of undying melody! Thousands of invisible harps are pouring their united melody through the depths of air and earth, millions of archangels touch their heaven-strung lyres and send celestial harmony through the vast halls of the temple of the living God up to the burning throne of the Dread Eternal One! It is the air of earth; it is the atmosphere of heaven!—The unbounded universe is one sleepless lyre, whose cords of love and hope and purity and peace are fanned into a dreamy and mystic melody by the breath of the Invisible God!—[Morning Star.

Hydro-oxygen Microscope—This extraordinary instrument which is exibiting at 108 Broadway, has the power of magnifying a single drop of water 2400-640 times, occupying the surface of a disc of 240 square feet. The still small drop of water, which to our ordinary optics appears to be perfectly pure and pellucid, entirely too minute to contain any living object, and, even if it did; too clear and transparent to conceal it from our sight, when viewed through the medium of this instrument, appears an extensive, turbid pond, in which thousands of living animals are swiming about, sporting and preying on each other, and pursuing the bent of their nature with as much eagerness and animation as the mightiest monsters of the deep. Here we have the secret of how fishes live in glass vases, where they have apparantly nothing but the pure element to subsist on. But though beyond the power of human vision to behold their aliment, Providence has supplied it them in a bundance. It is not, however, on water alone that the powers of this extraordinary instrument can be exercised. The leg of a spider, or the wing of a gnat, when magnified by this microscope, instead of being apparently composed of such light, unsubstantial materials that the slightest breeze of wind might destroy them, appear, as they really are, put together with as much firmness and strength, compared to the weight of the animal they have to support, as wings of the largest birds, or the limbs of the most powerful animals. This exhibition must be a rich treat both to the man of science and the mere curious observer, and is well calculated to increase our wonder and admiration at the works of the great Creator.—J, Com.

INTELLIGENCE OF BIRDS.—A gentleman residing in Catskill, relates the following—"A son-of his, in the early part of the season put up a cage in his garden, intended for the blue bird. Soon after it was completed, a pair of wrens paid it a visit, and being pleased with the tenement took possession and commenced building a nest. Before however, the nest was completed, a pair of blue birds arrived, laid claim to the cage, and after a hard battle, succeeded in ousting the wrens, and forthwith completed the nest on a plan of their own. But the male wren was a bird of spirit, and not disposed to submit tamely to the injury. Some days after, watching his opportunity when his antagonist was away, he entered the cage, and commenced rolling the eggs out of the nest. He had thrown out but one, when the blue bird discovered him, and with loud cries made an immediate attack.—The wren sought safety in a neighboring currant bush, and by his activity in dodging about among the branches, and ground, succeeded in eluding his enraged adversary.—The blue bird gave up the chase and returned to examine the condition of the nest. The egg had luckily fallen on a soft bed, and had not broken. After a careful examination he took it in his claws, and returned it safely to the nest.

PAT'S PRAYER. An Irishman was brought up in the Police Court at New York, a short time since, and after being questioned he was released. On understanding this, says the Sun, Pat gracefully retired back a few paces, and flinging his tattered hat upon the floor, dropped as suddenly on his knees as if he had been shot, then convulsively clinching his hands together and looking upwards, he poured forth his gratitude in the following extempore supplication:—'May the saints in heaven purtect you, yer reverence! and may every hair on yer head turn to a mowld candle to light you to glory.'

A SAVAGE TREAT. Two gentlemen met yesterday in Canal Street. After shaking hands one of them said.—

'You must tell your brother, Mr. Smith, that he must be careful how he regulates his conduct towards me. He met me yesterday in the Merchants' Exchange, and in the presence of many gentlemen, called me a liar, thief, puppy, scoundrel and coward, and then pulled my nose and kicked me to the door.—You may tell your brother that if he carries the thing much further he will arouse a spirit which is not so easily put to rest. I shall not submit to every provocation.'—[New Orleans Picayune.

'Come John, sit down and eat these potatoes and let your whiskey alone, for it is poor stuff to live upon.'

'Ah Caty, my jewel, I would take your advice, but the 'taters are so corky.

'All the better John, for stopping your bottle.

ODE

ON THE ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

Proudly on Cressy's tented world
The Lion flag of England flew;
As proudly gleamed its crimson fold
O'er the dun heights of Waterloo:
But other lyres shall greet the brave;
Sing now, that we have freed the Slave.

The ocean plain, where Nelson bled,
Fair Commerce plies with peaceful oar,
Duteous o'er Britain's clime to shed
The gathered spoil of every shore;
To-day across the Atlantic sea,
Shout, shout ye, that the Slave is free.

And Eloquence, in rushing streams,
Has flowed o'er halls and courts along,
Or kindled mid yet loftier dreams
The glowing burst of glorious Song:
Let both their noblest burthen pour,
To tell that Slavery is no more.

Bright Science, through each field of space,
Has urged her mist-dispelling car,
Coy Nature's hidden reign to trace,
To weigh each wind, and count each star;
Yet stay, thou proud Philosophy,
First stoop to bid Mankind be Free.

And Freedom has been long our own,
With all her soft and generous train,
To gild the lustre of the throne,
And guard the labors of the plain;
Ye heirs of ancient Runneymede!
Your Slaves—O could it be?—are freed.

Ah! for the tale the slave could speak;
Ah! for the shame of Britain's sway,
On Afric's sands the maddened shriek,
'Neath Indian suns the burning day:
Ye sounds of guilt—ye sights of gore—
Away! for Slavery is no more.

'Mid the dear haunts of Force and Strife,
The Ministers of Peace shall stand,
And pour the welling words of Life
Around a parched and thirsty land;
While, spread beneath the tamarind tree,
Rise "happy homes and altars free."

Ye isles that court the tropic rays,
Clustered on Ocean's sapphire breast,
Ye feathery bowers, ye fairy bays,
In more than fable now—"the Blest:"
Waft on each gale your choral strain,
'Till every land has rent the chain.

O! England empires' home and head,
First in each art of peace and power,
Mighty the billow crest to tread,
Mighty to rule the battle hour—
But mightier to retrieve and save,
Rejoice that thou has freed the Slave!

EPITAPH ON A CANDLE.

A wicked one lies buried here,
Who died in a decline;
He never rose in rank, I fear,
Tho' he was born to shine.

He once was fat, but now, indeed,
He's thin as any griever;
He died—the doctors all agreed,
Of a most burning fever.

One thing of him is said with truth,
With which I'm much amused;
It is—that when he stood, forsooth,
A stick he always used.

Now winding-sheets he sometimes made,
But this was not enough,
But finding it a poorish trade,
He always dealt in snuff.

If e'er you said, 'Go out, I pray,'
He much ill-nature show'd;
On such occasions he should say,
'Vy, if I do, I'm blow'd.'

In this his friends do all agree,
Although you'll think I'm joking,
When going out 'tis said that he
Was very fond of smoking.

Since all religion he despised,
Let these few words suffice,
Before he ever was baptised
They dipp'd him [illegible] twice.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANECDOTE OF MR. WESLEY.—In the course of the voyage to America, Mr. Wesley, hearing an unusual noise in the cabin of General Oglethorpe, (the Governor of Georgia, with whom he sailed) stepped in to inquire the cause of it; on which the General immediately addressed him: "Mr. Wesley, you must excuse me, I have met with a provocation too great for man to bear. You know, the only wine I drink is Cyprus wine, as it agrees with me the best of any. I therefore provided myself with several dozens of it, and this villian, Grimaldi, (his foreign servant who was present and almost dead with fear,) has drank up the whole of it. But I will be revenged of him. I have ordered him to be tied hand and foot and to be carried to the man-of-war, which sails with us. The rascal should have taken care how he used me so, for I never forgive." Then I hope, Sir, (said Mr. Wesley, looking calmly at him,) You never sin." The general was quite confounded at the reproof; and putting his hand into his pocket, took out a bunch of keys, which he threw at Grimaldi, saying, "there villain, take my keys, and behave better for the future."—Brantford Courier.

THE DRUNKARD'S WILL.—I leave to society a ruined character, a wretched example, and a memory that will soon rot.

I leave to my parents, during the rest of their lives, as much sorrow as humanity in a decrepit and feeble state, can sustain.

I leave to my brothers and sisters as much mortification and injury as I could conveniently bring upon them.

I leave to my wife a broken heart, a life of wretchedness, a shame to weep over me, and premature death.

I give and bequeath to each of my children, poverty ignorance, a low character, and the remembrance that their father was a monster.

The ambition of a man of parts is very often disappointed for the want of some common quality, by the assistance of which men with very moderate abilities are capable of making a great figure.—Armstrong.

INTERESTING ANECDOTE.

In the year 1539, when London bridge was covered with houses, overhanging the pent-up turbulent stream as if the ordinary dangers of life were not sufficient that men should, out of their ingenuity, invent new ones, desert terra firma, and, like so many beavers, perch their dwellings on a crazy bridge, Sir william Hewitt, citizen of London, and cloth-worker, inhabited one of these temptations of Providence. His only child, a pretty little girl; was playing with a servant, at a window over the water, and fell into the rapids, through which, even now-a-days, it is counted a kind of feat to shoot. Many a one beheld the fearful sight, in the helplesness of terror, without venturing into the stream. But there was one to whom the life of the perishing child was dearer than his own, and that was the apprentice of Sir William Hewitt. He leaped into the water after his youthful mistress, and, by the aid of a bold heart and a strong arm, bore her in safety to the shore—and he had his reward. Years rolled on, and each succeeding one brought wealth to the father, and grace and loveliness to the noble-minded daughter. Such was the fame of her beauty, that even in that aristocratic age, the gallant and far-descended chivalry of the land were rival suitors for the hand of the merchant-queen of hearts. But fairer in her eyes was the 'prentice-cap of the daring youth who had snatched her from the writing waters, than the coronet of the peer; and, with the single-minded disinterestedness of a genuine woman, she gave to her untitled preserver, Edward Osborne, the hand and the heart which the Earl of Shrewsbury, the heir of the lofty house of Talbot, had sighed for in vain. Well did her lover vindicate her choice! Ebward Osborne was a nobleman born of God's creation, not man's. He rose, by successful industry, to the highest honours of that city whose merchants are the paymasters of the rulers of the earth. And from the city beauty, to whom faith and love were dearer than titles and wealth, and the merchant 'prentice, who periled his life as frankly in the cause of the helpless, and for the sake of humanity, as ever did highborn youth for fame, and glory, and golden spurs, descends, by a lineage more truly noble than if he sprung from the most heroic stock of crowned robbers that ever troubled the world with their achievements, George William Frederick Osborne, Duke of Leeds!—New Monthly Magazine.

ORIGIN OF THE NAMES OF THE SEVERAL STATES.

Maine was so called, as early as 1623, from Maine in France, of which Henrietta Maria, Queen of England was at the time proprietor.

New hampshire was the name given to the territory conveyed by the Plymouth Company to Captain John Mason, by patent, November the 7th 1629, with reference to the patentee, who was Governor of Portsmouth, in Hampshire England.

Vermont was so called by the inhabitants in the Declaration of Independence, Jan. 16th, 1777, from the French, ver mont, the green mountains.

Massachusetts tribe of Indians in the neighborhood of Boston. The tribe is thought to have derived its name from the Blue Hills Milton. "I have learn't," says Roger Williams "that Massachusetts was so called from the Blue Hills."

Rhode Island was so called, in 1604, in reference to the Islands of Rhodes, in the Mediterranean.

Connecticut was so called from the Indian name of its principal river. Connecticut is a Mohegan word signifying long river.

New York was so called in 1664, in reference to the Duke of York and Albany, to whom this territory was granted by the King of England.

New Jersey was so called in 1664, from the Island of Jersey, on the coast of France, the residence of the family of Sir George Carteret, to whom this territory was granted.

Pennsylvania was so called in 1681, after William Penn.

Delaware was so called in 1703, from Delaware Bay, on which it lies, and which received its name from Lord de la War who died in this Bay.

Maryland was so called, in honor of Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I. in his patent to Lord Baltimore, June 30, 1632.

Virginia was so called in 1584, after Elizabeth, the virgin Queen of England.

Carolina was so called by the French in 1564, in honor of King Charles IX., of France.

Georgia was so called in 1732, in honor of King George II.

Alabama was so called in 1814, from its principal river.

Mississippi was so called in 1800, from its western boundary; Mississippi is said to denote the whole river, i. e. the river formed by the union of many.

Louisiana was so called in honor of Louis XIV., of France.

Tennessee was so called in 1796, from its principal river. The word Tennessee is said to signify a curved spoon.

Kentucky was so called in 1782, from its principal river.

Illianois was so called in 1709, from its principal river. The word is said to signify the river of men.

Indiana was so called in 1809, from the American Indians.

Ohio was so called in 1802, from its southern boundary.

Missouri was so called in 1821, from its principal river.

Michigan was so called in 1805 from the lake on its border.

Arkansas was so called in 1812, from its principal river.

Florida was so called by Juan Ponce de Leon in 1572, because it was discovered on Easter Sunday in Spanish Pascua Florida.

Columbia was so called in remembrance of Columbus.

Wisconsin was so called from its principal river.

Iowa was called from its principal river.

Oregon is so called from its principal river.

DESPERATE REMEDY FOR A DESPERATE DISEASE.

They tell a good story of old Dr. Rand. He was called to visit a hypochondriac patient, who fancied she had swallowed a mouse. On entering the room, the lady exclaimed, "Dear doctor! I am so glad to see you—I am in such distress—such pain! Oh doctor, I've swallowed a mouse!" "Swallowed—nonsense," replied the doctor, in his mild and pleasant manner. "Oh, no, doctor!" said the patient, "it is not nonsense—it is a mouse—a live mouse—he ran into my throat when I was asleep, with my mouth open; and I feel him now, creeping about my stomach, and trying to gnaw out. Oh! doctor, do prescribe something quick, or I shall die." "Prescribe," said the doctor, "yes, I'll prescribe something that will [illegible] in a minute." "What is it doctor! what is it? I'll take any thing you order." "Well, then, my dear madam, swallow a cat—if that don't cure you, nothing will." It was effectual.

Singular Will.—An English miser, John Pleech, lately died in London, leaving the following will: I give and bequeath to my nephew, my old black coat; I give and bequeath to my niece, the flannel waistcoat I now wear; I give and bequeath to each one of my sister's grand-children, one of the earthen pots on the top of my wardrobe; finally I give and bequeath to my sister, as a last token of the affection I have always felt for her, the brown stone jug at the head of my bed. The disappointment of the legatees, when this strange will was read, may easily be imagined. The deceased was spoken of by all in a way by no means flattering to him, and his sister, in a fit of anger, give the brown stone jug, her legacy, a kick which broke it in pieces, when lo! a complete stream of guineas poured out of it, and the general disappointment gave way to joy. Each hurried to examine his or her legacy, and the flannel waistcoat and little earthen pots were found equally well lined, the testator having only wished to cause them an agreeable surprise.

SCIENTIFIC.—An old lady who had been reading the Sun's famous moon story, very attentively, remarked with emphasis, that the idea of the moon being inhabited was too incredible to believe: for said she, 'what becomes of the people in the new moon, when there is nothing left of it but a little streak.' And another pious old lady, agreeing with her, added that 'it was not at all likely that the Supreme Being would have people so near him.'—N. Y. Sun.

A SHREWD GUESS.—A skipper who sailed a fishing schooner from Nantucket, boasted that he could tell precisely in what part of the world he was, by the appearance of his 'lead,' whenever he could get soundings. Being one day confined to his cabin by sickness, he directed that the lead should be brought to him for inspection. The mate being rather waggish, having greased the bottom of the lead, instead of sounding as usual, dropped the lead in some sand which had been taken as ballast from a hill side in Nantucket, and then showed it to the skipper, who instantly inquired, 'did you get this by sounding?' 'Yes Sir,' was the reply. Then by heavens sir,' continued the skipper, 'Nantucket is sunk, and we're now right over Tupper's Hill.'

NO DOUBT. 'I see,' said a young lady yesterday, 'that some booksellers advertise blank declarations for sale. I wish I could get one.' 'Why?' asked the mother. 'Because then, Mr. G——is too modest to ask me to marry him, and perhaps if I could fill a blank declaration with the 'question,' he would sign it.'

To distress our minds with imaginary fears before a trouble arrives is (as the Spanish proverb words it) "to feel our evils twice over." Why should we call in supernumerary ills, and destroy the duty and happiness of the present time with superfluous fears of futurity?

Those inactive and dilatory creatures who are still essaying and purposing, but never acting and proceeding, resemble St. George, who is always on horseback, but never rides forward.

King Lewis XI. used to say, "When pride rides in the saddle, mischief and shame sit upon the crupper."

Aristotle observing a proud and self-conceited, but empty youth, strutting along with an affected gait and lofty looks, stepped up to him, and whispered these cutting and heart humbling words into his ear:—"Friend, such as thou thinkest thyself to be, I wish I were, but to be as thou art, I wish only to mine enemies."

Envy is a friend which never totally dies out of this world, and but seldom sleeps; however, as it sometimes falls into slumber, it is highly imprudent to awake it, either by loudly trumpeting forth our own praise; or by doing commendable actions with bustle and noise.

Be as deaf to the flatterer as to the railer; for if the latter occasions more smart, the former often causeth more hurt.

Diogenes, being asked what beast bites the worst, answered, "Of wild beasts, the backbiter; of tame beasts, the flatterer."

It is safer to fall a prey to ravens than railers; for ravens will eat none but the dead; whereas these will devour a man while he is alive.

Liberality without discretion is profuseness; fortitude without wisdom is rashness; sense without justice is craft; and justice without mercy is cruelty.

The sincerity of the heart discovers itself in the end aimed at by an action, more than in the action itself. The chief and honest traveller may ride the same road; but they have different aims; and this distinguishes them.

PUBLIC WORSHIP IN LONDON.

Mr. Editor,—During a late visit to Europe I passed five Sabbaths in the English Metropolis, and attended public worship at different places, and with several denominations. Some things of their services I did not greatly admire; with others I was favorably impressed, and I would respectfully solicit them for the consideration of your readers.

1. When the people enter their pews, they at once engage, for one or two minutes, in silent prayer. Episcopalians knelt for the purpose; Dissenters bowed their heads against the fronts of the pew. This gave to the whole scene an air of solemnity befitting the day and the place.

2. They have their pews as well supplied with Bibles as with Hymn books, and when the Scriptures were read from the pulpit, each hearer took the Bible and followed the reader. And when the text was named, or, in the course of the sermon, a passage of Scripture was cited, all would turn directly to the place, and observe, not only the passage, but the connection.

3. I saw many persons, mostly young men, taking notes of the discourses, and, therefore, giving a fixed attention, as if unwilling to lose a single thought.

4. The congregation was remarkably quiet and attentive. Preaching of moderate length was listened to without any indications of restlessness or contempt.

5. When the benediction was concluded the minister and people remained for a half a minute in silence. Not a pew door was opened, not a hat or glove taken, not a foot moved.

6. They were exceedingly moderate in leaving the house. In no instance did I see the aisles crowded. They seemed willing to wait for one another.

7. Gentlemen retired from the house of God as respectfully as from the house of a friend;—they did not put on their hats until they reached the door.

8. After retiring from the sanctuary, gentlemen as well as ladies went home. The Post Office was closed, and no letters or papers were delivered on the Sabbath.

STANZAS.

I know a maiden fair to see,
Take care!
She can both false and friendly be;
Beware! beware!
Trust her not,
She is fooling thee!

She has two eyes so soft and brown,
Take care!
She gives a side glance and looks down.
Beware! beware!
Trust her not,
She is fooling thee!

She has a bosom white as snow,
Take care!
She knows how much it best to show.
Beware! beware!
Trust her not,
She is fooling thee!

She gives thee a garland woven fair,
Take care!
It is a fool's cap for thee to wear,
Beware! beware!
Trust her not,
She is fooling thee!

LIBERIA HERALD.

THRILLING DETAIL OF A FRIGHTFUL TRAGEDY IN RUSSIA.

We have received from Moscow the subjoined details of a horrible event, which shows what the condition of the serfs continue to be in Russia:

M. Mierzaloff, a young lieutenant of the Starodaburo regiment of cuirassiers, twenty-two years of age, inherrited, in the first month of this year, by the demise of his uncles, a large fortune, consisting of lordships and property situate in the government of Tambof. Eager to enjoy this fortune, the young lieutenant immediately resigned his commission, and took leave of his fellow officers, promising to see them again, and settled in the village of Sokolin-Slaw, the pleasantest and best situated of the many which has just become his property.

From that moment young Mierzaloff, with all the warmth of youth, entered upon the life of a Russian lord, the owner of 2,000 souls, that is to say, 2,000 peasants, half of whom usually consist of young girls, to whom, it is true, the Imperial ukases deny the possession of a soul, but who are not the less among the worldy goods of a lord and master of twenty-two, those, perhaps, he sets the highest value on.

Meirzoloff, like most of his birth and fortune, led in his chateau of Sokolin-Slaw, the most dissolute and licentious life, when in the month of July, the fete day of his revered patron, Saint Alexis, approaching, he invited twenty old comrades of his regiment of Starodabora to come and celebrate it with him. The officers, whose corps was transiently cantoned at a short distance, hastened to comply with the invitation on the 17th of the month, the holy patron's day; the morning commenced with a grand breakfast, brilliant cavalcades, pistol and gun shooting, and above all, a copious consumption of champaigne. At the dinner, which displayed oriental magnificence, and every course of which was brought by young girls singing in chorus their native airs, what sense the light brains of the lord of Sokolin-Slaw and of his comrades still yielding entirely vanished. At dessert the male servants were dismissed, and Mierzaloff, declaring his wish to do the honors of all he had to his former comrades, urged them to choose among the chorus of young singers such as pleased them.

Accustomed from the cradle to blind obedience, and quite certain of obtaining neither protection nor defence among the serfs of Sokolin-Slaw, the poor girls on whom the chance of the officers fell submitted to their fate, save one, named Maryna, perhaps the handsomest of them, who availing herself of a moment when the doors were not as yet closed, took to flight and hastened towards the country.

As soon as he heard of her escape, Mierzaloff roared out, "Kej'ivan, Alexis!———hasten in pursuit of Maryna———let her be brought back forthwith!"

Of the two men whom he gave this order to, one was Naryna's brother, and the other was betrothed to her! And yet they obeyed with the blind ardour of the hound in the pursuit of the flying game, and before many minutes had elapsed they brought back the trembling and weeping Maryna to a master, whom, in their superstitious credulity, they deemed at liberty to dispose, not only their lives and mortal remains, but also of their souls.

The moment Maryna was brought up, she was, as well as her companions, magnificently dressed, and covered with flowers and trinkets; and when evening came on, one of those brutal orgies commenced, which the Russian lords, in their semi-savage manners, call "Eden Suppers."

At midnight the music, songs, and drinking had subsided in the mansion; the serfs, whom their duty did not keep to their post, had dispersed in the village; among others, Kej'ivan and Alexis, Maryna's brother and lover, had retired to a public house, and indulged in copious draughts of grain brandy, both to dispel the painful thoughts that oppressed them, and to recruit their strength after the day's fatigue

Meanwhile, in the most retired part of the Sokolin-Slaw residence, and whilst the lights were successively vanishing and making way for repose, a woman was on the watch, a prey to jealousy and fury. It was a young and handsome girl, named Marfa, who had been for a year past Mierzaloff's favorite, and whom he had taken good care not to introduce to his guests, and above all, to keep away from the scenes by which he celebrated their visit. A slave, attached to the young woman, had, by her commands, watched all that had passed; she had thereby heard of Maryna's flight and return; and also that Mierzaloff, fascinated by the young girl's beauty and resistance, had appropriated her to himself.

Resolved on revenge, the jealous Marfa sallied forth unperceived, sought in the village for Maryna's brother and lover, and found them, at about midnight, in the aforesaid public house. She reproached them with their infamy and cowardice, kindled in their breasts the feelings of revenge which her's could not restrain, and succeeded in rousing them from their apathy, and inflaming them to such a degree, that they dashed their glasses to the ground, and putting their forefingers together in the shape of a cross, kissed it, and swore to be avenged. After this oath, the most solemn a Muscovite boar can make, Kej'ivan and Alexis left Marfa, and went to every house in the village, exciting their countrymen and telling their design.

About three hours after this scene, just at dawn when the inmates of the chateau were slumbering, a band of near four hundred peasants, each carrying a large bundle of dry straw, spread round the residence, which, like most of those in the district of Tambof, was built of wood. At a given signal, and before any within could give alarm, the peasants set fire in all directions to the straw which they had heaped up close to the sides of the building, and then retiring to some distance, they waited, armed with guns, axes, pitchforks and scythes, till the illumination roused the Lord of Sokolin-Slaw and his guests from their slumbers.

Mierzaloff was the first disturbed. Terrified at the sight of the encircling fire, he rushed into the court, and attempted to make his way through the gate. A shot which brought him to the ground, taught him what fate awaited his guests. These soon made their appearance, sword in hand, and strove to open themselves a way through the flames, and to close ranks of the peasants. A tremendous struggle ensued, in which, however, the officers were fortunate enough to lose only one of their comrades, a captain named Dranberg. Harassed with fatigue, having their hair and clothes burned, they succeeded in reaching a little wood, where, beyond the grasp of the peasants, they were enabled to give some assistance to four of them who had been dangerously wounded.

The moment the peasants had seen their lord, all were aware that they would pursue the officers in vain, they had rushed into the chateau to save the poor girls, the innocent victims of their master; as for the latter, after raising him, bathing in his blood, they gratified their long-restraining hatred, and inflicted on him atrocious torture, an immense wood pile was set fire to and Mierzaloff was cast into the furnace. In vain did Marfa, repenting too late the revenge she had kindled, implore in behalf of her unfortunate master, whom she believed still alive; she was herself seized and thrown into the fire, with reproaches of her having loved her opprobrium.

This terrible execution being over, the peasants fury raged against every thing that had belonged to the lord of Sokolin-Slaw. The house was burnt down, along with the stables, barns, and breweries, and lest anything that Mierzaloff liked should survive, they distroyed his horses and hounds.

Three days after this tragic occurrence, an isprawnick captain (the police chief of the district) arrived on the spot, commissioned to inquire into the affair. He was accompanied by two companies of infantry and cavalry, to enable him to quiet the rebellion. His surprise may be imagined when, instead of having to deal with rebels, he heard on his arrival that the whole population of Sokolin-Slaw were congregated in the church, wherein twelve marriages were being solemnized between the twelve young victims of the lord's last orgies and the young men betrothed to them previous to the dreadful occurrence, the opprobrium of which they thus hoped to obliterate.

The evidence of the murder and fire was palpable, and all the peasants confessed their guilt. Two hundred and eighty-three of them, including Kej'ivan and Alexis, were arrested and thrown into the Tomb of Prisons, where the criminal tribunal continued the investigation.

On the 12th of September sentence was passed on the prisoners of Sokolin-Slaw. The two hundred and eighty-three, whether old or young, were indiscriminately condemned to receive each a hundred stripes of the knout, and such as might survive the punishment were to labor for life in the mines of Siberia. The Judges, nevertheless, after passing this sentence, dictated by the inflexibility of the law, addressed a petition to the Czar, wherein, after impartially submitting the whole affair, they implored of his wisdom and mercy a commutation of the penalty, or, at least, a mitigation of the rigors they were doomed to. The Emperor, after consulting the Council of State, issued a ukase, in pursuance of which the whole population of Sokolin-Slaw was to be sent to the colonies of the Caucasus, wherein the men were to be incorporated with the regiments of Cossacks of the line.

The Imperial Ukase, which has been hailed with satisfaction and gratitude by all the enlightened men of Moscow, has, on the contrary, excited great discontent among the whole nobility, who cling to their privileges so much so that the governor of Moscow, General Nej Hart has ordered the decrees to be carried into execution, without the usual publicity.—Gazette des Tribunaux, 9th Feb., 1842.

MARIA GRACIAS.

From the "Reminiscences of a Medical Student."

"She was found," continued my fellow-student, as we merged from the gate way of the hospital, "she was found sitting on a doorstep in a narrow alley, somewhere about the Seven Dials. It was considerably past midnight, and the sound of her moaning attracted the notice of the watchman, who had just returned to his beat, having been drawn away for some time by an alarm of fire in a neighbouring lane. When addressed, she continued her groans, in the intervals uttering some words unintelligible to the man, who, in the belief that she was drunk, had her conveyed to one of the police officers on a hurley. Her condition being at once evident there, she was forthwith conducted to the hospital, and the matron sent to me to let me know it was my turn to have the case.

On entering the ward I perceived she was asleep, and turning on the gas, I stood looking at her for several minutes, fixed to the spot. She was a most beautiful woman. Not even the wan and anxious look, nor the other peculiarrities to be expected from her situation, could for one moment conceal even a trait of her extraordinary loveliness. And it was a style of beauty, too, I had not seen for many years.

She lay in a tranquil slumber, with her face turned toward me, and one arm laid over the bedclothes. The clean cap which the nurse had hastily placed on her head, was too large and had come off; it now hung round her neck by the string, partly confined her beautiful black hair, which however bursting forth above and below, wantoned in rich curled and wavy masses all over the pillow. Her eyes were closed, the large black pupils appearing in a soft shade through the thin, delicate lids, beneath which their glances of passion or feeling were now sleeping, while the long dark lashes mingled together like fringes of silken filaments. Her skin was soft and velvet-like, beautifully pale a shade of brownish red on each round cheek, altering in richness of tint with every breath she drew. Her lips were of the finest cherry red, and were slightly parted, disclosing an even row of teeth. Methought while I looked, a faint smile played over them,—yes, it was so. Alas, poor girl, her mind had travelled many a league, and was far away in her own sunny land!

My eyes now wandered to the arm that lay on the counterpane. It was beautifully shaped; the hand was so particularly; it was small and plump, with long tapering fingers, and a tiny dimple over the knuckle at the root of each. The appearance of the hand and elbow at once made it plain to me that they had never been employed at any menial labour. Anon as I looked, a twitch passed over her face as if from internal pain; it was off, and the same placid expression returned; it had disturbed her, however, and slowly and indolently she opened her eyes, and gazed around her. There was in them at first an expression of surprise, then wonder and fear, as travelling round the still, quiet ward, they at length rested upon me, as I stood leaning over the low iron bed-steed, and hanging on with my arms to the cord over it.* By and bye, recollection seemed to dawn slowly and gradually upon her; a feeling of where she was, and why she was there, seemed to come full upon her: she turned to the wall covered her face with her hand, and groaned aloud in very bitterness. Oh the deep, low, prolonged "aah" that seemed as if drawn piecemeal from the inmost recesses of a crushed heart!

The short time she was in the hospital, she had won her way into the hearts of the matron and nurse. At first they thought her stubborn, from her not answering their questions, but when they found that she understood no English, the sympathies of their womanly hearts were excited in a tenfold degree, in favour of this poor lone daughter of the south, alone and unprotected in a land of strangers; and that too at a period of her being when friends and protection were most in need; and again and again to their oft repeated little kindness would the dulcet "gracias,—muchas grocias" of the beautiful Spanish woman float around in the full golden tones of her own magnificient language.

I was convinced of her country from the first, and began hammering up as much Spanish as three months in a counting house at Seville had given me, with a view to find out something of her history. All my attempts, however, were fruitless. I seemed by my inquiries but to augment the mental agony she was evidently suffering, while the sweetness of temper with which she bore it so excited my compassion, that at length I ceased to importune her. The day I was called to her I managed to ask her if she was not from Spain!

"Es verdad, senor."

"And what made you leave your home, my good girl?"

She buried her face in the clothes, and sobbed as if her heart would break; alas, poor thing, it was already broken!

When her child was laid beside her, she became more calm, and smiled upon the little creature with a look of such forlorn affection, that I saw the tears rising in the eyes of the worthy Mrs. Bland, and when she lavished upon it words of endearment in her own tongue, and pressed it fondly to her, upon my life I thought I had caught the infection.

During the two days she had been with us, she had taken no food, refusing everything the kindhearted nurse offered her, save some wine and water, with which she moistened her lips occasionally. I was a little troubled at this. I asked her why she did not eat,—she made no reply, but covered her face and cried. I pressed some food upon her, announcing to her the simple fact, that if she did not eat she would die.

"Bueno, senor,—nada desco sino morir,—I only want to die."

"Why, my poor thing, may I ask?"

"O gran Dios!—Francisco ha me bandonado—Francisco has abandoned me!"

"And who is Francisco?" but my question was lost in the paroxysm of grief to which she gave way.

I waited for a while, and then told her that if she did not take food, she could have no nourishment for her little daughter.

As soon as I could make her understand me, she appeared struck with some thought, and quietly took the food I offered her.

She was now getting on tolerably well, and I was flattering myself upon working out a speedy elucidation of the mysteries with which I had been bothering my brains, when the second night after, I was called to the hospital, and found my interesting patient about to go from me for ever. Symptoms had occurred which I need not explain, and on my arrival I found she was sinking rapidly. Dr. A ———had been sent for, and was already there, doing all that mortal man could for her, but without avail. I told him her brief story. He was much moved.

I bent over her, she was murmuring something. I listened,—she was praying.

"O Maria Santissima!—mia hija—O Dios mio!—no la abandones jamas—Heavenly Father, be thou a father to my poor infant!"

A few minutes passed,—what was that? I shuddered as I heard it—it was that fearful sound that tells us hope is gone.

She spoke again: "Adios feliz Espana!" I listened attentively; "Adios Francisco—mi a—ma—do—Ad—i—!"

Oh woman, woman, is his name the last sound on your living lips!—his, who has been your utter ruin in this world, and who, we pray Heaven, may not be your eternal condemnation in the next! Such is woman's love!"

* In most hospitals there is a strong cord that hangs from a hook in the ceiling over each bed; it has a cross stick at the end of it, by grasping which the patient, if weak, is enabled more readily to change his position in bed, or even materially to alleviate the feeling of pain.

A SCOTTISH LEGEND.

A married couple of the Scottish Highlanders had three lost their only child, each dying at an early age. Upon the death of the last, the father became boisterous, and uttered his plaints in the loudest tones.

The death of the child happened late in the spring, when, in the more inhabited straths, sheep were abroad; but, from the blast in that high and stormy regions, they were still confined in the cot. In a dismal, stormy evening, the man, unable to stifle his anguish, went out lamenting aloud, for a lamb to treat his friends at the wake (or funeral feast.) At the door of the cot he found a stranger standing before the entrance. He was astonished, in such a night, so far from any frequented place!! The stranger was plainly attired, but he had a countenance expressives of singular mildness and benevolence; and addressing the father in a sweet impressive voice, asked what he did there, amidst tempest.

He was filled with awe which he could not account for, and said he came for a lamb.

"What kind of a lamb do you mean to take?" said the stranger.

"The very best that I can find," he replied; "as it is to entertain my friends; and I hope you will share of it."

"Do your sheep make any resistance when you take away the lambs?"

"Never," was the answer.

"How differently am I treated," said the traveller, "when I come to visit my sheep-fold, I take, as I am well entitled to do, the best lamb to myself, and my ears are filled with the clamor of discontent by these ungrateful sheep, whom I have fed, watched, and protected."

He looked up in amazement, but———the vision had fled.

PRIVATE HISTORY OF MR. OWEN.

Robert Owen is a native of Wales, and of very humble extraction. Early in life he made his way to Manchester, where he obtained employment in one of the cotton factories. Possessed of more than ordinary endowments of mind, he was not long in making himself master of the "craft and mystery" of cotton spinning, and being of a very enthusiastic turn, and noted for some speculative ingenuity, he succeeded ere long in ingratiating himself in the good opinion of his employers, whose processes he was enabled, in some instances, to simplify in a mechanical point of view, and otherwise diminish their expensiveness. At last, he succeeded so well in the contest of life as to obtain the charge of the factory.

About the commencement of the present century, the universally-respected and beloved David Dale, one of the best men that Scotland ever produced, and the founder of that New Lanark of which so much has been heard, having lost his only son, the solace of his age, and being blessed with an abundance of the gifts of Providence, disposed of his establishment of new Lanark to a company of English merchants, who gladly availed themselves of Mr, Owen's services, and sent him down to New Lanark to superintend their establishment. Owen was here distinguished by the punctuality of his attendance at the Independent chapel of which Mr. Dale was pastor, and in his entire demeanor, he was religious,—nay, even to all appearance, devout.

David Dale had a daughter, distinguished, like her father, for religious zeal, charity, and, in short, every moral quality that can adorn either sex. It is quite plain, that no man, whose abstract opinions or conduct were at all at variance with religious convictions, could have the slightest chance of obtaining this lady's hand. Robert Owen was successful in his suit, and Miss Dale became his wife.

At the period to which we refer, the inhabitants of New Lanark were noted, even amongst the Scottish population, for their zeal in the cause of religion and morality. During the entire period of Mr. Dale's proprietorship, they had been taught to regard themselves as one great family; and mutual kindness and brotherly love was the lesson which he was never done inculcating. His instructions were not thrown away. The example which Mr. Dale individually set, he endeavoured to multiply by the care which he employed in the selection of men, of tried moral worth and religious principles, for his overseers and managers. An excellent school was established under the superintendence of the late Mr. Lyon, "who never forgot to impress upon his pupils the principles and practices of religion, or to invoke the blessing of the Almighty upon the commencement of his daily labours." The children, under their respective teachers, were regularly taken to church every Sabbath. Family worship was performed in almost every house once, and on Sabbath, twice a-day; and the most beautiful morality, order, peace, and harmony prevailed for many years at New Lanark.

At the death of Mr. Dale, Mr. Owen came into possession of his wife's fortune, amounting to nearly 30,000*l.*; and then it was, that he avowed amongst his friends his direct hostility to the institutions, both social and religious, of this every-day world. At first, he prudently shrouded his hatred of revealed religion, and applied himself solely, in appearance, to the melioration of the social condition of mankind. He speedily, however, manifested a desire to work out his real principles, by endeavouring to coerce the schoolmaster appointed by his deceased benefactor to discontinue the teaching of the Scriptures; and because he would not consent, this poor man felt obliged to resign his situation.

The eyes of his doting wife were at length opened, and she remonstrated, but without the slightest effect, except in throwing over her husband's projects, for a time, a thin veil of hypocrisy. Prudential considerations rendered this desirable. Had he broached, at that period, the infamies of his "New Moral World," the bubble would have burst at the outset; and the co-operative, self-sustaining system, with its accompayning infidelity, kept in the back-groud imposed for a time, upon Mr. Wilberforce and other philanthropists. Upon a closer examination of Owen's doctrines, however, Mr. Wilberforce detected and repudiated their irreligious and scandalously immoral tendences, as appears by a passage in the fifth volume of this interesting diary.

For a very long period Mr. Owen kept the pseudo-philanthropic portion of his scheme merely before the eyes of the public, and it was not until he was fortified by the deep root which his system struck in the soil of the United States of America, and its more extravagant features were adopted, and publicly professed, by the Saint Simonians in France, that he laid aside the last shred of the mask which he had hitherto worn. Ever since that period his system has been undergoing modification after modification, until at last it came forth as "The Universal Community Association of Rational Religionists." Hundreds of thousands of pamphlets and other writings have been disseminated under Mr. Owen's immediate inspection, in which the notion of a Deity and the inspired word of God are alike scoffed at and reviled; the marriage tie has been described as a Satanic invention; lecturers have been appointed to make plausible statements in all the principle cities and towns throughout England; brazen-fronted females have had the audacity to assail the Gospels of God and the Divine institution of marriage, in the metropolis, as well as in the provinces; professed lecturers upon physiology have been the convert and well-paid advocates of Socialism; and, to facilitate the proposed "melioration of the condition of society," numerous works have been disseminated, some of unblushing obscenity, and all of the most demoralizing tendency.

If David Dale could but see to what uses his wealth has been applied, he would curse the day upon which his misled bounty conceded the means of setting the world in a flame, to minister to his depraved appetite for distinction!

ANECDOTE OF CATLIN AND HIS HORSE, CHARLEY.

"On his journey, while he and I were twenty-five days alone, we had much time, and the best of circumstances, under which to learn what we had as yet overlooked in each other's characters, as well as to draw great pleasure and real benefit from what we already had learned of each other in our former travels.

"I generally halted on the bank of some little stream, at half an hour of sunset, where feed was good for Charley, and where I could get wood to kindle my fire, and water for my coffee. The first thing was to undress 'Charley,' and drive down his picket, to which he was fastened, to graze over a circle that he could inscribe at the end of his lasso. In this wise he busily fed himself until nightfall; and after my coffee was made and drank, I uniformly moved him up, with his picket by my head so that I could lay my hand upon his lasso in an instant, in case of any alarm that was liable to drive him from me. On one of these evenings, when he was grazing as usual, he slipped the lasso over his head, and deliberately took his supper at his pleasure, wherever he chose to prefer it, as he was strolling around. When night approached, I took the lasso in hand and endeavoured to catch him, but I soon saw that he was determined to enjoy a little freedom; and he continually evaded me untill dark, when I abandoned the pursuit, making up my mind that I should inevitable lose him, and be obliged to perform the rest of my journey on foot. He had led me a chase of half a mile or more, when I left him busily grazing, and returned to my little solitary bivouac, and laid myself on my bear-skin and went to sleep.

"In the middle of the night I waked; whilst I was laying on my back, and on half opening my eyes, I was instantly shocked to the soul, by the huge figure (as I thought) of an Indian standing over me, and in the very instant of taking my scalp! The chill of horror that paralyzed me for the momet, held me still, till I saw there was no need of my moving—that my faithful horse 'Charley' had 'played shy' till he had 'filled his belly,' and had then moved up, from feelings of pure affection, or from instinctive fear, or possibly from a due share of both, and taken his position, with his fore-feet at the edge of my bed, with his head hanging directly over me, while he was standing fast asleep!

"My nerves, which had been most violently shocked, were soon quieted, and I fell asleep, and so continued until sunrise in the morning; when I waked, and beheld my faithful servant at some considerable distance, busily at work picking up his breakfast amongst the cane-brake, along the bank of the creek. I went as busily to work, preparing my own, which was eaten; and after it, I had another half-hour of fruitless endeavors to catch Charley, whilst he seemed mindful of success on the evening before, and continually tantalizing me by turning around and around, and keeping out of my reach. I recollected the conclusive evidence, of his attachment and dependence, which he had voluntarily given in the night, and I thought I would try them in another way; so I packed up my things, and slung the the saddle on my back; trailing my gun in my hand, and started on my route. After I had advanced a quarter of a mile, I looked back, and saw him standing with his head and tail very high, looking alternately at me and at the spot where I had been encamped, and left a little fire burning. In this condition he stood and surveyed the prairies around for a while, as I continued on. He at length walked with a hurried step to the spot, and seeing every thing gone, began to neigh very violently; and at last started off at the fullest speed, and overtook me, passing within a few paces of me, and wheeling about at a few rods distance in front of me, trembling like an aspen leaf.

"I called him by his familiar name, and walked up to him with the bridle in my hand, which I put over his head, as he held it down for me; and the saddle on his back, as he actually stooped to receive it. I was soon arranged, and on his back, when he started off upon his coure, as if he was well contented and pleased, like his rider, with the manœuvre which had brought us together again, and afforded us mutual relief from our awkward position. Though this alarming freak of Charley's passed off and terminated so satisfactorily, yet I thought such rather dangerous ones to play; and I took good care after that night to keep him under my strict authority; resolving to avoid further tricks and experiments, till we got to the land of cultivated fields and steady habits."

A Prize Essay on the abolition of the prejudices of white men against negres and other coloured people. By S. L'Instant (of Hayti). Paris, 1842.—170 pp.

The good Abbe Gregoire founded a prize, which, in 1840, M. L'Instant, an advocate of Hayti, gained by this essay, against five competitors. One of the other essays has reached a second edition; but the superior merit of this production of a coloured man, is an apt reply to those who, against accumulated evidence to the contrary, persist in asserting that the gift of intellect, and the germs of high civilization, are confined to the white race.

We can only glance at the extremely important contents of M. L'Instant's work, and furnish an index to its topics. A copy ought to be in the hands of every one really concerned to understand the whole question which it opens; and by the extensive sale of this pamphlet, which indeed only opens many of the topics, the author ought to be urged to persevere in his studies, so that he may hereafter extend an excellent essay into the great work wanted to do the subject and himself justice. Perhaps, in preparing such a work, M. L'Instant may find reason to modify some of his opinions, or at least to supply omissions occasioned by the necessary brevity of this essay;

The preface offers a satisfactory explanation of what is often called the slow progress of Hayti since its independence, which we shall insert in a future number.

This special vindication of the honour of his countrymen, forms a fit introduction to the larger defence of the negro race, which constitutes the substance of M. L'Instant's essay. That essay is replete with curious learning, & with elevated views. He sets out with a clear statement of the antiquity of slavery—of white as well as of black slavery. Hence he infers, that the condition was not among the ancients, exclusively the lot of negros, as it is now. He then traces the course of the negro slave-trade in Europe to its extinction before the fourteenth century. During the time of its prevalence the most esteemed of the two races were the blacks, being the fewest in number; and the prejudice against them was then unknown.

The revival of negro-slavery M. L'Instant fixes at 1442. Its extension to its present state is then followed out in a variety of interesting speculations. The origin of the modern prejudice of colour is marked with great precision; and we think that few more conclusive arguments are to be met with in the records of the anti-slavery cause, than this of M. L'Instant on this point, founded on the laws of the French West Indian colonies. It would be difficult to abridge this capital part of the essay, if we had space for even the abridgment; and we can only point it out as especially worth perusal in the original.

Against the opinions of those who hold that the negro race is essentially inferior to the whites, M. L'Instant relies upon powerful general reasoning, and upon some individual cases which will be new to most English readers. Hannibal, a general in the Russian service under Peter the Great, was a pure negro. He married a Russian lady, and his son was distinguished Russian officer, and his grandson a more distinguished writer. Amo, a German professor of much merit, was a pure negro. Julien Raymond, L'Islet Geoffroy, G. Lethierre, and the two Dumas, all admitted by the academy and institute of France among her most illustrious philosophers, soldiers, artists, and men of letters, are all recent names to be added to Abbe Gregoire's list of negro famous men (p. 77).

M. L'Instant passes to the means by which he proposes to destroy the prejudice of colour. They are expressed in the following enumeration:—1 Education, religious and civil; religion taught by deeply learned and highly enlightened ministers, and civil instruction extended to all ranks, and over all science. 2. The extension of all rights to people of colour. 3. The election of the deputies sent from the colonies to Paris by the general voice. 4. The appointment of a sufficient number of blacks to civil posts. 5. Marriage to be encouraged by all not married being refused employment. 6. The equal admission of people of colour to all the ranks of the national guard. 7 Mixed juries. 8. The admission of colored people on the bench as judges. 9. Appointing protectors of slaves. 10. The abolition of the whip and other corporal punishments. 11. The appropriation of the slave's personal property to his own use. 12. Savings' banks. 13. The emigration of white labourers of a superior sort. 14. Moderation of tasks. 15. Amusements, such as music. 16. The encouragement of the marriage of slaves (p. 107—149).

M. L'Instant distinguishes the prejudice of colour from slavery; and, without suspending his zeal against the latter, he maintains that, whilst all his measures would prepare the way for its abolition, they are also good in themselves. He wisely adds, that, even if slavery be abolished, old prejudice will long survive, requiring especial provisions of law to protect its objects against injustice.

M. L'Instant concludes his essay with an observation that deserves to be well weighed by those who meddle with these subjects. Each measure, says he, proposed above for the extinction of prejudices against coloured people, may unquestionably be adopted separately with advantage: but, to produce the good anticipated from them, they must be executed as a whole. It is a complete system that is wanted, and it is the government that must take the lead in executing it.

These words should be engraven on the minds of our Anti-slavery committee-men—our Aborigines Protection Society committee-men—our African Civilization Society committee-men—and, above all, the ministers of the crown and the members of the legislature, should adopt these opinions as their rule, in whatever is attempted for the improvement of the coloured race connected with us.

More Hoarding of Specie.—We made mention in the last Record, of a large sum of specie found in possession of an old German of this county, at his decease, which occurred lately, and stated that it went to prove that no inconsiderable portion of the specie of the country was locked up. A deposite of between 1100 and 1200 dollars of gold, all in eagles and half eagles, was made at the Bank of Chester county last week, belonging to the estate of Mrs. Marshall, widow of the late John Marshall, of Pennsbury Township. This gold was found after a long search in an old desk, which had in it several secret chambers, and is supposed to have been secreted by John Marshall, sometime prior to his death, twenty-eight years ago! The desk was curiously constucted, of great antiquity, and it appears on raising the lid, presented a series of pigeonholes. The desk and its contents were bequeathed by the old man to his wife, and at her death, she left it to her friend and relative Mrs. Way, as a family relic, and without any idea of its contents, as is supposed. A few days since, but many months after the death of Mrs. Marshall, the desk was carefully examined in search of treasure, as it was an old belief in the neighborhood, that the old gentleman, Mr M., had a "tin-cup full" of gold; but after his death no one knew what had become of it. The desk was ransacked; a small crevice in the bottom attracted attention—on inserting the blade of a knife it flew open, and several hundred dollars of silver were found! This magnificent discovery stimulated curiosity; and farther search was made. The pigeon holes were tried—they drew out!—and behind them was a series of secret boxes. On examming these boxes, lo! the long-talked of gold was brought to light. The El Dorado, after the lapse of more than a quater of a century, was discovered, and a great mystery revealed.

In connection with the above, it is worthy of note, that among the effects willed by Mr. M., were from three to four thousand dollars of personal property, in bank notes. They had been in her possession during the late suspension, and on the appraisement it was found, that notwithstanding the depreciation of currency and the crashing of banks, they are all on institutions that now redeem their notes in gold and silver. —Village Record

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, AUGUST 31, 1842.

On the 21st the ship "Maripasa" arrived here with 242 immigrants from different sections of the old country. Eighty six of these immigrants were emancipated by a gentleman in Tennessee, and are said to be fitted by some years of preparatory training for the boon thus bestowed upon them. May they prove useful and enterprising citizens of their new home. It cannot be too deeply impressed upon the friends of the colony, and of Africa, that other than industrious persevering colonists will be a curse rather than a blessing. Send out good sturdy ahead-going men with a little means and the colony will resuscitate and advance in the wished for course. These immigrants are to be located at Greenville Mississippi in Africa, alias Sinoe. The remainder of the number will settle here. We are really pleased to find that the Governor does not intend to send them to Caldwell. They are for the present located here. For notwithstanding our prejudices of residence, none we are sure, can be so blind, as not to know that the facilities of comfort, and accommodation are tenfold here to any place up the river. Caldwell from some inexplicabe cause (as some seem to think, though to us it is evident) has proved the grave of nearly all the residents of its lower sections. Higher up the river the people have partially escaped the deathful influence, and at Millsburg only 8 miles above the settlers are healthy and comparatively happy.

There can be but little doubt that the country would be more propitious the farther we advance into the interior. This we think is clearly proven from the instance just mentioned. It is also farther indicated by the production & face of the country. The water of the river is never salt, nor even brackish at Millsburg. The land gradually rises as you recede from the coast; the banks of the river are high, and steep, affording no room for those fetid marshes and bogs in which mangrove and other rank aquatic vegetation delight to revel. There can be only two objections against extending our settlements into the interior—difficulty of transportation, and exposure to the depredations of the natives. As an offset to this is the consideration that a line of settlements along the St. Paul's would soon reach the camwood country, and were we not afraid of exposing the lives of our friends whose ignorance of native habits might render them too easy a prey, would on the mere score of selfishness advocate the measure. The society might be induced to reach the happy place by such easy stages, although all past entreaty has failed to prevail on them to proceed by a rapid march.

Among the number of passengers we espy our old friends Jas. Brown and S Harriss. Up to the time of writing we have not yet spoken to them—we wish them out of pure friendship to recover a little from the fatigue of endless talk they must have had in America.

By this vessel we have received more than our ordinary share of friendly Epistles and papers, and for them we feel more than ordinary gratitude, seeing we have been so shamefully slighted of late. We have not time to make large extracts as our interesting sheet is already made up. For the benefit of our African friends we will hastily condense a—

SUMMARY.

We begin with the subject dear to the heart of every friend of his race—namely human liberty. Our readers will judge by this of the signs of the times.

A Petition has been handed in to Congress from the northern part of Virginia praying for the abolition of slavery in the district of Columbia.

Gov. Seward has refused to regard any portion of the human family as goods, chattles, or things though earnestly requested to do so by a part of the Legislature. He has certainly set deeply the seal of reprobation on all concerned in that disgraceful bill.

A correspondent of one of the northern neutral papers speaking of the uncerimonious manner in which Mr. Giddings was treated holds this language:

"I am not an abolitionist—perhaps I ought rather to say I have not been till to day—but I do assure you, as the result of long experience and observation here especially as well as elsewhere, that my deep and clear conviction is, that slavery must give way, or the country and its institutions will be prostrated. There is now no other alternative.

A piece of mechanism called the rotory knitting Loom has been invented by an American Yankee of course, which it is said turns off a thousand pairs of stockings or gloves a day, and so simple and easy in its operations as to be kept in motion by a dog. If the inventor will only add an appendage to make the raw material the thing will be complete.

Another one has ascertained that it is electricity evolved in the boilers of steamboats that causes them to explode. He has contrived a simple method to conduct off this devouring fluid, and therefore it is to be hoped that the age of steamboat disasters has gone by.

A revolution is reported to have taken place in the Island of St. Domingo, and President Boyer is said to have been put to death.

CORRECTION.

In our last we made a foolish mistake, on the subjection of the weather. We said tropical autumn, instead of autumn in the temperate regions. In endeavouring to be brief we became foolish. Our friends we hope will forgive us;—as freely we do the printer or proof-reader of African Repository, for his some dozen mistakes which he has made in our remarks on the death of the late excellent Gov. Buchanan—published in his No. for January 15th.

UNITED STATES SLOOP OF WAR VANDALIA.

On the 18th inst. the U. States sloop of war Vandalia William Ramsay Esq. commander, arrived at this place. The Vandalia with two or three other U. States vessels it is said are to be stationed on the coast to protect American commerce, to prevent the prostitution of the American flag, and to give all allowed countenance and assistance to the American colonies. This great favour to us is the result of the good will of the President, and the Secretary of the Navy. We trust this is the begining of better days for us, and that our case will yet be a realization of the old adage that justice although slow is yet certain. No human laws or regulations are inflexible, even those of the Medes & Persians were not; as could be easily shown. Those who are indisposed to aid us may eternally harp upon the impediments which the constitution is supposed to throw in the way! and it may be a fine covert for indifference. But justice and humanity are paramount, with which all laws and institutions should be made to accord. The measure of assistance that would at once burst the chains that now bind us down in the deadly marshes of poverty and helplesness, and enable us to bound with new life and vigor would scarcely be felt by the United States, while it would be but wiping off a part off the score that justice has marked against them, and disprove the allegation that the only motive in sending us here was to get rid of us. We require means to develop the resources of the country, and protection while we are weak; and then voluntary emigration would flow in, in a ceaseless stream.

AWFUL OCCURRENCE.

In firing a salute on Thursday the 19th inst. from Fort Norriss, one of the guns not being properly sponged exploded while the men were in the act of ramming the cartridge home, and H. Whitfield and G. Thompson, had each his right arm blown entirely off just above the wrist. Thompson was blown some distance into the air and fell on his face on a ledge of rocks just outside the wall. The unfortunate suffers were immediately taken to the residence of Dr. Day the colonial physician, where they received all the attention that humanity and professional skill could afford them. Doctor D. was assisted in his surgical operations by Doctors Prout, and W. W. Davis.

Thompson has since died. Whitfield is said to be doing well.

Thirteen months ago two men under similar circumstances were similarly injured at the same Fort.

We trust the propper officers will look into this matter. If we cannot salute without annually losing some from our small number of men we had better fire no salutes at all. Thompson was a useful man, and we know no man in the colony of more moral worth than Whitfield. He has a family that looks up to him for support. How now shall he feed and clothe them? Thompson had no family.

Our letters from America are of the most cheering character in respect of Colonization and its progress. Mr. Gurly—that veteran colonizationist—than whom the cause has no abler nor more eloquent advocate—none better acquainted with the minutiæ of its history and the details of its operations—none more ardent in his zeal nor firmer in his attachment, has again resumed the chair of its correspondence. This augurs favorably, for we know of none better able to impart an impulse to the sluggish car. We rejoice in the success of colonization, as we do in the advance of (what is conventionally termed) abolitionism, and as we evermore shall in every enterprise that contemplates civil liberty and human happiness. Colonization is but another term for liberty to all those who avail themselves of its offers.

Slavery in all its forms—whither it binds its dupes with silken cords, or grinds its despised victims with iron yokes we abhor with all the intensity of perfect hatred; and we are therefore prepared to look with interest and to yield our best wishes to every ameliorating process. Our motto is "all men are free and equal." We could no more look with indifference on the slavery of another race than on the thraldom of our own. It would be enough for us to know that the enslaved is man, and irrespective of cast, color or clime, at once recognising a being robbed of inherent and inalienable rights he would call forth our tenderest sympathy.

The love of liberty is the strongest passion of our heart, and although we are not inclined to contemplate the length of desperation, nor the mode of combat to which as a last resort we might be urged, to reseat the goddess upon her throne & to maintain her in undisturbed authority, yet we would infinitely prefer the opposing interests would test their strength and their rights in the open field of manly and dispassionate discussion. Truth rejoices in the light, error seeks to conceal itself under the shades of obscurity—truth urges principles, error pleads prescription and immemorial usage. Truth has native strength and native majesty, error dazzles with a glare, & deters with the aspect of desperation, but its heart is rottenness. The advocates of liberty should proceed cautiously and draw the Hydra of slavery from his den, for the moment he is in the field he is overcome. In this however they may fail. Vice and punishment are inseperably connected, and a part of the punishment of the gigantic sin of slavery may consist in a determined resistance of all argument and entreaty, until argument and entreaty, retiring in despair, the field may be taken by another and a different power involving at once the oppressor with the oppressed in a common ruin.

The fiat has gone forth. The Genius of Universal Emancipation is uttering her high behest, & the Colonization, the abolition, the African civilization and other kindred societies are but so many echoes of the universal edict—they are but so many streams ultimately to combine and swell the tide of liberal opinion, deepening and widening as it rolls until slavery and oppression shall be swept from the earth,

A week or two since we received by the politeness of His Excellency Gov. Roberts, a package containing letters from our friends, Rev. J. B. Pinney and Rev. S. H. Cone, with a presentation from the latter gentleman of Jone's' Church History and various other minor publications and papers. The letters were dated somewhere in 1810 and of course the papers and other publications of no later date. We thank these gentlemen for their notice of us. The communications had sustained no physical injury as they had been safely ensconced from the time of their arrival in a case in the Society's store. We shall reply by the first conveyance and trust the tardiness of replication will not be imputed to remissness in us.

In our notice of the death of Rev. Mr. Canfield we uttered a sentiment which has called for h from a brother Editor a few editorial pleasantries. The remarks are so kind and courteous, and in so mild and conciliatory a spirit that not to notice them, would betray the vilest ingratitude. It would however be amusing to those who have the inclination, to analyze them; and it would be no difficult task to show in the same way of pleasantry that the friendly critique is by far more inconsistent with the history and doctrines of scripture, and the dealings of providence, than the sentiment on which they were intended to bear. But we have neither leisure nor disposition for angry controversy; we think it would be ill-placed here: but we fear there is abroad in the land a spirit, which, presuming upon its transcendental ability to bear down all opposition exceeding desirous to kindle the flame of sectarian disputation.

The sentiment we advanced, and which stirred up his editorial bile was in substance that, "The Lord frequently frustrates plans honestly and piously formed to advance his own glory that he may assert his sovereignty," and in amplifying our remark we used scripture phraseology. Our brother pounced upon the remark and expended a fund of editorial and philological energy to prove us mistaken, and ranged at once through the ancient world of gentiles and jews to teach us where the words were intended to apply. We feel grateful for the information, although we had heard of it before. Now it will hardly be supposed that we regarded the apostle when saying "who worketh all things after the council of his own will" to be referring immediately to Mr. C's death? The words we regarded as a fitting vehicle for the sentiment we were about to utter, without reference to their original application—a practice for which we have at least as high authority as any in the colony.

After penetrating the arcana of nature and ascertaining infallibly the cause of the death of missionaries &c. and publishing them so magisterially, if they should fail to keep soul and body together, they will have themselves to blame and surely: none will be more reprehensible than our brother Editor.

He intimates an intention of pursuing the subject further—should he do so and favour us with the result of his disquisitions, regardless of the spirit—whether hectoring & bullying, or kind and conciliatory, in which it may be done we shall give it a patient and respectful attention. But until in our judgement the bitterness and acrimony of newspaper controversy can be of service to us here, we shall leave the discussion entirely to him, which we have no doubt he will conduct with all the ability, meekness and courtesy which mark his first effusion.

We are obliged for want of room to defer two obituary notices.

They will appear in our next.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

A YANKEE SERMON.—My respected Hearers.—The difference that exists between men of the present day is not so great as that between men and monkeys, by a long chalk. I consider that man to be a gentleman who has in his heart the true principles of honor and integrity—I don't care whether or not he be shod, shaven, shorn, or skirted; and I consider that gentleman to be a man, whose interior recommendations correspond with the niceness of his outside arrangements. But virtue, vice, concient, corruption, integrity, and confirmed rascality, have of late, become so confounded together, under the garb of pretended piety and a whole pair of breeches, that it is difficult to determine the man from the monster. Ancient Esau, the favourite of his blind father, was a hairy man; yet his cunning and jealous brother contrived to dress himself in 'coon skins, to pass for Esau in the presence of the unsuspecting old gentleman; but, let me tell yon, my friends, that if a scoundrel thinks a suit of good clothes and a false collar of religion are going to pass him safely within the walls of salvation, he will find himself as much deceived as the philosopher who undertook to amalgamate moonshine with metaphysics. My dear friends, when I see man braving the bitter blasts of poverty, with Christian like fortitude and without a murmur who had rather pick his precarious food from among the thorns of penury, and subject himself to the contumely of the proud, than dishonestly trespass upon the fields of wealth and plenty—I say, that man's a man for all of that; and when I see an individual, rolling in affluence, revelling in the sweets of luxury, and at the same time robbing the widow of her mite, and snatching the bread from the mouth of poor orphans—I say, that gentleman's no gentleman, no-how you can fix it. The world, dear friends, is growing corrupt, and more corrupt as each revolving year rolls round. Vice and venality are progressing with the march of intellect and refinement; and you might as well attempt to extinguish the fires of endless torment with a schoolboy's squirt gun as to prevent their ravages. Everybody is a gentleman who has money at his controul—everybody is a man who will allow himself to be robbed—and everybody is a loafer whose coat has been worn thread bare by industry. But, my hearers, act well your parts, as Mr. Pope says, for there all the honour lies; and though the world should not grant it, you will still have the gratification of knowing that you hold a mortgage upon the good-will and respect of your fellow-men.

ANECDOTES.

HITTING A GOOSE.—"Put that away, Jim; you don't know anything about a gun." "Why, yes I do; the first time I shot, I liked to killed a goose." "You must have stood at the wrong end of the gun," was the reply.

HARD WRITING.—An Irishman wrote as follows to his friend, during the rebellion of '98.

"To give you some idea of the state of the country at present, I shall only say, that I am writing with a sword in one hand, and a pistol in the other.

SATISFACTORY DEFINITION.—A little girl asked her sister "What was Chaos, that Papa read about?" The older child replied, "Why, it is a great pile of nothing, and no place to put it in."

EMPHASIS.—A writer on English grammar gives the following example of wrong emphasis;—A clergyman, on reading the 27th verse of the eighteenth chapter of the first book of Kings, generally placed the emphasis on the words denoted by italics. "And he spake to his sons, saying, saddle me, the ass, and they saddled him.

DRIVING AND CALLING.—"Ho, neighbor! how is it that you are all in a reeking sweat this cold snowy morning?" "I have been hard at work, driving my sheep under shelter," "Have you succeeded?" "No. The harder I drove, and the louder I shouted, the more determined they were not to enter. I have provided for them a warm, dry shed and plenty of good food, but the foolish creatures prefer to remain out in the wind and snow." "I advise you the next time to call your sheep, instead of driving them."

LORD MORPETH.—When this gentleman visited the almshouse, in Philadelphia, considerable anxiety was manifested to obtain a sight of the distinguished stranger. After he had departed, a little boy, who was present, remarked to his mother that "he did not know there were two Lords—he thought there was but one, who lived up in the sky.

WOMAN'S AFFECTION.—The following exquisite anecdote, illustrative of woman's undying affection, is from a late work published in Great Britian, styled "The English Maiden." "Sir Robert Barclay, who commanded the British squadron in the battle of Lake Erie, was horribly mutilated by the wounds he received in the action, having lost his right arm and one of his legs. Previously to his leaving England he was engaged to a young lady, to whom he was tenderly attached. Feeling acutely on his return that he was a mere wreck, he sent a friend to the lady, informing her of his mutilated condition, and generously offering to release her from her engagement.

"Tell him," replied the noble girl, "that I will joyfully marry him, if he only has enough body to hold his soul!"

ON BACKBITING.

The word explains itself better than most words do. It gives you the idea of one who comes behind another and inflicts a wound, from which he cannot defend himself because the approach of the enemy is unseen, and he may also hide himself before the injured party can turn round. Thus the sufferer feels the effect of the wound without being able to discover how, or from what quarter, or with what assistance the wound is given. Among the solemn denunciations of the law it is written, 'Cursed is he that smiteth his neighbour secretly;' and backbiting is the secret blow which the tongue can sometimes give more fatally than the hand. I should say that backbiting includes every remark likely to lower the person spoken of in the opinion of others, when that person is absent—such as the representation of any story that we may have heard respecting him, or any unfavourable constructions that we may ourselves have put upon his words and actions. Or even supposing real faults in both to have come under our observation, still to repeat them to others, instead of telling him of them in the spirit of love and faithfulness, is also backbiting. And let us remember, that nothing so rouses and seems to justify the pride of the heart as being told of ungenerous things having been uttered concerning us to others. I doubt whether a single fault was ever cured in any person by means of backbiting, while many have been occasioned by it. He who hears that he has been so treated will become mistrustful of others, and be exposed to one of two great snares—either he will suffer that anxiety concerning the opinions of others which is a dangerous "fear of man," and above which the Christian ought to rise, or else he will be provoked into an unbecoming contempt of what others may think about him, and so neglect the command to 'abstain from every appearance of evil,' and not to let his good be evil spoken of. As an individual, the true Christian will count it a small matter to be judged of man's judgement; but as a member of Christ's body, the Church, he ought to be very careful that no offence be given through him to the other members, lest he grieve the glorious Head and cause his holy name to be blasphemed among his enemies.—Charlotte Elizabeth.

AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

THE TREATY below is one of such great interest, and at present, a matter of such animated discussion, that we are certain our readers will be glad to see it entire.

THE QUINTUPLE TREATY.

Signed at London, Dec. 20, 1841.

ART. 1. Their majesties the Emperor of Austria, king of Hungary and Bohemia, the king of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russians, engage to prohibit all trade in slaves, either by their respective subjects, or under their respective flags, or by means of capital belonging to their respective subjects, and to declare such traffic piracy. Their majesties further declare, that any vessel which may attempt to carry on the slave trade shall, by the fact alone, lose all right to the protection of their flag,

ART. II. In order more completely to accomplish the object of the present treaty, the high contracting parties agree by common consent, that those of their ships of war which shall be provided with special warrants and orders, prepared according to the forms of the annex A of the present treaty, may search every merchant vessel belonging to any one of the high contracting parties which shall, on reasonable grounds, be suspected of being engaged in the traffic in slaves, or of having been fitted out for that purpose, or of having been engaged in the traffic during the voyage in which she shall have been met with by the said cruisers; and that such cruisers may detain, and send, or carry away such vessels in order that they may be brought to trial in the manner hereafter agreed upon.

Nevertheless, the abovementioned right of searching the merchant vessel of any one or the other of the high contracting parties shall be exercised only by ships of war whose commanders shall have the rank of captain or that of lieutenant in the royal or imperial navy, unless the command shall, by reason of death or otherwise, have devolved upon an officer of inferior rank The commander of such ship of war shall be furnished with warrants according to the form annexed to the present treaty, under letter A.

The said mutual right of search shall not be exercised within the Mediterranean sea. Moreover, the space within which the exercise of the said right shall be confined shall be bounded, on the north, by the 32d parallel of north latitude: on the west, by the eastern coast of America, from the point where the 32d parallel of north latitude strikes that coast, down to the 45th parallel of south latitude: on the south, by the 45th parallel of south latitude, from the point where that parallel strikes the eastern coast of America to the 80th degree of longitude east from the meridian of Greenwich: and on the east, by the same degree of longitude, from the point where it is intersected by the 45th parallel of south latitude up to the coast of India.

ART. III. Each of the high contracting parties which may choose to employ cruisers for the suppression of the slave trade, and to exercise the mutual right of search, reserves to itself to fix, according to its own convenience, the number of the ships of war which shall be employed on the service stipulated in the second article of the present treaty, as well as the stations on which the said ships shall cruise.

The names of the ships appointed for this purpose, and those of their commanders, shall be communicated by each of the high contracting parties to the others; and they shall reciprocally apprise each other every time that a cruiser shall be placed on a station, or shall be recalled thence, in order that the necessary warrants may be delivered by the governments authorising the search, and returned to those governments by the government which has received them, when those warrants shall no longer be necessary for the execution of the present treaty.

ART. IV. Immediately after the government which employs the cruisers shall have notified to the government which is to authorize the search the number and the names of the cruisers which it intends to employ, the warrants authorising the search shall be made out according to the form annexed to the present treaty, under letter A, and shall be delivered by the government which authorises the search to the government which employs the cruisers.

In no case shall the mutual right of search be exercised upon the ships of war of the contracting parties.

The high contracting parties shall agree upon a particular signal, to be used exclusively by those cruisers which shall be invested with the right of search.

ART. V. The cruisers of the high contracting parties authorised to exercise the right of search and detention in execution of the present treaty shall conform themselves strictly to the instructions annexed to the said treaty, under letter B, in all that relates to the formalities of the search and of the detention, as well as to the measures to be taken, in order that the vessels suspected of having been employed in the traffic may be delivered over to the competent tribunals.

The high contracting parties reserve to themselves the right of making in these instructions by common consent, such alterations as circumstances may render necessary.

The cruisers of the high contracting parties shall mutually afford to each other assistance in all cases when it may be useful that they should act in concert.

ART. VI. Whenever a merchant vessel, sailing under the flag of one of the high contracting parties, shall have been detained by a cruiser of the other, duly authorised to that effect, conformably to the provisions of the present treaty, such merchant vessel, as well as the master, the crew, the cargo, and the slaves who may be on board, shall be brought into such place as the high contracting parties shall have respectively designated for that purpose, and they shall be delivered over to the authorities appointed with that view by the government within whose possession such place is situated, in order that proceedings may be had with respect to them before the competent tribunals in the manner hereafter specified.

When the commander of the cruiser shall not think fit to undertake himself the bringing in and the delivery up of the detained vessel, he shall intrust that duty to an officer of the rank of lieutenant in the royal or imperial navy, or at least to the officer who shall at the time be third in authority on board the detaining ship.

ART. VII. If the commander of a cruiser of one of the high contracting parties should have reason to suspect that a merchant vessel sailing under the convoy of, or in company with, a ship of war of one of the other contracting parties, has been engaged in the slave trade, or has been fitted out for that trade, he shall make known his suspicions to the commander of the ship of war, who shall proceed alone to search the suspected vessel; and in case the last mentioned commander should ascertain that the suspicion is well founded, he shall cause the vessel, as well as the master, the crew, the cargo, and the slaves who may be on board, to be taken into a port belonging to the nation of the detained vessel, to be there proceeded against before the competent tribunals, in the manner hereafter directed.

ART. VIII. As soon as a merchant vessel detained, and sent in for adjudication, shall arrive at the port to which she is to be carried in conformity with annex B, to the present treaty, the commander of the cruiser which shall have detained her, or the officer appointed to bring her in, shall deliver to the authorities appointed for that purpose a copy, signed by himself, of all the lists, declarations, and other documents specified in the instructions annexed to the present treaty, under letter B; and the said authorities shall proceed, in consequence, to the search of the detained vessel, and of her cargo as also to an inspection of her crew, and of the slaves who may be on board, after having previously given notice of the time of such search and inspection to the commander of the cruiser, or to the officer who shall have brought in the vessel, in order that he, or some person whom he may appoint to represent him, may be present thereat.

A minute of these proceedings shall be drawn up in duplicate, which shall be signed by the persons who shall have taken part in, or who shall have been present at, the same; and one of these documents shall be delivered to the commander of the cruiser, or to the officer appointed by him to bring in the detained vessel.

ART. IX. Every merchant vessel of any one or other of the five nations, which shall be searched and detained in virtue of the provisions of the present treaty, shall, unless proof be given to the contrary, be deemed to have been engaged in the slave trade, or to have been fitted out for that traffic, if in the fitting, in the equipment, or on board the said vessel during the voyage in which she was detained, there shall be found to have been one of the articles hereafter specified, that is to say—

1. Hatches with open gratings, instead of the close hatches which are used in merchant vessels.

2. Divisions or bulk-heads, in the hold or on deck, in greater number than is necessary for vessels engaged in lawful trade.

3. Spare plank fitted for being laid down as a second slave-deck.

4. Shackles, bolts or handcuffs.

5. A larger quantity of water, in casks, or in tanks, than is requisite for the consumption of the crew of such merchant vessel.

6. An extraordinary number of water casks, or of other receptacles for holding liquid, unless the master shall produce a certificate from the custom-house at the place from which he cleared outward, stating that sufficient security had been given by the owners of such vessel that such extra number of casks or of other receptacles should only be used to hold palm-oil or for other purposes of lawful commerce.

7. A greater quantity of mess-tubs or kids than are requisite for the use of the crew of such merchant vessel.

8. A boiler, or other cooking apparatus, of an unusual size, and larger, or capable of being made larger, than requisite for the use of the crew of such merchant vessel; or more than one boiler, or other cooking apparatus, of the ordinary size.

9. An extraordinary quantity of rice of the flour of Brazill manioc, or cassado, commonly called farina, or of maize, or of Indian corn, or of any other article of food whatever, beyond the probable wants of the crew; unless such quantity of rice, farina, maize, Indian corn, or any other article of food, should be entered on the manifest, as forming a part of the trading cargo of the vessel.

10. A quantity of mats or matting greater than is necessary for the use of such merchant vessel, unless such mats or matting be entered on the manifest as forming part of the cargo.

If it is established that one or more of the articles above specified are on board, or have been on board during the voyage in which the vessel was captured, that fact shall be considered as prima facie evidence that the vessel was employed in the traffic; she shall in consequence be condemned, and declared lawful prize, unless the master or the owners shall furnish clear and incontrovertible evidence, proving to the satisfaction of the tribunal that at the time of her detention or capture the vessel was employed in a lawful undertaking; and that such of the different articles above specified as were found on board at the time of detention, or which might have been embarked during the voyage on which she was engaged when she was captured, were indispensable for the accomplishment of the lawful object of her voyage.

ART. X. Proceedings shall be immediately taken against the vessel detained, as above stated, her master, her crew, and her cargo, before the competent tribunals of the country, to which she belongs; and they shall be tried and adjudged according to the established forms and laws in force in that country; and if it results from the proceedings that the said vessel was employed in the slave trade, or fitted out for that traffic, the vessel, her fittings, and her cargo of merchandise, shall be confiscated; and the master, the crew, and their accomplices, shall be dealt with conformably to the laws by which they shall have been tried.

In case of confiscation, the proceeds of the sale of the aforesaid vessel shall, within the space of six months, reckoning from the date of the sale, be placed at the disposal of the government of the country to which the ship which made the capture belongs, in order to be employed in conformity with the laws of that country.

ART. XI. If any one of the articles specified in article IX of the present treaty is found on board a merchant vessel, or if it is proved to have been on board of her during the voyage in which she was captured, no compensation for losses, damages, or expenses, consequent upon the detention of such vessel, shall in any case be granted, either to the master, or to the owner, or to any other person interested in the equipment or in the lading, even though a sentence of condemnation should not have been pronounced against the vessel, as a consequence of her detention.

ART. XII. In all cases in which a vessel shall have been detained in conformity with the present treaty, as having been employed in the slave trade, or fitted out for that traffic, and shall, in consequence, have been tried and confiscated, the government of the cruiser which shall have made the capture, or the government whose tribunal shall have condemned the vessel may purchase the condemned vessel for the service of its royal navy, at a price fixed by a competent person, selected for that purpose by the said tribunal. The government whose cruiser shall have made the capture shall have a right of preference in the purchase of the vessel. But if the condemned vessel should not be purchased in the manner above pointed out, she shall be wholly broken up immediately after the sentence of confiscation, and sold in separate portions after having been broken up.

ART. XIII. When by the sentence of the competent tribunal it shall have been ascertained that a merchant vessel detained in virtue of the present treaty was not engaged in the slave trade, and was not fitted out for that traffic, she shall be restored to the lawful owner or owners. And if, in the course of the proceedings, it shall have been proved that the vessel was searched and detained illegally, or without sufficient cause of suspicion; or that the search and dentention were attended with abuse or vexation, the commander of the cruiser or the officer who shall have boarded the said vessel, or the officers who shall have been intrusted with bringing her in, and under whose authority, according to the nature of the case, the abuse or vexation shall have occurred shall be liable in costs and damages to the masters and the owners of the vessel and of the cargo.

These costs and damages may be awarded by the tribunal before which the proceedings against the detained vessel, her master, crew, and cargo, shall have been instituted; and the government of the country to which the officer who shall have given occasion for such award shall belong, shall pay the amount of the said costs and damages within the period of six months from the date of the sentence, when the sentence shall have been pronounced by a tribunal sitting in Europe; & within the period of one year when the trial shall have taken place out of Europe.

ART. XIV. When in the search or detention of a merchant vessel effected in virtue of the present treaty any abuse or vexation shall have been committed, and when the vessel shall not have been delivered over to the jurisdiction of her own nation, the master shall make a declaration upon oath of the abuses or vexation of which he shall have to complain, as well as of the costs and damages to which he shall lay claim; and such declaration shall be made by him before the competent authorities of the first port of his own country at which he shall arrive, or before the consular agent of his own nation at a foreign port, if the vessel shall in the first instance touch at a foreign port where there is such an agent.

This declaration shall be verified by means of an examination upon oath of the principle persons amongst the crew or the passengers who shall have witnessed the search or detention; and a formal statement of the whole shall be drawn up, two copies whereof shall be delivered to the master, who shall forward one of them to his government, in support of his claim for costs and damages.

It is understood, that if any circumstances beyond control shall prevent the master from making his declaration, it may be made by the owner of the vessel, or by any other person interested in the equipment or in the lading of the vessel.

On a copy of the formal statement above mentioned being officially transmitted to it, the government of the country to which the officer to whom the abuses or vexations shall be imputed shall belong, shall forthwith institute an inquiry; and if the validity of the complaint shall be ascertained, that government shall cause to be paid to the master or the owner, or to any other person interested in the equipment or lading of the molested vessel, the amount of costs and damages which shall be due to him.

ART. XV. The high contracting parties engage reciprocally to communicate to each other, when asked to do so, and without expense, copies of the proceedings instituted, and of the judgments given, relative to vessels searched or detained in execution of the provisions of this treaty.

ART. XVI. The high contracting parties agree to insure the immediate freedom of all the slaves who shall be found on board vessels detained and condemned in virtue of the stipulations of the present treaty.

ART. XVII. The high contracting parties agree to invite the maritime powers of Europe, which have not yet concluded treaties for the abolition of the slave trade to accede to the present treaty.

ART. XVIII. The acts or instruments anexed to the present treaty, & which it is mutually agreed to consider as forming an integral part thereof, are the following.

A. Forms of warrants of authorization, and of orders for the guidance of the cruisers of each nation, in the searches and detentions to be made in virtue of the present treaty.

B. Instructions for the cruisers of the naval forces employed in virtue of the present treaty, for the suppresssion of the slave trade.

ART. XIX. The present treaty, consisting of nineteen articles, shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at London at the expiration of two months from this date, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty, in English and French, and have thereunto affixed the seal of their arms.

From the Christian Observer.

LORD BACON.

It will be interesting to the reader to look over the following scattered anecdotes relating to an extraordinary man, "over whose mighty mind and corrupt heart the Christian lingers with sorrow, the moralist with wonder, and the world at large with regret—a man whom it is now difficult to praise, yet whom, but for some lamentable weaknesses, it would have been almost as difficult not to idolize."

Lloyd says that 'he was a courtier from his cradle to the grave, sucking in experience with his milk, being inured to policy as early as to his grammar. When a boy, Queen Elizabeth took much notice of him, admired his ingenious answers, and, alluding to the post held by his father, used to style him familiarly her young Lord Keeper. She once inquired the age of the gifted boy, to which he replied readily, that 'he was two years younger than her majesty's happy reign.'

It was remarked by the famous Earl of Salisbury, that Raleigh was a good orator, though a bad writer—Northampton a good writer, though a bad orator—but that Bacon excelled in both. Howell, who must have often listened to his oratory, speaks of him as 'the eloquentest that was born in this isle.'

* * * *

His information on all sujects was astonishing. 'I have heard him,' says Osborne, in his Advice to his Son, 'entertain a country Lord in the proper terms relating to hawks and dogs; and at another time out-cant a London chirurgeon.' Of money, he said, it was, like manure, of no use till it was spread.

* * * *

How extraordinary and how humiliating to human nature must have been that scene, when the great philosopher stood a cringing suppliant to his peers, 'prostrating himself and sins,' craving pardon of God and his fellows, and promising to amend that life, which, apparently, but for such exposure, would have been transmitted to posterity as proud and faultless as his genius. When he delivered the great seal to the four peers who had been commissioned to receive it, 'it was the king's favor,' he said, 'that gave me this; and it is through my own fault that he has taken it away.' When the instrument was delivered to James, he muttered some words respecting his difficuly in selecting a successor—'As to my lawyers,' he said, 'they are all knaves.'

Bacon was apparently little distressed by his fall. Gondomar, the Spanish Ambassador, happening to encounter him immediately after that event, with equal bad taste and bad feeling, wished him, ironically, a merry Easter! 'And to you, signor,' replied Bacon, 'I wish a merry Pass-over!' The reply not only comprehended a wish that the ambassador were well out of the kingdom, but alluded to his supposed Jewish origin, the greatest insult which could have been offered to a Spaniard.

* * * *

The degradation of this wonderful genius, while it distressed the good and gratified the evil, could even afford merriment to the wretch punsters of the age. Alluding alike to his misconduct and his poverty, his new titles of Verulam and St. Albans were easily converted into Very-lame and St. Allbones.

* * * *

Wilson describes Lord Bacon as of a middling stature, his 'presence grave and comely;' but adds that he early wore the appearance of old age. Aubrey says 'he had a delicate, lively, hazel eye. Dr. Harvey told me it was like the eye of a viper.' The same writer relates one or two characteristic anecdotes of this extraordinary man. He was once watching some fishermen from the garden at York House, and offered them a certain sum for the results of their draught, which they refused, considering it insufficient. On drawing up their net, they found that it only contained two or three small fish. Lord Bacon told them they had better have accepted his offer. The men replied that they had hoped for better success. 'Hope,' said his lordship, 'is a good breakfast, but a bad supper.'

* * * *

When the Bishop of London cut down some fine trees at the Episcopal Palace at Fulham, Bacon told him that he was a good expounder of dark places.

When some person hinted to him that it was time to look about him, 'Sir,' was the reply, 'I do not look about me—I look above me.'

Queen Elizabeth, when on a visit to Lord Bacon at Redgrave, happened to make an observation on the small size of his house—'Madam,' he replied, 'my house is small; but it is you who have made me too great for it.'

King James, says Howell, once asked his opinion of a French Ambassador who had recently arrived, Bacon replied that he thought him a tall, well-looking man. 'But what do you think of his head-piece?' asked the king. 'Sir,' said Bacon, 'tall men are like houses of four or five stories, wherein, commonly, the uppermost room is worst furnished.' I do not know whether this was the French Ambassador, who told Lord Bacon, on his first introduction, that he had always compared him to an angel, of whom he had heard and read much, but had never seen. Bacon replied modestly, that 'if the charity of others compared him to an angel, his own infirmities told him that he was a man.' If Bacon can at all be compared to an angel, it must certainly be a fallen one.

* * * *

Aubrey informs us, on the authority of Thomas Hobbes, that Bacon owed his death to his indiscreet eagerness in pursuing a philosophical experiment. He happened to be taking the air in his coach near Highgate, when an idea came into his head that flesh might be preserved in snow as well as in salt. The snow at the time lying thick on the ground, he resolved to make the experiment; but 'staid so long in doing it,' that he was seized with a shivering fit, and was obliged to be carried to Lord Arundel's house at Highgate. Unfortunately he was placed in a damp bed, by which his disorder was so much aggravated that he died in a few days.

"Dick, what are you doing there?" "Imbibing the liquid contained in this ligenous cylinder."—"What?" "Sucking cider out of this barrel."

How supperior is nature to art! A part of nature's jet black eyes, when properly brought to a focus, have always received our admiration; but an artificial black eye is abominable.

A CALCULATION.—"There were three hours and a half lost by you this morning," said a superintendent to a tardy teacher. "I was only half an hour too late," he replied. "True, but there were seven scholars waiting for you."

The latest expression for "caper sauce" is Elssler impudence."

"I was terribly put out about it," as the fellow remarked who was kicked down stairs for making a row.

We like this kind of advice—"Be extremely careful to mind two things in this beautiful world—first, your own business—secondly, let other people's alone."

"You are a queer chicken," said the hen to a hawk which she had hatched a mong her brood.—"I know I am," said the hawk, "but that is no reason why I should be hen-peckked."—[N. Y. Mercury.

HINT FOR DANDIES.

Some sensible individual talks thus;—I am not yet forty, but I am old enough to have left off wearing tight boots. Besides, I have a theory of my own on this subject. I don't think small, straight, sharp-toed, squeezed up feet are handsome. They are not what Nature intended.—The fore part of the foot should be wide. The pedestal constructed to bear the magnificent, upright form of man should have breadth sufficient for the purpose. The foot of a Roman or a Greek had more room to perform its constant and laborious avocation. There is in the modern foot or shoe a savour of Chinese stupidity

"MATHEMATICAL WIND."

The late Professor Vince, one morning, (several trees having been blown down the night previous) meeting a friend in the walks of St. John's College, Cambridge, was accosted with, "How d'ye do, sir; quite a blustering wind this."—"Yes," answered Vince, "it is a rare mathematical wind." "Mathematical wind!" exclaimed the other; "how so?" "Why," replied Vince, "it has extracted a great many roots?"

A PERFECT ARTIST, EVEN IN HIS OWN DESPITE.

A warm partisan of——was eulogising his friend in most unmeasured terms, and wound up with the following praise:

"Sir, art is so innate in him that if he poke the fire there is immediately a red hot landscape, and I have seen him break several windows, every fracture in which was a striking profile portrait!"

REMEDIES.—For sea sickness, stay at home.

For drunkenness, drink cold water.

To keep out of jail, get out of debt and keep out.

PECULIAR ADVANTAGES.—In an advertisement eulogizing the peculiar advantages of an hospital in London, it is stated that there are 340 beds, and "post mortem examinations are held nearly every day."

COMMUNICATIONS.

The following letter was handed to us by His Excellency, for insertion in the "Herald."—ED.

GOVERNOR J. J. ROBERTS.

SIR:—The officers and crew of the Vandalia have raised by subscription the sum of seventy-eight dollars and twenty-five cents, ($78 25,) for the benefit of the men, who were wounded while returning a salute to this ship. One of them having unfortunately since died, it is the wish of the subscribers that the whole may be appropriated to the use of the survivor, and should he die also, then that it shall go to his family; as we understand that the other has left no near relation.

It is desired that you will take charge of the money, and see it properly disposed of.

I am very respectfully &c.

DANL. S. GREEN.
In behalf of the subscribers.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE.
Monrovia September 1st, 1842.

SIR:—I have just received information, that reports unfavourable to the colony—with regard to the conduct of the colonists—at the time of the unfortunate wreck of your vessel (the Niger) has reached the United States.

In justice to myself and a large portion of the community—without any wish to screen those whose conduct may have entitled them to censure—I beg that you will do me the favour to state in plain and open language, all the circumstances connected with your difficulties at that time—State if you please the amount and extent of depredation committed by colonists or natives—whether the authorities, as soon as your situation was made known to them, rendered you such assistance and protection as required for the better security of your property &c. &c. with any further suggestion you may think proper to make.

Yours respectfully,
J. J. ROBERTS Governor.

To Capt. JAMES L. MERRETT.

Monrovia September 1st, 1842.

To GOVERNOR J. J. ROBERTS.

SIR:—I am very sorry that any reports unfavourable to this colony should have been circulated.

I do not at this time recollect the amount of my losses, but they were considerable; neither can I tell whether the depredations were commited by natives or colonists or the amount of depredation committed by either party—neither do I now recollect many circumstances connected with my affairs at the time of the "Niger's" loss.

The colonists who were indicted for having stolen part of the property from the "Niger" were acquitted consequently I must suppose they were not guilty. As regards the protection and assistance I received from the authorities, I believe they rendered me every assistance in their power.

From many of the colonists I received the most energetic assistance in saving a portion of my cargo, and also in many kindnesses received afterwards from them.

I am Sir, your obdt. sevt.
JAMES L. MERRETT.
Com. of brig Nestor.

GOVERNOR ROBERTS.
Cape Mesurado.

DEAR SIR:—Captain Merrett has reported to us your great attention and kindness at the period of the unfortunate loss of our barque Niger.

May we request your acceptance of a couple of cheeses, and two jars of tripe which we understand are esteemed in your colony, and with many thanks to you, we remain Dear Sir.

Yours very truly.

LADIES LIBERIA HIGH SCHOOL, FACTORY ISLAND.

Dr. Johnson respectfully informs the citizens of Liberia, that this institution is now open for the reception of pupils. Its general plan being designed to secure to the public the most efficient means of education at a moderate expense, arrangements have been made for the pupils to board with the principal in the school house, which is very large, and well adapted to the purpose. A small farm is attached to the school, which will be furnished with stock, team, and the implements of improved agriculture, and by these means, with little labour, the pupils may produce nearly all the provisions necessary for the use of the school.

The course of instruction will be chiefly confined to the branches of a thorough english education.

The year is divided into two terms of twenty-four weeks each, commencing on the first Tuesdays of January and July, and there will be a public examination every three months.

The charge for board is three dollars per month, payable in advance, in provisions, or cash, and while these terms are continued, tuition will be without any charge. School books will be furnished to the pupils at cost.

W. JOHNSON,
Principal.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, SEPT. 21, 1842.

We have received and read with much pleasure "Gurley's Mission to England." It contains much valuable information, and shows what we have long known, and recently explicitly stated, to wit, a deplorable ignorance on the part of English philanthropists of our true character and position. The good people of England regard these settlements American colonies; and they required Mr. Gurley to apprize them of the "fact that with the government the Colonization Society" and of course the colonies, "had no direct connection."

We stated in an article not long since, that any application by the Society to foreign governments to concede to us territorial or national rights would be nugatory—rendered so—first by the position of the Society, and secondly by the frigid neutrality which the United States government has maintained towards us. The result of Mr. G's. interview with that eminent statesman and philanthropist lord John Russell, fully justifies our assertion. We quote Mr. Gurley's words. "He" lord John Russell "indicated that in regard to the limits of territory it would be desirable that some proposition should come from the United States Government, although I fully explained to him the fact, that with the government the Colonization Society had no direct connection."

The British Government does not, that we have ever heard, claim any territory nearer us on the north than Sierra-Leone, nor on the south to the windward of Cape Palmas. It could scarcely be required to concede to us that, to which it never laid claim, and therefore we are at liberty to regard the requisition as looking to stipulations not to purchase within certain limits, and to a guaranty from disturbance by British traders and adventurers. Such an arrangement is not only desirable, but absolutely indispensable to our future peace and extension. We however, entertain no fears from the English people on this score. Our confidence in their magnanimity and philanthropy is too strong to allow us to indulge for a single moment the idea, that they would for the sake of a few acres of land, or for the commerce which the possession of them would afford, adopt any course that would injure a few miserable outcasts, seeking an asylum from oppression on these distant shores. In the stipulations and guaranty alluded to, there are no important principles involved which they would be required to abandon. It might however involve a small sacrifice; but it would be such a sacrifice as a lofty magnanimity delights to make on the altar of beseeching humanity. Our condition is one of no ordinary character. We are a foundling upon the great common of the world. Our past history and present condition, and our last hope should be every where proclaimed, and we are in favour of pouring the tale of our woes in the ears of all who will listen to us; and so sure as commisseration and sympathy yet linger in the human breast, will we obtain all we can reasonably expect. But who is to make known our wants? This is a subject on which there is a diversity of opinion, but with all due deference to those who differ from us, we think none can be so eloquent as those who are personally concerned.

But while we entertain no apprehension of being immoderately compressed in our territorial limits, by the action of the British government, we are not free from fear of annoyance and vexatious disputes on account of the conduct of some of its subjects. Nor from British subjects alone may disputes hereafter arise unless measures are taken by their respective governments to prevent them. Some American traders and recently we believe the French are adopting a course, which must at no distant day become the source of serious misunderstanding between them and us. We allude to their pretended purchase of land in our vicinity for the purpose of trading. In some instances the land thus claimed are parts of tracts ceded to the colony by the Kings and Chiefs in solemn palaver, & in every instance to which we refer, in the intermediate distance between the settlements. They set up the same kind of claim to these tracts which a regularly organized community would. They claim the privlege not only of controlling all who come within in their "dominion" but of excluding all who in their opinion would prejudice their interest. What is their object? Not to raise the debased character of the natives—not to teach them the arts and habits of civilized life preparatory to their absorption in a civilized and christian community—not to enlighten their minds, and gradually draw them away from their vices and degrading superstitions. This in their opinion would defeat the only object that brought them to the coast—and that is the collection of the greatest possible quantity of produce, in the shortest possible time and at the lowest possible rate; and in accordance with this, the motto generally is—the more ignorant the natives the better for us. Hence as a general thing (for there are some honorable exceptions) there is no class of men to whom they are more averse than missionaries and teachers.

It must be evident at the very first glance that with neighbors whose opinions and object are so widely different from ours—opinions and object which cannot fail to lead to the adoption of conflicting measures, we cannot long remain on terms of friendship. On this subject however we are not left to the uncertainty of conjecture or inference. We know from what has past, that the meanest and basest arts have been resorted to,

to force us into an unfriendly collision with the savages. Attempts have been made to cut off our trade by reducing the price of imports, and raising that of exports, & by pouncing upon the most prominent places of traffic. Attempts have also been made to exasperate the natives against us by representing us as the destroyers of their idol, the slave trade, and by assuring them that our ultimate object is to subvert by force all their customs and usages—to cut down all their devil-bushes and to bring them nolens volens under such laws as we may choose to make for them. These however are evils of minor importance which it would require no great effort to remedy. There are still greater evils which cannot fail to grow out of this system, that demand attention. Our stay here is not intended to be merely temporary—nor is commerce our chief object at the present time. In the absence of any other place where we may rest the sole of our weary feet, we have adopted this as our home—the home of our posterity and the asylum of such of our persecuted race as shall be so fortunate as to escape from the land of degradation. Our object is to form a regular community to be gradually matured into a nation. It is manifest that the most ready way of effecting this object is, by elevating the character, and enlightening the minds of the natives preparatory to incorporation in the body politic to swell our number and augment our strength. Immeasurable tracts of fertile land densely covered with primitive forests, require to be cleared and brought into cultivation & other exhaustless sources of national wealth and greatness require to be developed, and the greater the number of intelligent minds and brawny hands that are brought to bear upon them, the sooner will they be explored and brought into service. Hence it follows that the true interest of the colonists and natives are identically the same; and it should be one among our first objects to convince them of the fact—which if it should in all future similar instances be kept in view, and suffered to exert its proper influence, will forever silence the sad complaint so often heard, that the artless unsophisticated lords of the soil are doomed to melt away before the face of their civilized visitor like the forests under the strokes of his axe. It is important then, to the interests of both ourselves and the natives that we should, in order to effect our object which is their happiness, no less than our own, bring them as far as possible under our immediate influence. This is utterly impossible, while there are around us and almost within our doors, those who with perfect impunity foster their prejudices, pander to their vicious appetites, encourage their superstitions & inflame their jealousy of us & our designs. It should not be concealed that they look with suspicion upon the colony, and a word from a "white man" (a generic term for all classes colors and conditions enveloped in clothing) justificative of their unfounded jealousy, is to them "confirmation strong as proof of holy writ." There can be no doubt that the debased character of the native is a great auxiliary to the transient trader, and there can be no more doubt that the residence of an unprincipled irresponsible trader in our vicinity goes far to neutralize effort to tame and civilize the savages.

If the pretensions of these claimants are valid, we shall have the singular spectacle, not of an Imperium in imperio but of Imperia in imperio, for there are some half a dozen claimants to as many different portions of sea-coast between this and Sinoe!! They claim the right to admit and expel whom they please—to order you off peremptorily should you by any accident find yourself within their domain, and to fire on you before they have given you time to obey the order. Indeed they are perfect autocrats—mimick

———Monarchs of all they survey,
Whose right there's none to dispute,
From their centre all round to the sea,
They are lords of the fowl and the brute.

They demand perfect exemption from control and responsibility within their purchased territory, which they say is part and parcel of the empire to which they belong, and the right not only to excite and foster the jealousy of the natives, but to arm them against us whenever they think proper.

By the jealous and selfish interference of these persons we have been in more than one instance defeated in our attenpts to form friendly relations with the natives. By secretly misrepresenting our designs they have effectually closed the natives' ear, and caused them to decline all negotiation. Themselves they represent as the "proper friend of country man," and in proof of the same not only applaud and encourage his habits and superstitions, but in some instances descend to adopt them. They find it no difficult task to persuade them that those who would have them lay aside their heathenish customs and adopt the manners and habits of civilized life are their enemies, and that the destruction of the slave trade is attributable to the colony.

These irresponsible trading establishments must render our maritime and commercial regulations a perfect nullity; and by the facility they offer for the introduction of merchandize free of duty, effectually defeat all our attempts to raise a revenue.

It has been argued that one individual has as much right to purchase land as another—that these traders having purchased of the natives must be allowed to establish any system or pursue any course necessary to the accomplishment of their object. The question however is not one between individuals, but between an individual and communities—summarily, whether the pecuniary interset of one individual is to be put in the balance against the temporal and spiritual well-being of numerous communities and of their rising progeny—Whether a few puncheons of Oil or tuns of Camwood are to weigh against the civilization of these benighted heathen, and whether for the sake of enriching one or a dozen, the last hope of the outcasts is to be extinguished in despair. He who takes any lower view of the question falls short of its full perception. It is an important subject, involving as we said before our present peace and future prosperity. It is not however an intricate question—it involves no nice distinctions—no important principles the abandonment of which would leave a stain upon the fame of any nation. Important principles it certainly does involve—the eternal principles of justice and humanity in their broadest and most extended sense. We are therefore willing to leave the question to be decided by those to whom we may appeal, confident that wherever all the circumstances of the case are made known, they will awaken the emotions of sympathy, and call forth the decision of justice.

We repose too firmly on the benevolence of those hearts in America and Europe that thrilled at the death-cry of the expiring Poles—that leaped for joy at the emancipation of the long oppressed Greeks—that interposed the arm of protection for the descendants of Israel in Syria, and raised the beseeching voice for the Baptists in Germany—to doubt for a moment that our appeal will be in vain.

We are not very tenacious of honor. But if even the———should have his due, we will be allowed on some occasions to contend for ours. We are led to this remark by finding in the United States Gazette some extracts from the "Herald" credited to the "Luminary." We have been so much blamed for not forwarding the Herald regularly, that we are unwilling to lose the credit of a solitary number which in its roving should reach in safety. We however protest against the accusation. We have regularly done all that can be required of us, which is to pack up the papers and deliver them to the Captain. We cannot be responsible for their safe delivery.

Twenty three jurors were fined in New York, twenty five dollars each not long ago, for non attendance at the quarter sessions.

The season is at last relenting, and our small craft are beginning "to show their nose" at sea.

A hugh Elephant is said to be paying regular but unwelcome visits to the settlement at Millsburg. His visits are alike unwelcome to the inhabitants and destructive to the farms. Is his hide impervious to ball? We are found of curiosities, and therefore would like if he should be captured to record the present of his tusks. Will our friends look to this?

Remarkable.—A Gentleman in New York is said to be so absent as to be very frequently reduced to ascertain his home from the directory. This absence is very prevalent especially among those whose names are scored by editors. The most of our subscribers are afflicted with the malady, or at least they afflict us with its consequences. Their memory extends only to receiving and reading the paper—beyond, all is dark oblivion. They never awake to the recollection of having agreed to pay for it.

On our second page our readers will find a correspondence between Governor Roberts & Captain Merrett in relation to certain reports of depredations said to have been committed on the goods saved from the wreck of the Niger. These reports have reached America; whether they were carried by Captain Ward of Salem, is not certain; but one thing is certain, that while he was on the coast he made no scruple to charge theft on the occasion referred to, upon every person in this settlement. We care very little for his aspersions. We have no doubt that there was some pilfering of small articles; and if Captain Ward will charge his memory and consult his experience he will, we are confident, be fully convinced there were some secret appropriations of small things. We are happy that Captain Merrett has vindicated the character of the colonists from these malignant aspersions. There is also a card from the owners of the Vessel to Governnor Roberts showing that Captain Merrett when at home did not report all the colonists as concerned in robbing him.

CORRECTION.

In our last through mistake we stated that eighty six of the immigrants by the "Mariposa" were emancipated by a gentleman in Tennesee. We take pleasure in rectifying the error. This act of justice and benevolence is the deed of John Mc. Donogh Esq. of Louisiana. There were 81 instead of 86 immigrants.

We have just learned with much pain and regret that the people of Little Cape Mount have our friend King Ben of Digby, in confinement. We mentioned some time ago, that the leopards and other wild beasts were making fearful ravages upon the sparse population of the Dey and Gorah countries. The people have at length found out that King Ben whenever he has any ends to serve, metamarphoses himself or some of his people into leopards, and thus destroys the hapless wights as they pass along the country. It is said they intend to kill him.

It is whispered among the knowing ones that Gov. Roberts intends giving a bang-up blow-out at the launch of Mr. Clarks fine schooner. This we presume is a compliment to the growing spirit of enterprise. We hope to be able in our next to give particulars from actual experience.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

The sale of curious articles, pictures, statuary, ect. comprising the collection of the late Earl of Orford, at Strawberry Hill, excited a great deal of attention among the rich, the antiquarian and the artistical circles of England. The number of precious and beautiful things of every description was wonderful. Among them may be noted the following two or three:

Queen Ann Boleyn's clock, of metal, gilt, was bought for Queen Victoria at 105 guineas. It bears the initials of the future uxoricide and his ill-fate-toy and victim, in a true lover's knot, with and inscription, "The most happye," afterwards so miserably belied.

Sir Robert Walpole's silver inkstand, which he used when Prime Minister, was bought for Sir Robert Peel at the enormous price of £185 not less than £16 per ounce.

Mr. Charles Kean was the purchaser of Cardinal Wolsey's red hat for 21 guineas, perhaps with a view of undertaking that character in Shakspeare's play of Henry VIII. and adding to the vividness of his own conception and execution of it, by surmounting the brows of the actor with the identical hat which had pressed the politic temples of Wolsey. The article was found in the great wardrobe by the gossipping bishop and historians, Burnet, when clerk of the closet, and from his son, Thomas Burnet, the judge, it passed to the Countess Dowager of Albemarle, and thence to Horace Walpole,

Spend Thrift.—The following description of the dissipation of a fortune in the hands of a spendthrift is ingenious and beautiful—

Know that which made him gracious in your eyes
And gilded o'er his imperfections,
Is wasted and consumed even like ice,
Which by vehemence of heat dissolves,
And glides to many rivers: so his wealth
That felt a prodigal hand, hot in expense,
Melted within his gripe, and from his coffers
Ran like a violent stream to other men's.

Astonishing.—A tavern keeper in England was doing a thriving business on the Bristol road under the sign of "the Donkey," and his house had become noted for its good eating and liberal cheer. At the time of the great popularity of the Duke of Wellington, he had the donkey taken down and a fine portrait at full length, of his grace, substituted. A rival innkeeper of the village, seeing his error, had the old sign purchased, and transferred the 'grey ass,' to a place over his own door. To the chagrin and disappointment of the original owner, he saw the sign carrying all his old custom with it. To remedy the evil, he had painted in large letters directly under the duke's portarit, "This is the original grey ass."

Fluency of Speech.—The common fluency of speech in many men and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language and has a mind full of ideas, will be apt in speaking to hesitate upon the choice of both; whereas common speakers have only one set of ideas, and one set of words to clothe them in; and they are always ready at the mouth; so people come faster out of a church when it is almost empty, than when a crowd is at the door.

A FAIR HIT.

The following is too good to be lost. It was writen on the wrapper of a newspaper, that passed through our post-office a few days since. The Postmaster General must promulgate some new regulation to prevent the transmission of private intelligence by means of newspapers, or give up beat.

One Paper. Byron, Michigan.

"Now I wish to have it understood by all the postmaster's along the route between here and away out in Michigan—and there too—that we are all well down here in De Reytur, from grandmother to little bub; and also that there is no 'writing within the wrapper, or on the margin of this newspaper—no underscoring, dotting, or pricking letters or words,' or other memoranda—nevertheless, I enjoin it upon him of Byron to tear off the wrapper and examine it closely, and then, on demand, deliver it to my brother, a little south of Uncle Jake Canouse's,—we had poor sleighing, but very fat turkeys, Thanksgiving day—a long night and a short sermon from Priest Johnson before Christmas—a good deal of wind and some weather, New Years's day—bells jingling and belles dancing through the evening—money scarce, and post-office circulars plenty ever since."—Buffalo Com.

LIGHTNING.

After the flash has been seen, the peal of thunder is heard; and this will be more or fewer seconds after the peal, in proportion to the distance of the thunder cloud from the ear. Lightning traverses any space without any perceivable succession of time; nothing seems to be any obstacle to its progress. A multitude of persons taking hands, the first and the last connected with the eletric machine, all feel the shock in the same instant; and were there a chain as a conductor to go round the globe, the last would feel the shock in the same moment as the first. But as sound depends on the undulations of the air for its propagation, and is known to travel at the rate of only 1142 feet in a second; consequently if the flash were only 1142 feet from the spectator, it would be seen in one second, or one swing of the pendulum, before the sound could reach the ear though the clap and the flash take place in the same instant, and if twice this distance, two seconds, and so on.

It is of some consequence to know that lightning at a considerable distance, suppose six or eight seconds of time, is never known to burn, kill or do injury; when the flash and the clap immediately succeed each other, then there is strong ground for apprehensions, as the thunder cloud is near. If the thunder cloud be a mile and a half distant, it is never known to kill man or beast.—Now its distance may be easily known by means of a pendulum clock, or watch that has seconds, when the flash is seen, count the seconds until the clap is heard. Then compute: If only one second is counted; then the thunder cloud is within 1142 feet, or about 380 yards; if two seconds, then its distance is 2284 feet, or 761 yards; if three seconds, then 3426 feet, or 1142 yards; if four seconds, then the cloud is distant 4568 feet, or 1522 yards; if five seconds, then the distance is 5710 feet, or 1903 yards; if six seconds, then the distance is 6852 feet, or 2284 yards, one mile and nearly one-third; if seven seconds, then the distance of the cloud is 7994 feet, or 2665 yards, or one mile and a half and 25 yards. Beyond this distance lightning has not been known to do any damage.

THE OCEAN DEAD.

I 've traversed the dark heaving waste of the ocean,
Where naught met my gaze save the deep and the skies,
I have seen it in calm, and in fearful commotion,
Have watched the huge billows successfully rise.
Now deep in the vale, the proud ship's course was wending,
While closely around her the waves were contending,
And high o'er the bulwarks in mad rage descending,
Their dash mingled in, with the sailor's loud cries.

Oh; when the wind-god, through the shrouds has been shrieking,
And the dark clouds flow quickly along the concave;
When the masts in the hurley have kept constant creaking,
I have thought of the dead, 'neath the dark stormy wave;
All lonely;—deserted,—their names are unnumbered;
By coffin or tomb, their clay unincumbered;
How many, alas! in death's cold arms have slumbered—
The dark yawning ocean alone for their grave.

Then I 've felt for the sad fate of those fondly cherished,
And oft I have followed them o'er the wide main;
The sunshine,—the storm,—e'en the moment they perished,
Have swept o'er my fancy again and again.
I have seen the lone barque through the mad billows steering.
I saw her hard struggling, the high wave careering,
But ne'er—ne'er again, to those wild heights appearing,—
In the bosom of ocean her wreck is low lain.

Then! ah then! who could paint the deep horror and anguish,
As the angel of death flew exultingly by;
The pencil must falter, and its vigor must languish,
When it strives to depict the dread scene to the eye.
The rush to the deck,—the embrace and deep sighing,—
The still, death appalled,—the wild yell of the flying,
The prayer from the last gurgling breath of the dying,
As struggling he feels that no haven is nigh.

Farewell to each spirit; could friendship in kindness,
Have bent at thy couch o'er thy thin wasted frame,
When death's icy fingers had struck thee with blindness,
Have cheered the deep midnight with love's holy flame;
Could she have poured balm on thy pangs quickly darting,
To thy pillow close pressed thee when wildered and startling,
While tears flowed adown to think thee departing,
How blest had it been such an exit to claim.

Yet what if no mortal could thus linger o'er thee,
And no friend could entomb thy cold clay in the sod,
Holy seraphs were nigh in thy last hour, that saw thee,
To herald thy name to the courts of their God.
And where'r thou wert lain, neath the blue surgy billow,
With the sea flowers around thee, the rock for thy pillow,
Or calmly reposing beneath some green willow,
The spirit alike would rise from its clod.

But go not, fond mourner, thy mind wrung with madness,
To sit and to watch on the wave-dashing shore;
Other sails for awhile may relieve thy deep sadness,
But that with thy loved one shall ne'er return more.
Far away in mid ocean, where the petril is sweeping,
Deep down with the coral that loved one is sleeping,
And the Peris sing o'er him, their fond vigils keeping,
They sing o'er the lost one whose fate you deplore.

A SCENE IN A COURT OF JUSTICE.

I have frequently seen counsel in our courts of law, who were attempting to be very witty at the expense of some adverse witness, get the laugh completely turned on themselves by the happy retorts of the party under cross-examinnation. In the spring of 1838, a very amusing instance of this kind occurred, in which the laugh was well turned against a counsel who was doing his best to be at once severe and witty at the expense of an adverse witness. The latter was one of the skin-and-bone class of persons, and by a curious coincidence so was the counsel. You could not look on either without coming to the conclusion that to partake of a substantial meal must be an era in his existence.

"So sir," says the counsel to the witness, in the regular brow-beating style, "So, you have been in the prosecutor's house?'

Witness—I have.

Counsel—Have you been often?

Witness—Sometimes. [A laugh.]

Counsel—That, sir, is not an answer to my question. I ask, have you been in this person's house often?

Witness—(With much archness of manner.) I don't know what you mean by often.

Counsel—Have you been twenty times?

Witness—I never kept count how many times. [Laughter.]

Counsel—Come, sir, don't be rude. I ask you, have you been twenty times in this man's house?

Witness—I can't speak positively as to the number of times.

The Bench—About the numbers of times; speaking according to the best of your belief;

Witness—(With great readiness and politeness.) I should think, my lord, I have been in the prosecutor's house from fifteen to twenty times.

Counsel—(With great harshness of manner.) So, sir, though you could not answer the question when put by me, you found no difficulty in answering it when put by his Lordship?

Witness—His Lordship put—

Counsel—(Interrupting witness.) Stay a little, if your please, sir.

Witness—O, certainly; as long as you like: I'm in no particular hurry. [Loud laughter.]

Counsel—Perhaps, sir, you would condescend to tell the Court what your object was in going to the prosecutor's house?

Witness—The Court has not asked me the question. [Renewed laughter.]

Counsel—Don't be insolent, sir, I have asked you the question.

Witness—Then I can't answer you.

Counsel—You must answer me, sir.

Witness—I can't; for I often went without knowing the reason why. [Laughter.]

Counsel—Can you inform us, then, about what particular hour you were in the habit of visiting his house?

Witness—(Looking towards the Bench.) Is it necessary that I should answer that question, my Lord?

The Judge—If you can, I do not see why you should not.

Counsel—Come, sir, answer the question.

Witness—I should suppose it generally was between one and two o'clock.

Counsel—(His countenance brightening up, as if he had made some important discovery.) O, I see; that was about the dinner hour, was it not?

Witness—I never inquired what was the dinner hour. [Laughter]

Counsel—Perhaps not; but I dare say your nose would be of some service in enabling you to ascertain it.

Witness—My nose, sir, never ask questions. [Loud laughter.]

Counsel—(His face coloring with confusion.) But, though your nose does not speak, I dare say it has acquired considerable dexterity, from experience, at discovering when a good dinner is on the table of a friend, and enabling you to regulate your visits accordingly.

Witness—You must be judging of my nose from your own, sir. [Roars of laughter, in which the Bench joined.]

Counsel—(Laboring to conceal his mortification.) You seem disposed to be very witty to day, sir.

Witness—I think we are, sir.

[This sarcastic, though only implied allusion to the efforts of the counsel to be witty, told with admirable effect.]

Counsel—You say that your favorite hour for visiting this man's house was between one and two o'clock.

Witness—I never said any thing of the kind.

Counsel—(Pulling himself up.) What, sir, do you mean to deny what you have just said? Recollect, sir, you are on your oath.

Witness—I said that was generally about the time; but I never said any thing about "favorite hour."

Counsel—Well, sir, perhaps you would have no objection to tell us whether you were in the habit of partaking of the prosecutor's dinner, when honoring him with your visit at the particular time you mention.

Witness—I do not see what that has to do with the present case.

Counsel—It's not what you see, sir. Pray, sir, answer me the questions, whether you were in the habit of partaking of this man's dinner on such occasions?

Witness—Whether I partook of it or not depended on circumstances.

Counsel—On what circumstances, sir?

Witness—Why, on whether I was asked to partake of it or not. [Loud laughter.]

Counsel—Yes, I dare say you never declined an invitation when you got one.

Witness—(With renewed emphasis.) Never, sir. Never refuse a good dinner when I can get one. [Renewed laughter.]

Counsel—Ay, I can well believe that. And I am sure you would do the dinner of any friend ample justice.

Witness—I always to do my best, sir, on such occasion. [Loud laughter.]

Counsel—I don't doubt it; you have always, I suppose, a good appetite and capacious stomach when at the table of a friend.

Witness—Always, sir.

Counsel—Ay, you look the very picture of a hungry fellow.

Witness—We look as if we were kept on starvation allowance.

[The walls of the Court resounded again with the shouts of laughter which followed this severe retort, the effect of which was greatly heightened by the peculiar archness of manner in which it was made. The learned gentleman was completely crest-fallen, and made no further efforts to be witty at the witness's expense.]

LONDON.—Our readers will find some information and amusement in the following paragraphs from the private letter of an American in London lying before us.

One of the most striking and admirable institutions of the city is its police. This is the result of Sir Robert Peel's labour and skill. In the space of every half square, or from twenty to fifty rods you see a man, idling about, as if he had just come to London. He has a narrow leather strap buckled upon his wrist, and a strip of silver edging upon his collar, with one or two letters and figures worked into the cloth of the collar. He has also a peculiar hat on which looks like oil cloth highly varnished with the body covered with crape, and the top exposed to the weather. He has no arms or other weapons, and if it rains you see him with a cape over his shoulders like our firemen. Once in a while he stops and looks up and down, or if there is any collection or confusion of any kind he slowly walks up to the scene of it. If there is a collection of coaches at a stage-house or mail-offiice, one of these men is always looking on. If there is a public meeting of any kind, one of these men is in the street, two or three in the entry, one or two at the inside door, and half a dozen in the crowd or near the platform. In markets, on the wharfs, at the steamboat landings, near the bridges,—in fact, wherever you go you meet these stragglers. They walk very lazily—you seldom see two of them together, and you never see them with any body unless as a protector. These are policemen. They are the men to ask the way to any given place, the name or design of any building, in short, any thing that the citizen or stranger needs to inquire about. They are perfectly civil, and seem to seize every opportunity to be useful. There are two commissioners of police, and the force is divided into seventeen deparments, marked with initials and numbers. Each division has one superintendent, four inspectors, sixteen sergeants and 144 constables, making a force of 2,800. Each of these police men receives 19s. or nearly $5 a week, and his clothes and coals for one fire—perhaps $1 per day. I have seen no man drunk, and but one case of a squabble in the street, and that was in the suburbs. The principal business of the Lord Mayor appears to be to do the honours of the city on public occasions. I have seen him preside at two public meetings—one of the Society for the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts, and the other a public meeting to petition parliament respecting the condition of the colony at New Zealand. He has the title of Right Honourable from being a member of the privy council ex officio. The office is held for a term of years, and the next oldest in commission of the two sheriffs of London succeeds. The office is said to be worth £6000 per annum. He wears a broad gold chain on the neck, a profusion of rings on his hands, and a gold snuff-box. His robe is a light blue edged with fur, and hanging quite to the ground. Wherever he goes the coast is clear, and all respect is paid. To-day being Good Friday he receives at his residence (the Mansion House) all the boys of the Blue-coat school, (mentioned so fully in Mr. Bache's book) and gives each of them sixpence, a bun and a glass of wine. Nothing is more apparent than the broad distinction between the two great classes of society here, and the means of preserving this distinction are equally obvious. On Sunday evening last I attended (by ticket) the supper of the boys of Christ's Church Hospital. There are 1400 boys on the foundation, and they are instructed in the common branches of learning for five or seven years. They are generally the children of decayed gentlemen, merchants or ministers, whose yearly income does not exceed £300 or $1500. (We do not call men with such salaries "decayed gentlemen.") The boys dress in a long kersey frock which comes down to the ankles—yellow small clothes, (I believe of wash leather) stockings and shoes with ties, (I believe) and bands on the neck. One of the boys read a service appointed especially for them, in which they pray for themselves as "poor children," and pray for their benefactors, &c. At the close of the supper the Treasurer and Governors of the institution arrange themselves on a bench in front of the gallery, and the boys, two by two, approach to a certain line marked by a row of brass nails, where they make a low bow and retire. Their conduct was faultless, so far as I could see, and the singing of the choir of boys was admirable. At the Borough Road School also I heard the Bishop of Norwich address the girls. One branch of their instruction was in the duties of nurses, sempstresses, and house servants, as if they were inevitably destined to some such station, and the Bishop reminded them that their kind rich friends had provided these means of instruction that they might be more useful in the situations to which Providence had assigned them! A very obvious means of preserving this distinction, is to keep power and official dignity under cover as much as possible. For example. You want to see a clark in the Treasury office. You go to Downing street, and find a porter at the outer gate of the Treasury building. You tell him what you want, and you pass in and find a sentinel in uniform and armed marching to and fro. You tell him your errand, and after passing by half a dozen officers, each a grade higher than the preceding you come to the door of the office, and by passing, through two rooms and a double door you find him. To go up from him to the first Lord of the Treasury, is an immense stride.

RELIGIOUS.

IT IS GOOD TO BE ALONE.

"It is not good," even in a religious point of view, "that man should be alone." But it would be worse for him to be never alone." In proportion as a man mixes with others he loses his peculiar stamp, changes his own for the character of the many, thinks with the mind of others, and ceases to be properly himself. But in order to become a Christian, a man must be himself,—he must be his own to give himself to God. If, in mingling with the world, we came to lose that native character of soul which makes us ourselves, the truth in attacking us would search in vain where to find a hold, and, having allowed the mind of the many by little and little to substitute itself for our own, we should find ourselves wanting in that which could feel the truth, recognise and receive it. Never, my brethren, has this danger been greater than in our day; we encounter it every where, in the Church as well as in the world; all conspires, even under the most holy appearance, to take us away from ourselves, and we are continually in danger of mistaking the voice of the multitude for that of the Spirit of God. A strange insipidity of soul, and factitious kind of life, threatens incessantly to take the place of that soul and that life which are properly our own; an unaccountable magic power makes us receive as the native inspiration of our conscience, and defend, with the warmth of conviction, systems and creeds, which have been generated without us by the shock of opinions and the course of events. Men observe, imitate, repeat, and call themselves philosophers.

Never ought the prayer of the Prophet King to find an echo in more hearts: "Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away and be at rest!" Let this prayer be ours, my brethren, let us seek some place of rest; far from the dust and bustle of the world—far, if possible, from its associations—let us go and seek for ourselves; let us each find our true original under the thick mass of the prejudices of sect, and the spirit of the age; let us listen with devout attention to the warnings so long unheard, of our conscience, yes with devout attention, for when the world is silent, it is God himself that we shall hear, it is God who will speak by the voice within us. "I will bring her into the wilderness," says God in the prophet, "and there will I speak to her heart."*—Rev. A. Vinet of Lausanne.

RELIGION IN THE FAMILY.

Family religion is of unspeakable importance. Its effects will greatly depend upon the manifest sincerity of the head of the family. If his children and servants do not see his prayers exemplified in his temper and manners, they will be disgusted with his religion. Tediousness will weary them. Fine language will shoot over them. Gloominess will make them dread religion as a hard service. Let them be met as for a most delightful service. Let them find it savory, simple, plain, tender, heavenly. Worship thus conducted may be used as an engine of vast power in a family. It diffuses a sympathy through the members. It calls off the mind from the deadening effect of worldly affairs. It arrests every member as with a morning and evening sermon, in the midst of all the cares of life. It says: There is a God! There is a spiritual world! There is a life to come! It fixes the idea of responsibility in the mind. It furnishes a tender and judicious farther and master, with an opportunity of gently glancing at faults, where a direct admonition might be inexpedient.—Cecil.

AN ILLUSTRATION OF SCRIPTURE.

In the book of Deuteronomy we have a very animated and beautiful allusion to the eagle, and the method of exciting her eaglets to attempt their first flight; and comparing her proceedings on that occasion to Jehovah's care of his people and method of instructing them how to attain heavenly objects. "As an eagle stirreth her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, so Jehovah alone did lead them."

Sir H. Davy relates his having had an opportunity of witnessing the first flights of the eaglets from their eyerie. The old birds at first made small circles, and the young imitated them; they paused on their wings, and then took a second and longer compass, always rising towards the sun, and enlarging their circle of flight, so as to make a gradual spiral; the young still slowly followed, apparently flying better as they mounted; and they continued this sublime exercise, always rising until they were lost to sight. How powerfully ought this to excite Christian parents to teach children betimes to look towards heaven and the Sun of Righteousness, and to elevate their thoughts thither more and more on the wings of faith and love, themselves all the while going before them, and encouraging them by their own example!—Kirby's Bridgewater Treatise.

MYSTERIES IN RELIGION

"The folly of objecting to religion, because it contains mysteries will appear from the obvious truth, that we have no right to expect from Divine revelation that which it not only does not engage to give, but professes to withhold. 'Canst thou, by searching,' asked the partriarch, 'find out God? Canst thou, by searching, find out the Almighty to perfection?' And if it be objected, that this obscurity was peculiar to the partial and preparatory dispensation—the twi-light of the Gospel dawn—we will appeal to the Apostle, acknowledgeing that, without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness, and exclaiming, 'O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God; how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" But, further, to cavil at the mysteries of the Gospel is, virtually, to charge imperfection on their Author. It is to stretch the Divine wisdom upon the rack of human judgment. It is to assume the power of dictating to the Omnipotent how he shall make man, or govern man, or redeem man; what form the Godhead shall assume, what instruments he shall employ, what signs he shall work, what effects he shall produce. It is to usurp the prerogative of explaining what our Master has left dubious, of harmonizing what he has left concealed. It is to charge him with having revealed too little or too much; to arraign his wisdom and to impugn his goodness; to snatch the sceptre from his hand, rejudge his justice, and erect ourselves into the arbiters of God."—Rev. Mr. Dale.

Blindness of Passion, or Mistakes of a Kamtschatkan Bear.—Fish, which forms their chief nourishment, and which the bears procure for themselves on the rivers, was last year excessively scarce in Kamtschatka. A great famine consequently existed among them, and, instead of retiring to their dens, they wandered about the whole winter through, even in the streets of the town of St. Peter and St. Paul. One of them finding the outer gate of a house open, entered, and the gate accidentally closed after him. The woman of the house had just placed a large tea-machine, full of boiling water, in the court; the bear smelt to it and burned his nose: provoked at the pain, he vented all his fury upon the kettle, folded his fore-paws round it, pressed it with his whole strength against his breast to crush it, and burned himself, of course, still more and more. The horrible growl which rage and pain forced from him brought all the inhabitants of the house and neighbour-hood to the spot, and poor bruin was soon dispatched by shots from the window. He has, however, immortalized his memory, and become a proverb amongst the town's-people, for when any one injures himself by his own violence, they call him "the bear with the tea-kettle."—Captain Kotzebue's New Voyages Round the World in the Year's 1823—1826.

CANDOUR.

We are so used to disguise ourselves to others, that at last we become disguised even to ourselves. Were we to take as much pains to be what we ought, as we do to disguise what we are, we might appear like ourselves, without being at the trouble of any disguise at all.

From the Princeton Whig.

[THE BACHELOR.

While some in lively strains relate,
The pleasures of the married state;
Shall bachelors unsung remain,
A ridiculed though harmless train?
A scribbler's name I covet not
This hour admired, the next forgot;
And useless, thrown neglected by,
In dusty heaps his labours lie;
I only wish, devoid of pride,
Whatever fate,
My Song await,
To sing my happy fireside.

No helpless infant's hated squalls,
Are ever heard within my walls;
Nor does a scolding headstrong wife,
Disturb the quiet of my life.
Lord of my house. I sit at ease,
And smoke my pipe whene'er I please;
Whilst thou, poor man, to woman tied,
By cradle's toys
And restless boys,
Beest occupied thy fireside.

There are, who obstinate and vain,
Exult in bonds, and hug the chain;
Let these the sweets of Wedlock boast,
And toil to "to gild a rotten post."
See—Crito, needy and forlorn,
In sackcloth curse his bridal morn;
Blest with a fashionable bride,
He's forced to roam,
Or teased at home;
And ne'er enjoys his fireside.

Let others tell the joys of love,
But keep me from them, powers above!
Preserve me from that plague of life,
A forward and expensive wife.
But lest my choice should wrongly fall
E'en let me have no wife at all;
But still to gentle peace allied,
With smiles survey
Each new born day,
And still enjoy my fireside.

SONG OF THE AMERICAN GIRL.

Our hearts are with our native land,
Our song is for her glory;
Her warrior's wreath is in our hand,
Our lips breathe out her story.
Her lofty hills and valleys green
Are smiling bright before us;
And like a rainbow sign is seen
Her proud flag waving o'er us.

And there are smiles upon our lips
For those who meet their foemen,
For glory's star knows no eclipse
When smiled upon by woman.
For those who brave the mighty deep,
And scorn and threat of danger,
We've smiles to cheer—and tears to weep
For every ocean ranger.

Our hearts are with our native land,
Our song is for her freedom;
Our prayers are for the gallant band
Who strikes where honor'll lead 'em.
We love the taintless air we breathe,
'Tis freedoms endless power,
We'll twine for him a fadeless wreath
Who scorns a tyrant's power.

They tell of France's beauties rare,
Of "Italy's" proud daughters;
Of Scotland's lasses—England's fair,
And nymphs of Shannon's waters;
We heed not all their boasted charms,
Though lords around them hover;
Our glory was in Freedom's arms,—
A freeman for a lover.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Paterson Intelligencer.

THE SPECTRE MASK,—A TALE OF THE LAKE OF COMO.

It was a still and cloudless night—not a breath stirred the leaves on the high trees that surrounded the great villa of the Count, Minotti, on the Lake of Como, when two figures were seen to emerge from a private door that led into the garden surrounding the house, and descend the stone steps to a little boat, in the stern of which sat a figure muffled in a coarse cloak.—Perceiving their approach, the man who occupied the boat, immediately arose and assisted the cavalier and his companion, a female of stately from and features, of great beauty, to descend, which they did in silence; and entered the boat, which was immediately pushed off.—There was no moon to add beauty and effect to the scene, but the heavens were studded with stars and the clear blue lake reflected their more intensely blue rays, whilst the lights from the windows of the different dwellings that skirted the shores, were reflected in long lines of gold, and the distant bark of the watch dogs alone broke the stillness of night. Not a word was spoken by either party, until the boat reached the middle of the lake, when the lady laid her small white hand on the shoulder of the cavalier, and looked earnestly in his face for some minutes.

'Dearest Vicenzo,' said she 'why so moody and thoughtful; Yon evening star shines as brightly as on that night you wooed and won my poor heart, but,' she continued mournfully, 'you are changed, aye, changed—and now scarcely vouchsafe a word.'

'Yes,' replied he who was thus addressed, as he cast from his shoulders the cloak in which he was thus muffled. 'I have words for thine ear to-night which may not be pleasing—Mariana, thou hast out lived my love. Hast thou no prayer ready? for here I shall absolve myself from the vow my folly made thee.'

The lady stared wildly at her husband, for he was no less, and attempted to clasp him round the neck.

'Dear, dear lord,' she said in supplicating accents, 'what dreadful deed dost thou meditate! Think, oh, in mercy think what you would do! Have I offended! Have I said or done any thing to———.'

'Peace!' muttered her stern and cruel partner, forcibly removing her arms—'peace, I say, and pray for thy soul, for thou hast not ten minutes to live!'

The lady fell on her knees, before her merciless lord, and in a frantic manner besought him to have pity, but the fiend had steeled his heart, and he harshly bade her to prepare for death; when the tone of his victim suddenly changed, and no longer a suppliant, she vehemently upbraided him for his cruelty.

Vicenzo!' said she, as her dark eye flashed wrathfully, 'I am in thy power, but my friends will avenge me! I ask not for life, for I know thy purpose is deadly; but dread the vengeance of my family, who will demand me at thy hands.'

The Count deigning no other reply than a low and iparticulate malediction, made sign to his attendant, who immediately rising, seized the lady by the arm.

'Hurl her into the lake, Jacopo, said Minotti; and the words had scarcely passed his lips, when their victim, forced in spite of her struggles, over the side of the boat, fell with a faint shriek and a heavy splash into the water; but she almost immediately rose to the surface, and the count seizing an oar, endeavored to stun her by a blow on the head. The stroke was ill-directed, and missed the countess, who, seizing the oar with both hands, supported herself, and thus addressed her cruel husband;

'Vicenzo Minotti, thy days are numbered.—God shall judge you for this deed; I summon you to appear before his tribunal ere the moon is out!'

Her husband instantly directed his attendant to return to his villa. Rumors never touched the breast of Minotti, who was as subtle as he was revengeful and cruel, and he spread it abroad that his wife had eloped from him, and the tale was believed, for he had previously circulated stories of her infidelity.

Three weeks and more had passed, when a nobleman on the other side of the lake, gave a splendid fete, to which many were invited, and among the rest the count Minotti was the gayest of the gay throng. During the evening he had attentively regarded a lady of exquisite beauty, and he now endeavored to enter into conversation with the object of his admirations, but the lady was coy, and replied to all the fond things he addressed to her with a provoking coldness, and Minotti more than once felt his wrath almost master order. If he handed the beautiful mask an ice, she modestly excused herself and the count in vain begged that she would partake of some slight refreshment without which she could not possible support life through the evening. The room was brilliantly illuminated by innumerable lamps, that mocked the stars above them, and dance and sprightly conversation were not lacking.

'Dearest lady, said he, excuse a little gentle force, and let me remove that envious vizor from your lovely face.'

His companion made no reply, and Minotti construing her silence as an assent, playfully raised the mask from the lady's face—but oh, horror! what did he behold!—the pale countenance of his murdered wife, who regarded him with a look so fearful that his very blood was chilled, and his knees bent under him.

'Vicenzo!' said the spectre, laying her cold, clammy hand on his, and looking him earnestly in the face, "behold thy wife!"

The count heard no more—he recoiled from the apparition, and with a gasp fell senseless to the ground. He was discovered by some of the company in a deathlike state, from which, though attended by the most skilful physicians, he did not recover his senses until morning, when he begged those who attended him to send for a confessor, to whom he unfolded what had occurred: but the remembrance of the scenes in which he had been an actor operated so strongly on his shattered nerves, that fit after fit succeeded, and ere the evening bell rung, the guilty soul of Vicenzo had fled for ever.

So far goes common rumor; but the sister-hood of a neighboring convent know the sequel of the story. The wife whom her lawless husband would have betrayed to death was not permitted by providence thus to perish.

Buoyed up by her clothing, and assisted by the oar, which by the trepidation of those who intended her murder was left in her possession, she floated a long hour, a living death, upon the bosom of the deep, still, blue lake,

The barge of the nobleman at whose villa the fete took place, rescued the lady as her strength was just exhausted, and the rest the reader knows. It only remains to state that the lady shocked with the world, betook herself to the seclusion of a convent; and it was not thought advisable to disabuse the minds of the peasants of the idea of a supernatural vision for so horrible a crime. Her rescue and subsequent residence were therefore carefully concealed.

SHORT PATENT SERMON.

I have selected the words of my text for this occasion:

Alas! how soon the heart forgets
Its deepest, wildest pain;
The tear an hour the eyelids wets.
And all is joy again;
Still rushes on the tide of men,
As though the past had never been.

My hearers—Man's heart is a slate upon which is written, with the pencil of memory, the record of past events; but the sponge of time soon obliterates the whole, and no traces are left to tell of their occurrence, save here and there, perhaps; a scratch of former grief or woe. Well, my friends, it is all for the best that the wave of oblivion should so frequently wash our by-gone ills from the shore of recollection into the dead sea of forgetfulness. It is happy for us, that, after having eaten the oysters of pleasures, we are not obliged to lug about with us forever the shells of care, or burden our memories with the load of troubles we incurred in obtaining them.—It is surprising, nevertheless, how soon the heart forgets its miseries. A cloud drags its gloomy shadow over the sunny landscape, but it leaves no stain behind, a person treads upon our corns—we dance a Spanish fandango for a few moments, indulge in half a dozen gratuitous grunts, groans and curses, and go our way, as though no collision of "human understandings" had occurred. And so, my dear friends, it is with the human heart. Today it is harrowed up with pain and trouble, and tomorrow it is as smooth and placid as a pan of unskimmed milk. It will not always cling to the recollection of the past while the cares of the present and the hopes of the future conjunctively oppose, no more than a musquito will persist in his sanguinary purpose while the finger of death is pressing hard upon him.

My friends—In order to see how soon the heart forgets its most poignant griefs, you have only to observe a thing or two as you journey through life. For instance a man—after a blissfully tedious and excruciatingly delightful courtship—enters into a matrimonial partnership, with a young, beautiful and affectionate creature of the fancy sex. Suddenly death stalks into their blooming bower of love, and upsets all their connubial arrangements by committing adultery with the lovely object of the husband's affection, and bearing her forever from his sight in his icy, marrowless arms, or, in other words, she dies—yes, dies like the flower of the field, cropped by the mower's scythe. The fond husband pours out his sorrow in flooding tears upon her new made grave, and seeks no comfort this side of the threshold of heaven. Life to him hath no pleasure; for he has been robbed of that which he thinks can never be replaced by any substitute the earth can afford in the shape of feminine worth. He deposites his love in the urn that contains her ashes—wanders sad and disconsolate along the gloomy vale of widowhood, and resolves never to marry till soul weds soul at the altar of the Omnipotent. But, my friends, this thick coat of misery soon wears off from his heart in spite of the care he takes to have it remain. It won't stick any how it can be fixed. His bitter grief lessens to pensive sorrow—his sorrow, to sad regret—his regret to partial forgetfulness; and soon you behold him revelling again in hymenial sweets, as happy as a hawk at a hen roost, and as gay and as cheerful as though he had never experienced any conjugal bursitification.

My friends—when a friend accidentally takes a slide from time to eternity, what do we do? Why, shed a few formal tears over his mortal remains, deposite him in his narrow home—shovel on the gravel, and go about our business Aye, we even run over his grave to pick up pennies, and care no more for the sacredness of the dust on which we tread than a cat does for a carpet. The ever rolling tide of men still rushes on as though the past had never been.' When a poor fellow-being falls from the car of existence, a few merely look back for mere idle curiosity, to behold the damage, but they interest themselves no further. If a shade of sadness come over the heart for the moment, it is soon dispelled by a change of scene, location or circumstances. The beckoning word for man in his mad career is onward, which he instinctively obeys even though it lead him as straight as a chalk line to the devil.

My dear friends—There is no doubt but it is a great blessing that our hearts are so disposed to forget the woes with which we are visited. Children are ever forgetting and are always happy. They wash away all grief by a single burst of tears; and then laugh to dry up the spatterings. Care, disappointment and sorrow only draw faint lines upon the surface of their hearts which are easy obliterated; but they are graven on the hearts of the aged; and the furrows sometimes deepen into death. The old cannot so easily forget the ills as the young, because in their declining age, when both the physical and intellectual faculties begin to fail, ideal troubles will present themselves as fast as those that are rubbed out with the rag of forgetfulness. But O, my dear friends! amid all your hearts' forgettings, don't forget that you are all made out of one kind of stuff—that your duties are all the same—that all belong to one great family—and that you are in duty bound to aid & protect one another, till you emigrate to another and a better world, where every one must look out for himself. So mote it be!

REFLECTIONS.

"There is a tear for all who die."

It is one of the most beautiful features in the regulations that govern mankind, that they are bound together, by a common brotherhood, a sympathy of sentiment, which pervades the habitable globe, and unites in feelings, the antipodes of the flower earth. Death is the common enemy of man, & his doings can scarcely be told of without awakening an emotion in his bosom which though it may remain but a brief period, affords ample proof that "there is a tear for all who die."

The grim monster reigns despotic over the mortality of created nature and claims animal life as his birth right. In his goings forth from kingdom to kingdom, he treads upon the multitudes, and myriads fall beneath his potent arm; place and circumstances he knows not, condition he respects not, but like a universal destroyer, strides on and on, sweeping before him the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the happy and the wretched: the grave is his mighty garner, into which he gathers "fruits of life" & as long as earth shall be peopled so long shall his ravages continue. Men come upon the stage of being, live their "little hour," and fall, to be seen no more among their fellows, and hopeless indeed would be their condition, and miserable in the extreme, did they not enjoy the belief that memory would retain the knowledge of their existence, and in another and better world cause a happy recognition and the continuance of friendship formed in this.

The hope we enjoy of heaven and eternal happiness, is of more value to the thinking mind, than all the transient pleasure, this vain and perishing world can afford. Mental enjoyments are such as become our exalted nature, and assimilate our happiness of celestial beings; compared with these sensual pleasures dwindle into utter insignificance and seem fit only for the "brutes that perish"—The brief interval, for so it may be called, of our existence that is passed upon earth is too fleeting to merit an undue proportion of our care and attention, and our highest aim should be to secure a place in the bright world of endless peace, when called to give up to death this suffering clay."

We are creatures of sympathy, the sorrow that wrings a brother's bosom, finds a place in our own; we rejoice when they weep, and in our minds experience the pleasure or pains of the body which are confined to the individual; they may be distributed among many, and the same cause, a single circumstance, may give pain to hundreds and their sufferings may be similar in every respect, and so universal is the compact of human fellowship that no individual of the great family of mankind can perish without having some to weep his fall, and in this thing we see carried out the design of the Creator of all things, without whose knowledge a "sparrow can not fall," in forming his creatures into a common brotherhood that they might serve him upon earth and together praise him forever in heaven.

There is a tear for all who die.—The savage that exults in the destruction of an enemy, has also a tear for the misfortune of a friend, and we can hardly conceive of a being so isolated from society, as that some one will not feel sad when he leaves them and the world forever and drop a tear upon his fall. A few years since a very wicked sailor, and he was one of the most abandoned of men, died in the town of Gosport.—This man was hated by the crew with whom he sailed, and these men generally have the strongest attachment for each other, and it is reasonable that they should for their association in places far away from home where there were none but themselves to exchange with them the feelings and affections of friendship and it is of rare occurrence that one of those men is despised by his messmates. The man we speak of was taken sick on his passage from the Mediterranean and died immediately after the arrival of the ship at Gosport. He was buried with but little ceremony, but the crew could not allow his body to be deposited in the earth without witnessing the scene and moistening the sod that covered him with their tears; scarcely one of them but wept, and they continued serious for hours after they returned to the ship. The captain, who perhaps felt as deeply as any of them asked why they were so sad, when they ought to rejoice at being rid of so desperate and dishonorable a ship mate, "Captain" replied one, who was but the mouthpiece of the whole, for they felt alike, "Captain, he was one of us, he messed with us, and though he robbed us, and abused us, and did every thing to us he could that was evil yet we cannot help feeling for him and we are compelled to shed a few tears for his memory."

Without sympathy—life would not be worth having and it is this that gives tears to the memory of the departed.—That which constitutes our greatest happiness on earth, causes us to mourn for the dead; and while our tears are falling upon the cold form of the loved, or we stand in the bitterness of feeling beside the lowliest, it is consoling to us to know that we may meet them again and be united forever.

The product of labor is the only real Wealth.—Agriculture is the foundation of wealth. The sea renders her tribute; but the earth presents to skill and industry richer and infinitely varied contributions. Money is NOT wealth. It is only the representative of wealth. Money is coveted because it can command labor; but of what use would it be, if labor would not be commanded. What would it avail to possess all the riches of Potosi, if thereby we could not acquire the products of Agriculture! What are manufactures concerned in but these products? What freights the barks of commerce in their liquid flight, threading every channel and whitening every port, but the products of agriculture! Whence does the government derive its revenues but from the fruits of agriculture! What constitutes the wealth of the country but her cotton, hemp, sugar, rice, tobacco, wool, wheat, beef and pork. Agriculture only can be considered the creator of wealth. The merchant, the sailor, the various artisans and tradesmen perform their part in making the product of agriculture more valuable; in transporting them so that the advantages of climate are equalized, and in a condition for use; but agriculture alone produces. Like the leader of Israel, she strikes the rock, the waters flow, and a famishing people are satisfied. She supplies, she feeds, she quickens all. Agriculture is the commanding interest of the country, with which no single interest of a secular nature combined, can be brought into competition.

AMERICAN FEMALE CHARACTER.—Mr. Buckingham, (says the Philadelphia Inquirer,) expresses his opinion, that although the American women make the most faithful wives and most correct members of society, they do not love with the same intensity as the women of Europe, and would not be ready to make such sacrafices for the object of their affections Mr. B. was not long enough among us to ascertain the truth in this particular. He was moreover, a married man, somewhat advanced in life, and rather homely—and therefore had no chance of testing personally, the devotion of American women in love matters. In this particular, they are unsurpassed in the world. Our history is replete with instances of womanly devotion, that, in the times of the Greeks and the Romans, would have been eulogized by the poets and orators of those days, in strains of undying verse and eloquence. But Mr. Buckingham admits that the American women are the most beautiful of all civilized nations, and he must therefore be let off mildly.

VERY TRUE.—No man who loves his family fails to take a newspaper, says the Richmond Compiler.

PLAGIARISM.

Messrs. Editors,—Our venerable father Henry Smith, in several recent numbers of his interesting "Narrative," makes some very grave charges against some of the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He accuses them even of "stealing." It is true he means stealing sermons only, and sometimes he calls it "borrowing;" but, on the whole he distinctly makes the charge of "stealing." And it remains to be shown that stealing sermons is a less offense, in the law of conscience and truth, than stealing any thing else. For my part, I would as soon take a man's coat, or money, as I would his sermons, without permission, or credit. Now, this is a most serious charge; and I propose, with your permission, to examine it, and see its weight.

It is my privilege to be a lay-member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. To Methodism, under God, I owe much. I ardently love the institutions of the Church, and yield to no one, preacher or layman, in an anxious desire to promote her interests, and keep her borders pure from all error and evil. Allow me, then, through the Advocate, to say a few plain things to the ministers and members of the Methodist Church, on an evil to which my attention has frequently been called, which has a very material bearing on the vital interests of our ministry, and which is yet, I fear, a growing evil among us. I am aware that the practice to which I have reference exists in other Churches besides the Methodist, but I have now to do especially with our own branch of the Church.

I refer to plagiarism in our ministry; the practice with some of our preachers of taking the essays, discourses, or entire sermons of others, committing them to memory, and reciting them to the people, to all appearance, as their own. I do not mean to allude to a practice which exists, more or less, with all ministers, of taking the same general views of the leading doctrines of our holy religion, as those set forth by Wesley, Watson, Fletcher, Clarke, and others; or by Butler, Paley, Blair, and others, not belonging to our Church. These master minds have taken the entire subject of doctrinal and experimental religion, and set them forth in such a strong, clear light, that all men have the right to use the result of their labors, by taking substantially the same arguments in support of the prominent and essential doctrines of Christianity. Indeed, a careful reading of the Scriptures, and of these writings, would show, that views widely different from, and opposite to theirs, would be unscriptural; and to treat of them in an entirely different manner, would, in general, be to depart from the natural order and arrangement of the subjects contemplated. And though I would justify no man in committing to memory and reciting the compositions of these men, yet I would restrict no minister from using the substance of these standards works, as occasion offered, knowing, that if any man pretended, at this day, to a new and original system of faith, he would be departing from the Scriptures. And even here I hold, that where a view or argument is entirely borrowed, in substance, even from a standard work, common honesty requires a general credit to be given to the real author.

When, therefore, I write of plagiarism, I do not refer to the above practice; but I mean the habit of committing to memory, and reciting to the people, to all intents and purposes as original, entire paragraphs, essays, sketches, discourses or sermons of other men. In this respect I make no difference, whether the matter consists in using entire discourses, or different passages, carefully selected and patched together—flowers culled from every garden, and nicely tied up in one bouquet. Nor does it change the real character of the practice, if occasionally the order or the language is a little altered to prevent detection.

I am thus particular in defining what I mean, not only that there may be no misunderstanding, but that there may be no possibility of evading the real question at issue, and the inferences which I wish to draw from it.

I condemn plagiarism, then, as I have defined it; first, on account of the nature of the thing itself; and, secondly, on account of its injurious influences on the person practicing it, and on the people among whom it is practiced.

I. As to the nature of the thing itself. I pronounce it such an imposition on the public as amounts to positive deception, and shall proceed to prove it so. All who have written on the subject of moral conduct hold, that deception consists in intentionally conveying a wrong impression; and that this deception may be, either by a direct expression of what is false, or by acting in such a way as to produce a wrong impression, with the intention that it should be made, or the knowledge that it is made, and yet without any effort or desire to correct it. I may either speak a falsehood, or act a falsehood. And this is not only the view taken of the matter of deception by moral philosophy, but it is the very spirit of the teachings of the Bible on this head.

Now, apart from the general motive which may prompt men to pass off others' productions as their own, what is the intention and wish of those who do so, as regards the act itself? Certainly to convey the impression, that they are preaching their own sermons, while, in fact, they are preaching the thoughts and compositions of other men. At best, they suffer the people to be deceived, and to give them credit for what is not theirs, without making any effort, or indulging a desire, that they be undeceived. That this is the object and wish of those who do thus plagiarise is evident, from the fact, that they neither do, nor would publish from the pulpit, that they are delivering borrowed sermons. Let any one of these men look into his own heart, and ask himself, whether, under any circumstances, he would have the impression generally made on his hearers, that he borrows those efforts by which his audience are sometimes so enraptured! Would he be willing, after preaching one of these sermons, publicy to acknowledge it was not his own?

I regard plagiarism, therefore, as deception, logically shown in the preceding remarks, thrown, if you please, into the form of the following syllogism:

1. Deception consists in an intention to convey a wrong impression, by word or act, or the making of such an impression knowingly, without the effort or desire to correct it.

2. Preachers who palm on their congregations, as their own, the compositions of other men, do intend to convey a wrong impression on their hearers; or, at least, knowing them to be misled, make no effort to correct them, but suffer them to regard these efforts as their own, and to give them credit for them.

3. Therefore, those preachers who do thus plagiarise are actually guilty of deception.

This argument seems to me to be perfectly unanswerable. But there is another view which may be taken of the subject, equally establishing the fact to be a violation of what is right. It is this: There are certain rights enjoyed by society at large. Among these are some which, by common consent, society may yield, or withhold, at pleasure. Now, I assert, that while society has, by common consent, admitted, that to a certain extent ideas become common property, after the lapse of some time from their publication, society never has, by common or partial consent, admitted that men's compositions are common property. On the contrary, those who do appropriate to their own use the compositions of other men, not only violate the rights of the real authors, but most egregiously violate a law of society establishing individual rights, which have never been surrendered. So much for the nature of the thing itself. Does it not resemble "stealing?" If not, will any man say that it is not "borrowing," without asking permission, or giving credit.

II. I proceed, in the second place, to consider the influence and tendency of plagiarism; and (1.) First, on the individual who perpetrates it. A habit of this kind must be injurious indeed to the mind of any one who practices it. No man can be an independent thinker who habitually depends on other men's thoughts; and this habitual dependence must weaken the intellectual energies of any man. For no man can habitually rely on the mental labors of other men, without becoming mentally imbecile. The man who habitually declines to think and write for himself loses not only the disposition, but the power to do so.

But if the effects of habitual plagiarism are so disastrous to the intellect, its influences on a man's conscience, and whole moral character, are even more injurious. Humility and contrition are noble and generous products of grace in the human heart. But there is such a thing as a self-abasement which partakes of nothing of the noble. Such is the degradation, in his own eyes, of the minister who knows that he is practicing, de facto, a continual deception upon his hearers, by preaching to them the sermons of other and greater men, obtaining and wearing the honor of preaching great sermons, and yet precluded, by shame, or some other motive, from undeceiving them. A truly ingenuous man would not wear a borrowed dress, and receive honor and praise for it, and yet not desire to strip himself of whatever honor was thus undeservedly bestowed on him, through the misconception of the people. And if a man, with any of the elements of nobility in him, habitually knows himself honored for others' labors, and yet cannot, or will not disclose it, he feels a shame and degradation which no man can habitually feel without destroying the independence and generosity of his character. And when a man loses a sense of his own manhood, there is little of the noble left him. It follows, that the minister of the Gospel who habitually plagiarises must feel that he is thus constantly deceiving the public, and must, in consequence, feel this continual self-degradation.

But, again, this practice tends to weaken a man's conscience, and destroy his judgment of right and wrong. The plagiarist is almost constantly in some embarrassing position or other. He not only lives under one general and continuous equivocation, but must frequently be so hemmed in that he is compelled, either directly to equivocate, or shamefully to expose himself. For example: A. preaches a sermon. B. hears him, and is delighted; goes to A., and expresses his delight. A. produces, by request, his "original (?) manuscript," and allows him to read the same, word for word, as delivered. B. returns home, opens a volume, and reads the identical discourse, verbatim et literatim! he finds that A's. manuscript is a mere transcript! Has not B. been deceived—grossly & intentionally deceived? Another case: C. preaches a sermon in the hearing of D. When D. next meets him, he expresses his delight with the sermon, but remarks, "Brother C., I heard that same sermon, or one exactly like it, from brother E." "Ah, indeed," replies C., "why that's strange!" while the man knows in his heart it is not strange that E. should have access to the same source from which he himself borrowed the sermon.

These supposed cases are not purely imaginary. Such, and still more embarrassing, instances have occurred more than once. No one, accustomed to observe these things, can fail to see that such instances must frequently occur, in which exposure or equivocation are the only alternatives. The practice of plagiarism thus tends to weaken a man's sense of perfect honesty. Indeed, the former of the cases supposed above shows something more than a mere evasion of the truth to get out of a difficulty; it discovers an ambition to maintain an acquired character for preaching great sermons. And such is another of the fearful tendencies of the practice. But I have not room to pursue this point. (See, on this subject, some of the recent numbers of brother Henry Smith's Narrative.)

(2.) Again, the injurious effects of plagiarism on others are equally obvious; and first, as regards those of the people who detect the imposition. Birds that wear borrowed plumage generally put on peacock's feathers. Plain feathers they have of their own, and there is no occasion to borrow such. Men who borrow sermons borrow such as are calculated to be popular. Those who perpetrate plagiarism, select, generally, if not universally, those passages for recitation which are the most beautiful in style and language, richest in imagery, most tingling on the ear of the auditor—those calculated to make the impression of a beautiful and splendid speech, rather than a sound and practical sermon. For the truth of these remarks, I refer to the experience of every man guilty of the practice, and the observation of every other man. The consequence is, that these "splendid" preachers, becoming "popular" for their pretty sermons, soon ingratiate themselves into the favor of at least a portion of the people before they are detected. And by the time the imposition is discovered, the popular taste has often been vitiated, and the popular judgment perverted, on a question of morals. I have often heard this sentiment from some of our people: "They say that brother A. or brother B. borrows his sermons. I do not know; it may be so. But I have never read them; and whether borrowed or not I am delighted with them. And I had rather hear him preach his eloquent sermons, even if borrowed, than hear others preach inferior sermons, though original. What! justify a man in habitually stealing sermons! I solemnly protest against any such morality. The fact of plagiarism being admitted must stamp, as I have before shown, the act as downright positive deception. And I protest against any practice, tending so far to pervert the judgment of the people, that they are willing to justify deception! In fact, there is a fearful state of things in some parts of the Church in this respect. The state and judgment of the people have been perverted by an inflated style of speaking, which passes for eloquent preaching, when in fact it is simply flowery speech-making; until at last the people have a craving for pretty speeches, and are almost unwilling to hear the plain Gospel of Jesus Christ. In the mean time, Zion is not fed on the "bread of life," and is spiritually starving. The Church can no more subsist on this kind of "fine preaching" than the human body can subsist on sweetmeats alone. The cry, in both cases, is for "bread!" On the other hand, too many of our preachers, instead of striving to correct this false taste, actually pamper it, and bend all their energies to the preparation of flowery discourses, which, if they can not manufacture, they will "borrow," or "steal." This, in turn, is justified by some of the people, who will have their flowers, even if they are stolen. Perhaps I may be supposed, from the ardor of my temperament, to be presenting the case too strongly. But, seriously, to my mind, these are literal facts.

But the tendency of plagiarism is equally bad in the case of those who do not know the imposition. In this respect, the main evil lies here; that it gives a man an influence in the Church which his talents and character do not merit. None but a man of inferior intellect would habitually practice plagiarism. Now, every man has his influence. And no man ought to have an influence beyond what is due to his real intrinsic merits. But the man who constantly appears in the garb of greater men acquires, with many, the character of a great man. Who does not see the evils to which this may lead? Plainer men, of better judgment, and more intrinsic weight, have less influence than such men, because they scorn to appear in any other dress than their own. Suppose these popular plagiarists should express their opinions on questions of doctrine, or discipline, either in public or in private, among the members of the Church, (and it is not denied that these men do sometimes think for themselves,) their sentiments comes with the authority of great men. And thus the people are in danger of being misled, through the popularity of men who deserve no popularity; for not much confidence is to be placed in the original sentiments of those who are not in the habit of thinking for themselves.

And how, under such circumstances, is plain truth, from plain original men, to have its legitimate effect upon a people accustomed and delighted to listen to sweet songs, and those played upon borrowed lyres! This practice of plagiarism thus materially interferes with the influence, comfort, and feelings of other brethren, equally worthy; and, moreover, it prevents plain men of God from successfully preaching the plain Gospel of Christ to a people whose taste has been vitiated, and judgment perverted, by the influences around them.

I am aware that in presenting these views I may appear to be casting a reflection on the intelligence and good sense of our people. All I have to say to this is, that if saying that people may be misled by popular men is reflecting upon their intelligence. I plead "guilty." I have no honeyed word for the people of my own Church, or any other, except so far as "smooth words and true" may be spoken at the same time. When not, I have none to utter. I am after the truth.

In conclusion, let me briefly suggest how this evil may be remedied:

1. Let such as may feel themselves guilty in this respect examine their own hearts, in sincerity and with prayer, and see whether what I have written is not the truth. Above all, as they value their own intellectual improvement and growth in grace, and the usefulness of their ministry, let them abandon for ever this slavish dependence on other men's labors, and hereafter be honest, and preach their own sermons; and if they cannot do that, adopt some other calling; for, let them be assured, they have thrust themselves into the vineyard, uncalled.

2. Let the people, instead of countenancing and apologizing for this abomination, frown upon it, as they would upon any other attempt to deceive them, on the part of their ministers.

3. Let this practice be regarded, by the Church authorities, in the light in which any other case of deception would be viewed. Let the individual who will be guilty of it be "admonished" of his fault, by the bretheren, in the usual way; and let this be done in love. If it is not abandoned, let it be brought as a charge against the character, before the proper conference to which he is amenable. Let the inferior Church judicatories refuse to recommend—let our conference refuse to admit, or pass—and let our bishops refuse to ordain—any man who is, in any degree, guilty of the practice.

God, who knows my heart, knows that I have written what I have written from no motive of personal enmity or complaint agaist any individual, but from an ardent desire to promote the good of the Church, and the glory of God. I presume my influence will be little in arresting this grievous evil. I can only hope to awaken attention to the subject, and to draw into the discussion of it abler men, among the ministry and membership. I hope yet to see this matter fully discussed in our papers, and (if necessary) made a matter of objection to a man's character in our conferences, so as to stamp plagiarism with the seal of the condemnation of the Church; and thus set our people right on this evil, and utterly banish it from among us.

As I have written under the influence of neither fear nor shame; and more especially as I do not wish innocent persons to be blamed for my acts, I do not hesitate to subscribe myself,

Yours, in Christian love, JOHN ZUG.

THOUGHTS ON THOUGHT.

Among the powers which distinguish the man from the brute, perhaps the most obvious and the most valuable is the power of carrying on a connected train of thought. And while ability to think distinguishes the man from the brute, ability to think well is that which distinguishes the intellectual man from the mere day dreamers. Ability to think well, implies a stern and absolute control over the succession of the thoughts: a power of the mind to direct its energies to any subject it pleases, and to hold them fixed to the contemplation of any point according to the dictates of its own will. He who has such a control over his thoughts, is, in the largest sense of the term, his own sovereign; and such a man, I care not whether he be a professor in his study, a judge upon the bench, or a cobbler upon his seat, is an intellectual man. On the other hand, he whose thoughts succeed one another according to no law but that of accidental association, is, in no valuable sense, his own sovereign. The mind, that which constitutes the man, is in subjection to every caprice of fancy, and a slave to every casual circumstance; and is with the greatest propriety compaired to "a city broken down and without walls." Such a man may read as many languages as the learned blacksmith of Worcester, or he may not be able to read his mother tongue—in both cases he equally lacks the grand and essential qualification of the intellectual man.

As the power of controling the succession of the thoughts is the distinguishing attribute of the intellectual man, so the degree of it which any one may possess is a sure index of his progress in intellectual improvement. Indeed the attainment of it is the only valuable end to be sought in educating the mind. We may spend years in study, but if the sole end of that study is simply to store the mind with the results of other investigations, without employing our own powers of thought, we shall find ourselves in the end as unable to go alone as when we began. And he who attends at all to the operations of his own mind, will perceive that this control of the thoughts is one of the most difficult tasks to which the mind can address itself. It may be easy to explore the treasures of classical lore, to fix in the memory the results of physical investigations, and even to acquire a smattering of the unintelligible nomenclature of transcendentalism; but to train the mind to forego its day dreams, its unproductive musings upon every subject to which its own fickle fancy or fortuitous association may direct it, "hoc opus, hic labor est." But difficult as it is, it affords him who will undertake the task a most ample reward. It places in his hand a key which will unlock the inmost recesses of the temple of truth, and unfold her hidden treasures to his wondering eyes. Physical, mental and moral truth, are all put within his power. The ocean of truth (to use Newton's fingure,) is indeed illimitable; but when we unite to such a mind the attribute of immortality, who shall fix the Ultima Thule of its discoveries, or say to it, "Hitherto shall thou come and no farther?"

It was a noble compliment, and one worth columns of newspaper commendation, which an unlettered farmer paid to a certain Professor, after hearing him deliver a public address at one of our literary anniversaries a few years since—"that man," said he, "does his own thinking." He who has learned to control the succession of his thoughts will do his own thinking. Independence of thought will be a characteristic of such a man. Opinions which pass current among men he will respect simply as the opinions of others; but he will not give them currency as his own, until they have undergone the test of his crucible, and received the stamp of his image and superscription. Having acquired the sovereignty of his own mind he will never blindly yield it to the dictation of others; and party creeds, whether political, or religious, which captivate the multitude merely by the authority of a name, he will neither receive nor reject without a proper examination. In the noble language of an ancient poet he may say,

"Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri."*

Such a man not only does his own thinking, but he does a great deal of thinking for other people. It is a remark not more trite than true, that the majority of men are quite too indolent to think for themselves. It is vastly easier to take opinions at second hand, than it is either to originate them, or to examine very critically what others have originated. Accordingly the most that such persons do, when interest or prejudice does not lead them, is to adopt that opinion that seems most plausible upon its face. He therefore who aspires to lead the minds of others must first learn to control his own; and having learned to form consistent opinions for himself, it is not difficult to lead those who are wiling to be led, to adopt the same opinions.

The exercise of a proper control over the succession of the thoughts, has an influence upon the moral character, not less important than upon the intellectual. This is well expressed in the inspired apothegm, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." He whose thoughts are suffered to flow on at random, subject to no law but impulses of an idle fancy, or a vitiated imagination, possesses within himself all the elements of vice and corruption of life, and only wants the occasion to have them in active exercise. The thoughtless trout will not sooner catch at the angler's fly, than such an one will yield to the temptation to gratify the impulses of his corrupt mind. On the other hand he who keeps his mind subject to the control of right reason, will always be known by his steady and upright conduct. The storms of temptation may blow around him, but they will have no effect upon him, fixed as he is in firm and correct principles. Like the oak, which the wider it spreads its branches to the winds, the deeper and broader it thrusts its roots into the earth; and while the sweeping tempest uproots and overthrows the less substantial denizens of the forest, maintains its position, the pride of the hills. J. T.

*"Bound to swear allegiance to no master." Hor. Epist. 1, 14.

STARTING IN LIFE.

It is of great importance that persons, in early life, should prepare themselves for the part they are to act in society. There is a strong desire in both sexes to rise to respectability; and this is highly commendable; but many persons err in their attempts to gain their object.

A principal cause of the failure of young people to reach the object of their desire, is, the attempt to get rich without labour. In this way, they often aim at an object without the means to accomplish it.

Young friends, learn wisdom. It is not the order of Providence that mankind should have blessing and prosperity without labour. It is best for mankind that this should be the order of things; good moral habits are formed by industry; sudden acquisitions of property tend to prevent the formation of such habits; they are often ruinous to morals. Moderate acquisitions of property generate good habits—the habits of prudence, of foresight, and correct calculation of what is practicable.

The desire of reaching a respectable standing in life, has led many to renounce labour for books, with the expectat on that they can live by learning. But the number of persons who can gain subsistence by learning, is comparatively small. By far the greatest part of mankind are destined to labour, without which society cannot be supported

In forming a plan of business for life, therefore, the first requisite is to determine the course to be pursued, the occupation which is to be followed, and then to devote all possible attention to gain the qualifications essential to success in that occupation. In this preliminary to success, persons very often make great mistakes.

If a young man is to be a farmer, he must begin when a boy, and continue in that business. He must gain knowledge by experience, and muscular strength by labour. Books and learning will never make farmers.

If a young man is to be a mechanic, he must begin his art when young, and persevere in it, and be thoroughly master of every part of his business. Books and learning cannot supply the want of labour and experience. Farmers and artisans cannot be made in the school-house or college. Most of the studies cultivated in our seminaries of learning, however useful to professional men, are not applicable at all to the common occupations of life.

Most of the people of this country possess small estates, which, when divided, will not support their children. Hence it often happens that children, whom the father can support in a genteel style, fail, at his death, of the means of subsistence. Hence probably no country presents so many instances of young persons of both sexes, educated above their condition, as the United States. Many persons and families, within the knowledge of the writer, have been ruined, or doomed to struggle with adversity all their lives, from this mistake. They begin wrong; they expect to be gentlemen and ladies, without the means of supporting themselves in such style.

Equally mistaken are many of the daughters of poor families. Some of them enter manufactories, where they get good wages, and dress in rich attire; neglecting to gain a thorough knowledge of housekeeping, the very knowledge they most want to insure them a good settlement.

In no particular, is the folly of females more remarkable than in their estimate of labour. They seem to think it disgracing to labour in the family as domestics, when they will labour in manufactories without objection. They do not consider that the proper sphere of females is in the family, and that they cannot fill that sphere without serving an apprenticeship, and they should no more disdain it, than young men should disdain to be apprentices to mechanics. The young of both sexes must be subordinate to those who are older, for it is from the experience and knowledge of older persons that they are to quality themselves to be respectable masters and mistresses themselves. Girls who have no property should seek to be domestics for two or three years, in respectable, well-ordered families; for it is in these they are to learn, not only to do all kinds of work, but to improve their minds and their manners. It is the best, if not the only chance which many of them can have, thus to improve, and become respectable mistresses of families.—S. S. Journal.

COMMUNICATIONS.

MR. EDITOR.

Sir:—You will oblige a subscriber by giving this an insertion in your next, as I am not generally in the habit of writing encomiums on departed spirits; but duty as well as obligation compels to portray: as far as I have had a knowledge of the life, the character, and death of one, who but recently under God, committed to my Pastoral care.

The individual the subject of this memoir, Mr. Richard Luckey was a native of the state of Tennesee, in the U. States of America. He had recently embarked to the land of his fore-fathers, on board the ship Mariposa Capt. Shute. His houshold consisted of a dear wife and a young lady, committed to his care and a member of the same church of which he was previously a communicant.

On landing upon the shores of Africa, he was introduced to me as a member of the Presbyterian church; his unassuming manner at once attracted my attention, and I was constrained to say truly the Lord hath heard the prayer of his church and hath sent an individual whose piety, and zeal are suitable to her wants. But the ways of the Lord are right!!! How inscrutable are thy judgments, O Lord of Hosts; blessed is the man that trusteth in Thee. On the ensuing Sabbath after his arrival he presented himself to the session at the same time producing a letter of dismission from Jonesborough Church Washington county of Tennessee. It being read he was received to the christian fellowship of the church, in this place.

During his short stay amongst us, every expectation by the church as a christian has been realized in him. On monday the 5th he was attacked with the fever to which strangers coming to Africa, are subject, which continued without intermission for several days.

His absence from church on the following sabbath caused me to inquire after his health, when I was informed that he was down with the fever. I visited him and found him prostrate, I spoke to him as regards his hope in Christ, his reply was "brother I am going to die, and I feel perfectly willing to depart and be with Christ." I told him that I felt happy to find that his confidence in God was so strong; he said to me brother "pray with me before you leave." I then sang that well known Psalm of Dr. Watts

The Lord my shepherd is
I shall be well supplied.

At which he appeared to be quite elated no doubt at the ravishing thought of a future glory.

On my return on another day, he appeared to possess the same frame of mind as he previously did when I saw him last; although his speech was lost in death he manifested a perfect composure & resignation to the will of God as is the characteristic of a dying christian.

On Saturday the 16th inst. I renewed my visit early in the morning, found him speechless, spoke to him but he was unable to reply. I asked if all was well afford me some token. He lifted up his hands I presume as a token of victory, and after a few words of exhortation by exciteing him to a steadfastness in the faith, I then left him, being satisfied that he had a full assurence of his acceptance with God, and that his case as regards life was hopeless. In a few moments he breathed his last sweetly, in full and certain hope of a blissful immortality. He embraced the religion of Jesus Christ at an early period of his life, being brought up, and nurtured in the lap of religion, his owners being communicants of the same church. He departed this life in 33d year of his age. His mortal remains were taken to the meeting house and a discourse delivered before a numerous and respectable concourse of members of our sister churches in this town, from Phil. 1st chp. 21st verse. For me to live is Christ &c. His lost to us is irreparable.

LAUNCHED.

November 4th 1842.

We understand by a letter from a mutual correspondent at Bassa Cove, Grand Bassa County, that the shooner Alpha belonging to Messers S. Herring and A. W. Gardner was launched at Bassa Cove on the Benson River on 11th ultimore.

The Alpha will carry about eight tuns she is a good working little craft, and we think she will prove a good sailer. We had the pleasure to examine this neat little vessel before we left Bassa, and we do not hesitate to pronounce her a Master peace of workman-ship which reflects great credit upon her modeller, and builder, (Mr. H. Davis.)

We hope the owners of the Alpha may have success, that others may follow their example.

Yours respectfully,
W. W. DAVIS

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, NOVEMBER 26, 1842.

On the 16th inst; the Ladies composing the "Ladies Benevolent Society of Monrovia" celebrated their seventh anniversary. The services were performed in the Baptist church. Mr. Hicks read the society's constitution and Mr. Teage the annual report which we give below. James Brown Esq. delivered a stirring appeal in behalf of Ladies and animated them to move onward in the good work in an address to which we have elsewhere referred.

Judging from the expenditures it may be thought by some that too little has been done to justify so much ado—yea some have been known to curl the lip of scorn and cast a sneer at the doings of the institution. It should be borne in mind however, that much and little are relative terms in respect both of the agent and subject. Assuming this as the standard of decision the society would, perhaps, on a careful comparison of circumstances, be found equal in the accomplishment of good to many, and superior to some that make far greater noise in the world. He is no very practical benefactor who makes long speeches and loud appeals in favour of suffering humanity if his sympathy evaporates there. The true benefactor is he, who pursues his noiseless course in search of the outcast and forlorn, feeding the hungry with bread and pouring in the dejected heart the oil and wine of consolation.

That the society has done good, many a hitherto destitute widow and abandoned orphan is their witness. The members have entered the abodes of poverty, they have visited the couch of affliction and administered the necessaries and comforts of life.

One feature in the constitution of this society entitles it to the regard and co-operation of all who delight to alleviate suffering—namely its catholicism. It has none of the odious features of sectarism about it. In admission of members it has respect only to moral character, and ability to be useful, and in the distribution of its charities it has no preferences on account of religious tenets or connections. Hence it presents a safe channel through which the benevolent either here or abroad may convey their donations to the sons and daughters of misery. Any benefactions of which the society may be made the almoners will be duly acknowledged in some of the publications of the colony, and faithfully applied as directed.

Donations to be distributed as above may be directed to H. Teage,

Agent for the Ladies' Benevolent Society
Monrovia,

or to Mrs. C. Johnson,

Directrees of the Ladies' Benevolent Society,
Monrovia.

ANNUAL REPORT.

The Anniversary of our Society has again brought us together. In looking back upon the scenes of the receding year your managers cannot but be the subject of very opposite emotions. Again the painful duty devolves upon them to record the death of two of their fellow laborers, and companions. Sisters Eliza Shackelford and Sarah Payne are no more. At our last Anniversary they were with us; to animate us by their presence, and aid in our deliberations. Cheerfully, they laboured to advance the objects for which the Society was instituted, and ever at their post they shrunk not from a faithful and conscientious discharge of their duty. But their work is finished, their career closed, and he whom they here humbly endeavoured to serve & in whose footsteps they walked has taken them to himself. From extending and deepening the rills of benevolence on earth, they have gone to bathe in the full ocean of love in heaven. Therefore we sorrow not for them as those who have no hope. For ourselves we mourn over the loss of their counsels and their prayers, and admonished by their departure, and excited by their example, and animated by the eternally glorious issue of their labours we would faithfully work while yet it is day, that when the time of our account arrive we may be able to say

I have finished the work
Thou didst give me to do.

The visiting committees in discharging the duties involved in their appointment have witnessed scenes—scenes of suffering wretchedness and destitution at which humanity and sympathy cannot repress a tear. An ill-founded apprehension of unfavourable impression abroad might dictate silence on this subject and prompt to draw the veil of concealment over these sickening spectacles. But those who aim to do good, to soothe the aching heart, to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, and who rely as much upon the aid of others for the means of doing so as upon their own exertions, will see, that it is no more important to seek out proper objects for the exercise of their benevolence, than it is to make a full and faithful exhibition of their condition. Under the influence of this opinion then, the managers feel that they violate no dictate of prudence nor of propriety when they declare, that an examination of the condition of the poorer classes in some of the upper settlements, would reveal scenes of wretchedness and want of whose existence without such inspection it would be no easy task to induce a belief. The number of unmarried females above that of the males is appalling, and the proportion of widows to the aggregate of the community has no parallel among any other people. In the greater number of the last cited cases the proportion of children incapable from age and disease to be of any available aid to themselves or their parents is also unusually large. This last fact results from the large number of infants landed from every fresh importation of immigrants, and their disease and helplessness are to be traced to the want of proper and sufficient sustenance and clothing, joined to the well known unfavourable influence of the climate upon foreign constitutions.

While your managers would sacredly regard the bounds within which propriety and the duties of their office prescribe them, they feel no fear to intimate, that these facts present a serious subject of solicitude for both the legislature and the people at large.

Nothing is further from the managers than the expectation of relieving the wide spread wretchedness that spreads like a festering ulcer over almost the whole social body. The work to be accomplished and the paucity of their means must at once extinguish such a hope. The society can only hope to afford temporary relief to but a few of those cases, and to those only that seem to present the highest claim to sympathy and benevolence. Numerous cases of pinching destitution the committees have been compelled to pass by without affording relief, and to many thrilling appeals they have been compelled to be deaf. The managers are however happy in being able to say, that so far as their means would permit they have faithfully discharged the duties of their association, and conscientiously regarded the obligationns imposed upon them by those benevolent persons that have aided its funds.

The distributions during the past year, the managers are pained to say have been circumscribed in an unusual degree. This is owing chiefly to the scarcity of money rendering it absolutely impossible to make collections.

Having made this brief statement of the condition of a large portion of the community and of the society's inability to render efficient aid, the managers look with confidence to the benevolence of a liberal public to enable them to carry out the objects of their institution. They enter cheerfully upon the duties of the rising year, reposing with confidence upon that Being who hath ever smiled upon means devised to promote his glory and benefit his rational creatures.

The Society has taken Mrs. Horriss of Caldwell under its protection, and has engaged to furnish her with the means of subsistence during her life. She has been long afflicted with an incurable disease which has at length rendered her a perfect cripple, and entirely incapacitated her for labour. Her case was presented to the society and relief immediately granted. Grateful for the prompt response she tendered her property (consisting of a framed house and Lot) to the society to be disposed of at her death in aid of its funds. A deed for the property has been regularly executed. Thus when she shall lie slumbering in the dust her grateful offering will feed the hungry and clothe the naked.

The managers will only make our more remark which is to tell you, that a Krooman in the employment of one of the members of the society, ascertaining the object for which the society was formed pressed upon one of the officers a donation of—25 cents.

EXPENDITURES.

There has been expended during the year, in provision clothing &c.	$81 06
In hand consisting of cash provision &c.	80 75

Nov. 26 1842.

Against some small portions of the address delivered by James Brown Esq, before the "Ladies Benevolent Society," as we agree with it in the main we shall exercise our privilege of "censorship" to glemur. Most heartily do we accord with the gentleman in all he says or can say of the ladies' omnipotent all-pervading and all-controlling influence. True, man rules this lower world, but woman, dear woman, rules man. Nor are we disposed to rebel against the stern decree that enslaved us, nor rudely to displace the "golden" yoke. Enthroned in our heart and swaying the sceptre of love meekly and willingly as all loyal subjects should we will yield to their rule. The ladies therefore will not accuse us of disaffection, if we state that for reasons which are obvious the tranquility and permanency of their government will be best consulted by a concealment of their power. The wheels of nature may as easily be arrested as woman be deprived of her power, and when arrested as easily be put in motion as that power be extended. Her power is most absolute when least onvious. We therefore do not concur with friend Brown in the propriety of this public announcement of a fact, of which, assuming occasional outbreaks as an index there is already too strong a suspicion.

REFORM.

A gentleman a few evenings ago at a party proposed the formation of a n "moral reform society." We have since bestowed some thought on the subject and are at length fully convinced of the utility of doing so. Intemperance has lately made a vigorous push for triumph. Against this vice, there is but one effective weapon, and that is total abstinence by all who have hitherto indulged in the cup. As far as we are concerned, we hope hereafter by divine aid to free ourselves from our own and others' blood in this particular. We confess delinquency and deplore it. There is however, another vice still more destructive of the peace of society that is said to be on the increase. It is already in high places. Y. a le worthy missionary editor in this settlement, has been publickly accused of gross licentiousness! and admonished to desist from his sly dalliances and return to the walks of virtue The subject is of so delicate a character, that were it not already publick, we should take the liberty to remain silent or at most offer only a private remonstrance to the Rev. Gentleman; as it is we mention it as an additional evidence of the necessity of a vigorous effort on the part of the friends of morality.

As it is not our fault, but simply our misfortune that we are not acquainted with entomology, icthyology, geology or any other logy, we hope for a toleration of the following plain unscientific account of a freak and battle of—

Ants. The ants to which we now refer are of the species we call Bug-a-Bug; but not those that make food of our houses and apparel; though a few of this kind are occasionally seen in the Bug-a-bugs' house.

A few days ago our attention was arrested by a countless number of these spreading themselves in every direction around our dwelling. On close examination they were found to emerge from the earth in the vicinity of the house but principally from the foundation. They speedily filled every crack and fissure in the wall of which there are many near the ground. Here they halted for a short time as if in consultation, while the larger ones with wings were to be seen running in every direction—now losing themselves in the fissures and anon mingling with the crowd without, as though they were delivering orders or disclosing the plan of future action. Suddenly the whole body was seen in motion, moving in an almost solid & unbroken mass up the wall, headed by some of their winged leaders, while others as before were moving in every direction through the serried host, as if to notice and regulate the march. It soon became evident that the number at first seen was but the advanced-guard of the army. As the foremost ranks moved on, their places were continually supplied by others that emerged from their subterranean abode, until the wall presented a black and animated surface. Excepting the winged commanders, each soldier carried a young one in his mouth, from which circumstance we inferred they were moving in search of another habitation or bringing out their progeny for the benefit of light and heat. Having completely covered the wall they bivouncked, without despositing their young. Apprehensive that they might make too long an encampment, and having but little desire for the society of this class of our fellow animals we determined on an effort to dislodge them. Scalding water occurred to our mind as the most effective method of conveying to them our wish for their removal; and we at once acted upon the idea. Hundreds fell at every application until the ground was literrally covered with the slain; but true to their character the broken ranks were speedily filled by recruits from below. Wearied with the vain effort to remove them we determined to await their pleasure. They continued to ascend until they reached a hive which a swarm of bees had formed between the outer and inner boards of the upper story of the house. These bees had been for some time a source of sore annoyance, compelling us frequently to abdicate in their favour, and we had more than once meditated their death en masse. It soon became evident from an unusual stir among them—from their rapid rush from their honied dwelling and hovering around the apertures of entrance that the bug-a-bugs had invested the city and were vigorously pressing the siege. But the bees did not tamely yeild. A vigorous fight was maintained during the day. The bees however had the worst of it. On every side the victorious bug a-bug was seen dragging away the lifeless body of his antagonist and bearing it off into his subterranean dwelling. Whether the action was continued through the night we will not undertake to say; but if not, it was renewed early on the following morning, and continued to the great loss of the bees for three days, when they fairly beaten, retreated and formed in a shrub about twenty rods from the house. The Victorious bug-a-bugs continued in the vicinity of the arena of conflict until they had disposed of their booty and then suddenly disappeared. The mortified bees did not remain long in their last encampment, but took to wing and cheered us with the hope that we should see them no more. But we were mistaken. In three days they returned and entered their old habitation. They had scarcely settled—certainly had not time to repair any of their prostrated fortifications when the bug-a-bugs again emerged from their ambuscade, moved up in order of battle and renewed the engagement. Lifeless carcases born off in triumph to the place of deposit again proclaimed the success of the Ant. The battle was kept up for two or three hours when the bees were again forced to take to wing. As soon as the work of carrying off the booty was completed the Ants again disappeared. On both sides the battle was obstinate. The bees fought to defend their habitation, the ants to dislodge and destroy them. In some single or personal encounters there were displays of determination and courage that would not disgrace animals of a far higher order. An ant would grapple a bee with those hard and curved protuberances from his head, and immediately drop with him to the ground, the bee exerting himself to use his lance. But in vain: the smoth scaly mail of the ant presented effectual resistance, while the bee as if conscious of the unequal contest would struggle to free him of his adversary. The ant would make use of his feet to secure his antagonist while he would continue to move his hold in the direction of the head, where having arrived he infixed his horns in the eyes of the bee, when the battle would soon be over, and the enemy born off in triumph to form a meal for the conqueror.

These ants were much larger than those that are so destructive to houses and in fact to every thing that has not the imperviousness of stone or iron, and that employ themselves in erecting those earthy conical structures called bug-a-bug houses. They are also of a different color, the latter being of a grayish color, while that of the former is a dark brown. They are however usually to be found in small numbers running up and down the streets of these commonwealths; and when their habitation has been disturbed we have seen them suddenly present themselves at the gates, course rapidly around on the outside of the habitation as if reconnoitering and then suddenly disappear. We regret to add that on this sixth day after their last inglorious retreat the bees have returned. For their sakes we invoke the return of the bug-a-bug.

A friend from Marshall has sent us a snake for our cabinet. It was supposed to be of the double-headed tribe. It is admitted now by naturalists that no such animal has been discovered. The close similarity of both ends of this species of snake, and the extreme minuteness of its eyes have probably produced the illusion: but the improvements which modern art has made in optics have discovered a head and a tail The snake sent us is about eight inches long, of a dark brown color, both ends truncated, eyes extremely small, scarcely discernible by the unaided vision, and placed near together on the top of the head. We brought it under the focus of a microscope and feel bold to pronounce it a one headed two eyed animal.

It may be thought by some that we have an unusual penchant for animals this month. Be it so then, we cannot help it. We have an invincible horror of the beasts; and it is our settled conviction that the man whom the sight of one does render an incurable paralytick.

"Is fit for treasons, stratigems and spoils!
Let no such man be trusted.

A few evenings since a hugh black snake made a friendly visit to residence of a friend of ours. He had ascended a column of the verandah near the door, where with great apparent gravity and patience he was no doubt waiting for an opportunity to enter. As soon as the door was opened he announced his personage by a snakish hiss. A light was put in requisition to ascertain the owner of so unusual a sound, when his snakeship offended, as any well bred gentleman would be at so discourteous a scrutiny of his countenance turned off in disgust, and was about making himself scarce. The inmates however were unwilling that he should leave without some token of their recognition; and as he appeared to be getting in a hurry they availed themself of the door-bar as the medium of their part of the salutation. A friendly application just between his body and his head—namely his neck, seemed to recal him to a sense of the impropriety of so unceremonious an exit, when he halted and bowed and floundered and grinned with all the grace and elegance of divine Fanny herself. Another application and again he commenced the pantomime, and continued to arise in extacy until nature sank under the weight of bliss.

As neither his head nor his hide could now be of farther use to him, a gentleman of the craft which Mr. Weller would call "sawbones," bore away the body for decapitation, since when we have heard nothing from him saving that he had two enormous fangs lying longitudinally on his jaw, but which he was incapable of erecting—after death we suppose. He measured six feet.

In the last number of the "Luminary," there are some remarks on the loss of the Royal Albert, that deserve no other notice than to apprize the "worthy" editor of our knowledge of his design. The whole piece is a tissue of foolishness falsehood and groundless conjecture, and written with no other aim than to injure us, who are the "worthy passenger" referred to. The editor in this is probably only the tool of others and is therefore to be pitied. It is not pretended that nothing was drank on board; nor even that we had not drank more than we should (a single drop being too much as it is altogether unnecessary) nor is it marvellous that men after fatigue and anxiety should take a nap, but that any were in the state insinuated by the "Luminary" is such a falsehood as the "worthy" editor alone could utter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—It is beginning to be fashionable with correspondents to put at the bottom of their effusions, "N. B. Please correct errors, but do'nt abridge." Now this is sometimes impossible; because the errors as frequently consist in a vague verbosity and inconsistency of words as in any thing else. We must hereafter claim the liberty of pruning or amplifying as the case may requre, or submit to the mortification of suppressing.

TAKE NOTICE

That Henrietta Carey having left my bed and board, and taken up her residence at another part of the coast, I intend to apply to the proper authorities of this commonwealth for a divorce from the said Henrietta Carey. All persons feeling themselves interested are hereby warned to appear.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

USE OF THE BAROMETER.—1. The rising of the mercury presages in general fair weather, and in falling foul weather, as rain, snow, high winds, and storms.

2. In hot weather, especially if the wind is south, the sudden falling off of the mercury foretells thunder.

3. In winter the rising indicates frost; and in frosty weather, if the mercury falls three or four divisions, there will follow a thaw; but if it rises in a continued frost, snow may be expected.

4. When foul weather happens soon after the fall of the mercury, it will not be of long duration; nor are we to expect a continuance of fair weather when it soon succeeds the rising of the quicksilver.

5. If in foul weather the mercury rises considerably, and continues rising two or three days before the foul weather is over, a continuance of fair weather may be expected to follow.

6. In fair weather, when the mercury falls much and low, and continues falling for two or three days before rain comes, much wet weather may be expected, and probably high winds.

7. The unsettled motion of the mercury indicates changeable weather.

8. Respecting the words engraved on the register plate of the barometer it may be observed that they cannot be strictly relied upon to correspond exactly with the state of the weather; though it will in general agree with them as to the mercury rising or falling. The words deserve to be particularly noticed when the mercury removes from "changeable" upwards; as those on the lower part should be adverted to when the mercury falls from "changeable" downwards.—Newark Sentinel.

Important to sufferers from the Toothach.—At a meeting of the London Medical Society, Dr. Blake stated that he was "able to cure the most desperate cases of toothach (unless the disease was connected with rheumatism,) by the application of the following remedy to the decayed tooth: Alum reduced to an impalpable powder, two drachms;—nitrous spirit of æther two drachms. Mix and apply them to the tooth."

Farmer's Razor Strop.—Take a strap of thick harness leather, the size you want for a strop, and fasten it at each end upon a piece of wood, then rub upon its surface a piece of tin (any tin dish will do) until it is smooth. Strop your razor upon this, and you will find it worth all the patent strops that ever were invented.—Late paper.

VIEW OF PAST EXPERIENCE.

TUNE—"Sweet Home"

Like the dew of the morning my youth pass'd away,
And life with its pleasures, was on the decay;
My thoughts on eternity sometimes would roll,
As oft I was caution'd to think of my soul.
Soul, soul, yes, my soul;
The thought, oh how dreadful, of losing my soul.

The sound of the gospel which fell on my ear,
Though often unheeded, at times forced a tear;
To drive off convictions, away I would stroll,
And rush on in mirth at the risk of my soul.
Soul, soul, yes, my soul;
Still plunging in sin, at the risk of my soul.

In the midst of my sports with my gay, youthful band,
'T was death and the Judgment brought me to a stand;
My sins rose like mountains, while justice did cry,
The soul that has sinned—it surely must die.
Die, die, yes, must die;
No flying from vengeance! the sinner must die.

Oh, horror of horrors! what shall I now do!
My path is o'ershadow'd with darkness and wo;
Alone in my sins, with no friends to condole,
I've wasted my time, and have lost my poor soul.
Soul, soul, yes, my soul;
The pleasures of life, they have ruin'd my soul.

While mourning for sin, as despairing I lay,
A voice sweet and charming, I heard thus to say,—
Poor sinner despair not while mercy can flow,
Your sins, deep as crimson, I'll wash white as snow—
Snow, snow, white as snow,
My blood once appli'd, it will wash white as snow.

If mercy is found and a pardon is free,
Through Christ, let that mercy, Oh God, flow to me!
Unless that rich mercy can flow down from Heaven,
My sins are so great, they can ne'er be forgiv'n—
Forgiv'n, ne'er forgiv'n—
Oh can I yet hope that I may be forgiv'n.

My spirit was sinking, I knelt down to pray—
"Thy sins are forgiven"—I heard Jesus say—
An ocean of joy, waving onward did roll,
And wafted redemption and peace to my soul—
Soul, soul, yes, my soul—
I'm happy in Christ, and there's peace in my soul.

A TREATY.

To settle and define the Boundaries between the Territories of the United States and the Possessions of Her Britannic Majesty in North America, for the final suppression of the African Slave Trade, and for the giving up of Criminals, fugitives from justice, in certain cases.

Whereas, certain portions of the line of boundary between the United States of America and the British dominions in North America, described in the Second Article of the Treaty of Peace of 1783, have not yet been ascertained and determined, notwithstanding the repeated attempts which have been heretofore made for that purpose: And whereas, it is now thought to be for the interest of both parties, that, avoiding further discussion of their respective rights, arising in this respect under the said treaty, they should agree on a conventional line in said portions of the said boundary, such as may be convenient to both parties, with such equivalents and compensations as are deemed just and reasonable: And whereas, by the Treaty concluded at Ghent, on the 24th day of December, 1814, between the United States and His Britannic Majesty, an article was agreed to and inserted of the following tenor, viz: "Art. 10. Whereas, the traffic in slaves is irreconcileable with the principles of humanity and justice: And whereas, both His Majesty and the United States are desirous of continuing their efforts to promote its entire abolition, it is hereby agreed that both the contracting parties shall use their best endeavors to accomplish so desirable an object:" And whereas, notwithstanding the laws which have at various times been passed by the two Governments, and the efforts made to suppress it, that criminal traffic is still prosecuted and carried on: And whereas, the United States of America and Her Majesty, the Queen of the United kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, are determined that, so far as may be in their power, it shall be effectually abolished! And whereas, it is found expedient for the better administration of justice and the prevention of crime within the territories and jurisdiction of the two parties respectively, that persons committing the crimes hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances, be reciprocally delivered up: The United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, having resolved to treat on these several subjects, have for that purpose appointed their respective Plenipotentiaries to negotiate and conclude a Treaty, that is to say, the President of the United States has, on his part, furnished with full powers, Daniel Webster, Secretary of State of the United States, and Her Majesty, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, has, on her part, appointed the Right Honorable Alexander Lord Ashburton, a Peer of the said United Kingdom, a member of Her Majesty's most honorable Privy Council, and Her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary on a Special Mission to the United States; who, after a reciprocal communication of their respective full powers, have agreed to and signed the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

It is hereby agreed and declared that the line of boundary shall be as follows:—

Beginning at the Monument at the source of the River St. Croix, as designated and agreed to by the commissioners under the 5th Article in the Treaty of 1794, between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain; thence, North, following the exploring line run and marked by the Surveyors of the two Governments in the years 1817 and 1818, under the fifth article of the treaty of Ghent, to its intersection with the river St. John and to the middle of the channel thereof: thence, up the middle of the main channel of said river St. John, to the mouth of the river St. Francis; thence, up the middle of the channel of the said river St. Francis, and of the lakes through which it flows, to the outlet of the Lake Pohenagamook; thence, Southwesterly, in a straight line to a point on the North West branch of the river St. John, which point shall be ten miles distant from the main branch of the St. John, in a straight line, and in the nearest direction; but if the said point shall be found to be less than seven miles from the nearest point or summit or crest of the highlands that divide those rivers which empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the river St. John, to a point 7 miles in a straight line from the said summit or crest; thence in a straight line in a course about South eight, degrees west to the point where the parallel of latitude of 49 deg. 25 min. north intersects the south west branch of the St. John; thence, southerly by the said branch, to the source thereof in the highlands at the Metjarinette portage; thence, down along the said highlands which divide the waters which empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the Atlantic Ocean, to the head of Hall's stream; thence down the middle of said stream till the line thus run intersects the old line of boundary surveyed and marked by Valentine and Collins previously to the year 1774, as the 45th degree of north latitude, and which has been known and understood to be the line of actual division between the States of New-York and Vermont on one side, and the British Province of Canada on the other; and, from said point of intersection, west along the said dividing line as heretofore known and understood to the Iroquois, or St. Lawrence River.

ARTICLE II.

It is moreover agreed, that, from the place where the joint commissioners terminated their labors, under the sixth article of the Treaty of Ghent, to wit: At a point in the Neebrik channel, near Muddy lake, the line shall run into and along the ship channel, between St. Joseph and St. Tammany Islands, to the division of the channel at or near the head of St. Joseph's Island; thence, turning eastwardly and northwardly, around the lower end of St. George's or Sugar Island, and following the middle of the channel which divides St. George's from St. Joseph's Island; thence, up the east Neebrik channel, nearest to St. George's Island, through the middle of Lake George; thence west of Jona's Island, into St. Mary's River, to a point in the middle of that river, about one mile above St. George's or Sugar Island, so as to appropriate and assign the said Island to the United States; thence adopting the line traced on the maps by the commissioners, through the river St. Mary and lake Superior, to a point north of Ile Royal in said lake one hundred yards to the north and east of Ile Chapeau, which last-mentioned island lies near the northeastern point of Ile Royal, where the line marked by the commissioners terminates; and from the last-mentioned point, southwesterly through the middle of the sound between Ile Royal and the northwestern main-land, to the mouth of Pigeon river, and at the said river to, and through, the north and south Fowl Lakes, to the Lakes of the height of Land, between Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods; thence along the water communication to Lake Saisaquinaga, and through that Lake; thence to and through Cypress Lake, Lac du Bois Blanc, Lac la Croix, Little Vermillion Lake, and Lake Namecan, and through the several smaller lakes, straits, or streams, connecting the lakes here mentioned, to that point in Lac la Pluie or Rainy Lake, at the Caudlere Falls, from which the Commissioners traced the line to the most northwestern point of the Lake of the Woods—thence along the said line to the said most northwestern point, being in logitude 49 deg. 23' 55" north, and in logitude 95 deg. 14' 38 west from the Observatory, at Greenwich; thence, according to existing treaties, due south to its intersection with the 49th parallel of north latitude, and along that parallel to the Rocky Mountains. It being understood that all the water communications, and all the usual portages along the line from Lake Superior to the Lake of the Woods: and also Grand Portage, from the shore of Lake Superior to the Pigeone River, as now actually used, shall be free and open to the use of the citizens and subjects of both countries.

ARTICLE III.

In order to promote the interests and encourage the industry of all the inhabitants of the countries watered by the River St. John and its tributaries, whether living within the State of Maine or the Province of New Brunswick, it is agreed that, where, by the provisions of the present treaty, the River St. John is declared to be the line of boundary, the navigation of said river shall be free and open to both parties, and shall in no way be obstructed by either; that all the produce of the forest, in logs, lumber, timber, boards, staves, or shingles, or of agriculture not being manufactured, grown on any of those parts of the State of Maine watered by the River St. John, or by its tributaries, of which fact reasonable evidence shall, if required, be produced, shall have free access into and through the said river and its tributaries, having their source within the State of Maine, to and from the seaport at the mouth of the River St. John, and to and round the Falls of said river, either by boats, rafts, or other conveyance: that when within the Province of New Brunswick, the said produce shall be dealt with as if it were the produce of said province: that, in like manner, the inhabitants of the Territory of the Upper St. John determined by this treaty to belong to her Britannic Majesty, shall have free access to and through the river for their produce, in those parts where the said river runs wholly through the State of Maine: provided always, that this agreement shall give no right to either party to interfere with any regulations not inconsistent with the terms of this treaty, which the Governments, respectively, of Maine or of New Brunswick may make respecting the navigation of the said river, when both banks thereof shall belong to the same party.

ARTICLE IV.

All grants of land heretofore made by either party, within the limits of the territory which by this treaty falls within the dominions of the other party, shall be held valid, ratified, and confirmed to the persons in possession under such grants, to the same extent as if such territory had by this treaty fallen within the dominions of the party by whom such grants were made; and all equitable possessary claims, arising from a possession and improvement of any lot or parcel of land by the person actually in possession, or by those under whom such person claims, for more than six years before the date of such treaty, shall, in like manner, be deemed valid, and be confirmed and quieted by a release to the person entitled thereto, of the title to such lot or parcel of land, so described as best to include the improvements made thereon; and in all other respects the two contracting parties agree to deal upon the most liberal principles of equity with settlers actually dwelling on the territory falling to them, respectively, which has heretofore been in dispute between them.

ARTICLE. V.

Whereas, in the course of the controversy respecting the disputed territory on the Northern Boundary, some moneys have been received by the authorities of Her Britannic Majesty's Province of New Brunswick, with the intention of preventing depredations on the forests of the said territory, which moneys were carried to a fund called the "Disputed Territory Fund," the proceeds whereof it was agreed should be hereafter paid over to the parties interested, in the proportions to be determined by a final settlement of boundaries: It is hereby agreed, that a correct account of all receipts and payments on the said fund, shall be delivered to the Government of the United States, within six months after the ratification of this treaty; and the proportions of the amount due thereon to the states of Maine and Massachusetts, and any bonds and securities appertaining thereto, shall be paid and delivered over to the Government of the United States; and the Government of the United States agree to receive for the use of, and pay over to the states of Maine and Massachusetts their perceptive portions of said fund; and further, to pay and satisfy said states, respectively, for all claims for expenses incurred by them in protecting the said heretofore disputed territory, and making a survey thereof in 1838; the Government of the United States agreeing with the states of Maine and Massachusetts to pay them the further sum of three hundred thousand dollars, in equal moieties, on account of their assent to the line of boundary described in this treaty, and in consideration of the equivalent received therefor, from the Government of Her Britannic Majesty.

ARTICLE VI.

It is furthermore understood and agreed, that for the purpose of running and tracing those parts of the line between the source of the St. Croix and the St. Lawrence River, which will require to be run and ascertained, and for marking the residue of said line by proper monuments on the land, two Commissioners shall be appointed, one by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, & one by Her Britannic Majesty; and the said Commissioners shall meet at Bangor, in the State of Maine, on the first day of May next, or as soon thereafter as may be, and shall proceed to mark the line above described; from the source of the St. Croix to the River St. John; and shall trace on proper marks the dividing line along said river, and along the river St. Francis, to the outlet of the Lake Pohenganook; and from the outlet of said Lake, they shall ascertain, fix, and mark by durable monuments upon the land, the line described in the first article of this treaty; and the said Commissioners shall make to each of their respective governments a joint report or declaration, under their hands and seals, designating such line of boundary, and shall accompany said report or declaration with maps certified by them to be true maps of the new boundary.

ARTICTE VII.

It is futher agreed, that the channels in the river St. Lawrence, on both sides of the Long Sault Islands, and of Barnhart Island; the channels in the river Detroit, on both sides of the island of Bois Blanc, and between that island and both the American and Canadian shores; and all the several channels and passages between the various islands lying near the junction of the river St. Clair, with the lake of that name, shall be equally free and open to the ships, vessels, and boats of both parties.

ARTICLE VIII.

The parties mutually stipulate that each shall prepare, equip and maintain in service, on the coast of Africa, a sufficient and adequate squadron, or naval force of vessels, of suitable numbers and description, to carry in all not less than eighty guns, to enforce separately and respectively the laws, rights and obligations of each of the two countries for the suppression of the Slave trade; the said squadrons to be independent of each other, but the two Governments stipulating, nevertheless to give such orders to the officers commanding their respective forces, as shall enable them most effectually to act in concert and co-operation, upon mutual consultation, as exigencies may arise, for the attainment of the true object of this article; copies of all such orders to be communicated by each Government to the other respectively.

ARTICLE IX.

Whereas, notwithstanding, all efforts which may be made on the Coast of Africa for suppressing the Slave Trade, the facilities for carrying on that traffic and avoiding the vigilance of cruisers by the fraudulent use of flags and other means, are so great, and the temptations for pursuing it, while a market can be found for slaves, so strong, as that the desired result may be long delayed, unless all markets be shut against the purchase of African negroes; the parties to this treaty agree that they will unite in all becoming representations and remonstrances with any and all Powers within whose dominions such markets are allowed to exist; and that they will urge upon all such Powers the propriety and duty of closing such markets at once and for ever.

ARTICLE X.

It is agreed that the United States and Her British Majesty shall, upon mutual requisitions by them, or their Ministers, officers, or authorities, respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged papers, committed within the jurisdiction of either, shall seek an asylum, or shall be found, within the territories of the other; provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged, shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime or offence had there been committed; and the respective judges and other magistrates of the two Governments shall have power, jurisdiction, and authority, upon complaint made under oath, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive or person so charged, that he may be brought before such judges or other magistrates, respectively, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining judge or magistrate, to certify the same to the proper executive authority, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of such fugitive. The expense of such apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by the party who makes the requisition, and receives the fugitive.

ARTICLE XI.

The eighth article of this treaty shall be in force for five years from the date of the ratification, and afterwards until one or the other party shall signify a wish to terminate it. The tenth article shall continue in force until one or the other party shall signify its wish to terminate it, and no longer.

ARTICLE XII.

The present treaty shall be duly ratified, and the mutual exchange of ratifications shall take place in London, within six months from the date hereof, or earlier if possible.

In faith whereof, we, the respective Plenipotentiaries, have signed this treaty, and have hereunto affixed our seals.

Done in duplicate, at Washington, the ninth day of August, Anno Domini, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two.

ASHBURTON, [SEAL.]
DANIEL WEBSTER. [SEAL.]

The Lord helpeth Man and Beast.—During his march to conquer the world, Alexander the Macedonian, came to a people in Africa, who dwelt in a remote and secluded corner in peaceful huts, and knew neither war nor conqueror. They led him to the hut of their chief, who received him hospitably, and placed before him golden dates, golden figs and bread of gold. Do you eat gold in this country? said Alexander. I take it for granted, (replied the chief) that thou wert able to find eatable food in thine own country. For what reason then art thou come among us? Your gold has not tempted me hither, said Alexander, but I would willingly become acquainted with your manners and customs. So be it, rejoined the other, sojourn among us as long as it pleaseth thee. At the close of this conversation, two citizens entered as into their court of justice. The plaintiff said, I bought of this man a piece of land, and as I was making a deep drain through it, I found a treasure. This is not mine, for I only bargained for the land, and not for any treasure that might be concealed beneath it; and yet the former owner of the land will not receive it. The defendant answered: I hope I have a conscience as well as my fellow citizen. I sold him the land with all its contingent, as well as existing advantages, and consequently the treasure inclusively.

The chief, who was at the same time their supreme judge, recapitulated their words, in order that the parties might see whether or no he understood them aright. Then after some reflection said: Thou hast a son, friend, I believe? Yes! And thou (addressing the other) a daughter? Yes! —Well then, let thy son marry thy daughter, and bestow the treasure on the young couple for their marriage portion. Alexander remained surprised and perplexed. Think you my sentence unjust? the chief asked him. Oh, no, replied Alexander, but it astonishes me. And how, then, rejoined the chief, would the case have been decided in your country?—To confess the truth, said Alexander, we should have taken both parties into custody, and have seized the treasure for the king's use. For the king's use! exclaimed the chief, now in his turn astonished. Does the sun shine on that country? —O yes! Does it rain there?—Assuredly. Wonderful! But are there tame animals in the country that live on the grass and green herbs? Very many, and of many kinds. Aye, that must be the cause, said the chief; for the sake of those innocent animals the All-gracious Being continues to let the sun shine and the rain drop down on your country. —Coleridge.

When John, duke of Anjou advanced towards Naples, with a large army to invade that city, he placed upon his colours these words of the Evangelist: "A man was sent whose name was John." Alphonso of Arragon, who defended the city, answered him by a similar device—"He came and they received him not."

A clergyman meeting a particular friend, asked him why he never came to hear him preach; He answered. "I am afraid of disturbing your solitude."

Be slow in choosing a friend, and slow to change him; courteous to all; intimate with few; slight no man for his meanness, nor esteem anyone for their wealth and greatness.

PICTURES OF MISERY.

It is common for busy and active men to behold the occupations of the retired and the contemplative person with contempt. They consider his speculations as idle and unproductive; as they participate in none of his feelings, they are strangers to his motives, his views, and his delights; they behold him elaborately employed on what they conceive forwards none of the interests of life, contributes to none of its gratifications, removes none of its inconveniences: they conclude, therefore, that he is led away by the delusions of futile philosophy, that he labours for no good, and lives to no end. Of the various frames of mind which they observe in him, no one seems to predominate more, and none appears to them more absurd, than sadness, which seems, in some degree, to pervade all his views, and shed a solemn tinge over all his thoughts. Sadness, arising from no personal grief, and connected with no individual concern, they regard as moonstruck melancholy, the effect of a mind overcast with constitutional gloom, and diseased with habits of vain and fanciful speculation.—'We can share with the sorrows of the unfortunate,' say they, 'but this monastic spleen merits only our derision; it tends to no beneficial purpose, it benefits neither its possessor nor society.' Those who have thought a little more on this subject than the gay and busy crowd will draw conclusions of a different nature. That there is a sadness springing from the noblest and purest sources, a sadness friendly to the human heart, and, by direct consequence, to human nature in general, is a truth which a little illustration will render tolerably clear, and which, when understood in its full force, may probably convert contempt and ridicule into respect.

I set out, then, with the proposition, that the man who thinks deeply, especially if his reading be extensive, will, unless his heart be very cold and very light, become habituated to a pensive, or, with more propriety, a mournful cast of thought. This will arise from two or more particular sources—from the view of human nature in general, as demonstrated by the experience both of past and present times, and from the contemplation of individual instances of human depravity and of human suffering. The first of these is, indeed, the last in the order of time, for his general views of humanity are in a manner consequential, or resulting from a special; but I have inverted that order for the sake of perspicuity.

Of those who have occasionally thought on these subjects, I may, with perfect assurance of their reply, inquire what have been their sensations when they have, for a moment, attained a more enlarged and capacious notion of the state of man in all its bearings and dependencies. They have found, and the profoundest philosophers have done no more, that they are enveloped in mystery, and that the mystery of man's situation is not without alarming and fearful circumstances. They have discovered that all they know of themselves is that they live, but that from whence they came or whither they are going, is by nature altogether hidden; that impenetrable gloom surrounds them on every side, and that they even hold their morrow on the credit of to day, when it is, in fact, buried in the vague and indistinct gulf of the ages to come!—These are reflections deeply interesting, and lead to others so awful, that many gladly shut their eyes on the giddy and unfathomable depths which seem to stretch before them. The meditative man, however, endeavours to pursue them to the farthest stretch of the reasoning powers, and to enlarge his conceptions of the mysteries of his own existence; and the more he learns, and the deeper he penetrates, the more cause does he find for being serious, and the more inducements to be continually thoughtful.

If, again, we turn from the condition of mortal existence, considered in the abstract, to the qualities and characters of man, and his condition in a state of society, we see things perhaps equally strange and infinitely more affecting.—In the economy of creation, we perceive nothing inconsistent with the power of an all-wise and all-merciful God A perfect harmony runs through all the parts of the universe. Plato's sirens sing not only from the planetary octave, but through all the minutest divisions of the stupendous whole; order, beauty, and perfection, the traces of the great Architect, glow through every particle of his work. At man, however, we stop: there is one exception. The harmony of order ceases, and vice and misery disturb the beautiful consistency of creation, and bring us first acquainted with positive evil. We behold men carried irresistibly away by corrupt principles and vicious inclinations, indulging in propensities, destructive as well to themselves as to those around them; the stronger oppressing the weaker, and the bad persecuting the good! we see the depraved in prosperity, the virtuous in adversity, the guilty unpunished, the deserving overwhelmed with unprovoked misfortunes. From hence we are tempted to think, that He, whose arm holds the planets in their course, and directs the comets along their eccentric orbits, ceases to exercise his providence over the affairs of mankind, and leaves them to be governed and directed by the impulses of a corrupt heart, or the blind workings of chance alone. Yet this is inconsistent both with the wisdom and goodness of the Deity. If God permit evil, he causes it: the difference is casuistical. We are led therefore, to conclude, that it was not always thus: that man was created in a far different and far happier condition; but that, by some means or othet, he has forfeited the protection of his Maker. Here then is a mystery. The ancients, led by reasonings alone, perceived it with amazement, but did not solve the problem. They attempted some explanation of it by the fame fiction of a golden age and its cession, where, by a circular mode of reasoning, they attribute the introduction of vice to their gods having deserted the earth, and the desertion of the gods to the introduction of vice. This, however, was the logic of the poets: the philosophers disregarded the fable, but did not dispute the fact it was intended to account for. They often hint at human degeneracy, and some unknown curse hanging over our being, and even coming into the world along with us. Pliny, in the preface to his seventh book, has this remarkable passage: "The animal about to rule over the rest of the created animals lies weeping, bound hand and foot, making his first entrance upon life with sharp pangs, and this for no other crime than that he is born man."—Cicero, in a passage, for the presevation of which we are indebted to St. Augustine, gives a yet stronger idea of an existing degeneracy in human nature:—'Man,' says he, 'comes into existence, not as from the hands of a mother, but of a step-dame nature, with a body feeble, naked, and fragile, and a mind exposed to anxiety and care, abject in fear, unmeet for labour, prone to licentiousness, in which, however, there still dwell some sparks of the divine mind, though obscured, and, as it were, in ruins.' And, in another place, he intimates it as a current opinion, that man comes into the world as into a state of punishment expiatory of crimes committed in some previous stage of existence, of which we now retain no recollection.

From these proofs, and from daily observation and experience, there is every ground for concluding that man is in a state of misery and depravity quite inconsistent with the happiness for which, by a benevolent God, he must have been created. We see glaring marks of this in our times. Prejudice alone blinds us to the absurdity and the horror of those systematic murders which go by the name of wars, where man falls on man, brother slaughters brother; where death, in every variety of horror, preys 'on the finely-fibred human frame,' and where the cries of the widow and the orphan rise up to heaven long after the thunder of the fight and the clang of arms have ceased, and the bones of sons, brothers, and husbands slain are grown white on the field. Customs like these vouch, with most miraculous organs, for the depravity of the human heart, and these are not the most mournful of those considerations which present themselves to the mind of the thinking man.

Private life is equally fertile in calamitous perversion of reason, and extreme accumulation of misery. On the one hand, we see a large proportion of men sedulously employed in the eduction of their own ruin, pursuing vice in all its varieties, and sacrificing the peace and happiness of the innocent and unoffending to their own brutal gratifications; and on the other, pain, misfortune, and misery, overwhelming alike the good and the bad, the provident and the improvident. But too general a view would distract our attention: let the reader pardon me if I suddenly draw him away from the survey of the crowds of life to a few detached scenes. we will select a single picture at random. The character is common.

Behold that beautiful female, who is rallying a well dressed young man with so much gaiety and humour? Did you ever see so lovely a countenance? There is an expression of vivacity in her fine dark eye which quite captivates one; and her smile, were it a little less bold, would be bewitching. How gay and careless she seems! One would suppose she had a very light and happy heart. Alas! how appearances deceive! This gaiety is all feigned. It is her business to please, and beneath a fair and painted outside she conceals an unquiet and forlorn breast. When she was yet very young, an engaging but dissolute young man took advantage of her simplicity, and of the affection with which he had inspired her, to betray her virtue. At first her infamy cost her many tears; but habit wore away this remorse, leaving only a kind of indistinct regret, and, as she fondly loved her betrayer, she experienced, at times, a mingled pleasure even in this abandoned situation. But this was soon over. Her lover, on pretence of a journey into the country, left her for ever. She soon afterwards heard of his marriage, with an agony of grief which few can adequately conceive, and none describe. The calls of want, however, soon subdued the more distracting ebullitions of angush. She had no choice left; all the gates of virtue were shut upon her; and though she really abhorred the course, she was obliged to betake herself to vice for support. Her next keeper possessed her person without her heart. She has since passed through several hands, and has found, by bitter experience, that the vicious, on whose generosity she is thrown, are devoid of all feeling but that of self-gratification, and that even the wages of prostitution are reluctantly and grudgingly paid. She now looks on all men as sharpers. She smiles but to entangle and destroy; and while she simulates fondness, is intent only on the extorting of that, at best poor pittance, which her necessities loudly demand. Thoughtless as she may seem, she is not without an idea of her forlorn and wretched situation, and she looks only to sudden death as her refuge, against that time when her charms shall cease to allure the eye of incontinence, when even the lowest haunts of infamy shall be shut against her, and, without a friend or a hope, she must sink under the pressure of want and disease.

But we will now shift the scene a little, and select another object. Behold yon poor weary wretch, who, with a child wrapt in her arms, with difficulty drags along the road. The man with a knapsack, who is walking before her, is her husband, and is marching to join his regiment. He has been spending, at a dram-shop in the town they have just left, the supply which the pale and weak appearance of his wife proclaims was necessary for her sustenance, He is now half drunk, and is venting the artificial spirits which intoxication excites in the abuse of his weary helpmate behind him. She seems to listen to his reproaches in patient silence. Her face will tell you more than many words, as, with a warm and meaning look, she surveys the little wretch who is asleep on her arms. The turbulent brutality of the man excites no attention: she is pondering on the future chance of life, and the probable lot of her heedless little one.

One other picture, and I have done. The man pacing with a slow step and languid aspect over yon prison-court was once a fine dashing fellow, the admiration of the ladies, and the envy of the men. He is the only representative of a once respectable family, and is brought to this situation by unlimited indulgence at that time when the check is most necessary. He began to figure in genteel life at an early age. His misjudging mother to whose sole care he was left, thinking no alliance too good for her darling, cheerfully supplied his extravagance, under the idea that it would not last long, and that it would enable him to shine in those circles where she wished him to rise. But he soon found that habits of prodigality, once well gained, are never eradicated. His fortune, though genteel, was not adequate to such habits of expense. His unhappy parent lived to see him make a degrading alliance, and come in danger of a jail, and then died of a broken heart. His affairs soon wound themselves up. His debts were enormous, and he had nothing to pay them with. He has now been in that prison many years, and since he is excluded from the benefit of an insolvency act, he has made up his mind to the idea of ending his days there. His wife, whose beauty had decoyed him, since she found he could not support her, deserted him for those who could, leaving him, without friend or companion, to pace, with measured steps, over the court of a country jail, and endeavour to beguile the lassitude of imprisonment, by thinking on the days that are gone, or counting the squares in his grated window in every possible direction, backwards, forwards, and across, till he sighs to find the sum always the same, and that the more anxiously we strive to beguile the moments in their course, the more sluggishly they travel.

If these are accurate pictures of some of the varieties of human suffering, and if such pictures are common even to triteness, what conclusions must we draw as to the condition of man in general, and what must be the prevailing frame of mind of him who meditates much on these subjects, and who, embracing the whole tissue of causes and effects, sees Misery invariably the offspring of Vice, and Vice existing in hostility to the intentions and wishes of God? Let the meditative man turn where he will, he finds traces of the depraved state of Nature, and her consequent misery. History presents him with little but murder, treachery, and crimes of every description. Biography only strengthens the view by concentrating it. The philosophers remind him of the existence of evil, by their lessons how to avoid or endure it; and the very poets themselves afford him pleasure, not unconnected with regret, as, either by contrast, exemplification, or deduction, they bring the world and its circumstances before his eyes

That such a one, then, is prone to sadness, who will wonder? If such meditations are beneficial, who will blame them? The discovery of evil naturally leads us to contribute our mite towards the alleviation of the wretchedness is introduces. While we lament vice, we learn to shun it ourselves, and to endeavour, if possible, to arrest its progress in those around us; and in these high and lofty speculations, we are insensibly, led to think humbly of ourselves, and to lift up our thoughts to Him who is alone the fountain of all perfection and the source of all good.

MELANCHOLY.

Philosophers have divested themselves of their natural apathy, and poets have risen above themselves, in descanting on the pleasures of Melancholy. There is no mind so gross, no understanding so uncultivated, as to be incapable, at certain moments, and amid certain combinations, of feeling that sublime influence upon the spirits which steals the soul from the petty anxieties of the world

'And fits it to hold converse with the gods.'

I must confess, if such there be who never felt the divine abstraction, I envey them not their insensibility. For my own part, it is from the indulgence of this soothing power that I derive the most exquisite of gratification; at the calm hour of moonlight, amid all the sublime serenity, the dead stillness of the night; or when the howling storm rages in the heavens, the rain pelts on my roof, and the winds whistle through the crannies of my apartment; I feel the divine mood of melancholy upon me; i imagine myself placed upon an eminence, above the crowds who pant below in the dusty tracks of wealth and honour. The black catalogue of crimes and of vice, the sad tissue of wretchedness and woe, passes in review before me, and I look down upon man with an eye of pity and commisseration. Though the scenes which I survey be mournful, and the ideas they excite equally sombre; though the tears gush as I contemplate them, and my heart feels heavy with the sorrowful emotions which they inspire; yet are they not unaccompanied with sensations of the purest and most ecstatic bliss.

It is to the spectator alone that Melancholy is forbidding; in herself she is soft and interesting, and capable of affording pure and unalloyed delight. Ask the lover why he muses by the side of the purling brook, or plunges into the deep gloom of the forest? Ask the unfortunate why he seeks the still shades of solitude? or the man who feels the pangs of disappointed ambition, why he retires into the silent walks of seclusion? and he will tell you that he derives a pleasure therefrom which nothing else can impart. It is the delight of Melancholy; but the melancholy of these beings is as far removed from that of the philosopher, as are the narrow and contracted complaints of selfishness from the mournful regrets of expansive philanthropy; as are the desponding intervals of insanity from the occasional depressions of benevolent sensibility.

The man who has attained that calm equanimity which qualifies him to look down upon the petty evils of life with indifference; who can so far conquer the weakness of nature as to consider the sufferings of the individual of little moment, when put in competition with the welfare of the community, is alone the true philosopher. His melancholy is not excited by the retrospcet of his own misfortunes; it has its rise from the contemplation of the miseries incident to life, and the evils which obtrude themselves upon society, and interrupt the harmony of nature. It would be arrogating too much merit to myself to assert that I have a just claim to the title of a philosopher, as it is here defined; or to say that the speculations of my melancholy hours are equally disinterested: be this as it may, I have determined to present my solitary effusions to the public; they will at least have the merit of novelty to recommend them, and may possibly, in some measure, be instrumental in the melioration of the human heart, or the correction of false prepossessions This is the height of my ambition; this once attained, and my end will be fully accomplished. One thing I can safely promise, though far from being the coinages of a heart at ease, they will contain neither the querulous captiousness of misfortunes, nor the bitter taunts of misanthropy. Society is a chain of which I am merely a link; all men are my associates in error; and though some may have gone farther in the ways of guilt than myself, yet it is not in me to sit in judgment upon them; it is mine to treat them rather in pity than in anger, to lament their crimes, and weep over their sufferings. As these papers will be the amusement of those hours of relaxation, when the mind recedes from the vexations of business, and sinks into itself for a moment of solitary ease, rather than the efforts of literary leisure, the reader will not expect to find in them unusual elegance of language, or studied propriety of style. In the short and necessary intervals of cessation from the anxieties of an irksome employment, one finds little time to be solicitous about expression. If, therefore, the fervour of a glowing mind expresses itself in too warm and luxuriant a manner for the cold ear of dull properity, let the fastidious critic find a selfish pleasure in decrying it. To cristicism melancholy is indifferent.

WEST COAST OF AFRICA.—APPENDIX TO THE PARLIAMENTARY REPORT.

In November, 1840, Dr. Madden, who was formerly a stipendiary magistrate in the West Indies, and subsequently connected with the Mixed Commission at Havannah, received from Lord John Russell instructions to proceed as commissioner to investigate various matters connected with the administration and condition of the British settlements on the West Coast of Africa. His inquiry was to be opened on the Gold Coast. Thence he was to proceed to Sierra Leone and the settlements on the river Gambia, with the view of ascertaining their various advantages and disadvantages. Dr. Madden was instructed by the Colonial Secretary to direct his particular attention to the slave trade, as representations had been made to Government by Mr. Maclean, that facilities had been afforded to the slave traders by the magistrates and members of the Council at Cape Coast Castle. He was also to investigate the subject of mortality, and to ascertain whether the destruction of human life which occured to Europeans in that portion of the world was to be attributed to the general nature of the coast, the peculiar situation of the settlements, or the want of care in respect to sewerage, ventilation, or medical precaution. He was directed to make inquiry as to the prospects of emigration from Sierra Leone to the British West India colonies, and to ascertain whether there was any considerable class of persons disposed to emigrate to these colonies. With these instructions, Dr. Madden sailed to the western coast of Africa. Having previously published in our columns copious extracts from the report of the Select Committee on the Western Coast of Africa, it is now our purpose to lay before the public an abstract of the appendix to that report. The appendix contains many points of extreme interest. In 1827, owing to the heavy expense incurred by Sir Charles M'Carthy in his disastrous war with the Ashantees, the English Government withdrew all the public establishments from the coast, and gave up the forts to the merchants, to be held by them as factories. It was then determined that the forts should be delivered over to the merchants on the following conditions—viz, that the two principal forts of Cape Coast Castle and Accra should remain dependencies of Sierra Leone, that British law should continue in force there, and that the affairs of the forts should be chiefly managed by a committee of merchants of London, appointed by the Government. Five of the merchants were to be formed into a council of magistrates for the purpose of regulating the internal affairs of the forts &c. The sum of 4,000*l.* per annum was to be granted to the London committee, to prepare the building and garrison the forts. The forts formerly occupied by the African committee were the following:—Appolonia, Succondee, Commerda, Coromantyn, Tantumquarry, Winebah, and Whydah.

The forts that are now kept up are, Cape Coast Castle, James Fort, Accra, Anamaboe, and Dixcove. Cape Coast Castle is the largest of these forts. The anomalous system of government pursued, and the total absence of a judicial establishment in Cape Coast Castle, are much complained of. The government of this settlement is administered by a President of the Council, a military commandant, and a surgeon. The following are their respective salaries:—

President of the Council	£620
Secretary	300
Commandant of troops	200
Surgeon	200

The troops at Cape Coast Castle are commanded by an European. The native population of Cape Coast Castle is 5,000; European merchants, 12; missionaries, 6; and other white resident, 12 or more. The Europeans occupy about 18 stone houses, valued at 1,000*l.* to 2,000*l.* sterling each. The natives live in "swish" houses made of mud, which becomes hard and durable, and they last as long as the roof resists the rain. The authorities of the Castle exercise power over the whole of the country, from Dixcove to Accra, an extent of 120 miles. Civilization is said to be confined within the limits of the Castle. The whole country about Cape Coast Castle is one great wilderness of verdure. It is only about 15 or 20 miles from the sea-side where civilization is carried on to any extent. From this distance the plantains, yams, cassava, andcorn are carried on the heads of the women to market, with their infants slung across their backs. The men treat the women in the most revolting manner, making them do all the drudgery of labour. The consequence of this brutal treatment are, the women suffer from premature exhaustion, decrepitude, and decay. The soil is poor on the sea-side, but four miles inland it is fit for any kind of tropical produce. Mr. Swansey made an attempt to introduce the growth of cotton and coffee, and spent much time and money in the experiment. At his death the cultivation of cotton was neglected. The cotton trees are now growing wild, and the cultivation is entirely given up. The coffee grown on the western coast of Africa is said to be nearly approaching in quality to that of Mocha, but the heavy duty, 1s. 3d. per pound, imposed on its importation into England amounts to an absolute prohibition of its growth. The trade of Cape Coast has considerably increased of late years.

The following tabular statement of the exports and imports for the year 1839 will give some idea of the relative commercial advantages of the different settlements at Cape Coast, Sierra Leone, and Gambia—

	Exports from	Imports into
Cape Coast ...	194,576	354,460
Sierra Leone ...	58,440	103,086
Gambia	162,789	153,903
	415,805	611,449

Anamaboe appears to be better adapted for trade with Ashantee than Cape Coast. It is situated abont 11 miles from the former place. It is stated, that in a few years Anamaboe will have the greater part of the trade of Cape Coast. The population of the town is 4,100. The fort is built on land purchased from the Fantee nation. The mortality amongst the garrison has been for the last five years 1 in 17. In 1840 the imports amounted to 50,000*l.*; the exports to 60.000*l.* The trade is principally carried on in London and Bristol ships. The climate is the same as at Cape Coast. The rains set in the month of May, and continue for four months, which months are the most sickly in the year.

Accra is 75 miles to the eastward of Cape Coast. A considerable trade is carried on in this port. The palm oil trade is considerably on the increase. The commandant of the fort, who administers the government, has 100*l.* a year. The native population is 4,000. The only place of worship is one connected with the Wesleyan missionaries.

34 British and 41 foreign vessels visited British Accra last year. The soil on the coast is light and sandy, but a few miles inland it is excellent, though there is little cultivation, except of vegetables. The Danes have established a coffee plantation, which is said to produce excellent coffee.

The only difficulty in finding labourers or any species of prædial employment is the ordinary rate of wages, which is only 5s. currency a month, and which is a very inadequate remuneration for a man's labour. The gold dust which is brought down from the interior is obtained from the alluvial sands and soil, and is washed down from the mountains composed of granite, gneiss, and quartz. At Cape Coast even the sweepings of the streets are impregnated with gold. These are gathered up and subjected to repeated washings, and the average sum that a whole day's labour at this employment will bring a woman will not exceed 2d. or 3d. a day. Accra is divided into British, Dutch, and Danish Accra; the Dutch fort and settlement are of less importance than the Danish; the fort of the latter, called Christian-burg, is on a large scale. It has about 80 or 90 guns mounted.

Dixcove.—This district extends for 40 miles along the sea-coast, and about 30 miles into the interior. The imports and exports are said to be about 20,000*l.* or 30,000*l.* Last year 40 British vessels anchored in the roadstead.

Elmina is the largest and most important of the Dutch forts and settlements on the Gold Coast, and is situated nine miles to the westward of Cape Coast. The town is considerable, and the trade with Ashantee is of some importance. In this portion of the appendix will be found the various suggestions made by the select committee with the view of altering the present system of government on the Gold Coast.

Slavery on the Gold Coast prevails to a great extent among the natives. Those slaves which are chiefly for domestic service, and not for prædial labour, are treated with mildness, and are consequently comparatively happy. The Fantees make no wars now to obtain their slaves; those which they hold are either born in bondage, or are what are called "slaves of the house," and are more leniently treated than others; or are purchased in the neighbouring countries, were the slave-trade is still carried on; or they are taken in "pawn" either for the debts of others or themselves; and, not being able to pay these debts, they lapse into slavery.

The palm-oil trade is carried on to a considerable extent in the river Bonny. The average import of this oil into the port of Liverpool for some years past has been about 12,000 tons a year, value about 400,000*l.* Three-fourths of this oil are exported from the Bonny and the other outlets of the Niger, and it gives employment to 12 or 15,000 tons of shipping per annum. The price of palm oil, duty paid, varies from 33*l.* to 34*l.* per tun.

The people of Bonny, who have managed to get this trade into their hands, are one of the most barbarous, dishonest, and treacherous races in this part of Africa. Our extensive commercial relations with them for nearly 30 years have not produced any change in their savage customs and superstitions. By all accounts, even by the admissions of the masters of the merchant vessels in this trade, they have not undergone the least improvement.

"The following account of one of their horrid practices was given me (says the Doctor) by one of those captains who was himself cognizant of the circumstances he described, in a case of human sacrifice, which occurred in the year 1840;—My informant and the other masters of English vessles then at anchor in the Bonny, when they went ashore were frequently in the habit of seeing a little negro girl, about 10 years of age, who had been brought down from the upper country, and placed under the charge of one of the natives at Bonny previously to being sacrificed by the jujumen or priests of that place. The masters of the British vessels frequently saw the child, and were not ignorant of the intended sacrifice of it. This kind of sacrifice, it seems, is made once in each king's reign. The child must be without spot or blemish. If there is the slightest eruption on the skin, or the smallest scratch, the child is held unfit for sacrifice. Consequently, the person placed in charge of the child was extremely careful to preserve it from hurt or injury, and in the present case seemed in the greatest alarm at all times lest any accident should happen to it. The little girl was suffered to go about, to do whatever she liked, and no one dared to punish or to contradict her. On the appointed day she was placed on a stage of planks placed across a canoe, and taken by some of the Bonny people over the bar of the river. The men in the canoe kept telling her they were going to send her to see her father and mother; and while engaging her attention in this manner, they slipped the stage on which the poor child was sitting into the sea, and, consigning her to the fetish, they left her to go down. The people in the canoe then pulled ashore as fast as possible; and at the very time this atrocity was suffered to be committed a tremendous tornado set in, and the Dalhousie Castle, a British vessel loading in the river, was totally wrecked on the bar.

"This event, coupled with the murder that preceded it, made a great sensation at the time. The Bonny men could not bear to speak of it or to be spoken to of it; and the only reason given for this sacrifice was, that it was 'to do good to Bonny men.' I inquired why those who had seen the child so frequently had not interfered with the King to prevent such an act? If they had been defrauded of a few dollars' worth of rum or tobacco, would they not immediately have remonstrated with King Peppel? But this was not a matter of trade, and there was no Englishman there to meddle with it. Surely if there had been any British agent in this place he would not have suffered this act to be committed without remonstrating against its barbarity. But it is not the interest of humanity alone that would seem to require the protection of some consular agent of ours in this place; the interests of our trade demand it likewise. The manner in which the trade is carried on in the Bonny, and in which the natives and the crews of these ships are occasionally treated by the masters, calls for immediate attention.

"The commanding naval officer on this station has been frequently obliged to visit the Bonny, and take cognizance of cases of violence and injustice on the part of these persons either against the natives or their own people."

The following is a return of the expenditure at Cape Coast Castle and its dependencies, for 1838, 1839, and 1840, up to the 30th of September:—

	1838.	1839.	1840.

It would appear from the examination of Mr. President Maclean that the prevailing diseases of which the Europeans die at Cape Coast Castle are remittent or intermittent fevers and dysentery. The majority of Europeans are generally taken off between the ages of 18 and 30. This locality is considered healthy when compared with Jamaica, Cuba, or Barbadoes. The most sickly part of the year is from the 20th of July to the 20th of September. The remittent and intermittent fevers which prevail during these months (May, June, July, and August) are generally more fatal to those who have arrived from Europe late in life than to those who arrive out young. It appears from President Maclean's account, that the total abstinence from the use of spirits or other intoxicating drinks is the reverse of beneficial to those persons arriving from Europe, even when they may have practised it safely and beneficially there. Dr. Cobbold, the medical officer resident at Cape Coast Castle, when examined upon the same point, in answer to the question, whether the moderate use of wine, spirits, and malt liquors was more calculated than the total abstinence from them to maintain a state of health in which the miasma of fever has the least influence on it, replies, "Malt liquor I strongly recommend in moderation, as also spirits and wine; but either one or the other, the same person not using all."

Gambia.—In 1618 a company was formed in England with the view of establishing a trade on the river Gambia. The countries in Upper Gambia were said to be rich in gold, and even as far back as 1618 Timbuctoo was considered the El Dorado of this part of the world. The government of Gambia is administerded by a Lieutenant-Governor, appointed by the Crown. The colony is a dependency of Sierra Leone, and has no council or legislative body. The total imports and exports of this settlement from 1836 to 1840 were as follows:—

IMPORTS.

Year.	£
1836	114,772
1837	99,762
1838	105,625
1839	153,903
1840	105,397

EXPORTS.

Year.	£
1836	147,732
1837	138,226
1838	129,498
1839	162,789
1840	124,669

The expenditure for the government, military protection, and for the maintenance of liberated Africans of the Gambia, in the year 1839, amounted to 18,588*l.* 12s. 3 1-2d. Of this amount the colony defrayed the sum of 6,002*l.* 9s. 10 1-2d.

The expenditure of the military establishment included in the first amount was 8,481*l.* 18s. 5 1-2d.; and the expenditure for the liberated African department, included also in it, amounted to 2,238*l.* 0s. 2 3-4d.

The maintenance of the settlement and its establishments then, deducing the amount defrayed by the colony, costs Great Britain the sum of 12,586*l.* 2s. 5d. a year.

I do not think any reduction can be made in the establishments of the Gambia; on the contrary, I think it is necessary to add to them.

There is neither church, chaplain, school, nor teacher maintained by the Government in this colony.

The salaries of the principal Government officers are the following:—

Lieutenant-Governor, per annum ...	£800
Lieutenant-Governor, allowance for table-money	200
Colonial Secretary ... ... And Director of Liberated African Department	450
Queen's Advocate	200
Commandant of M'Carthy's Island ...	500
Colonial Surgeon	130
And forage for one horse	460
Collector of the customs	41
Clerk of the customs	200
Harbour-master	75
	100

There are, besides first and second clerks, clerks of the courts, clerks of the markets, gaolers, and constables, at fixed salaries.

The amount of revenue collected since the formation of the settlements in 1816 to 1826, according to the report of the Commissioners of Inquiry of 1826, amounted for these 10 years to the sum of 21,263*l.* 7s. 7d.

It averaged, in short, upwards of 2,000*l.* a year up to 1826. It amounted, in 1839, in fixed revenues, to 7,809*l.* 12s., and incidental revenues to 94*l.* 4s. 1d. Total, 7,963*l.* 19s. 1d.

Bissaos is the great stronghold of the Portuguese slave-trade. The island of Bulama is situated 30 miles to the southward of Bissaos, at the entrance of the Rio Grande. It is claimed both by the British and Portuguese. The Nunez lies about 300 miles to the southward of the Gambia. A great deal of legal and illegal trade is carried on in this river. On the subject of "fugitive slaves in British settlements," the appendix before us contains much valuable information and reflection. It is well known that slaves taking refuge in our colonies are held entitled to an asylum, and that they ought not to be given up, on any British territory, by the authorities to persons claiming them as slaves. In our British settlements on the western coast of Africa there have been several instances of fugitive slaves being given up, in defiance of the positive injunctions of Government, upon the flimsy pretext or the hypothesis, that there is a difference between a fugitive slave who is accused of no crime but that of flight from slavery by his late master, and one who has fled from slavery, and is charged with some crime when his master demands the restoration of the slave from the authorities.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, DECEMBER 23, 1842.

Last days of Amurah.—This celebrated African chieftan whose capture we noticed directly after it occurred perished by the basest perfidy.

For years his prowess and activity maintained a successful contest against the whole of Sharkah's forces, and more than once he drove them back upon the very gates of Kendamah. The whole Vey country at length took the alarm and combined against him. Being closely pressed by an over whelming force, Amurah retired to a fastness which he had prepared against reverses. The walls of this town instead of being the rude fragile stoccade of which the enclosures of african "war towns" are usually made to consist, were of earth, of great thickness and solidity. They were constructed of successive strata of well digested clay. The material after having been sufficiently moistened with water, and thoroughly masticated by innumerable thumps of innumerable lusty feet, was conveyed to the site of the superstructure. Early in the morning a layer of a certain depth and the proper thickness was laid on, and left during the day exposed to the full force of the sun. By next morning it was sufficiently hard, when another was laid on. Every morning the process was repeated until the walls attained the intended height. A covering was then thrown over them projecting on each side so as to protect them from the attack of rain. He farther strengthened his position by a deep ditch around the whole fortification.

Here Amurah retired, and whenever his assailants would venture "to close" his barricade his "big guns" and musketry from the portholes and embrasures would chide their rashness, and teach them that Amurah "be man" and was not to be played with "all same he be boy."

This fortification was the walls of Babylon to his cowardly assailants, and they regarded scaling the moon and carrying this place by storm fetes of equal practicability.

But what they wanted courage to do manfully, they achieved by expedient. Beyond the reach of Amurah's big guns, they erected a sufficient number of "small towns" at convenient distances to encircle the whole enclosure, determined to prevent his egress and starve him into submission. Having finished their "towns" they sent off and bought a "war"—that is procured a large number of mercenaries, stipulating that each one should pay himself in the event of a breaking up with whatever he should be able to steal. Although the "lion" was thus completely hemmed in, he was able to hold out a long time. His foresight had provided a large store of provisions, and his walls enclosed an unfailing spring of excellent water.

After some months of delay, the enemy sent a flag of truce, and requested a parley. Amurah consented, and appearing upon the walls held a conference, Conditions were submitted by "Prince Mannah" the commander-in-chief which the haughty spirit of Amurah rejected indignantly, and the conference was about coming to an abrupt close, when the latter discovered among his enemies the son of his ancient friend King "Kiamo." Amurah immediately called him, and the following conversation ensued—

Amurah.—Kiamo, is your father dead?

Kiamo.——Yes.

Amurah.—Who be king in him place?

Kiamo.——Me be king.

Amurah.—What you come do here?

Kiamo.——I come for make dis war set. All country spoil for dis war palaver.

Amurah.—How dis war go set?

Kiamo——You must stop fight

Amurah.—Me one fight? You no see all dem people dem gun? me one fight?

Kiamo.——You one no fight—no more spose you stop fight—war can done.

Amurah—Me stop fight for dem kid me all same I be fowl—no I cant stop fight.

Kiamo——Spose you stop, dem stop too.

Amurah.—Who say so.

Kiamo.——He say so—

Amurah.—Spose I stop what dey can do wid me.

Here Mannah and all the headmen united in assuring him protection and honorable treatment if he would lie down his arms. He requested a day to consider the matter, when he retired from the wall and they to their "towns."

The next day Amurah called them to the walls and after obtaining from them solemn assurance of protection of his property his followers and himself, he opened the gates and they marched in. As soon as they had entered Manah dispatched a messenger to his royal Father, King Shakah, informing him they had possession of the town and requesting to know if he should carry the "lion" to Kendamah. The King sent this laconic answer.—If you think it would be safe. Mannah saw at once the pleasure of his father, and his own feelings were strictly accordant with his father's, as he had long regarded Amurah a dangerous rival, who might one day prove an insuperable obstacle in his way to the "horsetail."

Having pledged to Amurah the most solemn assurance of protection and safety, it required some days of anxious and solicitous planning to furnish a pretext for his treacherous and bloody purpose. This he at length found in the haughty and indomitable spirit of his intended victim. They had not been long in possession before Amurah penetrated their design and in the sullenness of his character had resolved to meet his fate with calmness. As he was one morning reclining in his hammock, one of Mannah's slaves (tutored for the business) approached and stood near him. Indignant at the unusual familiarity of such a character he demanded what he wanted—bid him begone and emptied the vial of his wrath, by adding "you stink" the highest degree of indignity in the estimation of an african. The insolent varlet maintaining his position, Amurah said, I know what you want—your master sent you—he wants to kill me. He did not take my town—I let him in—I had plenty rice and water and could have fought much longer. But he said if I let him in he would make peace and now he wants to kill me. The slave went off. In a few moments a rush was made upon him where he lay. He now saw his hour was come. He offered no resistance, but said he had only one request to make—that being a Mussulman he wished time for devotion. For once the savages delayed for a few moments to murder a fallen enemy. As soon as the last word of his prayer fell from his lips, they threw him to the ground tied him and cut his throat.

Amurah's mother hearing an unusual bustle enquired for her son. Some of the fiends took her by the hand and said they would lead her where he was. A moment & she beheld him weltering in his blood. They threw her upon the body yet quivering with life and cut her throat.

Thus perished one of the noblest of the Vey's.

Amurah was a noble fellow. Powerful and influential in the country he was dreaded by all the chiefs and headmen. He was also very rich and possessed among other valuables a large amount of silver plate. In the days of his prosperity he has given us many a "mess" in silver basins of unwonted massiveness, each of the capacity of a peck. It was of him we purchased a thousand dollars contained in a bag, marked with the name of a vessel subsequently captured with slaves, and of which our friend John Dean Lake made such a flourish before a committee of the british house of commons: which money, a part at least, we paid to John Dean Lake for goods purchased of him, at the same time giving him the bag at his request to keep the money in.

FIRST OF DECEMBER.—This day destined to be memorable in the history of Liberia, was observed with the usual display.

At 5 A. M. a gun from central fort announced the approach of day—at 8 another from the same place proclaimed the ascent of the flags. At 10 the military formed in front of government house, whence they moved off escorting the Governor, civil officers and citizens generally to the Methodist Church.

The address on the occasion was delivered by Rev. F. Burns of the M. E. Church. To say that we were delighted with the performance, would be but poor praise. Although it had rather too much a body ends that is (being less allegorical) rather prolix, the subject was well sustained throughout, There were some few chronological, and other minor errors, but not of sufficient importance to impair its general correctness and integrity. The matter of the address could not fail to reach the heart of every man of color, and awaken emotions at once melancholy and pleasing. The speaker briefly noticed the origin of African slavery, and correctly assigned it to Eropean cupidity and religious fanaticism after the discovery of America, but failed as we think in attempting to point out any features common to the ancient system of feudalism and vassalage in Europe and African slavery in the new world. They were based upon principles altogether different—springing from different motives and directed to different objects.

The speakers style was excellent. There was no noisy ranting, no uproarous blustering—no labouring after bombastic phrases which darken sentiment while they lengthen the sentence. There were some touches of genuine eloquence. We refer especially to his notice of the first meeting at Washington of the founders of African Colonization. Chaste, silent, and harmonious it was the spontaneous flow of nature under deeply wrought feeling. It was decidedly the best address ever delivered on the occasion.

The address over, the procession returned to government house. At one P. M. the national salute was fired and the day closed with the usual festivities.

We are informed by Capt Whittington of the barque "Congo" that the treaty between great Britain and the United States has been ratified, and that the war steamer "Kite" which passed this a few days ago bears despatches to the british cruisers on the coast, with instructions in pursuance of the provisions of said treaty. These instructions it is said will insure to vessels hereafter visited by boarding Officers a little more courtesy—will secure baracoons even when tenanted by slaves from violence except on british territory—and trading vessels whether colonial or foreign, from being doggedly ordered off from a place simply because a slaver may have thought fit to establish a baracoon there. We may now look for the American squadron.

His Excellency Governor Roberts has just returned from his semi-annual visit to the leeward settlements.

Dr. Johnson is also up. We would advertise those who may wish to place their children in the seminary under the charge of this gentleman, of the opportunity of a personal interview.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

AN OLD MEASURE.

The Rev. Thomas Doolittle, a godly, faithful minister of the seventeenth century, having finished prayer, looked round upon the congregation, and observing a young man who had just been put into one of the pews, very uneasy in his situation, adopted the following singular expedient to detain him.

Turning to one of the members of his church, who sat in the gallery, he asked him this question aloud, "Brother do you repent of coming to Christ?"

"No sir," he replied, "I never was happy till I came; I only repent that I did not come sooner."

The minister then turned to the opposite gallery, and addressed himself to an aged member in the same manner, "Brother, do you repent of coming to Christ?"

"No sir," said he, "I have known the Lord from my youth upwards."

He then looked down upon the young man, whose attention was fully engaged, and fixing his eyes upon him, said, "Young man are you willing to come to Christ?"

This unexpected address from the pulpit, exciting the observation of all the people, so affected him, that he sat down and concealed his face. The person who sat next him encouraged him to rise and answer the question.

The minister repeated, "Young man are you willing to come to Christ?"

With a tremulous voice, he replied, "Yes, sir."

"But when, sir?" added the minister in a solemn and loud tone.

He mildly answered, "Now, sir."

"Then stay," said he, "and learn the word of God, which you will find in 2d Corinthians 6: 2—'Behold now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation.'"

By this sermon he was greatly affected, and came into the vestry, after the service, bathed in tears. The reluctance to stay, which he had discovered, was occasioned by the strict injunctions of his father, who threatened that if he went to hear the fanatics, he would turn him out of doors. Having now heard the Gospel, and being unable to conceal the feelings of his mind, he was afraid to meet his father. The minister sat down and wrote an affectionate letter to him, which had so good an effect, that both father and mother came to hear for themselves. They were both brought to a knowledge of the truth: and together with their son, were joyfully received into Christian communion.

Lime and Ashes.—The American Farmer says, that the means most freely used by a farmer in Maryland, in the system which has communicated to a poor and exhausted estate, life and activity and productiveness, great crops of corn and wheat, root crops, fat hogs and cattle, a good garden, vines, and fruit trees bending under their heavy burdens, has been the free use of oyster-shell lime! He commenced, as others have done, with ashes; and found them to pay well; but after trial and comparison of outlay and result, he found lime to be, in the "long run," the most economical. The race between them was something like that between the hare and the tortoise—the ashes got the start of the lime a long way, but the lime, like the tortoise, made up in lastingness, for want of quickness at the jump; and finally he has in a great measure given up the use of ashes for that of lime. On one lot of stiff white-oak land which would not have yielded as much per acre as the team consumed while ploughing it, there was a luxuriant crop of Indian corn growing, after a good crop of wheat last year, with no help but 100 bushels of oyster-shell lime to the acre; spread in autumn before the land was fallowed for wheat.

It would seem, however, that this same farmer has no great reason to find fault with ashes; for a single lot of five acres of land, which cost him $20 an acre, and on which $20 an acre of ashes had been spread, and which, when he took it in hand, would not have yielded a bushel to the acre, had paid him back his $20 purchase money, his $20 for ashes, and both of them three times over

YOU ARE A LOST CAT.

The author of the following is a venerable and highly respected clergyman, who has spent some fifteen or twenty years as a missionary among the Osages, now pastor of a church in this State.

Now my hand is in, I will send you a short dialogue between a Temperate Drinker—a Total Abstinance man—and a confirmed Drunkard. Scene—on board a steamboat, between St. Louis and Quincy. The drunkard about seventy years of age, and respectable to all appearance, except his constant rage for liquor at the bar.

Temperate Drinker. I will give my children what they will drink, and drink myself whenever I need it, and always intend to do so, yet I can govern myself, and hope my children can.

Total Abstinence. What is the use of your children drinking even temperately! Does it do them any good? My children have all signed the pledge and so far kept it. And now if they continue to keep it, I am sure they will never die drunkards. Can you say the same of your children!

Temperate Drinker. As to that, I am not obliged to answer you. We live in a free country. We are at liberty to speak or let it alone. And the same is true of drinking. I take it, I am at liberty to drink temperately, if I choose

The confirmed drunkard now came up, and hearing this last sentence, begins thus: "You drink temperately! I tell you you are a lost cat. Look at me, an old man. I was once a temperate drinker. See what I am now. Once I was prosperous. When I was young I thought myself as good as any. Henry Clay would not have despised to take me by the hand and say, How do you do, Mr. D. I had property, I might have been possessed of a large estate in Illinois;—my wife loved me, my children honored me; my neighbors respected me. But see now, how low, how mean: I am despised by all, and I despise myself. My wife who was worth worlds to me, will dread to see me coming. Look at me; what has done it? That poison that you are going to take so very temperately. Now I warn you to stop. Whiskey will have the mastery

Temperate Drinker. But I have reason.

Confirmed Drunkard. Reason!! You cannot reason. There is no reasoning with it. Look at me; I have no power to reason with it. I am a lost man. Now, you are a stranger to me. I speak as a friend, I warn as a friend.

Total Abstinence. You are like the rich man that would have his brethren warned not to come—

Confirmed Drunkard. Yes, that would send Lazarus. But I come myself, and warn you not to come to my place. I am gone. I have no power over myself. I am lost.

Mr. Editor: The above is a true story. It took place about a year since, and as I had a part in it, and felt much interested, I went into the cabin and penned it down, and now send it for insertion in your fact telling Herald, if you think it may be of any use.

Yours, respectfully,
W. F. VVILL.

Drinkers, temperate friends and all, take warning by this awful admonition.—N Y. Tem. Her.

THE PASSION FOR GENTILITY. Moralists, whose efforts are directed to the elucidation of the causes of those vices and follies which affect society, and whose main object is the improvement of our social condition, seem, in a great measure, to be blind to what should justly be considered as the basis of a vast deal of the evils they deplore and hope to amend; namely, the passion for gentility—of aspiring not only to live in a style decidedly beyond the means for its support, but affecting to despise every thing, in nature and art, which it is not fashionable to admire; thus often sacrificing health and mental quietude during a whole life time, in the vainp ursuit of an imaginary good. It is time that this species of folly and fanaticism should be the theme of special animadversion. The desire for shining in a sphere above our own, is like an epidemic disease; and people who labor under it mistake show for splendor, and splendor for happiness; and while their pulses throb with the fever of vanity, they think no sacrifice too great for obtaining a momentary gratification of its insatiable thirst. The fever rages with equal force through all grades and clases of society, sweeping before it every worthy feelling & every solid virtue. It is an undeniable fact, that much of the pecuniary embarrassment in our country proceeds from the ambition to live and dress beyond our means.

Could we but look into many domestic circles, with all their outward show of finery, what scenes of misery would present themselves to our view, all originating in the senseless rage for gentility, or the silly ambition of figuring in what is termed a higher station than that to which they belong, which destroys all idea of right and wrong; rendering vice and folly, if gilded by fashion, the objects of preference, nay, of the highest and first regard! But it is not by extravagant dressing, and other profligate expenditures of money alone, that much mischief is done; there is a baneful influence arising from the practice of contemning all things that are not deemed within the pale of fashion. The dread of doing that which is not strictly fashionable is a disease of almost universal influence. And divines and moralists may preach till they are hoarse before they will be able to amend or correct the evils they lament, until this all-prevailing mania be cured.

Let us hope that the means now so generally in progress for furthering and promoting a rational education—for calling things by their right names, as our forefathers did,—will in time assist in modifying so contemptible a folly as the passion for gentility.

DRINKING RUM LIKE THE RULE OF THREE.—A laboring man, who was in the habit of indulging occasionally too freely in the use of strong drink, applied not long since to one of our townsmen for employment. The latter agreed to employ him for several months, on condition that he would abstain from drinking ardent spirits entirely during the time,—but should he yield to temptation, he was to forfeit his wages. The laborer professed his willingness to accept the proposal on the condition stated, when his employer expressed some fear that he would in an evil hour forget his resolution. The laborer replied that he was confident that he could keep to his engagement,—for said he, drinking rum is like the Rule of Three, MORE REQUIRES MORE AND LESS REQUIRES LESS."—Watchtower.

POETRY.

For the Liberia Herald.

Tune Bermondsey.

Land of the mighty dead!
Here science once displayed,
And art, their charms:
Here awful Pharaohs swayed
Great nations who obeyed,
Here distant monarchs laid
Their vanquished arms.

They hold us in survey,
They cheer us on our way,
They loud proclaim—
From Pyramidal hall—
From Carnac's sculptured wall—
From Thebes they loudly call—
"Retake your fame.

"All hail Liberia, hail!
Arise and now prevail
O'er all thy foes;
In truth and righteousness—
In all the arts of peace—
Advance, and still increase
Though hosts oppose."

At the loud call we rise
And press towards the prize,
In glory's race:
All redolent of fame,
The land to which we came,
We'll breathe the inspiring flame—
And onward press.

Here liberty shall dwell,
Here justice shall prevail;
Religion here:
To this fair virtue's dome
Meek innocence may come,
And find a peaceful home
And know no fear.

Oppression's cursed yoke,
By freemen shall be broke,
In dust be laid;
The soul erect and free,
Here evermore shall be:
To none we'll bend the knee
But nature's God.

Proud science here shall rear,
Her monuments, to bear
With deathless tongue:
By nations yet unborn
Her glories shall be known,
And art her tribute join,
The praise prolong.

Commerce shall lift her head,
To auspicious gales shall spread
Expanded wing;
From India's spicy land,
From Europe's rock-bound strand,
From Peru's golden sand
Her tribute bring.

Oh Lord we look to Thee—
To Thee for help we flee,
Lord hear our prayer:
In righteousness arise,
Scatter our enemies,
Their hellish plots surprize
And drive them far.

O happy people they,
Who Israel's God obey,
Whose Lord is God:
They shall be blest indeed,
From anxious cares be freed,
And for them is decreed
A large reward.

CURIOUS CASE OF ABDUCTION.

[The Leeds Times narrates an incident which has just occurred in Yorkshire, fit to grace a novel. The hero is a groom, courted by his master's daughter; and his courage and determination towards the close of the eventful history, prove his discretion and distrust at the commencement, were caused by no lack of manly spirit.]

About nine months ago, Mr. Charles Brook, a wealthy American merchant, came to settle with his family, a wife and two daughters, at Mirfield. Among his servants, employed as boots" or occasional groom, was Benjamin Hall; for whom the elder Miss Brook, twenty-three years of age, conceived an ardent pasion. Whenever he was at work in the yard, she watched him from one of the windows; & she never left it until he had finished his task. The youth did not suspect her feelings, but was often heard to complain of her conduct, because, he said, "it seemed as if he could not do his duty without being watched." At length Miss Brook employed a more direct language than that of the eye; she contrived to impart her feelings to Benjamin, and to inspire him with a return of affection: overcoming some scruples which he entertained, she persuaded him to consent to their marriage; and she furnished him on Saturday fortnight with the means to purchase a license. For the sequel we borrow the words of the Leeds Times:

"On Sunday evening, the day following, Miss Brook took an airing in the phaeton alone; her Adonis being the driver: here the license was duly conned over, and it was finally arranged that the marriage should take place on Tuesday, the second instant. Early in the morning of that memorably day, they accordingly arose; Benjamin with his fair one's aid prepared a horse and gig from his master's stables, into which they sprang like lightning, and drove off about four o'clock by a circuitous route to the ancient village of Bistral, unperceived by any of the family or servants. They arrived at the Black Bull Inn a little before seven o'clock, where they remained till eight; they then proceeded to the church, and the marriage was duly solemnized by the Rev. W. Heald, the vicar. After the ceremony was over, they again returned to the Black Bull Inn. In the meantime, the family at Mirfield arose as usual, and seated themselves at the breakfast table; but the young lady's place was empty. A maid was therefore despatched to her lodging room, but instead of bringing Miss Broom, she brought the following laconic note from her dressing table: "Dear Mamma—pray do'nt be alarmed, I am only gone to get married." This of course put the whole house into a ferment; and Messrs. George Mitchell, (of the Yew Trees,)——Fearnsides and Fairburn, and other neighbors, were called in, and sent in quest of the fugitives. Birstal, being about three miles distant, was thought to be the destination of the lovers. Mr. Mitchell arrived first on horseback, and proceeding to the Black Bull Inn, found them in the travellers' room. The bridegroom bid him "good morning;" and observed, "had you been here half an hour ago, you would have been just in time for the wedding." "What!" said he, in a rage, "is it over?" and darting out of the room went to the vicar to ascertain the fact. Mr. Heald assured him that it was true: remarking, "I have only just returned from the church." "& cannot you, then," replied Mr. Mitchell, "undo what you have done?" "No, sir," observed Mr. Heald, smiling: "if I could do so I should have plenty of work." Mr. M. then returned to the Inn, where he found the other gentlemen who had arrived in a phæton. An attempt was then made to part those whom "God had joined together," by giving the bridegroom into custody on the charge of stealing the horse and gig. This was too much for the young lady's equanimity. She then stood forth, and said in a tone of great anger, "No gentlemen, Benjamin is now my husband; he was then my father's servant, and in taking the horse and gig, he only obeyed my commands. Then turning to her husband, and presenting him with her gold watch and purse, she said, "Here, take these; they might as well charge you with stealing them." The charge, then, of course, fell to the ground; and all parties for several hours sat in sullen silence, save the sighs and sobbing of the afflicted lady.

At length Benjamin, whom we shall call Mr. Hall, rose and said to his wife, and his brother (a minor who had been engaged to give the lady in marriage,) "come, let us now go home." Upon which, Mr. Fearnside exclaimed in a frantic manner, "if you attempt to move, I will shoot you;" and "if you attempt to do that," said Mr. Hall's brother, "I will knock you down," accommodating his fist to the expression; and again all became seated and silent. While things remained in this state, the young lady's father (who had only just returned from Liverpool) arrived at the Inn. Upon his entering the room, Mrs. Hall immediately rose, and curtesying, seized him by the hand; and, after complaining bitterly of the conduct of the individuals present, stated her warm attachment to her Benjamin.—After Mrs. Hall had done speaking, all again became silent for a considerable time. At length, some refieshments were ordered, and a more conciliatory policy adopted. It was ultimately and mutually agreed that they should all return to Mirfield, and see if they could accommodate matters. Accordingly, at night, the horses, phæton, and gig, were brought out, and the party started off for Mirfield; Mr. Hall being between two of the gentlemen in the phæton, and Mrs. Hall being between the other two in the gig. They arrived at Mirfield at ten o'clock; and the phæton turned up the road leading to Mr. Brook's residence. At this moment, Mr. Hall turned his head, and perceived that the gig, containing his lady, was proceeding at a rapid rate on the road towards Huddersfields; upon which he sprang from between his companions, and crossing the field to overtake the gig; and as he approach he called out, "wha, wha!" and the horse, knowing the voice of its former indulgent keeper, immediately stood still and obstinately refused to budge. The young lady's keepers hearing Mr. Hall approach, took her from the gig into an adjoining house (Mr. Shaw's) her indignant husband following, and fighting his way through the door and passage of the house. They, however, managed to cause him to be obstructed and detained while they got her through the window, screaming piteously, and placed her again in the gig, and drove off.

In half an hour, Mr. Hall was turned out of the house; and knowing that his wife had recently been on a visit to Mr. Kilner's at the Carr House, Huddersfield, he concluded they had conveyed her thither. He therefore proceeded on foot, and arrived at the Carr House a little after midnight. He repeatedly pased the front of the house, and was perceived.—Soon after two o'clock on Wednesday morning, a gig, containing two men and a female, drove from the yard; and Mr. Hall ran and seized the horse by the reins. Two of the Huddersfield watchmen were called and feed to take him off, and hold him while the gig got away. They did so; but two other individuals coming up, and being informed of the cause of his being detained, they attacked the watchmen; a scuffle ensued, and ultimately Mr. Hall was released, when he immediately set off in the direction the gig had taken. He however, never overtook them, nor was he able to trace them through any of the toll-gates; and it has since been ascertained that the female in the gig was not his wife, but only one of Mr. Kilner's servants who was placed there in order to decoy him from the premises. It was also discovered that a chaise conveyed Mrs. Hall from Huddersfield to Manchester, at midnight, on Thursday week; when it was observed that the individuals who had charge of her had hard work to pacify her.

This circumstance reached the ears of Mr. Hall, and he started at 10 o'clock on Friday night from Mirfield, by omnibus, to Huddersfield, and from thence, in company with two friends, by gig, to Manchester. They then proceeded, by the first train on Saturday morning, to Liverpool. Owing, however, to his inexperience and mismanagement, he returned home on Wednesday night last, without having accomplished the object of his mission. An eminent solicitor, however, has now taken his case in hand, and if the young lady is not produced in a few days, it is more than probable that legal proceedings will be commenced against all the parties implicated in her abduction. We understand that the young lady possesses from £15,000 to £20,000 bequeathed to her by a deceased uncle in America, and independently of her father. It is supposed by those most competent to form an opinion, that she is either in the Isle of Man, or has been shipped off to America. Her relations, however, refuse to give any information: consequently it remains an absolute mystery.

SLAVE-MARKET AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

"This morning I was taken by a young gentleman of Constantinople to the slave-market. After traversing the long streets of Stamboul parallel with the walls of the old seraglio, and passing several splendid bazaars crowded with merchants and purchasers, we ascended by a few narrow street into a dirty square, on which opened the gate of another bazaar. We were indebted to the Turkish costume, in which my guide spoke the language, for our admittance to this market of human flesh. How many ages elapsed, and how many appeals were made to the reason of man, before he ceased to regard power as a right, and could be convinced that slavery is a crime and a blasphemy! What an advancement of intelligence!—and how much does it promise! How many things there are which we regard with indifference, but which may appear enormous crimes in the eyes of our descendants? These were the reflections which occurred to my mind as we entered the bazaar, where the life, the soul, the body, and the liberty of human beings, is sold as we sell oxen or horses, and where a man considers himself the lawful possessor of what he thus purchases!

The slave-market is a vast uncovered court, surrounded by a roofed portico or piazza. Under this portico, which on the side of the court has a wall about waist-high, there are doors opening into the chambers in which the merchants keep their slaves. These doors are thrown open to enable the purchasers, as they walk about, to see the slaves. The men and women are kept in separate chambers, and the women are unveiled. Besides the slaves in these lower chambers, a great number are grouped in a gallery under the portico, and in the court itself. We commenced our examination. The most remarkable group consisted of some Abyssinian girls, about twelve or fifteen in number. They were seated close together in a circle, and their faces were all turned to the spectators. Most of them were remarkably beautiful. They had almond-shaped eyes, aquiline noses, thin lips, and a delicate oval contour of face, and long hair as dark and glossy as the raven's wing. The pensive, melancholy, and languishing expression of their countenances, renders the Abyssinian females in spite of their copper-coloured complexions, extremely lovely and interesting. They are tall and slender as the palm-trees of their country, and their arms are remarkable for beauty of form and grace of motion. The girls whom I saw in the slave-bazaar had no clothing but a long robe of coarse yellow cloth. On their ankles they wore bracelets of blue glass beads. They were seated motionless, with their heads resting on the palms of their hands, or on their knees. When thus gazed at, their meek and melancholy eyes were like those of the goat or the lamb whom the peasants lead with strings round their necks to be sold at our village fairs. Sometimes they whispered one to another and smiled. One of them, who held a little child in her arms, was weeping because the merchant wanted to sell it separately to a dealer in children. Not far from this group, there were seven or eight little children, from eight to ten years of age. They were tolerably well dressed, and appeared very healthy. They were amusing themselves at an oriental game, which is played with small pebbles, arranged in various ways in holes dug in the sand. Meanwhile the merchants and buyers took first one and then another by the arm, examined them narrowly from head to foot, patted them, made them show their teeth, that they might judge of their age and state of health; and the children, when released, eagerly joined their playmates, and renewed their game. I next went under the covered porticos, which were crowded with slaves and purchasers. The Turks engaged in this traffic were walking about among the groups superbly dressed in furrelled pelisses and with long pipes in their mouths, looking anxious and preoccupied, and casting a jealous glance at every stranger who peeped into the rooms in which they kept their human merchandise; but as they supposed us to be Arabs or Egyptians, they did not venture to refuse us admittance to any of the rooms. Itinerant dealers in cakes and dried fruits were walking about the gallery, selling refreshments to the slaves. I slipped a few piastres into the hand of one of them, and directed him to distribute the contents of the basket among the negro children, who eagerly devoured them.

I remarked a poor negress, about eighteen or twenty years of age, remarkably handsome, but with a sullen and melancholy air. She was seated on a bench in the gallery, richly dressed and with her face unveiled. Round her were about a dozen other negresses, dressed in rags, and exposed for sale at very low prices. The negress thus mentioned held in her lap a fine little boy of three or four years of age, magnificently dressed: her child, who was a mulatto, had a handsome and noble countenace, a beautiful mouth, and the finest eyes imaginable. I played with the boy, and gave him some cakes and sweetmeats, which I had purchased at a neighbouring shop; but the mother snatched them from his hands, and threw them on the ground, with an expression of anger and offended pride. She held down her face and wept. I imagined that she was afraid of being sold separately from her child and I requested M. Morlach, my obliging guide, to purchase her together with her child for me. I would have brought up the interesting boy without separating him from his mother. We addressed ourselves to a broker with whom M. Morlack was acquainted. The broker spoke to the owner of the slave and her child. He at first seemed inclined to accept our terms. The poor woman wept bitterly, and the boy threw his arms round his mother's neck. But the bargaining was all pretence on the part of the merchant; and when we agreed to give him the very exorbitant price he set upon the slaves, he took the broker aside, and told him that the negress was not for sale. He stated that she was the slave of a rich Turk who was the father of the boy; that she had evinced too haughty and overbearing a spirit in the harem! and that to correct and humble her, her master had sent her to the bazaar, under pretence of intending to get rid of her, but with secret orders that she should not be sold. This mode of correction is frequently resorted to; and when the Turk is out of humour with his female slaves, his usual threat is that he will send them to the bazaar. We accordingly withdrew.

We looked into a great number of rooms, each containing four or five women, almost all black and ugly, having the appearance of good health. Most of them appeared indifferent to their situation, and some even solicited purchasers. They talked and laughed together, and occasionally made critical remarks on the men who were bargaining for them. One or two wept, and concealed themselves at the further end of the chamber; and did not without reluctance return to the alcove where they had been seated when we looked in. Several walked away cheerfully with a Turk who had purchased them, taking with them their little bundle tied in a handkerchief and covering their faces with their white veils. We witnessed two or three acts of genuine humanity, for which even Christian charity might envy the good Mussulmans. Several Turks purchased some old female slaves who had been sent away from the harems of their masters on account of their age and infirmities. We asked them why they had purchased the poor old women. 'To please God,' replied the broker: and M. Morlach assured me that several Mussulmans were in the practice of sending to buy poor infirm slaves of both sexes, and support them, for the sake of charity, in their houses.

The last rooms we entered were half closed and we were at first refused admittance. There was only one slave in each room, under the guard of a female. These slaves were young and beautiful Circassian girls, newly arrived from their country. They were dressed in white, and with a remarkable degree of elegance. Their fine features were expressive of neither sorrow nor indignation, but disdainful indifference.—The beautiful white slaves of Georgia or Circassia, have become extremely rare since the Greek females no longer people the seraglios, and since Russia has interdicted the traffic in women. Nevertheless, many Georgian families still devote their daughters to this odious traffic, and cargoes of them are from time to time carried away by contraband dealers. The price of these beautiful creatures varies from twelve to twenty thousand piastres, (from three to five thousand francs—or from 125*l.* to 138*l.* sterling), whilst black slaves of ordinary beauty do not sell for more than five or six hundred francs, and the most beautiful at a thousand or twelve hundred. In Arabia and in syria, female slaves may be purchased for five or six hundred piastres (from a hundred and fifty to two hundred francs). One of the Georgian girls whom we saw at the bazaar was a faultless beauty. Her features were delicate and intelligent, her eyes soft and pensive, and her skin dazzling white. She was sold before our eyes for the harem of a young pacha of Constantinople. We left the bazaar with feelings of disgust at a scene which is renewed every day and every hour in the cities of the East."

THE RULING PASSION. Squeers, who told us the story about a race with the Marblehead train, the other day, also saw another thing at the Depot. In an accommodation car from the Eastward, sat a well-appearing woman with her face to the partition, as if asleep. Perhaps she counterfeited sleep, to avoid the impertinent gaze of the multitude at the Depot, at one of her appearance in the half price car. A lady, who was going to take her seat in a first class car, was moved by an unaccountable sympathy for the poor woman in the "half price," and called out, "There—do wake that lady in the forward car! Who knows but she wants to get out here—and she's asleep!"—The woman in the forward car raised a face in which sorrow and poverty had not quite obliterated every trace of feeling, and thanked the fine lady for her gratuitous interference. The lady, having satisfied her curiosity by seeing the face of the other, took her shawl in her hand, and got to her seat.

THE AFRICAN TRADE AND CLIMATE. There appears to be some difficulty in finding a commander for the squadron, which according to the late treaty is to be placed on the coast of Africa, to aid in the suppression of the slave trade. The coast of Africa is an unhealthy place for white men. The English and French governments allow to their naval officers serving on the coast of Africa or in the West Indies, a credit of two or three years for every one served on those coasts, and each second has the place of the first in all death vacancies. These are found stimulants sufficient to obtain volunteers enough for the service.

An American squadron on the coast will be of great advantage to our African colony, and the colony will also be of much advantage to the squadron. Such a squadron will also benefit our trade in that quarter, which is now quite large.

We notice that the number of vessels trading from Salem to Africa, is constantly increasing. This is worthy of remark as probably Salem now possesses two thirds of all this trade from the United States. It must be profitable or the shrewd merchants of that place, who made fortunes in the East India and South American trade before any others had thought of it, would not so extend their business in this direction.—Do not some of our merchants understand carrying on this trade? We are told that several handsome fortunes in Salem, have already been acquired in it; and we have taken particular notice that the officers and crews have not for the last few years suffered much from sickness and death. A vessel generally brings back more of her crew, men, after a long voyage on the African Coast than she would after a short visit to New Orleans or Havana, in the sickly season. Indeed it is quite rare that the vessels now arriving at Salem, from Africa, meet with the loss of a single man. Probably they better understand taking care of themselves than formerly. DICKENS' NOTES ON AMERICA.

FACTORY GIRLS AT LOWELL.—A CONTRAST.—I happened to arrive at the first factory just as the dinner hour was over, and the girls were returning to their work; indeed the, stairs were thronged with them as I ascended. They were all well dressed, but not, to my thinking, above their condition; for I like to see the humbler classes of society careful of their dress and appearance, and even, if they please, decorated with such little trinkets as come within the compass of their means. Supposing it confined within reasonable limits, I would always encourage this kind of pride, as a worthy element of self-respect, in any person I employed; and should no more be deterred from doing so, because some wretched female referred her fall to a love of dress, than I would allow my construction of the real intent and meaning of the Sabbath to be influenced by any warning to the well-disposed, founded on his backslidings on that particular day, which might emanate from the gratuitous doubtful authority of a murderer in Newgate. These girls, as I have said, were all well dressed, and that phrase necessarily includes extreme cleanliness. They had serviceable bonnets, good warm cloaks, and shalls; and were not above clogs and pattens. Moreover, there were places in the mill in which they could deposit these things without injury, and there were conveniences for washing. They were healthy in their appearance, many of them remarkably so, and had the manners and deportment of young women; not of degraded beasts of burden. If I had seen in one of those mills (but I did not, though I looked for something of this kind with a sharp eye) the most lisping, mincing, affected, and ridiculous young creature that my imagination could suggest, I should have thought of the careless, moping, slatternly, degraded, dull reverse (I have seen that), and should have been still well pleased to look upon her. The rooms in which they worked were as well ordered as themselves. In the windows of some there were green plants, which were trained to shade the glass; in all there was as much fresh air, cleanliness, and comfort, as the nature of the occupation would possibly admit of. Out of so large a number of females, many of whom were just only then verging upon womanhood, it may be reasonably supposed that some were delicate and fragile in appearance, no doubt they were. But I solemnly declare, that from all the crowd I saw in the different factories that day, I cannot recall a separate one young face that gave me a painful impression; not one young girl whom, assuming it to be matter of necessity that she should earn her daily bread by the labour of her hands, I would have removed from these works if I had the power. They reside in various boarding-houses near at hand. The owners of the mills are particularly careful to allow no person to enter upon the possession of these houses, whose characters have not undergone the most searching and thorough inquiry. Any complaint that is made against them, by the boarders, or by any one else, is fully investigated; and if good ground of complaint be shown to exist against them, they are removed, and their occupation is handed over to some more deserving person. [After stating the astounding fact, that in July, 1841, nine hundred and seventy-eight of these girls were depositors in the Lowell Savings Bank, to the amount jointly of 100,000 dollars, or £21,000 (is it possible?) Mr Dickens goes on to say]—I am now going to state three facts, which will startle a large class of readers on this side the Atlantic very much. Firstly, there is a joint-stock piano in a great many of the boarding-houses. Secondly, nearly all these young ladies subscribe to circulating libraries. Thirdly, they have got up among themselves a periodical called The Lowell Offering, "A repository of original articles, written expressly by females actively employed in the mills," which is duly printed, published, and sold; and whereof I brought away from Lowell four hundred good solid pages, which I have read from beginning to end. The large class of readers, startled by these facts, will exclaim with one voice, "How very preposterous!" On my deferentially inquiring why, they will answer, "These things are above their station." In reply, I would beg to ask what their station is? It is their station to work, and they do work. They labour in these mills, upon an average, twelve hours a day, which is unquestionably work, and pretty tight work too. Perhaps it is above their station to indulge in such amusements, on any terms. Are we quite sure that we in England have not formed our ideas of the "station" of working people from accustoming ourselves to the contemplation of that class as they are, and not as they might be? I think that if we examine our own feelings, we shall find that the pianos, and the circulating libraries, and even the Lowell Offering, startle us by their novelty, and not by their bearing upon any abstract question of right or wrong. For myself I know no station in which the occupation of to-day cheerfully done, and the occupation of to-morrow cheerfully looked to, any one of these pursuits is not most humanizing and laudable. I know no station which is rendered more endurable to the person in it, or more safe to the person out of it, by having ignorance for its associate. I know no station which has a right to monopolize the means of mutual instruction, improvement, and rational entertainment; or which has ever continued to be a station very long, after seeking to do so.

From the Bristol Mirror,

PROPRIETY OF BEHAVIOUR.

"Propriety of behaviour in company is necessary to every gentleman; for without good manners he can neither be acceptable to his friends, nor agreeable in conversation to strangers.

"The three sources of ill manners are—pride, ill-nature, and want of sense; so that every person who is already endowed with humility, good nature, and good sense, will learn good manners with little or no teaching.

"A writer, who had great knowledge of mankind, has defined good manners as "the art of making those people easy with whom we converse;" and his definition cannot be mended. The ill qualities above mentioned all tend naturally to make people uneasy: pride assumes all conversation to itself, and makes the company insignificant; ill-nature makes offensive reflections; and folly makes no distinction of persons or occasions. Good manners are therefore in part negative: let but a sensible person refrain from pride and ill-nature, and his conversation will give satisfaction.

"So far as good manners are positive, and related to good breeding, there are many established forms, which are to be learned by experience and conversation in the world.

"But there is one plain rule, worth all the rest added together,—that a person who pretends to the character and behaviour of a gentleman should do every thing with gentleness; with an easy, quiet, friendly manner, which doubles the value of every word and action. A forward, noisy, importunate, over bearing way of talking, is the very quintessence of ill-breeding; an hasty contradiction, unseasonable interruption of persons in their discourse, especially of elders or superiors, loud laughter, winkings, grimaces, and affected contortions of the body, are not only of low extractions in themselves, but are the natural symptoms of self-sufficiency and impudence.

"It is a sign of great ignorance to talk much to other people of things in which they have no interest; and to be speaking familiarly by name of distant persons to those who have no knowledge of them. It shews that the ideas are comprehended within a very narrow sphere, and that the memory has but few objects.

"If you speak of anything remarkable in its way, many inconsiderate people have a practice of telling you something of the same kind, which they think much more remarkable. If any person in the company is recommended for what they do, they will be instantly telling you of somebody else whom they know, who does it much better; and thus a modest person, who meant to entertain, is disappointed and confounded by another's rudeness. True gentility, when improved by good sense, avoids every appearance of self importance; and polite humility takes every opportunity of giving importance to the company: of which it may be truly said, as it was of worldly wealth, "it is better to give than to receive." In our commerce with mankind, we are always to consider that their affairs are of more concern to them than ours are; and we should treat them on this principle, unless we are occasionally questioned, and directed to ourselves by the turn of the conversation. Discretion will always fix on some subject in which the company have a common share. Talk not of music to a physician, nor of medicine to a fiddler; unless the fiddler should be sick, and the physician at a concert. He that speaks only of such subjects as are familiar to himself, treats his company as the stork did the fox, presenting an entertainment to him in a deep pitcher, out of which no creature could feed but a long-billed fowl.

"The rules I have laid down are such as take place chiefly in our conversation with strangers. Among friends and acquaintance, where there is freedom and pleasantry, daily practice will be attended with less reserve. But here let me give you warning, that too great familiarity, especially if attended with roughness and importunity, is always dangerous to friendship; which must be treated with some degree of delicacy and tenderness, if you wish it to be lasting. You are to keep your friend by the same behaviour that first won his esteem. And observe this as a maxim verified by the lesser art of discretion, than by the more valuable endowments of wit and science; which without discretion to recommend them, are often left to disappointment and beggary.

"The Earl of Chesterfield has given many directions, which have been much admired of late years; but his rules are calculated to form the petit-maitre, the debauchee, or the insidious politician, with whom it would be totally unprofitable and even dangerous, to converse. My late friend, the learned Dr Delany, at the end of his anonymous Observations on Lord Orrey's Remarks, published a short original discourse of swift on good Manners; which contains more to the purpose in one page of it, than you will find in the whole volume of the courtly Earl, so highly applauded by ignorant people for his knowledge of the world.

"We are apt to look upon good manners as a lighter sort of qualification, lying without the system of morality and Christian duty, which a man may possess or not possess, and yet be a very good man; but there is no foundation for such an opinion. The apostle St Paul hath plainly comprehended it in his well known description of charity, which signifies the friendship of Christians, and is extended to so many cases, that no man can practice that virtue, and be guilty of ill manners. Shew me the man, who in his conversation discovers no sign that he is puffed up with pride; who never behaves himself unseemly, or with impropriety; who neither envies nor censures; who is kind and patient towards his friends; who seeketh not his own, but considers others rather than himself, and gives them the preference,—I say, that man is not only all that we intend by a gentleman, but, much more, he really is, what all artificial courtesy affects to be, a philanthropist, a friend to mankind; whose company will delight while it improves, and whose good will rarely be evil spoken of. Christianity, therefore, is the best foundation of what we call good manners; and of two persons who have equal knowledge of the world, he that is the best Christian will be the best gentleman."

SYMPATHY.—A sensibility, of which its objects are sometimes insensible. It may be perilous to discourage a feeling, whereof there is no great superabundance in this selfish and hard-hearted world; but even of the little that exists, a portion is frequently thrown away. Such is the power of adaptation in the human mind, that those who seem to be in the most pitiable plight, have often the least occasion for our pity. A city damsel, whose ideas had been Arcadianised by the perusal of pastorals, having once made an excursion to a distance of twenty miles from London, wandered into the fields in the hope of discovering a bona fide live shepherd. To her infinite delight, she at length encountered one, under a hawthorn hedge in full blossom, with his dog by his side, his crook in his hand, and his sheep round about him, just as if he were sitting to be modelled in china for a chimney ornament. To be sure, he did not exhibit the azure jacket, jessamine vest, pink tiffany inexpressibles, peach-coloured stockings, and golden buckels of those faithful portraitures. This was mortifying; still more so, that he was neither particularly young nor cleanly; but, most of all, that he wanted the indispensable accompaniment of a pastoral reed, in order that he might beguile his solitude with the charms of music. Touched with pity at this privation, and lapsing, unconciously, into poetical language, the civic damsel exclaimed—"Ah! gentle shepherd, tell me where's your pipe?—"I left it at home, Miss," replied the clown, scratching his head, "cause I ha'nt got no baccy."

A benevolent committee-man of the Society for superseding the necessity of climbing boys, seeing a sooty urchin weeping bitterly, at the corner of a street, asked him the cause of his distress;—"Master has been using me shamefully," sobbed the sable sufferer;—"he has been letting Jem Hudson go up the chimney at No. 9, when it was my turn! He said it was too high, and too dangerous for me, but I'll go up a chimney with Jem Hudson any day in the year; that's what I will!"

There is a local sympathy, however, in which we cannot well be mistaken, and which it is lamentable not to possess; for that man—to use the words of Dr. Johnson—"is little to be envied, whose patriotism would not gain force upon the plain of Marathon, or whose piety would not grow warmer among the ruins of Iona."

Even the most obdurate and perverse natures cannot always resist the power of sympathy. Indecorous as it is, we must quote Lord Peterborough's observation on the celebrated Fenelon;—"He is a delicious creature; I was forced to get away from him as fast as I possibly could, else he would have made me pious." As a profane man may be pleased with piety, so may a wise one be occasionally pleased with folly, through sympathy with the pleasures of others.

Most misplaced and mischievous of all, is that spurious sympathy, by which some of our journalists and novel writers seek to enlist our feelings in the cause of the basest malefactors. "To make criminals the object of a sentimental admiration, and of a sort of familiar attachment; to hold up as a hero the treacherous murderer, whose life has been passed in reckless profligacy, merely because, at his death, he displays a firmness which scarcely ever deserts the vilest, is a task as unworthy of literary talents, as it is unfit for cultivated and liberal minds."—Ed. Review, vol. xl. p. 202.

Of the peculiar causes of so prevalent a restlessness of disposition.

WHILE some ruin their circumstances by their indolence, others do it by their restlessness; always busy, but never pursuing any plan of regular industry. No sooner are they settled down in one business, than they change it for another. They are "every thing by turns, and nothing long." Their attentions thus dissipated, turn to no account; and poverty overtakes them whilst they are flying so many different ways to escape it. Whereas a steady straightforward course, in almost any single business, might have secured them a competence.

It is neither an imaginary nor a rare character, that I have now been describing: it is to be met with every where in town and country. Thousands are undone by means of this single foible; every thing else in their habits and dispositions giving promise of success.

This restlessness is owing sometimes to natural temper, but most commonly perhaps, to the peculiar circumstances of the country in which we live. In China, a boy must follow the occupation of his father, and stick to that or starve. In India, no one can raise himself above the level of the Cast in which he happense to be born. Nor is the mass of Europeans altogether free from shackles that bind them down to occupations in which their own choice has had no concern. If a man there be bred a cobbler, he hardly may aspire to the honour of making shoes. But here, on the other hand a man may put off his calling-almost as easily as his clothes; or he may tack together several callings, and pursue them alternately, or all at once, as best suit his own fancy. Here, the field of individuals enterprise is alike open to all. Here, no one is of a family so humble as to be precluded from the possibility of raising himself not only to opulence, but to office and rank. Here, wealth is shifting hands with such rapidity that, in one or two generations, the hills sink, and the valles rise.

Now, as this condition of things animates thousands, with the spirit of enterprise, so it occasions, in many, a restlessness and instability of feeling. Possessing freedom of choice, and having before them so many objects to choose betwixt, they never come to an election that fully satisfies them.—Add to this, that the last twenty-five years have, (by reason of the unexampled state of Europe) furnished instances, in almost every district of our country, of some rising suddenly to great opulence, by a single stroke in the experiments of speculations, and without any attention at all to the process of patient industry:—a circumstance that has operated powerfully on young minds, and on minds not young, in rendering them dissatisfied with slow gains or small profit, and impatient of the drudgery of any laborious calling. Not to mention that our country has, of itself, for a very long time past, furnished magnificent schemes & numerous opportunities of speculation, altogether unexampled perhaps in the history of man.

Moreover, it is obvious to remark, that our enterprising youth, are necessarily, as it were, tinctured, with a romantic disposition. The books that they most read are of the romantic kind; alike inflaming the imagination and misleading the judgment, by descriptions "of a world of wonders where events are produced by causes widely and manifestly different from those which regulate the course of human affairs." Also, for almost the term of a whole generation, there has been constantly exhibited to view such a series of wonders in the civilized world, that the history of real life carries on it the appearance of romance.

Nothing very strange is it therefore, that the minds of a great many are unsettled, notional and fraught with extravagant expectations; and this is the less to be wondered at, as it is customary for our youth to step into manhood earlier than in former ages, or perhaps than in any other country. Commencing men at an immature period, and under such powerful impulses to wild extravagances of imagination, it would be strange indeed if they were not, many of them, averse to any sober, rational and steady plan of life.

To contrast the past with the present—in a short biographical notice of one of the first and wealthiest merchants of the last age, the writer remarks:—"It was an invariable rule with him to avoid every kind of dangerous experiment and to confine himself to such branches of trade as admitted the surest principles of calculation."—This golden rule of business, which in former times of "steady habits," was sacredly regarded, not merely by that merchant, but generally;—this golden rule of business, has, by a concurrence of unparalelled circumstances, been made to give place to rashness of speculation and a restless spirit of adventure: an evil which nothing but length of time and the smart-giving rod of stern experience, will, in any likelihood, be able to cure.

TALE OF THE GREEN TAPER.

"Among the unfortunate families of Spanish Moriscoes who were forced to quit Spain in 1610, there was one of a very rich farmer who owned the house we speak of. As the object of the government was to hurry the Moriscoes out of the country without allowing them time to remove their property, many buried their money and jewels, in hopes of returning from Africa at a future period. Muley Hassem, according to our popular tradition, had contrived a vault under the large Zaguan, or close porch of his house. Distrusting his Christian neighbours, he had there accumulated great quantities of gold and pearls, which, upon his quitting the country, were laid under a spell by another Moriscoe, deeply versed in the secret arts.

"The jealousy of the Spaniards, and the severe penalties enacted against such of the exiles as should return, precluded Muley Hassem from all opportunities of recovering his treasures. He died, intrusting the secret to an only daughter, who, having grown up at Seville, was perfectly acquainted with the spot under the charm. Fatima married, and was soon left a widow, with a daughter whom she taught Spanish, hoping to make her pass for a native of our country. Urged by the approach of poverty, which sharpened the desire to make use of the secret trusted to her, Fatima, with her daughter Zuleima, embarked on board a corsair, and were landed secretly in a cove near Huelva. Dressed in the costume of the peasantry, and having assumed Christian names, both mother and daughter made their way to Seville on foot, or by any occasional conveyance which offered on the road. To avoid suspicion, they gave out that they were returning from the performance of a vow to a celebrated image of the Virgin, near Moguer. I will not tire you with details as to the means by which Fatima obtained a place for herself and daughter in the family then occupying her own paternal house. Fatima's constant endeavours to please her master and mistress succeeded to the utmost of her wishes: the beauty and innocence of Zuleima, then only fourteen, needed no studied efforts to obtain the affection of the whole family.

"When Fatima thought that the time was come, she prepared her daughter for the important and awful task of recovering the concealed treasure, of which she had constantly talked to her since the child could understand her meaning. The winter came on; the family moved to the first floor as usual, and Fatima asked to be allowed one of the ground-floor rooms for herself and Zuleima. About the middle of December, when periodical rains threatened to make the Guadalquivir overflow its banks, and scarcely a soul stirred out after sunset, Fatima, provided with a rope and a basket, anxiously awaited the hour of midnight to commence her incantation. Her daughter stood trembling by her side in the porch, to which they had groped their way in the dark. The large bell of the cathedral clock, whose sound, you are well aware, has a most startling effect in the dead silence of the night, tolled the hour; and the melancholy peal of supplication (Plegeria) followed for about two minutes. All now was still, except the wind and rain. Fatima, unlocking with some difficulty the cold hands of her daughter out of hers, struck a flint, and lighted a green taper not more than an inch long, which she carefully sheltered from the wind in a pocket lantern. The light had scarcely glimmered on the ground, when the pavement yawned close by the feet of the females. 'Now, Zuleima, my child, the only care of my life, (said Fatima,) were you strong enough to draw me out of the vault where our treasure lies, I would not intreat you to hasten down by these small perpendicular steps, which you here see. Fear not, my love, there is nothing below but the gold and jewels deposited by my father.'—'Mother, (answered the tremulous girl,) I will not break the promise I have made you, though I feel as if my breathing would stop, the moment I enter that horrible vault. Dear mother, tie the rope round my waist—my hands want strength—you must support the whole weight of my body. Merciful Allah! my foot slips! Oh, mother, leave me not in the dark!'

"The vault was not much deeper than the girl's length; and upon her slipping from one of the projecting stones, the chink of coins, scattered by her feet, restored the failing courage of the mother. 'There, take the basket, child—quick! fill it up with gold,—feel for the jewels,—I must not move the lantern.—Well done, my love! Another basketful, and no more. I would not expose you, my only child, for .... yet, the candle is long enough: fear not, it will burn five minutes .... Heavens! the wick begins to float in the melted wax: out, out, Zuleima! .... the rope, the rope! .... the steps are on this side!'

"A faint groan was heard. Zuleima had dropped in a swoon over the remaining gold. At this moment all was dark again: the distracted mother searched for the chasm, but it was closed. She beat the ground with her feet; and her agony became downright madness on hearing the hollow sound returned from below. She now struck the flints of the pavement, till her hands were shapeless with wounds. Lying on the ground a short time, and having for a moment recovered the power of conscious suffering, she heard her daughter repeat the words, 'Mother, dear mother, leave me not in the dark!' The thick vault, through which the words were heard, gave the voice a heart-freezing, thin, distant, yet silvery tone. Fatima lay one instant motionless on the flints; then raising herself upon her knees, dashed her head, with something like supernatural strength, against the stones. There she was found lifeless in the morning.

"On a certain night in the month December, the few who, ignorant that the house is haunted, have incautiously been upon the spot at midnight, report that Fatima is seen between two black figures, who, in spite of her violent struggles to avoid the place where her daughter is buried alive, force her to sit over the vault, with a basket full of gold at her feet. The efforts by which she now and then attempts to stop her ears, are supposed to indicate that, for an hour, she is compelled to hear the unfortunate Zulema crying 'Mother, dear mother, leave me not in the dark!'"

ILLUSTRATION OF SCRIPTURE.

Vol. ii p. 58—The roads, in many places, were so destroyed by the heavy rains and floods, that it was impossible to travel without sending precursors to see that the hills of sand and mud were levelled, and the chasms and ravines filled up, before a wheel carriage could pass. This, by the custom of the country, is performed gratuitously for governors and persons in office. On the halcarra, or harbinger, arriving at a village with an intimation that a man of consequence is on his way thither, a proclamation is issued to repair the road as far as the next village, and so in continuance. In a light soil it is a work of no great expense, and soon accomplished. This established custom elucidates a beautiful passage in the evangelical propheycy respecting the coming of the Messiah, preceded by John the Baptist, as a harbinger in the spirit and power of Elias, to prepare the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight, Matt. iii. 3; when every valley was to be exalted, and every mountain and hill to be made low; and the crooked to be made straight, and the rough places plain. Isa. xl. 4.

Vol. ii. p. 97.—On a sultry day, having rode faster than my attendants, while waiting their arrival under a tamarind tree, a young woman came to the well; I asked for a little water, but neither of us having a drinking vessel, she hastily left me, as I imagined to bring an earthen cup for the purpose, as I should have polluted a vessel of metal; but as Jael, when Sisera asked for water, gave him milk, and brought forth butter in a lordly dish, Judges v. 25, so did this village damsel, with more sincerity than Heber's wife, bring me a pot of milk, and a lump of butter on the delicate leaf of the banana, the "lordly dish" of the Hindoos. The former I gladly accepted: on my declining the latter, she immediately made it up into two balls, and gave one to each of the oxen that drew my hackery. Butter is a luxury to these animals, and enables them to bear additional fatigue.

Vol. ii. p. 98.—Although prohibited by oaths and convenants from accepting any valuable presents, I did not refuse what were sent for me and my companions by the people among whom I lived These articles so exactly resembled those which Barzillai and his friends brought to David at Mahamaim, that hardly a single word need be altered: "Shobi and Machir and Barzillai brought beds, and basons, and earthen vessels, and wheat, and barley, and flower, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulse, and honey, and butter, and sheep, and cheese of kine, for David and for the people that were with him to eat: for they said, the people is hungry, and weary, and thirsty, in the wilderness." 2 Sam. xvii 27-29.

Vol. ii. p. 100.—Shaik Edroos at first waited at table, and performed little officers about our persons: but on the appearance of some spots of leprosy, we excused him from that part of his employment. These spots increasing, his motley skin grew so disgusting that we dispensed with his attendance at table, and at length procured him a situation where the disorder did not interfere with his duty; for, although he was not suddenly smitten, like Gehazi, yet his skin gradually experienced the same effect, until, like him, he became "a leper as white as snow." The whiteness of the Indians afflicted with this disorder is so extremely disagreeable as to render the complexion of the blackest Ethiopian beautiful in the comparison.

Vol. ii. p. 210.—In many parts of Hindostan are mosques and mausoleums, built by the Mohammedan princes, near the sepulchres of their nurses. They are excited by a grateful affection to erect these structures in memory of those who with material anxiety watched over their helpless infancy. Thus it has been from time immemorial When Rebecca left her parents, on being betrothed to Isac, we read that she was accompanied by her nurse, who never left her until the day of her death; which event is not deemed unworthy of being recorded in the patriarchal annals, Gen. xxxv. 8.

Vol. ii. p. 227.—Among the oppressions complained of by Nehamiah, under the government of Artaxerxes, he says that not only the governors, but even their servants, bore rule over the people, and made cruel exactions, Neh v. 15. Thus it is at this day througout India; it extends from the savage punishment which was inflicted on a man of high rank by the prince of Scindy, down to the village patell, who does not acquiece in the payment of the sum extorted from him by the oppressive zemindars.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Liberia Herald.

SUPREMACY OF THE POWER OF THE LIBERIAN DISCIPLINE, TO THAT OF THE DISCIPLINE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

Mr. Editor.—Will you please grant me a column in your interesting Herald to give some satisfaction to those perplexing agitators, who are so mightily excited at the execution of the Liberian discipline. For as I have lately been brought, and still am under its supreme power, perhaps I may give some satisfaction to the excited party, by showing the difference between the two above mentioned disciplines, so far as I am acquainted with both.

Last Saturday 7th inst. I was suspended by the quarterly conference in Caldwell, from all official services in the church until the ensuing quarterly conference.

Now there is the difference between the two disciplines.

The discipline of the M. E. Church, in regard to dealing with local elders, reads thus. Page, 72, quest. 2d.

What shall be done when a local elder, deacon, or preacher, is reported to be guilty of some crime expressly forbidden in the word of God, sufficient to exclude a person from the kingdom of grace and glory.

Answer first. The preacher having charge shall call a committee consisting of three or more local preachers, before whom it shall be the duty of the accused to appear, and by whom he shall be acquited, or, if found guilty, suspended until the next quarterly conference. And the preacher-in-charge shall cause exact minutes of the charges, testamony, and examination, together with the decision of the committee, to be laid before the quarterly conference, where it shall be the duty of the accused to appear, &c. &c

But again, page 74, quest. 3d.

What shall be done in cases of improper tempers, words, or actions; "Answer." The person so offending shall be reprehended by the preacher having charge. Should a second transgression take place, one, two or three faithful friends are to be taken as witness. If he be not then cured, he shall be tried at the next quarterly conference, and if found guilty and impenitent, he shall be expelled from the church.

But not so with the Liberian discipline, or I should have been dealt with in the same manner. One thing is certain; I have not been called to appear before any committee of local preachers, whether my crime required it, or not.

And there is another thing equally as certain; no preacher-in-charge, nor any other preacher, or person ever gave me one word of reprehension, or any thing in shape or form of a reprehension. Nor has any one, two, or three faithful friends ever visited me at all on the occasion, or said one word in form of a labour. Nor did they give any notice at all of any such trial, nor any specifications of any charges whatever. I was not present at the quarterly conference, but several of the members of the conference who were present, tell me, that, there was not one witness called on the trial, not one appeared, nor did they pretend that they had any to call. They tell me that they acted according to information which the president gave them concerning me. Those members of the conference tell me, that the president told the conf. that I had lied. And what about? well; I will give you the whole history.

On the 8th, Nov. I went down to Monrovia to settle with Mr. Chase. Mr. Chase's Clerk, first presented their accounts, and I looked it over. I then presented my account to the Clerk, who took it and carried it into the chamber where Mr. Chase was. And after a long time, the Clerk returned, and presented me my account all scratched over by a pencil. The Clerk, very modestly told me, that Mr. Chase did not feel disposed to allow my account, (or words to the amount.)

I then took the bill, and went into the chamber where Mr. Chase was suting, and said: well, brother Chase, you seem to protest my account? yes said he; I protest the whole of it. Then I said, why do you protest it sir? Then he said; when we were in America, you applied to the Board for $150, to bear your expenses into the interior, and to buy land: which sum was paid you in America, and I shall not pay any more expenses whatever. Then I said; I never applied to the Board for any $150, to bear my expenses into the interior, or to buy land, nor was any such money ever paid me in America. Mr. Chase's next words were; YOU LIE, YOU LIE.

Then said I; brother Chase; you ought to know better than to talk thus. Then said he; do you say I ought to know better? YOU BLACK SCOUNDREL! There is the door, get out of my house or I will give you what you want. And while he turned himself and looked towards a chair, with which I was afraid he would beat me, I gathered up my papers in haste, and I dropped down stairs in a hurry, and escaped without any farther injury.

Now, I am informed by three of the members of this quarterly confrence, that Mr. Chase, frankly told them in conf. that I lied when I said, that I never applied to Board for the above mentioned money, and secondly he told them, that I lied when I said, that he called me a black scoundrel. But I have already taken an oath that I never applied for any money as above stated. And more then all this, Mr. Chase did call me a black scoundrel, and I have already taken my oath of it, and am ready to take 50, oaths more that Mr. Chase did call me A BLACK SCOUNDREL.

But, to what was I suspended? to the annual conference? Nay. But back to the same quarterly conference again at its next session. And so here is the supremacy of the Liberian discipline to that of the discipline of the M. E. Church. The M. E. Church's discipline requires that a local elder, first be brought before a committee of local preachers, if the crime be sufficient, But if the crime is only for improper, words, or actions, or tempers, then the preacher having charge shall reprehend the offender. And if there be no satisfaction given, then the preacher is required to take two or three faithful friends with him for witnesses, and talk with the offender the second time. But the Liberian discipline has no such forms

The discipline of he M. E. Church, favors the offender with a notification of his trial, and also with a list of the specifications of the charges preferred against him. But the Liberian discipline by which I am suspended protests rigidly against every one of those articles. For not one of them were noticed in bringing me to trial. The discipline of the M. E. Church requires, that there be one or more witness in a case, before a man can be condemed. But the Liberian discipline does not require any witness at all to suspend a minister of the Gospel from preaching, from one quarterly confrence to another. Who under the whole heavens ever heard of such a thing before. No such article or articles in the discipline of the M. E. Church, for that requires its quarterly conference either to acquit, or expel. But I am bound with the iron chains of this double superlative, supreme power of the Liberian discipline for three months. And so let this suffise until we hear the conclusion of the whole matter.

Very respectfully yours,
GEORGE S. BROWN.

FRENCH LEAVE.

(From the Gazettee Dis Tribunaus.)

At a late hour of the night a respectable gentleman, aided by the flickerling light of the pale oil lamps, was hurring through the tortuous and narrow streets of a most lonely quarter, impatient to regain his domicile. This honest pedestrian was no other than a native of Bas-Limesesin, driven to the metropolis by the urgeney of an impending lawsuit. Fagged with numerous and unavailing visits, with comings and going in every direction, exhausted with buisness appointments, idle conferences, and wasted words, the poor man, whose fate the morrow was to declare, had just been ferreting out his solicitor and his counsellor, one at a family dinner party, and the other at a ball. The excitement of seeing his rightful property contested the fear of some unfortunate encounter, of which he had read so many examples in the newspapers, sufficiently explain the desperate rapidity with which he was moving on.

He had gained without accident the abscure street which had the good fortune to contain his modest habitation, and might with Secia exclaimed, "Mais'e vois ma maison it may fravers' evade" when O luckless incounter! the sound of footsteps, light but hurried and in a parallel direction to his own, struck his ear, and ere he had time to take refuge in his dwelling—place some one brushed swiftly by him. Retreat was impossible. Heventures on a glance tis a woman—he breathes again. He gave a second glance but this time a bold one—which enabled him to remark a rechercked toilet, an elegant figure, and, but for the uncertain and oscillating light swayed by the wind he could have sworn to one of the loveliest faces on earth.

On reaching the end of the street the lovely stranger stopped, and looked anxiously round in apparent uncertainty. It was evident that she had lost her way. Our gentleman had stopped also, doubtless with no sinister intentions but merely from curiosity to see how the adventure would terminate.

After turning her eyes in every direction the lady at last directed them on her misterious fellow passenger. Probably this impromptied look, aided by the light of the lamp assumed a particularly actractive character for our litigant immediately advanced towards her, hat in hand his toes turned out, and his person inclined according to the most approved rules for a respectable bow. "Madam, if I am not strongly mistaken, it appears to me that you are seeking your way" "your conjetures, sir, are unfortunately but too well-founded" replyed a gentle and musical voice "I am a stranger to this quarter, and know not which way to go." "If you would do me the honor to inform me what street you inhabit, I may perhaps be fortunate enough."

"You are very kind sir" interrupted the fair wonderer. But that would be useless; I am in the most embarrassing situation. My porter has actually had the face to refuse opening the door to me." "Past 12—you know the rule, as the man says in the play." No doubt, but the case is a hard one. Two friends, of whom I asked hospitality, were positively obliged to refuse it, my only resource now is to seek out a friend. But the distance is so great and I am worn out with fatigue—perhaps, too, they may have gone to bed. "Dear! Dear! what shall I do" "madam" said the gallant provinsial, at the same time brushing up his gray hair, "I cannot see you thus. In a word, learn that I am the father of a family, with a wife and children, and incapable of behaving unworthily; witness my gray hairs, permit me then, to entreat that you will accept my devoted arms my residence is within a step and I shall consider it my duty to offer you half of my apartment. "Really sir, I cannot think."

The lady hisitated, the grey beard insisted, at last the fair one are yeilding timidly passed her arm in his, and after a short but eminently virtuous and moral conversation, both arrived at the promised asylum. More generous still than the hero of sterore's sentimental journey the gentleman ceded his only bed to his guest, and more religiously observing the treaty than yorick, occupied a chair, with heroic resignation, in an adjoining closet. At dawn of day he arose, and misteriously emerging from his hiding place, crept saftly across the room without venturing a glance towards the bed, and, satisfied that he had not disturbed his visitant, decended the stairs, and went forth in search of his men of business, from whom he received assurance that his success was certain. Joyfully returning, he prepared himself to provide a delicate breakfast, as a climax to his chaste hospitality, when to his utter astonishment the bird had flown. He immediately ran up to his apartment. Heavens what a litter, every thing topsy turvy! the fair incognita had decamped with an ample share of booty.

The poor man out of his wits with indignation ran off to the commissari who provided him an effectual and prompt revenge in the mean time, his cause was tried, and a verdict was given against our provincial, who, however had the consolation to see the perfidious guest appear in humble guise before the correctional Police, where having previously been detected in similar freaks, she was condemned to 15 months imprisonment and 5 years supervision.

LIBERIA HALERD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, JANUARY 21, 1843.

In the Luminary, of the date of Decr. 9th, there is a batch of "resolutions" presented it seems to Rev. S. Chase by a committee of worthies appointed they tell us at—not by the M. E. Church Decr. 8 1842. There is some propriety in substituting the little word at for by, because appointed at the Church in common parlance would be correct if they committee were the only persons concerned in their appointment; whereas by the church would have subjected them to the imputation not only of capabnbi lity, but of actual falsehood in the present instance. After considerable dragooning "to get up a meeting" they convened Nov. 20th and found to their great mortification too few to do the important business. Therefore Mr. Baxter after "some pertinent remarks" (what a pity they were not reported) moved an adjournment to 8th Decr. For this piece of devotion and service to the dispensator of eleemosynary benefactions Mr. Baxter is certainly entitled to another suit of black, or some other suitable, and substantial acknowledgement, and it is to be hoped he will not be forgotten when Mr. Chase next proceeds to reward the faithful.

After another campaign of nearly a month for voters they met on Decr. 8th, (the number all told being about 25) and after singing (to the honor and glory of Mr. Chase?) and prayer, His Honor S. Benedict, Major Hicks, and Esquire Mc Gill (what a host of titles!) and others "nobly defended Mr. Chase" &c., "and the articles in the Herald are a foul aspersion" and "falsehood of the highest grade." We have looked sometime at this foolish paragraph of murdered english and can only account for such a piece of nonsense emanating from the pen of the "assistant preacher-in-charge" by recollecting that confusion is an ordinary attendant upon a sense of meanness.

This paragraph however is made to state that after the remarks of several gentlemen titled & untitled as aforesaid Mr. Burns presented a "preamble" with the three resolutions," which by the way appears to be all they done on that occasion. Here the truth is inadvertently made to appear; but it comes out by stealth. Mr. Burns presented the resolutions If he could not present a large number of voters he could present a string of resolutions. They were already cut and dried, and had no doubt been inspected by Mr. Chase and handed over to the obsequious and pliant Mr. Burns, to be passed and returned for "publication in Africa's Luminary." This is all right in Mr. B's code of honor. He at least knows now which side his bread is buttered. He has grown wise by experience. He once presumed to act and think for himself; but cut off from the missionary crib, and compelled to sneak back, make the most humiliating confessions and swear eternal allegiance as the only conditions of eating and wearing a priest's portion he seems now determined to think say and act precisely as he shall be told.

The resolutions have little to excite any feelings except those of merriment. They contain however one new discovery—not indeed of Mr. Chase's innocence of the charge, for there was not even the shadow of investigation; but they furnish us with an excellent example how to dispose of a charge: namely by resolving that the charge is true, or not true as may best suit the purpose. Resolved that all Mr. Chase has said be true, and all the Herald said be untrue, and nothing can be clearer. Invert the position and still a resolve maker is as clear as moonshine. So we are not at a loss how to convict the "missionary editor" nor to clear ourselves if we should be inclined to do so. Hence these gents must of course be prepared at "any time and place" to prove all Mr. Chase would have them prove. Nor should we be astonished if they be ready whenever Mr. C. render up his stewardship as purveyor to resolve him guilty of all the charges of which they now resolve him innocent.

Once more on this batch of resolves. They intimate that we are cognizant of the source whence the charges of "sly dallinces" on the part of their praise beslobbered leader emanated. This accusation is of itself (to use an African phrase) no good. And if we wait until "they give dates and names" connected with our cognizance of the matter, and until then shall be content with the resolve of some of our personal friends and dependants that the charge is "a groundless—a malicious, and a cowardly fabrication, and astounding to us all; notwithstanding their coming from the assistant preacher-in-charge, "capable as we believe him to be of aspersion and falsehood." we shall tread in the path the committee have marked out for us.

To conclude, we will simply remark that we are too well acquainted with these gentlemen to apprehend any evil from what they may say about us. After all we are willing to rest the case solely on the character of the jury that tried it. Mr. Burns we have disposed of above, we now simply ask attention to the other gentlemen. Mr. Benedict's abusive tongue and pen have been so often employed that a torrent from him is rather regarded a matter of course. Neither his former pastor Mr. Seys, nor his only sister escaped him. We appeal to all the town whether Major Hicks is not regarded as given to palavering—that is talking with two tongues, especially when his interest is concerned. We are not astonished at Mr. Gripon. Human nature is human nature. We know what the mission has done for him. The gentleman's health was always feeble. Hard work did not agree with him. Four hundred dollars a year payable in good mission drafts is a consideration; and a man should always be grateful. And as the superintendant is the channel through which this benefaction flows, we do not wonder that he is ready to support him through thick and thin. It might possibly influence us if we were either dependent or lazy. Mr. Mc Gill we wish to respect: he is generally an amiable young man, and we believe disposed to do what is right. But he is in the employment of Mr. Chase. We are disposed to touch him lightly, and shall therefore only express our conviction that differently situated, he would have spoken differently if he had spoken at all.

A few words to this scare-crow of a missionary editor and we shall have done for the present. He denies having been publicly accused of "sly dallinces." If a paper, containing a charge and posted in the street and read by some half dozen persons may not be called public, we know not what may. But he has made diligent enquiry." It will require another batch of "resolves" to make this true. He inquired we have no doubt—but only of those who have resolved to tell him just what they know will please him. An order for a barrel of flour, or a small advance for prospective services, will have a wonderful effect in producing the disease of deafness; and to whom shall certain ones go but to Mr. C. who hath the keys of the missionary strong box. This learned editor handys the words "assassin open day" and "cowardly concealment" in a most masterly manner. That he is an assassin we neither know nor care; but that he is not afraid to meet any one in "open day" the Rev. Mr. Brown's late precipitate flight is an ample illustration. We are too well acquainted with his pugnacious and pragmatical propensity to venture within reach of either his foot (which we have heard he can use both dexterously, & efficiently) or of his chair which appears to be the right hand of his power. We can very well endure the harmless effusions of his pen, which leaves its viperous gall only on the paper it defiles, but from his foot and chair it will ever be our prayer "good Lord deliver us."

It is but justice to ourself in confirmation of an opinion advanced in the preceding remarks in respect of Mr. Burns' agency in the resolutions, as well as to Major Hicks to state, that, since the above has been in type Major Hicks has explicitly stated to us in presence of two or three gentlemen, that he had no share in said resolves! He was appointed simply as one of the committee to prepare them for "publication in the Luminary." The Major further states that he understood the phrase in said resolves "capable of aspersion and falsehood" not as descriptive of general character in us, but as referring exclusively to the reported allegation against the missionary editor. Indeed the Major became indignant when it was insisted that the words would bear another signification.

FIFTH SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The colonial Legislature convened on Monday the 9th inst at the Presbyterian Church.

Hon. S. Benedict was sworn in as Lieutenant Governor, and H. Teage, Sion Harris, D. Johnstone, B. R Wilson, L. Sheridan, W. W. Davis, W. L. Weaver, L. B. Fuller, J. B. Gripon, and B. P. Yates, as councillors.

The rules of last session were called for, read and adopted. The motion to adopt was afterwards reconsidered and after some small alterations and amendments they were as amended adopted for the government of the house.

Rev. James Eden was elected Chaplain of the house, H. Shackelford, and John Leon, door keepers: H. Teage was elected Printer to the house.

His Excellency having communicated his message one hundred copies of the same, were ordered to be printed. After the appointment of the usual standing committees, the house adjourned to meet at 9 o'clock A. M. tomorrow the regular hour of assembling.

Tuesday Decr. 10th.—Legislature assembled at the usual hour.

After reading correcting and adopting the minutes the committees reported progress.

The house was occupied nearly the whole day in receiving petitions some of which were of the most multifarious character.

A petition for a divorce from the chains of matrimony was presented by Jonas Carey. Laid on the table until 12 o'clock tomorrow to be then taken up by a committee of the whole house.

J. T. Richardson presented a petition.

Bill for the relief of Harmon Whitfield who lost his arm in returning a Salute to an American vessel of war, passed. Pensioner to be allowed forty dollars per year.

The house then adjourned.

Wednesday 11th:—Legislature met according to adjournment. Members all present excepting Messrs. Davis and Wilson. These gentlemen were detained from the house by the illness of Mrs. G. Moore daughter of Mr. Wilson.

The Governor presented the draft of a constitution of an admirality court sent out by the Society which was read and silently laid on the table.

The Comm; on agriculture reported it inexpedient to legislate farther on the subject.

The Comm: on fees reported in form of a bill: adopted.

The petition of T. Richardson referred to 10 o'clock this day was taken up, and in consequence of not having the account from the Society's store of sundries charged against him while ill of the wound received in Gatoomba's war, was laid over until the next day.

The house went into a committee of the whole to consider the petition of Jonas Carey for a divorce from his wife Henriatta Carey, who has left his bed and board and is now living at New Cess.

After hearing the evidence adduced by the petitioner in support of his right to a divorce, the committee rose and the house resumed its order. The committee recommended to the house to appoint a committee of three to draft a bill of divorcement and present the same for the action of the house.

Friday 13th.—Legislature was occupied nearly the whole forenoon in receiving reports from committees and laying them on the table. At 12 the committee reported a bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and at once passed to a second reading. It was violently assailed in all its particulars by a majority of the members, and threatened with immediately strangling. Its advocates, despairing of sustaining it, after a few hopeless arguments sulleply committed it to its fate to lie on the table.

The committee on commerce and Revenue reported in form of a bill. That part of the bill that related to the sale of ardent spirits also met a most violent assault in some of its provisions. It appears to be the general opinion that if men will sell and use ardent spirits they must make compensation to the public for the evil they inflict by a pecuniary contribution to the public treasury. This is a mistaken and dangerous opinion. If it is a moral and political evil and none can doubt it, no pecuniary offering can atone for it. If it be atoned for there is no farther criminality; and if one man can atone for it, so may another; and as the atonement (that is the pecuniary consideration) is always made in advance of the crime, it is unjust to regard these persons or their establishments as "pests" "sinks of sin and hot beds of crime," as they are sometimes denominated. But the idea of a pecuniary atonement is itself a serious evil. It lulls the conscience of the vender, diverts his mind from the evil committed to repose on the satisfaction made. In fact he may be led to regard himself a public benefactor from the amount of money he pays to the commonwealth. Legislators should learn that the strength and prosperity of a country must be based on something besides an overflowing treasury. The people that suffer their treasury to be filled with the price of their own degradation may prepare to be become the slaves of corrupted and tyrannical rulers. The great object should be to throw impediments in the way of the evils which the bill was designed to remedy, rather than tolerate its progress for a pecuniary satisfaction—to expose its enormity, by taking from it the screen of an enormous license. This object the bill aimed at, but did not succeed. It was after much talk on both sides, recommitted.

The house then adjourned.

Saturday 14th.—Legislature met. The Governor presented a communication which he had just received from a Congress of kings at "Bromley's" apprising him of the objects of their meeting and requesting the presence of the Legislature to aid in their deliberations. The invitation was received and the Secretary requested to signify the same. The object of the kings, is they say, to make peace where there is none, to confirm and strengthen it where it exists—to open and keep open the roads—to revive trade and agriculture, to shake a friendly hand, and we suppose to somke a social pipe. These are important objects and the Legislature resolved to move in a body to the congress on Thursday next the 18th instant. Petitions pouring in from various quarters and on an endles variety of subjects the Legislature was nearly the whole morning occupied in hearing and laying them on the table.

The chairman of the committee on Revenue, to whom the contested and violently assailed article on licences for retailing ardent spirits was committed, reported the article in the same from in which it was yesterday before the house. The article was again furiously attacked but eventually prevailed, and with the whole bill ordered to be engrossed. At 3 o'clock the bill on Revenue was read the third time and passed.

The bill providing means for the establishment of common scdools was read, and after some debate passed to the third reading.

Petitions were received from the Union Sisters of Charity Society—and the Ladies Benevolent Society of Monrovia praying to be incorporated. laid on the table until 10 o'clock on next Tuesday.

Petition from Charles R. Johnson praying to be refunded a certain amount paid by him for medical attendance when he was wounded in the battle with Gatoomba was received, and the amount ordered to be paid.

In our present number our readers will find a letter from Rev. G. S. Brown justificative of his sudden retreat, and cosequent escape from a most violent assault and battery which he had reason to believe his Rev. superintindant was about to make upon his mortal man. Mr. Brown's statements have been hitherto regarded gospel by the "Luminary." Whether this his statement will be questioned by that print remains to be seen. Should the missionary editor feel a desire to make it untrue, we refer him to the "preacher in charge." A string of resolutions after "singing and prayer" for speed will do wonders.

Rice, Rice, Rice.—The supply of this article is more abundant this season than in any one of the preceding seasons. Capt. Brown of Ellen Jenkenson informs us that some three or four cargoes have been procured from Cape Palmas and its vicinity, for the Sierra Leone market,

Palm Oil has been unusually scarce. Indeed the supply is literally cut off. We are unable to account for it. The natives assign various reasons—some say war stop em—others say rain—and others again declare there is no oil in the nuts. Some greedy speculators will burn their fingers. Camwood and Ivory both have been a little brisker this season. But the increase by no means supplies the deficiency in oil.

MARRIED,

In this town, on the 12th inst. by Rev. H. Teage, Mr. James Powel to Miss Muriah Shackelford, both of this place.

DIED

In this town, on the 11th inst. Mrs. Ann E. Moore, consort of Mr. G. Moore, after a few hours illness. Mrs. M. was a member of the M. E. Church in this place.

POETRY.

A PATIENT'S REPLY,

On being asked if Dr. Jephson, of Leamington, did not make Walking a very prominent feature in his System.

"He does, Sir, so much so that some have the notion
The secret is his, of perpetual motion;
For all the disciples who Jephson obey,
Walk out in all seasons, all hours of the day.
They walk when the North wind blows piercing and bleak,
They walk when their mouths are so stiff they can't speak;
They walk in the midst of the fogs of November,
They walk in the drizzle and damp of December;
They walk when it thaws, and they walk when it freezes,
They walk for all causes, to cure their diseases.
They walk when they have not a limb that is sound,
They walk when they cannot set foot to the ground;
They walk when each limb in their bodies may ache,
They walk when their poor backs are ready to break;
They walk when they are fasting, they walk when they have eaten,
They walk when so weary they had rather be beaten;
They walk after fainting, hysterics, and fits,
They walk in their senses, and out of their wits;
They walk if they are commoners, they walk if they are heirs,
They walk whether middle-age, young, or in years,—
Epileptic, dispectic, paralytic, what not,
No matter what ails them, all set off jog trot.
The plethoric walk in the hope to get pale,
The pallid walk in the hope to grow hale;
The stout and unweildy, they are walking for that,
The bony and shivering, they walk to grow fat.
If some walk too slowly they are joined by the master,
Then, surprising to see, they walk faster and faster,—
At other times, body or mind makes resistance,
But with him they can walk any moderate distance.
'Tis rumoured, Jephson's trained infants are able
To walk the first month,—that must be a fable;
However, we soon may perhaps see without wonder
Small babies all walking at six months and under,— Liliputian pedestrians, standing quite strong,
Tiny peripatetics, not yet two feet long:
For who knows what wonders may meet me, in question,
When walking, like steam, shall be brought to perfection,
Which it must be in Leamington, when, without strife,
Walking forms the chief end and main business of life."

THE SONG OF NIGHT.

Who am I, with my ebon vest?
Spangled with stars, over earth I creep,
And I scatter the dews of gentle sleep
On every weary eye;
And I give to the spirit rest,
As over the earth I peep
From my home in the cloudless sky.

Who am I, with my sable wings?
Shading the face of Cynthia fair;
Filling the world with a silence rare,
Or the song of the nightingale.
I am loved by all living things
In earth, and in sea, and air,
In the mountain, and wood, and vale.

Who am I, with my zephyr wild?
Fanning the leaves of the quiet grove,
Telling all nature of rest and love,
And golden dreams of bliss;
I send forth my fairest child
Over lakes and sweet streams to rove,
And to close up each flower with a kiss.

Who am I, but the Spirit of Night?
I am the child of the golden sun;
And when first through the heaven his race was run,
I rose from the purple west,
Bringing sweet slumber and slight,
And a heaven of peace and rest.

NO. II.

THE CATHEDRAL AND COLLEGE GREEN.—It is Charles Lamb, I think, who says "a cathedral is religion;" but this is one of those sayings more emphatic than true, uttered without deliberation, and echoed without thought. A cathedral is not religion, but with well constituted minds it may be made an impressive and imposing aid to religion.

Heavenly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,

to many an imagination amidst the arched intersections and solemn lines of its sacred architecture; but it is not well to allow the mind to be carried away into a morbid feeling which attaches an undue importance to the circumstances of place and ceremonial, for if we accustom ourselves to look only for serious thoughts surrounded by the sombre grandeur of the Gothic pile, the rich and mellowed light of the painted window, and the atmosphere as it were of other ages, we forget the omnipresence of that awful influence which equally pervades the simple church and the ancient structure, proud in its age and its pillared proportions. "What though the temple stretch its massy porches, and rear its lofty dome," says Birt, talking on a far different topic, one which bears no analogy to this, "what though the eye be charmed with exquisite proportions, and everything in sight and sound contribute to the banquet of the imagination and the feast of taste; the Christian will retreat from the scene of these enchantments—he sees a hand that beckons him away, and hears a voice through all its arches saying 'Here no man hath seen God at any time.'" This passage, let me say, I quote more for its intrinsic eloquence than for its applicability to the present subject, to which indeed the author never meant it to apply; for I believe many a serious impression and many a sublime aspiration have been awakened, when from the pealing organ and the full voiced choir has rolled forth the volumned anthem, filling the lofty arches to their very keystones with the sounds of praise. I have myself often and often felt and owned the "influence of the place," and though no regular attendant, there are times and in a temper of mind, when I love to visit its sombre precincts, and give way to that luxury of "far resistless" and some what melancholy musings of which the heart is at one season more susceptible than at another. It is not so much on your bright sunshine days in summer, when smart shop-boys and shop-girls are sauntering or smirking amongst its columns that I love to pay my visit: the dark autumnal Sunday morning is more in unison with my taste, when a winterish cloud overhangs the city, and a thick mist muffles the bells; when the withered leaves falling fast like yellow flakes from the old trees in the Green, are every one as they rustle along the ground filled to the serious eye with matter of admonition more instructive than the written page of poet or philosopher, reminding one of the beautiful words which Homer has placed in the mouth of Glaucus:—

Like leaves on trees the race of man is found—
Now green in youth, now withered on the ground;
Another race the following spring supplies,
They fall successive, and successive rise;
So generations in their course decay,
So flourish these when those have passed away.

A walk across the Green at such an hour and at such a season, when the sear skeletons of the summer foliage are dancing round in rustling eddies to the piping of the moaning wind, prepares one for solemn reflection, and nature abroad seems to predispose the thoughts for the scene within: then take your seat, not in the pewed choir, but in the most remote and secluded spot, where the deep tones of the organ and the cadence of the chant reach you with softened effect and the gloom abroad is felt within, enhanced by surrounding associations—then, nay, you will not be so sceptically disposed to doubt, as many of us are, the power of time, and place, and circumstance, to add to devotional feeling and raise to solemn thought. Even the old monuments have their influence and edification for us: the mailed and recumbent figure, whose deeds of prowess and strength of arm the Latin line recounts, tells us in his overthrow how true the shaft that neither buckler nor breastplate can turn aside; from every escutcheon, with its lofty quarterings, the elegiac verse of Gray is illustrated, that heraldric pride and pomp of power await alike the inevitable moment which overtakes all—the base and noble, the slow and swift of foot, and every monumental inscription, though lofty in its language, is but a trophied memorial to the conquest of death.

The regular Cathedral goers are a peculiar people; not comprising so much (as strangers might suppose) the inhabitants in the neighbourhood, but persons from various and many remote parishes of the city. Some whose faces for forty years almost have been as familiar to subsachristan and vergers as the Minor Prophets on the pannelled screen—regular as the Sunday comes you will see them in their places, and their own places only; and it is a fact which I have noticed, that the Cathedral men (as they are called, and there are Cathedral women too) are more punctual far in their attendance than most of the congregations at parochial churches. I do not care to mention names, but those who have been at any time in the habit of attending the Cathedral will recal at this moment to mind the faces of several whom they have seen, as long as they can recollect, regularly in their places—or rather the places they have adopted—men who by mere custom have learned to sing the chants as well as the choristers, and who have seen and heard several generations of Prebends and Canons, including the facetious Sydney Smith, pass in succession, to death or promotion, before them. To these even the more popular anthems do not come amiss, and they have established a speaking acquaintance with the organ, for whose health and strength they have learned to grow affectionately solicitous and critically watchful, so as to know when stop is ailing or a pipe a little out of order. Let a precentor give a crabbed chant or an unpopular anthem, and not all the eloquence of the best prebendal sermon will bring the Cathedral-goer back into good humour with himself and the chapter for the whole Sunday.

What led the "Regulars" first to cast their lot in the Cathedral, and choose a Collegiate Church in preferance to their own parish one, I cannot say—the original motive of some is lost in the distance of time—some from pique I dare say of some parish minister—some from the love of Cathedral music; (I have one at this moment in my eye with whom this partiality is a passion)—some because they believe the Cathedral the highest point of Churchmanship, and others because, they could not tell you why, only they went as mere children and have continued the practise as men—some because they belong to the Ecclesiastical Courts; and one has told me because Colston's boys go there, and he loves to see them march in through the side aisle and defile from right to left, while from his place in one of the prebendal seats he mentally counts the number of embryo Conservaties growing up for the cause; and I heartily sympathise with him—it is a fine and a gratifying sight to see so many trained up to be loyal subjects and sound Churchmen—living pledges to the stability of state and institutions. "That woman," said the Spartan mother, "deserves most who has bred most sons to the Commonwealth;" and what respect does the memory of the man merit, whose benevolence has bequeathed the means of imbuing so many youths with the sentiments of good citizens! It is said of Colston that it was his practise to stand at the Cathedral door, when in Bristol, and pat with a parental fondness the heads of the boys as they passed in—"A good churchman, Sir, a good churchman." How thankful should we all be that in the proscription of our Church of England charities, this noble one was saved, and those boys, like brands plucked from the burning, are preserved to the church and state. I have seen my friend follow with glistening eye this little regiment of blue pelisses and red stockings as they wound under the old Norman archway to the Lower Green, through the cloisters, and entering the Cathedral at the little Western portal walk in lengthened line with pattering footsteps across the echoing pavement to their places in the choir.

But the regular Cathedral goers, the "immemorial attendants" if I may so speak, are not confined to those who occupy the cushioned stalls and the high pews of the choir; there are others & humble attendants, whom you will usually see on the forms by the monuments and stone pulpits outside, who never enter the glass door, and never hear a sermon; who bring their prayer books and read them undisturbed and undistracted by the idlers who look in for the anthem, or lounge for a few moments around the monuments, trifling with jarring levity in the sound and season of worship. Some of them for years and years have not been missed from their places, and with them the subsachristan or a solemn faced verger will occasionally relax himself in a short colloquy during service. These people cannot afford nor do they care for the luxury of a pew; who ever saw them, when the old functionary in the black gown and white head is looking sagaciously around for an eligible person for a vacant seat, thrust themselves forward with the forefinger and thumb all inadvertently in their waistcoat pocket. As this official, this sub-Saint Peter, has moved actively about with his keys, locking in, like a railroad conductor, person after person, I have often wondered by what power of physognomy he has made his elections—all doubtless very judicious. I have seen him when there have been a dozen standing in the aisle, and as many by the glass door, deliberately cast his eye over all, from one to the other, and then walk into the midst and select a single person for promotion, I suppose, perhaps, because his or her devotional developments were largest, and most certain to profit by the service—though for a high church servant this savours rather strongly of the Calvinistic doctrine of election. He can see through the face down into—the heart, I dare say—a peculiar gift which made some of the members of the Cathedral once say with more point than reverence, "It was better to be a door keeper, &c." I leave it to the Chapter to finish the quotation.

ORIGINAL THINKING.

We have read with no small degree of pleasure, and address delivered before the Adelphian Society of the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution, by Rev. George W. Eaton, Professor of Civil and Ecclesiastical History; on "the Duty and the Rewards of Original Thinking." It is a truly valuable and seasonable production, worthy to be twice read by every student. The evils against which the address is intended to warn young men, is a more dangerous one than many are aware; and more fatal to solid intellectual attainment. After speaking of the duty, arising from the possession of an intellectual nature; and the rewards attendant upon it, which are the pleasures of the exercise, the personal respect and dignity which it confers, and the power which it gives to do good, the writer warns young men against the practice of borrowing and joining together the thoughts of others. Having described the ill effects of such a course, he proceeds:

"How different the man who has cultivated the power of original thought. He has a perennial well-spring within, whose supplies can never fail. Suffer a word or two farther on this subject. It is one of more than ordinary importance. I do not know whether there be in the Institution now any such sermonmongers as I have described. I should hope not. But I know there have been, and I have marked the sad influence of their course. All original investigation was declined. Native powers of a very respectable order, which if cultivated would have made the possessor a man of no ordinary power, were suffered to remain folded up and inert. The good brother was busily engaged in getting up sermons to preach on Sabbaths to some church he was supplying, and he had no time to think. And having quite a reputation as a fluent, acceptable speaker, and being tolerably respectable in the recitation room, (for a man with a good memory and some straightness may contrive to get along without absolute disgrace with his class, though he do not stir his faculties very deeply,) he perhaps forgot that thinking was of any importance. So, when he approached the termination of his course, and had to prepare a commencement exercise, when he was of necessity thrown upon his own resources, he exhibited painful and mortifying proof to his instructors, of his inherent feebleness. He had lost the main benefits of his course. I have described the case of one individual, but only as the representative of a too numerous class. And what is the destiny of such an one in the great world! Truly a "wandering" star, passing from church to church, and staying just long enough in a place to preach out his bauble of hashed up sermons, and leaving no trace of himself behind. I have enlarged the more upon this subject, because there is a strong temptation, in this day of books and pamphlets and papers, and "skeletons," and all other kinds of "assistants," to decline the labor of excogitation, and resort to the more easy task of compilation. There are so many grand and beautiful thoughts embodied in the book shops of other minds, scattered all along the thoroughfares of intellectual life, and so many vehicles in readiness to carry us, without self-exertion, on "downy beds of ease," to almost any point we wish, it is hardly to be wondered at that so many refuse the drudgery of thinking, and choose rather to gather up the fine thoughts of others, so happily conceived and suited to their tastes, and to throw themselves upon the cushioned seats of the convenient car, to be borne to their wished-for point of destination. It really requires very little thought to "get up" in the day a decent sort of a sermon, in the way I have described, and which, if spoken well, may awaken considerable interest, and procure for the speaker a pretty little reputation; and when there happens to be an unhappy combination of vanity and indolence in the character, there will be an irresistible propensity to repeat the questionable procedure, until it becomes a fixed and regular habit. But how wretchedly such an individual mistakes his true interests, whether his object is to improve himself, to benefit others, or to secure a solid reputation. He makes no real improvement, for although he may be continually transcribing, memorizing and mouthing the finest thoughts and expressions, they are never "inwardly" digested, and hence contribute nothing to his mental growth and vigor. He cannot even understand the force and the point of the borrowed thoughts, of which he makes so liberal a use. How is this? you will ask. Surely he must understand what he selects and arranges and adapts to his purpose. No, he does not. He may indeed have some conception of the meaning, but it is never adequate, and is generally incorrect. It is a truth in the philosophy of mind, that one mind cannot fully comprehend the conceptions of another, unless it is in a state approximating to that in which the conceptions had birth. Indeed the proposition may be stated in stronger terms. We cannot thoroughly understand the meaning of an author, unless we are able ourselves to reproduce his conceptions. This obviously requires a degree of mental effort, which the individual under consideration never puts forth. I have myself heard men preaching, when, notwithstanding their loud vociferations and energetic gesticulations, the vacant eye and blank countenance assured me, that they did not know what they were talking about. It was all "bodily exercise which profiteth little." It is a grand mistake to suppose such preachers can effect any great and permanent good."

INNOCENCE.—O innocence! how glorious and happy a portion art thou to the breast that possesses thee! Thou fearest neither the eyes nor the tongues of men. Truth, the most powerful of all things, is thy strongest friend, and the brighter the light is in which thou art displayed the more it discovers thy transcendant beauties. Guilt, on the contrary, like a base thief, suspects every eye that beholds him to be privy to his transgressions, and every tongue that mentions his name to be proclaiming him. Fraud and falsehood are his weak and treacherous allies, and the lurks trembling in the dark, dreading every ray of light, lest it should discover him, and give him up to shame and punishment. The poorest should console themselves, that though few of the other good things of life are their lot—innocence, the best of all things, is always within their power; for though fortune can make a man unhappy, she can never make him completely and irreparably miserable, without his own consent.—Fielding.

ARCHBISHOP HUTTON.—When Dr. Matthew Hutton was Bishop of Durham, and he was travelling over Gem. betwixt Wensleydale and Ingleton, a friend who was with him was surprised to see him suddenly dismount, and, having delivered his horse to a servant, walk to a particular place at some distance from the highway, where he kneit down and remained some time in prayer. On his return, his friend took the liberty of asking his motive for so singular an act. The Bishop informed him that when he was a poor boy, without shoes and stockings, travelling this mountain on a frosty day, he remembered that he had disturbed a red cow, then lying on that identical place, in order to warm his legs and feet on that spot. Thus it is by the glorious constitution of this kingdom (which we should ever defend), that the humble offspring of a mud-walled cottage, as well as those born in a palace, may, by industry and merit, rise to the highest stations in church or state. Such was the case of Dr. Hutton, who was made Bishop Durham in the year 1589, where he was beloved by all who knew him, and in the year 1594 was translated to and made Archbishop of York. He was succeeded at Durham by Dr. Tobias Matthews, who also succeeded him at his death as Archbishop of York. The descendants of Archbishop Hutton, after his death, resided for a long period of time at Northallerton and vicinity, and from one branch of that family sprung that eminent man, the late William Hutton, Esq., F. R. S., the venerable historian of Birmingham and the Roman Wall, and author of several other highly important historical and local publications.—Church Mag.

EVERY DAY LYING.—There is something consoling in the reflection.—(says Laurent Blanchard in the New Monthly)—that great as is the vice of lying, nine-tenths of it as is now in practice spring from the virtues! The vilest miscreant, for one he uttered in malice, tells a hundred in pure courtesy, in compliance with refined usages, or charity towards the feelings of another. Why do people request "the honors," and "feel very happy," a dozen times a-day! Why are they so "exceedingly glad" to hear something, or so "extremely sorry" on the other hand! They experience neither pleasure nor regret, we know, as the words expressive of these sensations pass their lips. They are notoriously feeling nothing when they profess to be truly concerned, or heartily delighted. But they are lying upon a delicate principle, a sympathetic principle. They intend no deception; no self-interest prompts them; they are vicious out of kindness and delicacy. Can the spirit of self-sacrifice be carried further, than in surrendering truth for the sake of pleasing another by dispensing with sincerity!

CONSCIOUSNESS OF SIN.

OH! there is nothing to equal those moments of desperate awakening when we first become conscious that we are corrupted! when some sudden shock arouses us to a knowledge of our true position, and shows us that the ground we have so long been carelessly treading, is hollow beneath our feet, the precipice near at hand to which we have been blindly directing our steps! The sick man would be told that mortification alone has stilled the torture of his aching limb, cannot receive such intelligence with more chilled and shrinking horrour than is felt by the heart which, pure heretofore, and full of earliest resolution for the right, has been led away by temptation, and only wakes to feel the bitterness of its shortcomings; to know that the days of purity are over; that vice is become a familiar thing; that all is known of which we should have been ignorant; and all forgotten which should have been most carefully treasured in our memories; that in our sorrow we have become "acquainted with sin," and have made it our bosom companion and fellow-traveller in the great journey of life.

LIBERIA HERALD.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

January 9th, 1843.

To the Honorable,

The Members of the Legislative Council.

GENTLEMEN:—On our present meeting it becomes my duty to invite your attention to the providential favors which our Colony has experienced during the past year, in the unusual degree of health dispensed to its inhabitants, in the rich abundance with which the earth has rewarded the labors of the farmer, in the success that has attended the efforts of our enterprising merchants, in the extension of the influence of the Colony, over the minds of the heathen tribes around us, and in the progress of general improvement favorable to the prosperity of our infant republic—with these blessings, have been necessarily mingled the inconveniences and vicissitudes incident to all new countries. Still there is just occasion for our mutual congratulations and thankfulness to that beneficent Being who in his goodness has been pleased to favor us with such distinguished mercies.

Since the meeting of the Legislature in April last, nothing of importance has occured to disturb our friendly relations with foreigners or with the natives of the country we inhabit. Peace and harmony prevail throughout our borders.

In compliance with a resolution of the Legislature at its last Session, I transmitted to the Board of Directors of the American Colonization Society, all the facts that have come to my knowledge relative to the disputed claim of jurisdiction over certain territory in the vicinity of Grand Bassa—generally known as Bassa Cove, or Grand Bassa Point. Many of these facts had been transmitted prior to the date of that resolution. And soon after the adjournment of the Legislature, I received from the Board an elaborate communication fully approving the measures adopted by the authorities here to sustain the laws of the Commonwealth by compelling all persons within the jurisdiction of the Colony to submit to the Majesty of the laws. This communication will be laid before you, and will no doubt give you much satisfaction to find with what promptness the Board have taken up the subject, and their determination to sustain as far as practicable the institutions of the Colony.

I hoped that this perplexing question had terminated with my correspondence with Captain Denman, in this, however, I was mistaken. In July last, Capt. J. Oake of Her Majesty's Sloop "Ferret" renewed the correspondence by proposing a series of questions relative to the jurisdiction of the Colony, to the seizure of certan property by the collector at Grand Bassa belonging to Mr. Dring, of the British brig "Ranger" and relative to the detention of a certain amount of money, in the hands of Honorable Louis Sheridan, claimed by one D. Murray. To all of these, I responded, and I believe succeeded in satisfying Capt. Oake, of our priority of claim to, and right of jurisdiction over the territory in dispute as also the justice of the seizure of Dring's goods, and the detention of the amount claimed by Murray. This correspondence the Secretary will lay before you.

The subject of territorial limits, gentlemen is becoming one of considerable importance, and deserves your deliberate and immediate consideration, recent developments are sufficient to convince us that unless some speedy and efficient efforts are made to secure to the Colony a greater extent of territory—imigration must cease or soon we shall not have sufficient territory to carry on our agricultural pursuits. Foreign traders are still making encroachments upon us, and some of them have been guilty of the most unprincipled artifices to destroy our commerce and monopolize the trade. They use every means however dishonorable, to prejudice the natives against the Colony—prompting them to commit depredations upon the property of colonial traders; speaking disrespectfully of the colonial government, representing it as being unable to protect its citizens or enforce its laws.

Should this state of things continue, in a few years we shall find ourselves involved in unpleasant controversies with foreigners, and perhaps in a war with our neighbors. I know that this question has given birth to a variety of opinions and speculations with regard to the propriety of extending the jurisdiction of the Colony along the coast—beyond our present possessions which indeed are very limited. Some speak of the plan of lining the coast with christian settlements as visionary and impracticable. Some as being impolitic—unless we had the means of guarding and protecting them—otherwise they say we will be responsible for every outrage committed by the natives. Others insist that the settlers should push their way immediately into the interior, giving up all idea of ever, extending the jurisdiction of the Colony along the coast—convinced gentlemen as I believe you are, and as every Liberian must be of the great importance of acquiring a more extensive territory along the coast, it would be useless and consuming your time to no purpose, for me to enter into any arguments to prove the fallacy of the above objections. But would recommend that a proper representation from the citizens of Liberia through the American Colonization Society—be made to the Governments of Great Britain, and the United States, setting forth the importance, to the Colony, of allowing its jurisdiction to extend from Grand Cape Mount to the Assinee River. I believe that just so soon as those governments can be made satisfied of the importance of settling christian colonies along this coast for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade, and for the extension of christianity, among a heathen and barbarous people. They will not only grant us the privilege of acquiring jurisdiction over the territory named, but will protect us from the improper interference of those who are doing all they can to injure and retard the progress of the Colony.

In my official communication to the Board of Managers by the schooner "Herald" in April last I made an allusion to a resolution that had just passed the Legislative Council—soliciting of the Society a loan of several thousand dollars to assist the colonial authorities to make such public improvements in the Colony as our own resources would not warrant—in reply to this part of my letter the Rev. R. R. Gurley under date 20th June says"—as the proceedings of the Council have not been transmitted I will only say—that with every disposition to meet such a proposition—without a larger increase of our resources—it will be out of our power. I shall not cease to hope that our income at no distant day will be such as to meet every reasonable wish of the people of the Colony"

We too gentlemen may hope and have great reason to expect from recent movements in the United States—with regard to Colonization—that the day is not distant when the Society will be able to meet every reasonable wish of the people. For notwithstanding, that the deranged and depressed conditions of the finances of the United States have operated most powerfully against the Society, they have nevertheless shared a goodly degree of public patronage—confidence in the utility, the magnitude and grandeur of the scheme is increasing throughout the union.

At a Colonization convention held in the city of Washington a few months ago were adopted measures of high importance to the Colonization cause, its friends are resolved to prosecute it with new vigor and to seek from the general Government of the United States countenance and protection—and from the State Governments cooperation and support. The humane and pious every where are coming forward to their aid, and no doubt very soon the resources of the Society will be so augmented as to enable them to carry on more successfully and vigorously their operations, both of removing imigrants to Liberia, of opening the resources of the country, and in making such public improvements in the Colony as may be necessary for our protection and convenience.

I regret gentlemen to inform you that I have not been able to carry into effect an important resolution of the last Council authorizing me to have compiled and published in one volume all the statute laws of the Commonwealth. Feeling sensibly the importance of such a compilation—soon after the adjournment of the Legislature I made several efforts to have the work attended to, but without success, every application to gentlemen whom I considered competent to discharge such duties was refused upon the ground, that their private engagements were such as to prevent them without serious injury to their own business especially, at that season of the year, from giving that attention to the work that would insure success. Finding the year so far spent before I could procure the services of competent persons, and thinking that the present Legislature would, more than likely make some necessary and important alterations in the present code, I concluded to defer the compilation until after the present session. I would here call your attention gentlemen to the propriety of expunging altering or so amending the 4th section of "a bill for the regulation of towns and villages in this Commonwealth"—is to make it the duty of the Governor or of the Governor and Council to appoint from time to time commissioners—with an equitable consideration—to carry into effect the provisions of that act—instead of the commissioners appointed in the 6th section of the "Act to provide regulations for the counties and villages in the Commonwealth of Liberia" passed in August and September 1839, and futher that it shall be the duty of the commissioners so appointed to see that at stated times the streets in the towns and villages are cleared of under brush and noxious weeds, and that in the event of persons refusing or neglecting to clear the streets contiguous to their respective lots—then and in that case it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to proceed forthwith to clear up any such neglected streets to be paid out of any funds belonging to the Commonwealth—to be refunded in such way and manner as you may think proper to provide—without entering into any arguments to prove to you, who must be equally convinced of the fact, the deleterious effects that the growth of noxious weeds in our streets must have upon the health of the community—I will only remark that under the present arrangements the responsibility imposed by the 5th section of the article referred to has rendered it most difficult to procure the services of proper persons—especially without an adequate compensation—to undertake the duties of the office, consequently in this respect our towns and villages have been shamefully neglected.

I would call your attention to another subject that deserves consideration, and which must be provided for if we expect to maintain the purity of our institutions—I allude to the great difficulty with which public officers are able to collect the fines and forfeitures imposed by the courts in the Colony, and the indifference with which civil and military orders are sometimes treated by a certain portion of our community, according to our present system most military delinquencess, and many offences against the municipal laws of the Commonwealth are punishable only by fines, and as our laws allow no imprisonment for debt, a certain class of individuals regardless of consequences—having nothing upon which the officer can lay his hands, of which some of them make their boast, wantonly refuse or neglect to do those duties required by law, and that good and responsible citizens are compelled to perform, thereby throwing the burthen of certain public duties, that should be born by all on a part of the community. One or two instances have occured in the colony when public officers have been defied; I am happy to state however that, that resistance was confined to a very few, and of the class of individuals refered to above, viz: persons without property, consequently, regardless of consequences, it is not unfrequent to hear them say when brought up before a tribunal to answer for any misconduct—"well fine me and then get the money when and where you can, I have nothing you can seize—you cant sell my house, nor have I more personal chattles than the law protects from seizure" merchants and others suffer from this very class of individuals—how frequently have I heard the bitter complaints of citizens with regard to the shameful conduct of such persons whom they have been induced to credit. Something gentlemen must be done to correct this evil or its demoralizing influence will be felt severely at no distant day.

Opposed as I am to the many changes and alterations generally made in the statute laws of the Commonwealth at each session of the Legislature. I am almost disposed to say nothing futher on this subject; but I cannot forbear recommending to your consideration the propriety of one more amendment; viz, that of so altering or amending "a bill to prevent frauds in the management of intestate and other estates" passed August and September 1839, as to provide that persons assuming the responsibility of settling estates shall be required to give bond and security for the faithful performance of their duty as are required of administrators in the 4th section of said Act; and futher that all executors, administrators or others having the management of estates shall be compelled at each session of the probate court to render an account in writing of their doings in relation to any estate or property of which they may have had the management. And futher, at present we have no statute laws regulating the apportionment of widows dowers—but have been conforming to a custom in the Colony, how obtained I know not, of allowing the widow one third of all the real estate whether solvent or insolvent; this right, should the estate be insolvent—has been questioned, therefore to avoid future misunderstanding, I would recommend that some definite regulation be made with regard to it.

The subject of common schools gentlemen is one that deserves your attention—its importance is well known to you, and I believe will have your consideration. For if we expect as I have no doubt all of you do—that Liberia is destined at some future day to take a stand among the nations of the earth—we must educate our children, the rising generation must be informed, for on them depend the erection of the fabric—the foundation of which you are now commencing, a right education alone can raise man to his true and proper dignity, and without it we must ever remain cast out and degraded. Our peculiar situation demands that we too should make a strong and vigorous effort to improve our own minds, if we expect to maintain and hand down to posterity unimpaired the purity of our republican institutions. You know gentlemen that in an ignorant community republicanism will soon degenerate into a wretched democracy which must end in anarchy. The condition of our race, too in other parts of the world and especially of the inhabitants of this heathen country should be motives to rouse us to greater diligence, that we may show to the world that the African race is as susceptible of mental improvement as any other. At present there are schools established in several of our towns and villages; these however are under patronage and control of various religious institutions in America, and may be discontinued at any moment, it therefore becomes us to make an effort to assist ourselves in this great work of improvement, that we may be prepared for any emergency: we can do something, and should do something—let us put our shoulders to the wheel, and when we have done all that we can do, I pledge myself there will be no lack of aid, the sympathies of the benevolent every where are enlisted in our favor, especially with regard to this subject, and when it is known abread that we appreciate learning, and are doing all in our power to obtain it and can not succeed, then and not till then, shall we have the efficient aid of our friends abroad, and be able to establish permanant schools for the education of our youth. On this subject I scarcely know gentlemen what course to recommend to your consideration. An Act regulating common schools passed August and September 1839 makes every provision necessary for the government of schools, but a very inadequate provision for their maintainance, the 3d section of that Act provides that the sum of three dollars per year be paid by all those who may be admitted into these schools or by their parents or guardians, if they be able—the said amount to be paid to the school committee or any person appointed by them, of course for the support of the school. The 8th section provides, that all persons shall be bound by law to send their children to school—provided their ages vary from five to twelve years, and whosoever fails to comply with the above regulation shall incur a fine of three dollars said fine to go into the hands of the school committee for the benefit of the school." Now gentlemen this is the only provision for the maintainance of public schools, how then could it be expected that competent teachers could be procured; especially when in no one settlement are to be found more than thirty or forty children whose parents or guardians are able to pay even a small account towards their tuition, no, under such circumstances teachers could not be procured, nor have we been able the past year to supply even those settlements that are entirely destitute of schools with a public teacher, nor shall we be able until the Commonwealth will take the responsibility and provide more effectually for the payment of teachers.

Another subject to which I would call your attention is the demoralizing influence that tipling shops must have in any community, and especially in a community like ours, at such places are always to be found the idle and the worthless, who are not backward for the sake of a dram in enticing the young and the thoughtless, who after a few visits and few glasses like their seducers become slaves to the intoxicating cup, and soon a reproach to their families and to society. I feel that it will be altogether unnecessary for me to enter into any arguments to prove to you gentlemen, who are so well informed on this subject—its baneful effects upon the prosperity of a people. Some no doubt will curl the lip, and say, that we have no cause of alarm in Liberia, that a more temperate people exists no where—that gentlemen have touch the glass very cautiously, and that drinking to excess is confined to a few solitary exceptions in the whole Commonwealth. I admit all this to be true, but does it plead any thing in favor of using ardent spirits, certainly not, for if the people are so temperate as not to indulge the use of it at all, then of course we have no use for the article, and every one will say let it go, and if the people are only so temperate as to indulge in occasional glasses, and as all will admit the danger of its increasing influence if used at all, then away with it, before we are called to experience more of its pernicious consequences; touch not, taste not, handle not the liquid poison. The fact is gentlemen there are establishments in Liberia, I am happy however, to say their number is rapidly diminishing, where the poison is still dealt out in small quantities, to the injury not only of colonists—some few of whom will not give up the practice of taking it at stated times—but to natives, and to foreigners whose health is materially injured in this climate by its frequent use. I would therefore recommend that the duty on ardent spirits &c. &c. be considerably increased, and that the special license to retailers be not less than one hundred dollars.

THE HUZZAS OF POSTERITY.

A little boy near Hagerstown, in Maryland, was one day pointing out to me a copse of trees as the place where Washington, at the head of the Virginia rangers, fought a battle long before the war of the revolution, with some Indians, led by the French from Fort Duquesne, now Pittsburgh.—The little fellow had some balls of lead that had been fired in that battle, chopped from the centres of the now massive and aged oaks. I saw that the sunbeam of some sublime moral emotion was in his eyes, and I asked him further of Washington, the brave youth who led the Virginians into that thicket when the war-whoop shook its boughs, and the rifle rung in its gloom His mind seemed to glance like lightning through the illustrious deeds of arms in which Washington had been engaged, and settled down at the closing scene of Yorktown. He told me of one circumstance only. Said he, "when the British troops were marched out of their entrenchments to lay down their arms, Washington told the American army, "My boy, let there be no insults over a conquered foe! when they lay down their arms, don't huzza: posterity will huzza for you.

I could have hugged the little boy to my bosom. Although he had not probably been able to read more than four years, yet his mind had drank in the moral greatness of the act of sparing the feelings of a fallen foe. I asked him what it was that Washington said that posterity would do? he quickly answered, huzza. "Huzza! then," said I, and he sent his clear, wild shout into the battle-wood, and I shouted with him, "huzza for Washington!"

ADDRESS TO THE CITIZENS OF LIBERIA.

Washington, January 9th 1839

To the Citizens of Monrovia, Caldwell, Millsburg, New Georgia, and Marshall in Liberia.

I am directed by the American Colonization Society, to transmit by the hand of Governor Buchanan, a copy of the Constitution of this institution, as amended and adopted at the late Annual Meeting of the Society, and to state briefly the reason for the changes made in this instrument.

For several years past, a want of concert and harmony, has been experienced in the proceedings of the friends of African Colonization, in different sections of the union, and since its pecuniary embarassments, no adequate support has been extended to the general or national Society. The tendency to separate state action, has been increasing, and mutual distrust between the Parent Society and several of the auxiliary state associations, has weakened the bonds of their union. Information has been received that feelings of jealousy and unkindness towards each other have prevailed to some extent, in the minds of the citizens of Monrovia and Bassa Cove; and that those two communities which should be united in the most sacred bonds of fellowship, were disposed each to regard the other as a foreign people, entitled only to that respect, and to those acts of justice and humanity, shown by the inhabitants of one independent state to another.

The friends of the cause have deemed it of vital importance to remedy these evils, and in the constitution they have recently adopted, have sought to unite the counsels and energies of the American people in this great work of Colonization, as well as to unite the several communities in Africa under one system of government; and one uniform Code of Laws. It is hoped that the worthy and intelligent citizens of Liberia, will duly appreciate the endeavours of the Society, to promote their dearest interest, that they will cordially concur in the arrangements proposed for binding together in the closest political relations, the several communities of Liberia, and that they will sustain the executive Authority in the discharge of all his legitimate and authorized powers. The Society regards the experiments of Colonization in Liberia, as full of promise to the colored population of the United States, and of Africa, and they trust that the citizens of Liberia will deeply feel their responsibility to their more unfortunate brethren throughout the world, as well as to that great and good Being who is the author of all freedom, independence, and prosperity among nations.

The gentlemen who has been unanimously elected to the high station of Governor of Liberia, enjoys the entire confidence of the Society, and his moral qualification no less than his distinguished abilities give assurance to the Directors, that his duties will be discharged with fidelity, engergy, and success. The Society cannot doubt that the citizens of Liberia will give to him their entire confidence and a generous and firm support.

By order of the Board of Directors,

R. R. GURLEY,

Secretary.

CONSTITUTION OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF LIBERIA.

The American Colonization Society, hereby grants to the colonies or settlements, on the Western Coast of Africa, under its care, the following Constitution.

CONSTITUTION.

Article 1st. The Colonies or Settlements of Monrovia, New Georgia, Caldwell, Millsburg, Marshall, Bexley, Bassa Cove, and Edina, and such other colonies hereafter established by this Society, or by Colonization Societies adopting the Constitution of the American Colonization Society, on the western coast of Africa, are here by united into one government, under the same name and style of the Commonwealth of LIBERIA.

Art. 2nd. All legislative power herein granted, shall be vested in a Governor and Council, of Liberia, but all laws by them enacted, shall be subject to the revocation of the American Colonization Society.

Art. 3rd. The Council shall consist of representatives, to be elected by the people of the several colonies or settlements, and shall be appointed among them, according to a just ratio of representation. Until otherwise provided, Monrovia, New Georgia, Caldwell, and Millsburg, shall be entitled to six representatives; and Marshall, Bexley, Bassa Cove and Edina, to four representatives, to be appointed among them by the Governor.

Art. 4th. The representatives shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be priviledged from arrest, during their attendance at the session of the Council, and in going to, or returning from the same; and for any speech or debate therein they shall not be questioned in any other place.

Art. 5th Until otherwise provided by law, the Governor shall appoint, & publish the times, places, and manner of holding elections, and making returns thereof, and the time for the meeting of the Council.

Art. 6th. The Governor shall preside at the deliberations of the Council, and shall have a veto on all their Acts; provided nevertheless that if two thirds of all the members elected to serve in the Council shall concur in passing a bill or resolution, notwithstanding the veto of the Governor the same when so passed shall become a law and have effect as such.

Art. 7th. A Colonial Secretary shall be appointed by the Governor; and it shall be the duty of such colonial secretary to record in a book or books, all the official acts and proceedings of the Governor of the Council: and of the Governor and Council to secure and preserve the same carefully, and to transmit a copy of each of such acts or proceedings to the American Colonization Society, from time to time, provided, however, that such acts and proceedings be so transmitted at least once a year.

Art 8th. A Great Seal shall be provided for the Commonwealth of Liberia, whereby the official and public Acts of the Governor, shall be authenticated; and the custody of the said seal shall be committed to the colonial secretary.

Art. 9th. The Governor and Council shall have power to provide a uniform system of military tactics and discipline; to provide for organizing, arming and discipling the malitia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the Commonwealth:

To declare war in self-defence:

To make rules concerning captures on land and water:

To make treaties with the several African tribes, and to prescribe rules for regulating the commerce between the Commonwealth of Liberia, and such tribes; except that all treaties for the acquisition of lands shall be subject to the approval of the American Colonization Society.

To prescribe uniform rules of naturalization for all persons of color, and all persons now citizens of any part of the Commonwealth of Liberia, shall continue to be so, and all colored persons, emigrating from the United State of America, or any district or territory thereof, with the approbation, or under the sanction of the American Colonization Society; or of any society auxiliary to the same, or of any state Colonization Society in the United States, which shall have adopted the constitution of the American Colonization Society, shall be entitled to all the privileges of citizens of Liberia; except the same shall have been lost or forfeited by conviction of some crime.

EXECUTIVE POWER.

Art. 10th The Executive Power shall be vested in a Governor of Liberia, to be appointed by, and to hold his office during the pleasure of the American Colonization Society.

Art. 11th. The Governor shall be Commander in chief of the army, of the navy, and of the malitia of the Commonwealth; he shall have power to call the malitia, or any portion thereof, into actual service, whenever the public exergency shall require; and he shall have the appointment of all military and naval officers, except the captains and subalterns of malitia companies, who may be elected by their respective companies.

Art. 12th. The land owned by the Society, and all other property belonging to the Society, and in the commonwealth, shall be under the exclusive control of the Governor and such agents as he may appoint under the direction of the Society.

Art. 13th. The Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council shall appoint all officers whose appointment or election is not otherwise specially provided for in this constitution.

Art. 14th. There shall be a Lieutenant Governor, who shall be elected by the people in such manner as shall be provided by law. He shall exercise the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy in that office, occasioned by the Governor's death or resignation, or in case the Governor shall delegate to him the temporary authority of Governor, during the Governor's absence or sickness.

JUDICIAL POWER.

Art. 15th. The judicial power of the Commonwealth of Liberia, shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Governor and Council may from time to time, ordain and establish. The Governor shall be Exofficio, Chief Justice of Liberia and as such, shall preside in the supreme court, which shall have only appellate jurisdiction. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts except the chief Justice, shall hold their office during good behaviour.

Art. 16th. A code, or uniform system of civil and criminal laws shall be provided by the American Colonization Society for the Commonwealth of Liberia.

Art. 17th. The present criminal laws in force in the several colonies, or settlements now forming the Commonwealth of Liberia, and such others as may from time to time be enacted, shall constitute the criminal code of the commonwealth. Such parts of the common law, as set forth in Blackston's Commentaries, as may be applicable to the situation of the people, except as changed by the laws now in force and such as may hereafter be enacted, shall be the civil code of law for the commonwealth.

Miscellaneous.

Art. 18th. A Great Seal be provided for the colonies whereby the official and public acts of the Governor shall be authenticated; & the custody thereof shall be committed to the Colonial Secretary.

Art. 19th Until otherwise provided by law, the Commonwealth of Liberia shall be divided into two counties as follows:—

Monrovia, New Georgia, Caldwell, and Millsburg, shall constitute one county, under the name of Monsterado; Bassa Cove, Edina, Bexely, & Marshall, shall constitute the other county, under the name of the county of Grand Bassa.

Art. 20th. There shall be no slavery in the commonwealth.

Art. 21st. There shall be no dealing in slaves by any citizen of the commonwealth, either within or beyond the limits of the same.

Art. 22nd. Emigration shall not be prohibited.

Art. 23rd. The right of trial by Jury, and the right of petition shall be inviolate.

Art. 24th. No person shall be debarred from prosecuting or defending any civil cause for, or against himself or herself before any tribunal in the commonwealth, by himself or herself or council.

Art. 25th. Every male citizen of the age of 21 years, shall have the right of suffrage.

Art. 26th. All elections shall be by ballot.

Art. 27th. The military shall at all times, and in all cases, be in subjection to the civil power.

Art. 28th. Agriculture, the mechanic arts and manufactures, shall be encouraged within the commonwealth; and commerce shall be promoted by such methods as shall tend to develope the agricultural resources of the commonwealth, advance the moral, social and political interest of the people, increase their strength and accelerate and firmly establish, and secure their national independence.

Art. 29th. The standards of weight, measure, and money, used and approved by the Government of the United States of America, are hereby adopted as the standards of weight, measures and money within the Commonwealth of Liberia. But the Governor and Council shall have the power to settle the value of the actual currency of the Commonwealth according to the metallic currency of the United States of America.

Office of the American Colonization Society, Washington, January, 14th, 1839.

I hereby certify the above twenty nine articles to be a true copy of a Constitution of the Commonwealth of Liberia, adopted by the Board of Directors of the American Colonization Society, on the fifth day of January in the year Eighteen Hundred and Thirty Nine.

PHILIP R. FENDALL,

Recording Secretary.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Liberia Herald.

AT A MEETING CALLED At the request of several citizens of this township, on Tuesday evening 17th January 1843, in the Providence Baptist Church, the following exercises were entered upon. On motion, resolved, that the Rev. A. Cheeseman take the chair. On motion, resolved, that F. Burns serve as Secretary for the occasion.

After invoking the Divine blessing upon the meeting its object was stated at length by the chairman.

On motion, resolved, that the meeting be thrown open to indiscirminate debate. The Rev. Mr. Eden, then enquired whether the Society proposed to be organized, was designed, be independent of, or auxiliary to any other association for similar purposes already established. Rev. Mr. Teage answered in behalf of the chair, that it was not intended, so far as he was acquainted, to be auxiliary to any other institution—that as the other Societies formed in the colony were denominational in their character, and on that ground objectionable in the eyes, of many, it was proposed to form one entirely free from all those exceptionable features, on a broad scale, that none could make objections to. Mr. James Brown, said he had the constitution of the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which he thought with some few alterations would answer well for the Society now proposed to be formed; whereupon, on motion, resolved, that that constitution be read, which being done, it was resolved, that it be taken upon by articles

Art. I. Read. Resolved that the words "of Methodist Episcopal Church" be struck out, so as to read "Liberia Temperance Society."

Art. II. Adopted. Art. III. Resolved to strike out of this article the words "time, place, annual conference" so as to read "the second Tuesday in January." All the remaining articles in that constitution were adopted, and the pledge with the exception, in the latter, of the words "when prescribed by a Physician" which were struck out, leaving it to read, "in case of sickness" simply, without, what was thought to be, that unnecessary addition.

On motion, resolved, that the constitution be opened immediately for subscribers. This resolution was prefaced by some very pertinent remarks from the mover, (Mr. J. Brown). He thought that the temperance cause was a good one; and that appearances gave clear evidence that it was high time for the citizens of this commonwealth, awake to their duty in refence to it. We had often heard the Temperance cause spoken of as something fit only for lower classes in community. It reminded him of remarks frequently made about the christian religion, by those who knew nothing of its value, that it is something suited only to the weak and poor, not at all befiting men of mind and standing. He thought there was about so much reason in the one, as the other. He had been to America recently—he had there seen the first men in the nation, that the grounds about the seat of general government was often occupied by large concourses of people listening to temperance addresses from some of the ablest men of the senate. He had seen them lecturing on this vital subject, in the market houses and other places of public ressort, in a manner that showed to him the interest they took in this great reformation. He thought the subject worthy the espousal of any and all the Gentlemen in Liberia. After Mr. Brown sat down, the following names were given as subscribers to the Pledge:—

F. BURNS,	J. J. ROBERTS,
A. CHEESEMAN,	J. N. LEWIS,
S. BENEDICT,	RHODY FLUNOY,
B. R. WILSON,	H. SIMPSON,
G. P. WRIGHT,	C. PAYNE,
A. W. ANDERSON,	C. WHEELER,
JO. CLARKE,	S. PROUT,
H. TEAGE,	M. BENEDICT,
J. T. RICHARDSON,
R. FLUNOY,
J. EDEN,
J. S. PAYNE
J. BROWN,
J. B. GRIPON,
G. BAXTER,
J. R. A. WILSON,
J. L. BROWN,
G. W. BROWN,
J. GRISBY.
J. L. BENEDICT.

On motion, resolved, that the house proceed to elect officers. The following gentlemen were elected to fill the various offices in the Society for this year.

Rev. A. CHEESEMAN, President.

His Ex. J. J. ROBERTS, Vice President.

JOHN N. LEWIS Esq. Secretary. Rev. JAMES EDEN Treasurer.

Managers { Rev. H. TEAGE, G. P. FLUNOY, Hon. J. B. GRIPON, Hon. S. BENEDICT, Rev. B. R. WILSON, Rev. A. W. ANDERSON, JAMES BROWN.

Resolved, that the proceedings of the meeting be published in the papers of colony.

Resolved, that the thanks of the meeting be returned to the Chairman and Secretary for their services during the evening.

Resolved, that the meeting adjourn to meet again on the following Monday night at this place.

F. BURNS,

Secretary.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, FEBRUARY 21, 1843.

THE LUMINARY.—In the last number of this sheet the veracious editor has vouchsafed us a good share of fraternal attention. As the value or importance of an object is usually estimated by the attention paid to it, we hereby tender our humble acknowledgments to our worthy brother for this long & flattering expression of his opinion. We however cannot consent to follow through all the little mazes of baby criticisms; we commend them to the admiration of the sniveling crew who delights to follow in his wake and hold up his trail, & who has learned to weep or smile on the nice calculation of dollars and cents. The sapient editor would do well to send a few copies of this his scintillation to the next exhibition of his infant school. The numberless inverted commas, dashes and italics which adorn and dignify the production, might excite their admiration and puzzle the brains, but for maturer readers the flash is rather puerile.

But why all this dodging and wincing. The editors movements strongly remind us of a juvenile play called hide and seek. We stated that the editor had been charged with "sly dalliances," and somewhere in the neighbourhood of a defence or acknowledgement, we expected to find him. But where is he? Like a certain fish (whose name we have forgotten,) which darkens the water by the emission of a black liquid and thus seeks to evade its pursuer; or the skunk who throws around him the impenetrable defence of his own dear smell, he fires his pop-gun in the face of his opponent and attempts to conceal himself in the smoke. If the editor be guilty why not confess the fact? The guilt of such a deed is of itself bad enough; but a denial trebles it. If not guilty why not set up a defence? Why rest the defence on the baseless resolves of individuals who reside at a distance from the supposed scene of the assignation. Is it usual in resorts to the bowers of love and criminal dalliance to open the feat by a public announcement? Do men in such cases seek notoriety for their licentious deeds? If not how were the defenders to know the fact unless indeed they possess the attribute of ubiquity. But there was a defence: was there any examination? was the washermon or the chamber maid examined? were the boys questioned? If so—if any examination at all were had on the case, where are the records of the testimony? was the inquisition held at the Church or in the editor's kitchen. That no antetior examination or intervew was held at nor near the editor's dormitory is what we wish him to prove. But he has studiously avoided the allegation. He remembers the advice given to sancho, and pitifully crouches behind a batch of resolves.

If any thing were wanted to rivet the charge home upon him he has furnished it himself in his bungling and mendacious retort. If the editor however is lacking in honesty and ingenuousness he is not wanting in assiduity. His attempts to escape are worthy of a better cause. Fox like he endeavoured to lead off on a wrong course. Now he dives into a forest of "resolves" —then he asks help of his heels in a boundless savanna of silly diatribe—anon he seeks to conceal himself in the dusty regions of his own dear criticism—again he seeks refuge in accusing us of being his accuser. Verily this man must feel "monstrous" sore to resort for ease to so many postures.

But if the editor hopes to silence us by brandishing his pointless editorial rapier or firing his editorial squib, he has reckoned without his host. We repeat we shall reckon upon safety so long as we are beyond the reach of his foot and his chair.

The question is not who circulated the report, nor who dehorted the editor from his "sly dalliances"—but the question is; is the editor guilty. If so let him confess his sin. Acknowledge he was overtaken, remove the temptation far from him and be himself again.—If he be innocent let him establish his innocence by the usual methods of investigation. Let him not insult the public by the mere "resolves" of any set of men whether favourable or unfavourable, but establish his innocence by the testimony of those who may be supposed to be acquainted with his domestic habits.

The editor labours to prove that the resolutions proceeded from a "well attended meeting." Why does he not inform us of the exact number present. How many over twenty-five, and how many of the number present were in favour of the resolutions. This would be coming to one point; not certainly to the point from which he has been running during the whole controversy, namely an investigation of the charge—but the number who resolved him innocent.

He farther labors to prove that these resolutions speak the sense of the town. Every man has a soft place, is an old and common saying. The editor illustrates it. By how much he is praised by so much we are abused. And how this purblind editor plumes himself upon the public verdict.

But is this the fact. Don't let him "holler" before he is out of the woods. If public contempt can damn a character and the editor had any to lose, it would be no difficult matter to sink him. It must be obvious to every one that the man who will so contumaciously oppose a fair trial, and persist in resting his defence in so serious a matter upon simple resolutions, must carry within him the conviction that a fair and open investigation would be altogether unfavorable. "If a good man at any time is overtaken, or surprised into a fault, by some sudden and strong temptation he soon relents and acknowledges his fault. Not so with this editor." But the editor beats us. We, he says, praise-beslobber ourself; but the whole town slobbers him all over with praise, and then that nothing may be wanted he slobbers himself! wonderfully beslobbered he must be!! It is a pity they could not lubricate his brains, so that they might move occasionally.

But what grudge has this literary anakim lately conceived against Major Hicks that he should so suddenly turn against him, and endeavour to exhibit him in so ridiculous a light. The truth is, the editor is in a dilemma, and he cares not who is left in the lurch so he but escape with whole bones. Is he so dull as not to see that if Major Hicks can be so easily changed to either side, that his quots of the resolutions is worthless. According to this editor, the Major is prepared to be all things with all men, and thus the editor by his own showing invalidates the resolutions. Mr. Hicks voted for the resolutions and has explained his meaning: and now this liberal editor would kick up a quarrel with him because he is not prepared to go the whole length he wishes him, and dares to have an opinion of his own.

The editor quotes Webster. This is not the time for the niceties of grammatical and phililogical disquisition. Let him face the charge—let him speak out in good old fashioned english and clear himself, so that an anxious public mind may be at rest—and then he can buckle on his phililogical armor and ride forth to the death of improprieties. A good moral character is to be preferred before literary celebrity.

The editor's exceeding humility in his professed willingness to come down to the "useful and honest employment, (if need required) of scarring crowns" is strikingly contrasted, with his imperious conduct towards Rev. Mr. Brown. No one will doubt his ability to chase a whole flock of crows when it is recollected his unbridled ferocity made the hero of Heddington take to his heels. Gotorah's ghostly growl—the Kondah's envenomed arrow, and the leaden death sped from the warrior's musket, Mr Brown had bravely stood; but his courage failed & he was forced to quail before the furious scowl and fiery eye of his Rev. superintendant. And what worked the editor into such a storm of passion. Ah, Mr. B. touched him in a tender place." He wanted a little of the cash; and the editor was cashless. Had he asked for his blessing he would doubtless have obtained it without a second word; but he asked for cash, which, with the editor is quite another thing.

But we are in debt? what a wonderful discovery. A merchant in debt. Well, we do not owe this editor any thing but good—will. We pity his condition, and shall heartily rejoice to see him clear of the heavy charges under which he is now labouring. Let him be advised by us. If he has for a time abandoned the walks of virtue, return: if not, let him submit to a proper investigation and free himself from the odium. Let him go before an impartial tribunal. And whenever and wherever it may take place we should like to be present, as there are a few questions on some other subjects we would by permission introduce. It will be well when we are healing the sore to heal it thoroughly.

In reference to criticism, be it borne in mind that we are not disposed to be hypercritical, if we were we would, "as the editor of the Luminary is such a critic in english, just remind him of the excellent grammar of that phrase was been violated. This however is but a minor fault compared with the general sillyness of the effusions of this self constituted censor, and literary dictator.

A few of the grosser of the fibs in the editor's article we may probably notice in our next.

In our last number we are defaulter in a few peccances in grammar to which the sage of the Luminary has courteously called our attention. We thank him; and by way of making an acknowledgement he will find we have performed the same office of kindness for him. Although we are not so high "larnt" as the editor of the "Luminary" yet we assure our readers that a review of the sheet would have discovered to us the misuse of the participle done for the preterit did. When the paper went to press we were busily engaged with excogitations, among other things, about the necessary laws to prevent missionary editors from selling wine, either by the cask or by the single bottle without a licence. We therefore did not give the attention we should. One phrase however in the editor's category of errors we shall not at present alter, as we have much higher authority therefor than Rev. Mr. Chase. Our readers we know will extend their pardon to these venial faults, this editor only excepted. Bating a request to pay a just debt, it seems nothing so much riles him as a grammatical blunder, notwithstanding he is himself so much in the line of literary bulls. 'Old sinners are usually the most implacable against a fellow sinner.

The blunders of the Luminary above alluded to, are to be found in the first edition of this learned effusion, issued on the 9th. On the 11th another edition was brought forth. The true reason for the speedy republication of this valuable work has not transpired—whether such a rush was made for it as rendered it necessary speedily to publish a second edition is also a question not decided. The truth on this subject (like another truth we have been for sometime vainly endeavouring to extract from him) is probably locked up in his literary bosom. Some appear to think that as there is no unusual stir in the reading portion of the community, and as all the blunders of the first edition are not enacted in the last, said second edition was called for by the editor alone, merely to hide the deformities of the first; and thus the second is by them regarded errata for the first.

The editor's time and labour would have been vastly better employed in manfully encountering the charge and thus allaying the ferment of the public mind, than in conjuring up a maniac grin at the ghost of an error. This however is only an ineffectual effort to throw dust in the public eye. His object is to conceal himself from public contempt and scorn behind a bulwark of imputed errors. The editor reminds us of the narrative of a journey across the prairies which we have lately read. The tourist says that when a herd of buffaloes is pursued the calves will frequently become seperated from their dams. In such cases they (the calves) will fly off to any place of concealment—any tuft of grass or wild sage will answer their purpose, if it be high enough to conceal their head. Frequently he has seen one with his head buried in the grass, while his whole body was exposed, and standing as still though he were every white covered, when he has walked leisurely up and captured the little simpleton. The editor is seen in his concealment. But we will dismiss the excoriated "creter" for the present, and charitably allow him all the temporary repose that his endless shiftings and turnings will afford him. A cat on a hot "griddle" can't stand still.

FOR WANT OF TIME,—We are compelled to defer a very interesting account of a trip performed by our friend Mr. C. Williss some distance into the interior along the margin of the St. Paul.

His Excellency Gov. Roberts Messrs Chase and Day left on the 14th, on a similar route.

We trust they may push their way beyond Bo Porah, along the walls of which this river holds its course. The country between us and the Capital of the Kondahs has been so often traversed and so often described, that the yet unknown can hardly be sufficient in importance nor interest to repay the trouble and expense of a diplomatic campaign. True the region of Camwood may be reached, and plans suggested for removing the locality of some of it; but this also has been frequently done. Should the corps throw Bo Porah in their rear and push their adventurous way into country of the Foulahs then some thing will have been acheived of which the adventurers may boast and the society be proud.

Rev. Mr. Chase as we have observed accompanys the corps diplomatique. The known facility of this gentleman in writing—his prurience to write, and his ability to describe things that are not, as though they were, have placed expectation on the tiptoe for a monstrous book on his return. He may however decline publishing, at least in book form, and reserve the discoveries and feats—the hair breadth escapes—the ascent of mountains towering some distance above the moon—the descent into dark ravines below the earth where nought was seen, but horrid sounds were heard—the dangerous Boa-constrictor of awful maw and eyes like red hot pewter plates, and all the other scenes of horror which doubtless he must see, for animating and thrilling conversation with his friends at home.

Success to them all. We wish them a good long journey (as a short one will be of no avail) plenty fatigue—plenty of food and drink, and a safe return.

ANCIENT MONEY.

BEFORE the invasion of Julius Cæsar, the natives of England had tin plates, iron plates and rings, which were money, and their only money. On the authority of Seneca, a curious account is given of a period when leather, appropriately stamped to give it a certain legal character, was the only current money. At a comparatively recent date in the annals of Europe Fredrick the Second, who died in 1250, at the seige of Milan, actually paid his troops with leather money. Nearly the same circumstance occured in England during the great wars of the Barons. In the course of 150, King John, for the ransom of his royal person, promised to pay Edward the third, of England 3,000,000 of gold crowns. In order to fulfil the obligation, he was reduced to the mortifying necessity of paying the expenses of the palace in leather money, in the centre of each piece there being a little point of silver. In that reign is found the origin of the travestied honor of boyhoue, called—conferring a leather medal. The imposing ceremonies accompanying a presentation, gave full force, dignity, and value to a leather jewel, which nobleman were probably proud and gratified to receive at the hand of majesty.

So late as 1574, there was an immense issue of of money in Holland stampt on small sheets of paste board. But futher back in the vista of years, Numa Pompilius, the Second King of Rome who reinged 662 years before the Christian era, made money out of wood as well as leather, a knowledge of which might have influenced King John in the bold project of substituting the tanned hide of an animal for gold and silver, well known to his subjects to be exceeding precious.

Both gold and silver appear to have been in extensive circulation in Egypt, soon after their potency was understood in Asia. From thence they were introduced into Carthage and Greece; and finally travelling futher and futher in a westerly direction, the city of Rome discovered the importance of legalizing their circulation.

Weight having been always on the first importance in the early times, the shape of money appears to have been regarded with perfect indifference for a series of ages.

When the bits and portions of metal received as precious, were exclusively circulated, it is quite probable that each possessor shapped them to suit his own conception, as practised to some extent at this time in remote places in the East Indies:—the payer away cuts of parts with shears till he obtains by exacts weight, the stipulated, amount. It was thus that men travelled with the evidence of their possession in a sack. But great inconvenience must have resulted from this often tedious process; and as nations advanced in civilization and the economic arts, a certain mark or impression on certain sized pieces was acknowledged to be the sign of a certain weight. This facilitated negotiations, and afterwards led to further improvements, both in the shape, weight, and beauty of the external devices.

By and by the profile of the king, the date of the coinage, and the record of importance events, gave still more completeness and character to the circulating article of exchange.

THOUHGTS AND STEALINGS.

Plutarch relates an anecdote of an inquisitive coxcomb, who inquired of a citizen what he carried in his basket. The reply was—"It is covered that you may not know." Modesty never seeks to pry into an object intentionally hidden from the public eye.

There is a great deal in a name—particularly in the name of a book. This is the case now. This was the case two hundred years ago. Burton says: "It is a kind of policy to prefiix a phantastical title to a book which is to be sold: for as larks come down to a day-net, many vain readers will stand gazing, like silly passengers, at an antic picture in a painter's shop, that would not look at a judicious piece."

Diadacus Stella says: "A dwarf standing upon the shoulders of a giant, may see farther than the giant himself."

That was a happy author who defied the shafts of criticism by the remark, "Thou can'st not think worse of me than I do of myself." Were this feeling universal, the sleep of many would be less disturbed than it now is.

"Our writers are so many dishes, our readers guest. Our books like beauty; that which one admires another rejects."

It is related of Pancrates, that by the power of magic, he at pleasure turned his walking stick into a serving man; and then, after going through such labor as he wished performed, transformed him back to a stick. This beats all our modern labor-saving machines.

The Lacedæmonians were once in a council, when a debauch fellow made an excellent good speech. A grave Senator, however, objected to its reception because it had no better author. There are Lacedæmonion Senators still abroad.

Zisca, the warrior, had a wonderful idea of his personal prowess. His very name he considered as overwhelming terror to his enemies. He accordingly decreed, that, upon his death, a drum-head should be made of the skin of his body, in order to show the world that his enemies would flee at the sound of it. How many Ziscas there are now in the world!

A wise man has observed, that the laws, habits, manners, and customs of the world, change with the [illegible]; but its folly and vices remain the same in all

At the seige of Troy, which lasted more than ten years, there died 700,000 Grecians, and 670,000 Trojans before the taking of that city. Afterwards, 270,000 men, women, and children perished. Cæsar killed a million. Mahomet 300,000. Sicinides Dentatus fought a hundred battles and received 140 crowns and nine triumphs. Edward IV. was in twenty-six battles on foot.

Alexander stooped, so did his courtiers. Alphonsus tarned his head, and so did his parasites. Sabina Poppæa, Nero's wife, wore amber hair, so did all the Roman ladies in an instant. When the King laughs, all laugh. This is man.

When the sun shines with its usual splendor, but little curiosity is excited. It is only in his eclipse that the herd gaze and stare upon him. Let the cloud of adversity pass over the early favorite of fortune, and he becomes at once, the object of vulgar attentions and sneering remark.

It is said that the son of Themistocles once remarked, that "what I will my mother wills, and what my mother wills, my father doth." Themistocles was not the only father thus ruled by his sons.

If every man had a window in his breast, blinds would be in great demand.

A stupid fellow in a strange bed, once put out the candle that the biting fleas might not find him. How many drown their senses to blunt the gnawings of remorse.

The Chinese allow Europeans to have one eye! but claim two for themselves. All the rest of the world they proclaim blind.

Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy, is hard upon the the world. He says; "in former times they had but seven wise men. Now you can scarce find so many fools. The golden tripod, which the fisherman found, was to be given to the wisest man. It was offered to Bias. Bias refused, and offered it to Solon—Solon to another, &c. If such a thing were now found, we all would fight for it, as the three goddesses did for the golden apple—we are all so wise."

Vanity is the great sin of our species. Petronius remarked a long time ago, that "our country is so full of deified spirits, that you may sooner find a god than a man amongst us."

An ancient writer lays down three rules by which to judge a fool: 1. He that seeks what he cannot find. 2. He that seeks what, being found, will do him more harm than good. He that having a variety of ways to bring him to his journey's end, chooseth the worst. By these tests, how very few can escape the charge of folly!

Alexander, when he was presented with a rich casket by Darius, was at a loss what to put in it. His friends were free with their advice, but he chose to place Homer's works in it, as the most precious jewel of human wit.

Notwithstanding the losses that some of our merchants have sustained by ship-wrecks, for the want of more experienced navigators, and the great competition with foreigners, increased by an improper interference with our trade on their part—the commerce of the Colony is steadily increasing, though at present for causes unknown to us, there seems to be a cessation of trade. Our merchants are not discouraged by these difficulties, but are determined to prosecute the trade along the coast with renewed vigor. During the past year three new vessels have been launched at Monrovia, one at Bassa Cove, two, which were, foreign built purchased by colonists, and there are now on the stocks to be launched soon, three others; one at Monrovia, one at Edina, and one at Greenville. I am informed, it is contemplated by one or two gentlemen to build and fit a vessel this year capable of performing a voyage across the atlantic.

The want of adequate means and sufficient protection will for some time prevent our merchants from competing successfully with foreign traders, and from making the coast trade as lucrative as under other circumstances it would be not only to us but also to foreign traders. Many of them have adopted a system of crediting the Chiefs, and head men along the coast to a large amount: one half of which they can never collect: endeavouring by this means to obtain their influence, and to prejudice them against colonial traders, who are not willing if they were able to waste their property in this way, and wherever colonial traders, are to be found, they pay extravagant prices for produce; if to monopolize the trade, were the only objects of these men, their conduct might not be considered so reprehensible; but such is not the case; their malignant and wicked designs extend further than that, some of which have come to my knowledge, and at a proper time shall be exposed. I beg you to observe gentlemen, that I do not wish to be understood to include all traders that visit this part of the coast as being inimical to the Colony, no, there are some honorable exceptions among the traders of almost all nations: who are courteous and gentlemanly and who seem to take a deep interest in the prosperity of these colonies—founded as they know them to have been by the hand of benevolence and christian philanthropy. But to return. If to monopolize the trade were the only object of most of these traders, I think it would not be difficult to convince them, as are some already that, taking into consideration the losses they suffer by robbery, bad debts, protracted voyages, loss of life, &c. &c. If the foreign trade was confined to the settlements, they would be able to purchase their cargoes here at a much cheaper rate than at present, and then the colonists who are better acquainted with the African trade, which acquaintance alone has enabled them to compete in any degree with other traders—could regulate the prices—thereby extend the influence of the Colony, and more effectually carry out the design of the American Colonization Society, in civilizing the heathen of this country. As it is, gentlemen, nothing but untiring perseverance on the part of our merchants will enable them to maintain their standing, this I am persuaded they will not fail to use.

Information has reached me that some time in March last one D. Murray a British trader, notwithstanding he had been repeatedly admonished by the authorities not to do so, landed a quantity of merchandize to the natives at fish town in the county of Grand Bassa, contrary to the maritime regulations of this Commonwealth. From certain considerations arising from a misunderstanding with regard to that territory, and my aversion to any collision with British traders, I have been induced to exercise an almost unwarrantable degree of forbearance. The native residents too, of that place are guilty of a breach of faith by not complying with certain treaty stipulations entered into with this government. It now remains gentlemen for you to determine, whether the Majesty of the laws shall be maintained and what course shall be pursued by the executive with regard to these important subjects.

Another branch of our political economy on which depends our present comforts and future greatness; I am sorry to say is not increasing so rapidly as I could wish to see it. Agriculture in the Colony is not prosecuted with that vigor by a great many of the settlers which its importance demands. I know that farmers in Liberia have to contend with many disadvantages for the want of work animals &c. &c. still there is no just reason for despondency. The soil is good and capable of producing abundant harvests—this will be admitted by all, and in every instance where individuals have perseveringly given the business a fair trial it has not failed to yield them a handsome reward. The greatest hindrance to successful agriculture in Liberia, is the ruinous desire of most of our people to become wealthy in a very short time, therefore they are not willing to trust a slow but sure means of becoming so, but prefer to employ their little capital in speculations, become traders, and in nine cases out of ten, from their unacquaintance with a system of which they have had no previous knowledge—in a few years they become bankrupts; then as a last resort without sufficient means to give them a fair start, they go upon their farms where they have to plod and dig for several years before their circumstances are again easy and comfortable, I am happy to state however from personal observation that this practice of general trading is losing ground, though the crops among the natives, last year in a great degree failed, the colonists, especially in the upper settlements, were generally free from want, and in many instances were able to supply the neighboring natives. The past season has been one of rejoicing among the farmers. Rice crops especially have been abundant, and I rejoice to find that the people throughout the Commonwealth are becoming awake to their true interests and convinced that the future prosperity and independence of the Colony depend upon the agricultural resources of the country. Several gentlemen both in this and Bassa county are turning their attention to this subject, and are establishing coffee and sugar estates—though at present on a small scale. The experiment has proved successful, and established beyond a doubt the fact, that farmers in Liberia, if industrious, frugal, and persevering, may become not only independent but rich. Therefore to encourage this manifest spirit of agriculture in the Colony, I would recommend that some immunity be granted to such agriculturists as will cultivate certain articles in certain quantities.

Public improvements in the Colony have not advanced so rapidly as I had anticipated this in a great degree has been owing to the difficulty of procuring proper material. I have the pleasure, however to inform you that notwithstanding these difficulties we have succeeded in finishing, and have now in successful operation a light house on Cape Messurado. This I believe is acknowledged by all strangers that have visited the Colony since its erection, to be a very important improvement,—of the court house for this county I can only report that every effort has been made to drive forward the work, but for reasons above stated it has advanced slowly. We are now encouraged, however, to hope that in two or three months, this building will be completed or at least so far advanced as to be used.

In G. B County through the agency of L. Sheridan Esq. we have succeeded in repairing thoroughly the court house and jail which had been for some time in a dilapidated condition.

The roads in the vicinity of some of the settlements have been somewhat improved especially near New Georgia. The citizens of which place are doing themselves much credit. They have nearly succeed in opening a ditch around that settlement which will not only add much to the health of the village but will soon more than repay the inhabitants by the great advantage it will give them in raising live stock.

The defence of the Colony is as adequate as our pecuniary circumstances will admit though perhaps not as much so as our position requires especially in our interior settlements. The past year I have had mounted on light carriages two small brass field pieces which added to the large cannon previously mounted makes a pretty formidable appearance, and no doubt will contribute much to secure to the Colony for some time an undisturbed state of tranquility, as in my opinion nothing is better calculated to maintain a good understanding with our neighbors than a state of overt military preparation.

I am happy to inform you gentlemen that the revenue of the Commonwealth is steadily increasing. From official returns to the 31st December I have been able to make up the following summary statement—the amounts in detail will be laid before you—of the transactions at the colonial Treasury for the year ending 31st December 1842. The Treasurer for the county of Messurado acknowledges the receipt of the following amounts—viz:

From the Collector of customs P. M. $2940,93, duty on imports.—$450,50, anchorage duty.—$57, light duty.—$90,93, tonage duty C. V.

From the Sheriff of the county,—$22,20. Court fines and—$37,06. Military fines.

From the Clerk, Court, Comm. Pleas,—$50, for auction license.—$120.80, for commission license.—$119.25, for special license. And $144,69, for retail license. Making an amt. total of,—$4027, 36.

The following have been the disbursements viz: For Public buildings, including,—$500 paid on account the light house,—$2250. For the session of the Legislature in 1842,—$262. For the judiciary,—$370. For Prisoners,—$350. For the defence of the Colony,—$200. For signal master and light house on Cape Messurado,—$165. For elections,—$32. For Printing,—$39. And for contingencies,—$33,12. Making,—$3693,12, and,—$329.24 less than the receipts; which added to,—$358,80 balance in hands of Treasurer 31st Dec. 1841 will leave a balance in the Treasury this day of,—$1188,04.

The following are the amounts collected in the county of Grand Bassa viz—

By the Collector for the port of Marshall. Duty on imports,—230.

By the collector for the ports of Edina and Bassa Cove.

Duty on imports,—$726,17. Anchorage duty,—$12.

By the Sheriff of the county—Court fines,—$79 Tax-fee,—$10.

By the Clerk of the Court of C. P. For commission license,—$125, Special license,—$50, retail license,—$144—,making an amount total of,—$1376.17.

The following amounts have been disbursed viz: For Public buildings,—$249.50. For the Legislature,—$62,50 Judiciary,—$131. For the defence of the Colony,—$48. Incidental expenses,—$93—making an amount total of,—$587—leaving a balance in favor of the Commonwealth this day,—$789,17.

These gentlemen are the matters respecting the state of the Commonwealth which I have thought of importance to be submitted to your consideration, some others no doubt will arise in the course of your deliberations, that may require equal attention. I am happy, however, in this opportunity of committing the arduous affairs of our government to the collected wisdom of this people. To you then, gentlemen, who are charged with the function of Legislation we look with encouragement for that guidance and support which may enable us to steer with safety the vessel in which we are embarked.

The prudence and temperance of your discussions within these walls will no doubt promote that conciliation so necessary for the advancement of our political and religious institution. That all should be satisfied with any one order of things is not to be expected. But I indulge the hope that a great majority of our citizens will cordially concur, in honest and disinterested efforts, which have for their object the general good of the people, the maintainance of peace with our neighbors, and order and obedience to the laws by the citizens of the Commonwealth, to establish principles and practices of administration favorable to the security of liberty and property, and to the furtherance of civilization and christianity among the heathen tribes around us.

POETRY.

AN ADDRESS,

COMPOSED FOR A TEMPERANCE MEETING.

Ye friends of moderation,
Who think a reformation,
Or moral renovation,
Would benefit our nation;
Who deem intoxication,
With all its dissipation
In every rank and station,
The cause of degradation;
Of which your observation
Gives daily demonstration,—
Who see the ruination,
Distress and desolation,
The open violation,
Of moral obligation:
The wretched habitation
Without accommodation;
Or any regulation,
For common sustentation.
A scene of depravation,
Unequall'd in creation;
The frequent desecration
Of Sabbaths' ordination;
The crime and depredation,
Defying legislation:
The awful profanation
Of common conversation,
The mental aberration,
And dire infatuation
With every sad gradation
To maniac desperation:
Ye who with consternation,
Behold this devastation,
And utter condemnation
On all inebriation;—
Why sanction its duration?
Or show disapprobation,
Of any combination,
For its extermination?—
Without prevarication,
We deem a declaration,
That offers no temptation,
By any palliation,
Of this abomination;
The only sure foundation,
For total extirpation;
And under this persuasion
Hold no communication,
With noxious emanation
Of brewers' fermentation,
Or poisonous preparation,
Of spirit distillation,
Nor any vain libation
Producing stimulation;
To this determination,
We call consideration:
And without hesitation
Invite co-operation;
Not doubting invitation,
And high approbation,
Without provocation,
Will raise your estimation,
And by continuation,
Afford you consolation
That in participation,
With this association,
You may, by meditation,
Ensure the preservation
Of a future generation
From all contamination,—
And may each indication,
Of such regeneration,
Be the theme of exultation,
Till its final consummation.

MISCELLANEOUS

"Content if hence the unlearned their wants may view,
The learned reflect on what before they knew

It was a beautiful summer morning when sleep hung not on my eyelids, that I left my room, and with a friend sallied out to inhale the freshness of the outward air. The morning bird had scarcely risen from his lowly perch and begun his early song. The day was just beginning to light up the horizon. And there was displayed in the clouds that skirted the Eastern sky a grandeur which we had never before seen. It something seemed like a city built in ancient style of architecture no less massive than the Egyptian. It seemed a noble city bearing evident signs of age but not yet in ruins.—Nor least beautiful was the even-shaded ground-work which resembled the smooth surface of a lake or sea encompassing the city—

"* * * * * but how shall I describe
What naught resembles else my eye hath seen."

At such an hour when the mind is unoccupied with trifling thoughts and is undisturbed by vexatious anxieties about one's business, the view was well calculated to start in the mind a comparison between this and other hours of the day. And ere those clouds with glory tinged had far sailed toward the south, day-break seemed the happiest leisure hour in all the day, and the resolution almost formed itself that

Oftimes I would forth and greet
"The twilight of the morning."

Natural scenery, romantic or grand, unconnected with any painful associations, ever delights the beholder, be he the rude barbarian, the mere man of pleasure, or philosopher. To one the moonlight outline is more interesting to look upon than the varied landscapes brightened by the rising, risen or the setting sun. The abrupt declivity, with its uneven surface, and its embryo river skipping from ledge to ledge—winding in playful eddies among the crevices of the rocks and by thick foliage concealed from the gaze of the vulgar multitude, never fails to please the eye of the curious rambler who has penetrated the thicket.

Ever changing Nature constantly presents a varied aspect. Day and night alternate in quick succession—Spring follows Winter and Autumn treads closely on the footsteps of retreating Summer. Still in all her changes there are found those who admire and celebrate her beauties. From the diversity of feeling on this and other objects arose the remark among the ancients, that there was "no disputing of tastes." It was their opinion, and the writer's is concurrent, that if one man's disposition incline him to love most the beauty of that hour of the day when the departed sun lights up the Western sky, or that season of the year when nature wears her most variegated garb, no one who loves these not the less but others more can reproach the former for an incorrect taste.

The lover of the evening twilight loves it because the conflicting and driving winds have ceased to vent their fury and the clouds are no more driven hither and thither by opposing curcents in the upper air, but have settled away and rest on the horizon where they appear in endless variety of shape and tinged with every hue by the setting sun. This appears to him the best moment for sober reflection—the time

* * * * "when the restless day
Expiring, lays the warbling world asleep, and when mortals may unmolested con the past and project wiser plans for future action.

Others seek at noonday the shade of some ancient oak in the border of the forest, recline there and view the surrounding prospect. The eagle soars with vigorous wing to stare the sun, nor does his eye grow dim with the sun's excessive brightness. But feeble man and dependant nature have less strength to withstand the power of the meridianal sun. The intensity of the noontide heat causes a rapid evaporation of the moisture which plants have inhaled during the previous night-fall—whereby the leaves loose their rigidity—the primrose closes its doors against the busy insect, seeking to steal away its sweetness—the lily droops and hangs still lower its nodding cup. Nor is man less affected by exposure to the vertical rays of the sun, as if sympathising with the dejection every where visible around him, his muscles contract with less force and his mind is incapable of affixing to any subject with the usual vigor of thought.

To another having a brilliant imagination, moon-light presents delightful landscapes

With which to indulge his wand'ring fancy unrestrained.

Then only the undulatory outline of the grove is seen which exhibits the appearance of something veiled in sombre coloured curtains. The darkness under the foliage hinders the eye from penetrating into the wood. The curiosity to know what is concealed heightens the interest with which we look upon it. Another has said "The imperfect glimpse which the eye catches of rocks, trees and other objects around, adds double dignity to those shrouded mountains and darkened abysses of which the height, depth and extent are left to imagination." Perchance the lofty ridge of a line of hills is seen accurately defined by the light of the moon, we also perceive that the slope which leads to those heights is studded with trees and we readily suppose them clothed with all the varied and varying foliage of the wood. Now the imagination delights to contemplate such a prospect. There is no restraint imposed by the certainty of eye-sight. To each respective tree the lively fancy can form the palmate, oblong or lancet leaf, and can paint them the deep evergreen hue of the cedar, or a more cheerful, lighter green. The pleasure enjoyed is a sort of negative pleasure, we are charmed not so much with what we do see as with what we are fond to imagine we would see developed in specific beauties when the morning sun shall break in upon the scene.

A FACT.

A man in the town of M——N. H., who had, while from home, earned about six dollars, returned the other day to his family with the cash. His wife told him that during his absence the family had suffered for food. He replied—I will go to a store and buy what is wanted, and then we shall have enough. He had refrained from drink for sometime; but on arriving at the grocery, it was found he had money, and was invited to drink first a little beer—then something stronger, till he got drunk, spent all his money for rum, and returned to his half-starved family at 2 o'clock in the morning, penniless.

The poor wife was greatly distressed, and on the next evening ventured to go to the wife of the rumseller, told the story of her suffering family—of the manner in which her husband had been made a pauper, &c., whereupon the goodly lady filled a large basket with pork, bread, coffee, sugar, &c. and then calling her husband into the entry, on the presence of the drunkard's wife, said, last night you took from this poor woman's husband his money for rum; I have now filled a basket full of articles of food, and so long as you continue to sell liquor, get men drunk, and take from them their money, thereby making their families poor and miserable, I will deal out to them, from the house, all they may want to support them." This was more than the husband could stand; and the next morning he went to his store and emptied every cask, decanter and bottle of liquor into the road, saying he would no longer sell liquid fire, but would keep a temperance store. Would to heaven that the wife of every rumseller would follow the example of this good woman, and that the result might be the same.—Mercantile Journal.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE DRUNKEN SEA.

By JAMES HENRY, M. D., Fellow of the College of Physicians, Dublin.

Nothing can exceed the beauty of the Drunken Sea from the beach of Soberland, where you take shipping as far as Point Just-Enough. The clear and smooth water is scarcely so much as rippled by the light breeze which wafts from the shore the fragrance of a thousand flowers. No mist ever broods upon the water, no cloud overcasts the soft blue sky. The glorious image of the sun by day, the silvery face of the moon by night, are nowhere seen to so much advantage as in the mirror of Pleasant Bay, for so this part of the Drunken Sea has been most appropriately named.—The current being always towards Point Just-Enough, and the wind, if you can apply that name to the gentle breath which no more than fills your sails, always in the same direction, the passage is so smooth and easy that it not unfrequently happens that the voyager finds himself close upon the Point almost before he is aware that he has left Soberland.

The voyage is usually performed in boats made out of porter hogsheads, or wine pipes, or spirit puncheons. It is astonishing what excellent sailing boats these vessels make, when divided longitudinally, and furnished with sails and oars. Riches having the advantage every where, upon the Drunken Sea, as well as upon land, the boats which are used by the rich are much more elegant, easy and commodious, although perhaps not faster sailers than those which are used by the poor. Besides, the fares, there are certain tolls payable by all persons who sail upon the Drunken Sea. These tolls are so considerable as to form a principal part of the revenues of some of the imperial governments of Soberland. Notwithstanding the expense which is thus necessarily attendant upon sailing on the Drunken Sea, the number of persons, rich and poor, who sail upon it exceeds all calculation; the rich paying the expense out of their superfluities, the poor out of their necessaries. Some, however, insist that in the end the poor bear the whole expense, and pay out of their necessaries for the rich man's voyage as well as their own.

The voyage to Point Just-Enough becomes more and more agreeable the nearer you approach the Point. The air becomes still more soft and balmy. The blue of the sky and water still more delicious, and even the sombre objects of Soberland, now somewhat in the distance, seem to acquire a certain mellowness and splendor from the new medium through which they are seen. In the meantime a corresponding change takes place in the passengers themselves; they experience an agreeable sensation of warmth, commencing at the pit of the stomach and gradually extending from thence over the whole body; their pulse beats quicker and stronger; their breath acquires an agreeable odor, not unlike that of the sea on which they sail; their eyes become brighter and softer, and sometimes even seem to sparkle; their cheeks flush a little; their hands are sensibly warmer to the touch; their looks and gestures become animated; they feel increased strength and courage and readiness for action; their ideas succeed each other with greater rapidity and vivacity; and are a little less obedient to the will; they become less careful and anxious, less precise and particular; regard themselves with more complacency, their neighbors with more charity; gentlemen become less solicitous about the set of their cravats; ladies, of their caps and collars; all become less serious; less disposed to deliberate; less inclined to prayer, or any other solemn religious duty; less scrupulous about right and wrong; less tight-laced; not so very sober; more gay, good-humored, frolicsome, frivolous; more inclined to singing, jesting, and light conversation; more voluble, energetic, eloquent, more ready to tell secrets, either of their own or their neighbors; more inclined to quarrel suddenly.

Diffugiunt mordaces solicitudines;

All voyagers to Point Just-Enough agree in the account which they give of their passage across Pleasant Bay, and of the agreeable sensations experienced on approaching the Point; but they disagree very much in their statements respecting the Point itself, some say that it is further off, others that it is nearer; some that it lies more to the north, others more to the east; many assert that it recedes as you approach it, while some maintain that it moves forward, and comes to meet you before you have more than half crossed Pleasant Bay.—These conflicting statements may, perhaps, be reconciled on the supposition, which seems far from unreasonable, that Point Just-Enough is situated in a floating island, which, shifting its position from time to time, is sometimes nearer, sometimes more distant; sometimes a little more to the north, and at other times a little more to the east. However this may be, the visitors to Point Just-Enough all agree in stating that it is quite impossible either to come to anchor off it, or to effect a landing upon it; the water being so deep that no anchor will take the ground, and the current so rapid as to carry you past the Point, before you can secure a boat to it by any grapples which have yet been invented. For these reasons, all skillful sailors, the moment they arrive at Point Just-Enough, instead of vainly attempting to come to anchor or to land, tack about, and steer back again across Pleasant Bay for Soberland, thus avoiding the danger of being carried by the force of the current further on into the Drunken Sea, and perhaps thrown upon an island called Tipsy Island, lying at no great distance to the leeward.

The great unwillingness with which all the visitors to Point Just-Enough, allow the sailors to tack about and steer homewards, has given rise to an opinion that if a landing upon the Point were practicable, every visitor would settle there permanently, and bid an eternal farewell to Soberland.

The voyage homewards from Point Just-Enough is much less agreeable than the voyage outwards; the air gradually loses its balminess, and the landscape its brilliant colors; the current and wind, too, although gentle, yet being against you make it necessary to tack, and thus render the passage tedious. There are few who do not experience as they return, some diuretic effect, as well as a slight degree of thirst, the latter of which continues after landing, and even until bed-time, unless removed by tea or coffee. The night's sleep is less soft and refreshing, but at the same time heavier than if no visit had been paid to the Point in the day; and on awaking the next morning, a degree of languor is experienced, and sometimes even a little throbbing at the temples, which symptons, however, disappear either during the making of the toilette, or soon after breakfast, and are succeeded by a strong desire for another voyage to Point Just-Enough. This desire being gratified with as little delay as possible, the same sensations are experienced, and the same consequences ensue, and thus a habit is formed which increases in strength, until at last a daily visit to Point Just-Enough comes to be considered almost as necessary as life.

Pleasant Bay is therefore covered from early morning until a late hour at night, with boats conveying passengers of all ranks and descriptions to Point Just-Enough and back again. The intercourse is, however, by far the greatest from dinner hour until tea time, the evening being generally considered the most fashionable, as well as the most convenient and agreeable time for the voyage.—Some dine before they set out, but the greater number take dinner on board. Among the visitors to Point Just-Enough, there are a few who go very irregularly, and at long intervals, others who go only every second or third day, and some only on the Sabbath day; but the great majority, unless prevented by illness, go every day of the year at the same hour, and never allow either business or pleasure, or even bankruptcy or insolvency, or trouble, or the death of friends or relatives, to interrupt the regularity of their daily sail across Pleasant Bay. Kings and Queens, lords and ladies, knights and members of imperial legislatures, professors of all arts and sciences, merchants, traders, artizans, and even those who subsist upon charity, are to be found among the daily visitors to Point Just-Enough; the Christian, the jew, and the pagan; the white, the black, and the olive; the democrat, the leveller, and the arristocrat; the busy as well as the idle, the wise as well as the foolish, the learned as well as the ignorant, the grave as well as the gay, the young as well as the old. Parents bring their children with them, and teach them to navigate the Drunken Sea, as birds teach their young to fly. Employers bring their workmen, and masters their servants; the latter, however, require but little teaching, having generally had the advantage of an early apprenticeship to the art.

It is worthy of remark, that of the countless multitudes who daily sail upon Pleasant Bay, there is not one who can be persuaded that it forms a part of the Drunken Sea. It is also remarkable, that every one of those who make a daily practice of sailing upon this bay, acquires an invincible dread of water, and cannot be prevailed upon to drink it unless when sick.

It has been observed besides, that with the exception of man, all animals have an antipathy to the Drunken Sea, and cannot, without great difficulty, be persuaded to navigate even that part of it called Pleasant Bay. From this fact some naturalists have deduced a distinctive character of man, and instead of describing him as an animal, erect, bipid, rational, with teeth intermediate between graminivorous, and carnivorous, define him simply, an animal which sails upon the Drunken Sea.

The longitude and latitude of Point Just-Enough never having been exactly ascertained, either from its being situated, as already mentioned, in a floating Island, or whatever other cause, geographers have found it very difficult to assign the precise limits of Pleasant Bay. It is, perhaps, to get rid of this difficulty, that some geographers describe Pleasant Bay, as extending the whole way from Soberland to Tipsy Island. But whether it be or be not geographically correct to apply the name of Pleasant Bay to that part of the Drunken Sea which lies between Point Just-Enough and Tipsy Island, it is quite certain that there is no part of this Sea where the sky is so bright, the air so fresh and exhilerating, or the motion of the water so lively and buoyant as it is here. It happens, therefore, as might be expected, that many of those who leave Soberland, with the intention of going no further than Point Just Enough, do yet, when they arrive at that point, extend their voyage to Tipsy Island, tempted by the increasing beauty of the scene, the favoring wind and current, and the easy landing which the shore of the Island presents at no great distance. Besides those who thus voluntarily extend their voyage from Point Just-Enough to Tipsy Island, there are others who, over-shooting the Point either through ignorance or inadvertance, miss stays in their attempt to tack, and are carried to the island by the force of the wind and current.

As it generally happens that those who have once visited Tipsy Island, in either of the ways just mentioned, soon return to it again, direct from Soberland, and repeat their visit with great regularity during the remainder of their lives, Tipsy Island is always full of visitors. The sensations experienced on this Island differ only in degree from those which are felt at Point Just-Enough. The pulse and heart beat a little quicker and stronger, the eyes become brighter, the skin hotter, the face more flushed, the voice louder, the gestures more vehement, the conversation less connected, the ideas rambling and incoherent. Some dance, some sing, some swear, some fight, all stagger about; some become loyal, others patriotic, some poetical, others philosophical; all are veracious, disinterested, magnanimous, chivalrous. It is usual to remain several hours, and even to pass the night upon the island. A few remain upon it for several days together; but as it is considered discreditable to be seen upon it in the morning, those who regard appearances usually leave for Soberland sometime before day-break; many fall asleep on the Island, and are carried in that state to their boats. In the morning all wake unrefreshed, with a parched mouth, hot skin, red eyes, aching head, and no appetite for breakfast, and spend the day drinking soda water, at the great fountain on the quay of Soberland, which looks towards Pleasant Bay, and longing for evening in order to return to Tipsy Island, or at least as far as Point Just-Enough.

Tipsy Island is said to have been first discovered by Noah, who planted vines upon it. It was afterwards sacred to Bacchus, whose temple, situated about the middle of the island, is in a high state of preservation It has been visited by Alexander the Great, and most of the illustrious men both of ancient and modern times, the names of many of whom are to be seen, carved with their own hands, upon the bark of the vines; one of the most recent is that of Sir Walter Scott, underneath which are some words of the song, which the illustrious author of Waverly used to sing, when he visited this island:—

Tarry woo', Tarry woo,
Tarry woo' is ill to spin;
Card it weel, card it weel,
Card it weel ere ye begin.

The author of Waverly was, however, only an occasional visitor to this island. Its daily visitors sing a song which is somewhat different, and runs nearly as follows:—

The Sea, the Sea, the Drunken Sea;
The blue, the fresh, the ever free, the ever free,
Without a mark, without a bound,
It runneth the earth's wide regions round;
It plays with the soul, it mocks the skies,
Or like a cradled monster lies,
Or like a cradled monster lies.

I'm on the Sea, the Drunken Sea;
I am where I would ever be,
With heaven above, and hell below,
And ruin wherese'er I go.
If a storm should come, and awake the deep,
What matter, what matter, I shall ride and sleep,
What matter, what matter, I shall ride and sleep.

I love, oh how I love! to ride, to ride
On the fierce, foaming, maddening tide;
When every wild wave drowns the moon,
Or whistles aloft its tempest tune;
And tells of soberland far below,
And how on the Horrors the storm doth blow,
And how on the Horrors the storm doth blow.

I never was on the Sober shore,
But I loved the Drunken Sea more and more,
And backwards flew to her billowry breast,
Like a bird that seeketh its mother's nest.
And a mother she was and is to me,
For I was born, was born on the Drunken Sea.

The waves were white, and red the morn,
In the noisy hour, in the noisy hour, when I was born;
The storm it whistled, the thunder rolled,
And the lightning seamed the skies with gold.
And never was heard such an outcry wild,
As welcomed to life the Drunken Sea's child.
As welcomed to life the Drunken Sea's child.

I have lived since then in calm and strife,
Full Fifty summer's a jovial life,
With wealth to spend and a power to range,
And never have sought or sighed for change;
And death, whenever he comes to me,
Shall come, shall come, on the Drunken Sea,
Shall come, shall come, on the Drunken Sea.

All navy and regimental messes are held upon this island, and there is no part of the world where the point of honor is so strictly observed, or so many duels fought. It is here that white Bait and other ministerial dinners, election treats, Lord Mayor's feasts, and sheriff's breakfasts are given. Barristers always dine here when upon circuit, and medical consultations are sometimes held here. Great discussions on religion and politics take place here, and many of the most famous speeches of members of imperial legislatures have been composed, and not a few of them deliverd in this place. There are several magnificent race-courses on the island, and gambling tables on new and improved principles. It is also the favorite resort of pirates and smugglers, robbers, burglars, and murderers, who have performed some of their most famous exploits upon it. As there is no church nor other place of religious worship on the island, none but the most abandoned are seen upon it during church hour on the Sabbath day; soon after church hour the boats begin to arrive, and continue arriving until a late hour on the Sabbath night.

It is impossible to mistake the habitual visitors of Tipsy Island, when you meet them any where in Soberland; their hands are tremulous; their eyes muddy; those parts of their face which should be white, are red; and those parts which should be red, and particularly their lips, are blue and purple; they are consumed by an unquenchable internal heat and thirst; have little or no appetite for solid food; are infirm in their gait, either attenuated or bloated in their form, fretful, timid, irresolute of purpose, apprehensive of evil, and have no disposition for useful and active exertion, nor any taste for virtuous society or intellectual enjoyment. Ten thousand millions of money are annually expended in loss of time upon the Drunken Sea and Tipsy Island, paying the tolls and fares, manufacturing porter hodgsheads, spirit puncheons, and wine-pipes; and supporting work houses, jails, penitentiaries, and penal settlements, police commissioners and policemen, stipendiary magistrates, dispesaries, hospitals, and lunatic asylums for the use of the visitors of Tipsy Island.

Over against Tipsy Island on the mainland, and about a league beyond Point Just-Enough, is the port of Paphos. Many of the boats touch here as they return from the Island. Malaria is prevalent in this port. The hospital, which is a very large building, and always full of patients, is situated on a hill immediately above the sport, and commands a fine view of the Drunken Sea.

Off Tipsy Island, on the side furthest from Paphos, are three sunken rocks called the Horrors. The visitors to Tipsy Island are frequently dashed on these rocks by an eddy or whirlpool which surrounds them, and sucks in every boat that comes within a certain distance. Dreadful as is the fate of those who perish at once by this accident, that of the survivors is worse; the strength of their muscles is gone; their stomack rejects its food; their memory and perception are impaired; they are careless and indifferent about their property, friends, and nearest relatives; they are haunted by vain terrors, and not unfrequently imagine that dead or absent persons are present and talking with them; imbecile alike in body and mind, they have no happiness but in Tipsy Island, which they never cease to visit, until sooner or later they are again drawn in by the whirlpool, and dashed to pieces upon the same rocks upon which they had so nearly perished before.

On the same side of Tipsy Island as the Horrors, but a little further out than the Drunken Sea, are the Liver Sands. These are the more dangerous, because the precise point where they begin or where they end has not been exactly ascertained. Many of the visitors to Tipsy Island, in their attempts to keep clear of the whirlpool and the Horrors, run aground upon the Liver Sands; all such become yellow in the skin, hard in the stomach, swelled in the legs, and die dropsical; effects not unlike those which are produced by twenty years residence in India.

It is remarkable that those who sail on the Drunken Sea in boats made of spirit puncheons, more frequently strike upon the Horrors or run agound upon the Liver Sands than those who sail in wine pipes or porter hodgsheads. The superior safety of the two last mentioned classes of vessels is, however, counterbalanced by their peculiar defects; porter hodgsheads in particular not only dull the wits and bloat the bodies of those who sail much in them, but are besides so heavy and unpleasant sailors, and produce so much biliousness and sea sickness, that many persons say they would rather not sail at all upon the Drunken Sea than go in them; while on the other hand, the wine pipes are infested with a venomous insect, from which no degree of care can keep them free. This insect which closely resembles the common bug, is generated in the less of the wine, and like the bug, hides itself in the crevices of the wood, from whence issuing out unobserved, it bites somewhere about the great toe. The pain and swelling which follow its bite are very considerable, extending to the foot, and even to the entire limb. Those who have been frequently bitten by it, have their legs swelled so as to resemble elephant's legs, are very irritable and choloric, and subject to fits of indigestion and apoplexy, which sometimes prove fatal in the course of a few hours. The antidote to the bite of this insect consists in drinking a large quantity of water, and never again sailing upon the Drunken Sea. it is, however, seldom used, as the bite of the insect has the property of communicating along with the poison an invincible repugnance to the antidote. For this reason few who have been bitten by this insect ever recover.

For some distance all round the Horrors, and on the Liver Sands, the sea is dark and rough, the winds loud and boisterous, and the sky overcast with clouds, which not unfrequently overshadow a great part of Tipsy Island. When you pass this island, and advance further into the Drunken Sea, the water becomes still darker and rougher, the winds more loud and boisterous, and the clouds which overspread the sky more black and lowering. Continuing to proceed, you enter into a dense fog, called Fatuous Fog, which reaches from the water quite to the clouds, and shuts in the view in every direction. Immediately on entering this fog, the compass ceases to point, and whirls round incessantly with a rotary motion upon its axis Navigation being thus rendered impossible, it rarely happens that a boat which has entered Fatuous Fog is ever seen again. The few travellers who have ever emerged from it having been found to be either insane or idiotic, have been received into a lunatic asylum which stands upon a little point of land running into the sea, opposite to Paphos and Point Just-Enough. Beyond Fatuous Fog, and forming the extreme limit of Drunken Sea, there is a range of very high and inaccessible mountains, called the Mountains of No-Hope. At the foot of these mountains the sea beats with inconceivable fury, throwing up from time to time human bones and fragments of wrecked and foundered vessels.

The boatmen believe that somewhere under the Mountains of No-Hope there is an outlet through which the waters of the Drunken Sea disgorge themselves into the abyss of Hell.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Liberia Herald.

SUPREMACY OF THE POWERS OF THE LIBERIA DISCIPLINE, TO THAT OF THE DISCIPLINE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR,—Will you please grant me a column or two in your faithful Herald, to give a little more information concerning the power of the Liberia Discipline, in addition to that in the Herald of Jan. 21st. For things connected with God and religion. connot be too well known, nor too far spread.

You probably recollect, that, in my other communication I informed you, that, I was suspended from all official services in the Church until the ensuing Quartely Meeting Conference, which was to have its session at Lower Caldwell, on the 1st. Saturday in April. But for certain reasons, probably the following, it came on one month sooner.

Last Saturday night, 4th, inst. at 8 1-2 o'clock the Quarterly Conference met in a private house, with Rev. S. Chase in the chair. After making out a roll of members present, and reading it, they proceeded to business.—First, are there any complaints? None, said the Preacher in charge.—Well, said Mr. Chase," I have: I have, said he, a suspension of Mr. Brown, from the last Quarterly Conference. And what have you to say to it; Mr. Brown?—I said, I cannot say any thing to it until I see the charges; Mr. Chase said, have you not heard, for what you were suspended? I said, I have heard many things; but for which I was suspended I cannot tell. (For two of the members had told me, but four days since, that I was suspended for not coming to Conference.) Well, said Mr. Chase you were suspended for slanderously reporting what took place between us, when you came to settle with me. You, said he, went off and told the whole of that transaction, and for it you are suspended. Well, said I; please present the charges, that I may know whether I am ready for trial or no. (For he had not asked that question.) But he would not present one charge on paper. I then called for the minutes of the trial at which I was suspended; but no minutes granted.—I then told the Conference, that I was not ready for trial: but talking did no good. Mr. Chase said the trial should come on; and if I had any thing to say, say on.—I then appealed to the Conference for a nonsuit; founding my plea, as follows.—First:—at the last Quartely Conference at which I was suspended, I had not any notification of any trial whatever. No one had ever given me one word of reprehension, or reproof for any errors or misconduct whatever: unless they considered Mr. Russell's offering to give me an oath for the confirmation of those facts, to be reprehension. Nor had I been brought before any committee of local preachers as the Discipline requires. The verbal charges which Mr. Chase presents were transacted, 2 months lacking one day, before the first Quarterly Conference took place, at which I was suspended. And there were local preachers who might have had been conveniently called, and before whom I might have had opportunity to have made reconciliation for whatever charges might have been brought against me.

Now Mr. Chase had taken great pains, and even went to a certain part of the Goloo country, to get hold of something to make up another charge against me, so that if he should fail to accomplish his object on the suspension, he might have something to make up the balance.* On his return, he made up a charge, wrote it in a letter, and directed the letter to Rev. D. Ware, my preacher in charge. On the first inst. Bro. Ware shewed me the letter, and asked me to read it. After reading it, Bro. W. took the letter and carried it off, according to the directions given him in the letter. But he left me no copy. The letter stated to Bro. W. what Mr. C., intended to do at Quartely Conference. And having this hint, I put it into my plea also.

I also stated, that our Discipline required the preacher in charge to bring the complaint to me, but none had brought any. The preacher in charge says no complaints. I also read the Discipline, pages 72., 73., and 74., to them, and informed them that no one had ever taken one step towards making any reconciliation whatever. I also pleaded, that the transactions of the last charges took place nearly 4 years ago, and that since that time, my character had passed twice in the annual Conf. and once in this same Quartely Conf. at which I was recommended to the traveling connection, not one year since. And that all these things were as fully known last April as they are now. And that all was peace and harmony among us until I had told how Mr. C., called me a liar, a black scoundrel, and turned me out doors.—And, that, therefore, having no minutes of the former trial, I thought in consideration of the whole. I was entitled to a nonsuit.

Mr. C., then told the Conf., that if they had any thing to say, with regard to a nonsuit; say on.—But when he heard some remarks made, favorable to a nonsuit, he stoped them at once; and said, if you found your plea for a nonsuit on these things only, the Conf. need not proceed farther, for I will decide the question myself; there shall be no nonsuit, said Mr. C.,

I was then required, to affirm or deny some question. But I said, please let me see your charges, that I may know what to speak to, or from. Mr. C., said, those things for which you were suspended. I then asked Mr. C., to show me the minutes of their doings at the time of my suspension: but no minutes were shown. I told him again, that I wanted the privilege of witnesses on this case: but Mr. C., frankly declared, that there should be no witnesses permitted to speak on the case, but himself, and myself.

And so, into it I was forced to go.

Mr. C., brought the charges in his own name; Mr. C., was his own witness; and Mr. C., was his own judge.

And so after making our own statement for about 2 1-2 hours, I was sent out. And after walking about on the wet grass for one hour, I was called in again. And while answering some questions on the former trial, of which Mr. C., had so rigidly declared that no witnesses should be permitted to speak on the trial, he presented three witnesses to prove that I promised to carry my journal down to the Cape for him to read, but never carried it. J. Pingree, B. R. Wilson, and F. Burns,—witnesses.

Thus, Mr. C., led off on the latter charges, until he had got them all before the Conf., and commenced proving his verbal declarations, by his witnesses.

The first charge which he undertook to prove, was that I had told in America, that when I first went to Heddington, I saw slaves driven through the town, on their way to market. But B. R. Wilson jumped up immediately, and unqualifiedly declared, that he know the report to be false, for there had been nothing of the kind known in the Colony for years before I went to Heddington, and all was a falsehood. This was a strong witness against me. But the Rev. I. Lawrance arose & declared, that slavery was not all done away in the Colony, for the natives would, and did sell slaves in the native towns among us, even to this day, in spite of all we could do.—I then arose & told the Conf., that Mr. Wilson had probably forgoten, that at the annual Conf., held at Monrovia, not one year since, how he had up the Rev. A. F. Russell, preacher in charge at Robertsvill, for buying slaves, proved it aga nst him, and the Rev. A. F. Russell did but just excape expulsion. The next specification acted on, was, that I had told the people in America that there were Cannibals in Africa, and this was also a falshood. But the Rev. I Lawrence arose and declared that he had seen in Africa, not only natives eating human flesh, but eating of their own flesh. At this Mr. C., rather hauled in his horns about witness for a while.

At this time the Conf., became confused, not having any minutes of the other trial, or any specifications to guide them but Mr. C's. mouth which mixed up the former charges with the latter in a strange puzzling manner; the Conf., asking questions, one, foreign from another, all of which served to increase the confusion: some said I was first suspended for telling what took place between Mr. C., and myself when I went to settle with him, others said, no; he was suspended for not attending Q. Conf.,—And when I saw that Mr. C., would force on the subject, taking such advantage of witness, who know nothing except in the one case of the journal, and that, flat against his,——

I told Mr. C., that if this was the way he was going to continue, I would deny the whole; that is what remained enacted upon. Thus I said, because I saw the whole to be mockery.

And when I refused to answer any more questions, because he would not allow me to defend myself by witnesses, Mr. C., then told me, that if I was not ready to answer to these charges now, I might have just as long time as I pleased to get my witnesses, and prepare for trial. At this, one of the members of Conf., asked Mr. C., in what relation to the Church, I was to stand, while preparing for trial. Mr. C., answered; suspended, of course. He then gave me my choice, either to have it decided now, or set a time when I would be ready for trial. So I told Mr. C., that I wished to have it put off, until I could hear from America. But, that I wanted a specification of the charges, that I might know what I was to prove.—I was then ordered to retire again.

At 1. o'cl. I was called in, and found them talking of a report, which I had published in the Herald, a few weeks since, of their doings at the last Quartely Conf. And I then supposed, that they had not disposed of my case! but not so. Mr. C., had forgoten this charge, till after they had suspended me, till Mr. C., should go to America, and gather up all the fragments of my evil reports about Africa, and bring or send them to a Committee whom they were to appoint, and did appoint, who, on the reception of those documents so brought or sent, are to bring me to trial.

After this. I was asked some questions concerning an appropriation of money made by the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, for the establishment of a Mission station in the interior.—I told the Conf., that when I was in America, I applied to the Board for $150— o purchase books, joiners tools, and house furniture: but the Board granted me $200, for those purposes. But Mr. C., declared, that I applied to the Board for $100, to purchase books, tools, furniture, to bear my expenses into the interior, to buy land for a Mission Farm, and to build me a house thereon: But, that I only wanted about $50, of it at that time. But the Board, said Mr. C., granted him $150, for the aforesaid purposes, and ordered him to pay it, but not to pay any more, until he had heard from them.

Mr. C., was then asked by a member of Conf., if he had paid the $150, he said, no; for it had not been called for. I then told the Conf., that the Board paid me the $200, before I left America, and that I purchased the articles for which it was appropriated.

At this, Mr. C., exclaimed to the Conf., with much earnestness and confidence, saying! Hear it, hear it: Mr. Brown says, the Board paid him $200, before he left America! hear it.

The minutes were read over, but no one inquired whether accepted or not accepted, nor were they signed by any body at that time, present. The Benediction was pronounced, and Conf., closed at about 2. o'cl. on Sabbath morning.

Immediately after its close, I informed the Conf., that they might do as they pleased with their suspension; but they need not, nor should I consider myself any longer a member of the M. E. Church in Liberia; and I said, I here withdraw all fellowship, relation, and connection with M. E. Church in Liberia. For if this is Methodism, then I am not a Methodist, never was, nor ever shall be. &c. &c.

For I saw, by their suspending me not as I desired, till I could hear from America, but until Mr. C, should hear from America, and no time set when he was to write; and by their not calling for any acceptance of the minutes, nor signing them, or giving me any specifications of any charges, that another mock trial was anticipated of them.

And thus, I thought it better to be out of such a Church, than in it. Nor shall I feel myself at all disgraced by their expulsion whenever it takes place, as, of course it will, for I shall not attend to any more Church trials whatever, until we have a Methodist superintendent; that is, one, who governs, and is governed by the Discipline of the M. E. Church.

Mr. C., has said, in the Luminary, of Jan. 4th, that the taking an oath implies, that a man cannot be trusted at all to speak the truth unless he takes an oath. Now I expect to be believed in this report, without taking an oath. Although I did not take down regular minutes of the Conf., yet I live, and write in the midst of the Conf., And my object in publishing these transactions before they go to America, is that they may first be tested on our own ground. And as the Luminary above mentioned, requires some correction, it shall be prepared for your next Herald.

Very respectfully yours,
GEORGE S. BROWN.

Caldwell, March, 7th, 1843.

* I shall show in its proper place that he found nothing.

Mesurado Roads, 27th February 1843.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acquaint you that I sailed from Cape Coast on the 16th of last month, bound to this place—that with the advice of Governor Maclean and others, I took the man on board that I secured at "Half Bereby" with the intention of placing him in your hands.

I had a tedious passage up, was becalm'd off "Bassa" (near Half Bereby") three or four days. On the night of the 11th of this month, the winds were light and variable, weather thick and heavy, and the vessel about four miles off shore, the prisoner made his escape by jumping overboard as we suppose, for he was missing next morning—he had on a pair of strong hand irons, at the time of his escape.

My reason for taking the man from Cape Coast Castle, was, that there was but little chance that any American man of war would call there for him—and that he was lying there at my private expence.

I certainly thought, as many others did, that the United States Ship Vandalia, would have gone to Cape Coast for the man, but she has been like the rest of American men of war that have visited this coast, stop a few days at one or two places where they can do no good and then go off.

I have been informed by good authority that the Vandalia lay' at Cape Palmas twenty-one days doing nothing, at the same time knowing that one of the principals in the destruction of the "Mary Carver" and crew was then lying in Cape Coast Castle waiting for some one in authority to take him into the hands of justice.

One quarter part of that time would have taken her to Cape Coast and thus have saved a murderer from being loose and ready at any time to commit another crime upon the first American unarmed vessel that they think they can overpower. The natives now are less afraid of American vessels than any others. They say if Americans are a large people, and have ships of war, why did they not kill Craco (the king of Half Bereby people) and burn this town—if it had been an English vessel, they would have done it. And so they would—and so it was expected that the Vandalia would have done something.

I may perhaps be blamed for losing the man, but it must be considered that I as a trader on this coast have not got any secure place to put a prisoner unless I chain him to a ring bolt. I always kept the irons on his hands, and allowed him to be about deck, to keep him from sickness, he had a large swelling under each arm caused by his hands being confined so long. I had no spare men on board to keep watch over him day and night, nor could I close the hatches over him every night, for it would be injurious to all on board, indeed I know of nothing that I could have done from first to last, to secure and deliver the man over to justice, that has not been done. If I have in any way done wrong with respect to this man, it has been done through ignorance and under that I must seek pardon.

I learnt while at Cape Palmas, that the prisoner got on shore alive, and that there was great feasting and rejoiceing in his and the neighboring towns.

Hoping that we shall have soon some permanent protection on this coast,

I remains Sir,
Your obt. St.
R. T. SYMS.
Master of Barque "Roderic Dhu."

J. L. DAY Esq.
U. S. A.

To the Editor of the Liberia Herald,

SIR:—Will you have the goodness to insert in your paper, (by way of caution to master mariners, and others trading on the Western coast of Africa,) that there is a conspiracy laid at Bereby, for the capture of other vessels Not at Crackoo's town, where the Mary Carver, and Portuguese schooner were captured But at Grand Bereby. Having but barely escaped myself, I feel bound (if only by the bare ties of humanity) to make it known.

In the first place it may be well to caution masters against many certificates in the hands of Grand Bereby men, certifying that they had no hand in the capture of either the above schooners, and laying all blame on Crackoo's people They also state that the Grand Bereby men have no intention to break their friendship with the white man.

This I also believe, but am afraid they will love him so well, that they will shortly (either from motives of love to him or his ship and cargo) put him to death. And by this means prove that they are indeed so fond as not to be willing to part with him on any account.

How any man (civilized) could be so wicked as to sign his name to either of those documents, without having first had substantial proofs to assign for his doing so, I know not. When to my certain knowledge, the natives of Grand Bereby did both share in the plunder and assist in the capture of the Portuuegse This I prove by having bought myself at Grand Bereby, a bale of tobacco covered with bullock hide, which Jumbo of Grand Bereby said came to him with a large quantity of other things, as his share of the plunder. He showed me many other articles, and offered them for sale, but having no use for them, they were left with him.

As regards the American schooner Mary Carver, Jumbo said he did not share in the plunder

(of this vessel) because Crackoo said the Grand Bereby men had not failed to use every effort in their power to publish that Crackoo's had taken her. And if he suffered all blame, he would also keep all prize.

Should this paper be read by any master to whom these documents belong, I would only beg him to take his own conscience to task, and see on what authority he as ventured to write them. He may say they told him. I ask is this sufficient to justify him in laying such traps for the trader as may induce him to place every confidence in such villians as these men will soon (I am afraid) prove themselves to be. They are traps for they induce the trader to place confidence in men who are only waiting opportunity to prove themselves assassins. If he has any other reasons let him give them on those (certificates) if not, let him do us (traders) the justice the next he sees his paper to break it up, and by that means remove the deception. Otherwise I fear that soon we shall hear more bad news from those quarters.

To masters I would say, beware of Bereby, or Jakore St. Andrews &c. for they seem to think that nothing will be done to them if they were to plunder twenty ships. Nothing having as yet been said or done for the last offences.

Jumbo has gone so far with me as to stop my boat and self on shore, and threaten to murder if I did not pay.

Those who may read this, may probably laugh it to scorn

To such I would remark (they are doing no other than I expect) but even with all their laughing, it will be better that they do so, and by this take warning, (as it is to be feared as being the truth,) than for me and others to suffer by the hands of cruel men, by their falsehoods.

Departure of the Superintendent of the Liberia Mission, of the M. E. Church.

To the Editor of the Herald:

It seems nothing less than right that persons who have come here, and become debilitated should visit some other part of the world to recruit their health, the standard of which having become low. It is more than likely that an opportunity to return is hailed with joyful acclamation after a few months residence in this unhealty climate, contention with which, is, for a few month, almost incessant. But if in addition to contention with the climate there be added contention with the civilized inhabitants of the colony a return must be hailed with unspeakable resire. Thus was the case with the Superintendant.

It is truly sorrowful that he, engaged as he was to attend to business of infinite importance to the benighted Africans, and to superintend the work of the Lord, going on among the denomination of which he is a member, it is sorrowful I repeat, that he should have to contend, not only with the acclimating fever, but with his fellow men. With the former it could not be otherwise, it is that cup from which every one with few exceptions, is made to drink that lands upon these shores. But why the latter? Why has he had to contend with his fellow men? Why is such a dispute carried on in the periodicals of this commonwealth? How has it happened that these two Editors have so soon become at variance? On the arrival of the Editor of the Luminary, such was the acquintance of these two gentlemen that we "looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health and behold trouble."

What has caused the state of things that has eventuated in writing things which will certainly prove injurious to him? Upon whom lies the blame? To answer the question in a word, I say, and I think I say that with which two thirds of the inhabitants of this commonwealth will argee, that it has been caused by the Superintendent of the Mission interfering or busying himself with that, with which, he had no more to do than to take his own life.

This interfering with public, & private individual's busines seems now a days to have become quite a common thing. In this the Superintendent has interfered with not only one individual, but with the transactions of Notary publics. It is really surprising to see how imprudent some persons are that come to this country. They seem to show that notwithstanding all their high pretensions to sanctity, that so great has been their enmity against, and their dominion over the colored man, they must exercise the same away out here. Here without being solicited except by some hot head partisan, they turn aside from their holy calling and espouse a cause with which they have no business whatever. So has this superintendent done. When the business about the Royal Albert was closed, and every thing in relation to her quiet, except what was going on among the secret who pryers—after the business concerning her, had been attended to, by the Notary Public, who we think can tell speak and write the truth as well as the Editor of the Luminary, this editor suddenly came out with a piece published in the Luminary. Suddenly came to see, as if there was a large premium for him to detect the errors of the colored man, and what has it profited him? Where is his laurel? Did he carry it with him? If he did it was a different kind [illegible] obtained by the ancient victors. It is disgraceful in an exposition of matters which for peace sake [illegible] of charity to the man would have been suffered [illegible] concealed.

Although the colored race is, and has ever been treated in the highest degree in the United States, & although there is a prejudice against this race possessed by a large majority of white Americans, and although many of the missionaries*, who come to declare the love of God to these benighted people, and to teach them if they follow the bible that God is no respecter of persons, being this offspring of hell in their bosoms—yet I can say I have never found the least disposition in any colonist to injure them, but rather to treat them kindly and respectfully so long as their conduct was supportable.

Yours, &c.
Liberia.

*This needs qualifying. Our eye rests with pleasure upon white missionaries resident in this Colony and other parts of the coast, who bred in the prejudice to which Liberia alludes, have in the strength of a purer philanthropy and a correcter sentiment given that prejudice to the winds, and regard man as man unaffected by color or clime. NOTES ON THE COLONY.

No. 1.

Mr. Editor.

There is an old adage that "the man who makes two blades of grass grow where, but one grew before is a benefactor to his race," ambitious to do good in my own small way, I wish with your permission to throw out occasional hints, which, possibly if heeded may tend to the advancement of the interest of this people; and should they find in the end two cassadoes to eat or sell where they had but one before, they will be satisfied and I will rejoice in the satisfaction.

Observation of a series of years has convinced your correspondent, that in many ways the condition of the inhabitants may be bettered. In one particular by no means the least important, it may be brought about by a careful attention to the indigenous medicines and remedies for diseases abundant in this clime. It behooves our people to know such things, for they are not strangers to disease and suffering, and at all times free from infections, and contagious deseases, and of all the ills that flesh is hier to, scarce one but some curative or remedial agent may be found here.

Two infections are extremely prevalent at this time, for one of which at least I think remedies may be had without going to the vile dry drugs sold in the American shops at 500 to 1000 per centum profit. We better turn the tables and send our valuable medicine to them for sale. It is said that any thing will sell very rapidly in the States. The whooping cough, one of our epidemics at present, may be greatly abated in its virulence, and ultimately cured by drinking two or three times a day a decoction of the plant found in all our gardens, and known to our gardeners by the name of wild honey. It is a plant resembling in leaf and flower the genuine digitalis or fox glove, and seems to possess with inferior strength all its sanitive properties. Your press boy can point it out to any one who may not know it.

But another still more fatal epidemic infection is abroad not only ravaging this town, but extending itself throughout all the settlements. In many cases the attack is sudden and the symptons alarming, many have already fallen victims, and numbers more show the premonitory symptomes.

It respects not rank or condition, invading alike the peaceful families of the higher functionaries in church and state, and the less exalted laity and populace. It dissolves the fondest ties of the most favoured domestic circle, as well as disturb the less formal, but equally susceptible sympathies of the poor. Like the consumption which has been called the "beautiful destroyer." "It lays in the heart now paling the cheeks like the early lily, and again scattering over them the rose and the rain bow," and like it too, it takes its victims from among the young and lovely—but they are not alone, for widows and widowers fall an easy prey, and all are more liable to the attack than married persons.

We would call it the "marrying fever," and without being able to tell whether its present rapid extension is in any way influenced by the comet, or the height at which the moon runs now—and not being able to suggest any remedy calculated to restrain its wide spreading ravages, I would propose that the Governor be solicited to appoint a well instructed committee of five persons, faithfully to investigate and experiment upon the subject; and report to the meeting the next public thanksgiving day the cause if they can ascertain one with any degree of certainty; and also report whether their experiments shall have led them to the discovery or invention of any remedy. It is deemed best to advise that the committee should be ladies* as their sex seems when attacked to exhibit the most violent symptoms. Having had the first noticed infection and praying to be saved from the latter till some remedy shall be found,

I am truly yours,
Syrup of Squills.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, MARCH 31, 1843.

Our readers will pardon the paucity of Editorial in this number.

A glorious wark of grace is in progress in this settlement:—Christians have been aroused quickened, and made to rejoice. The influences of the Holy spirit have descended like the silent rain upon the tender herb. The gardens of the Lord have been refreshed. The refiner's fire have melted the stubborn heart of sinners, and wailing and tears, and earnest solicitation for an interest in the prayers of christians attest their contrition. Many have found peace in believing. Having embraced Christ as the medium of justification, they exult in peace with God and testify to all around what the Lord hath done for them. Already twelve on giving to the church testimony of a renewed heart have been received as candidates for believers baptism, & will in a few days follow the example of their Lord in fulfilling this righteousness. Many more are yet seeking, we trust, with that anxious sincerity that worketh repentance unto life that needeth not to be repented of.

There is something remarkable attendant upon this excitement. It came on suddenly without much of the usual premonitory signs of awakening among christians. It can be traced to the exertion of none of those means, which are usually at work before such an event, and appears more obviously the operation of that spirit whose noiseless and unseen movements like the wind, can be seen only in its effects.

The relations of converts have been marked with great seriousness: connected, rational and consistent, they show that the influence of the spirit was deep and irresistible! and that although there was in the present instance none of that violent gesticulation body, (and we are pleased therein) there was deep earnestness of soul.

At our church religious meetings have been held every night during nearly a fortnight, and on some occasions until a late hour; we rejoice to say they have been uniformly marked by order and decorum.

As our worthy brother, the veracious editor of the Luminary has absquatulated, and as we have more important business on our hands than the farther exposure of so base and already exposed a wretch, as he has proven himself to be, we beg to remand him for the present, and promise to bring him forth for further examination in a subsequent number. Like his prototype bombastes he accelerated his retreat by the force of his own harmless blow—harmless to all except to the treasury of the Miss: socy. of the M. E. Church. Twenty five dollars a day he paid the Captain to delay his ship to afford him time to get out the paper in which he growled at us, and bit himself; and the precious extra, in which he snapped at the editor of the Sierra Leone Watchman. What sacrilige! Like his brother of old he has been constantly pleading "this ointment might have been sold for three hundred pence and given to the poor. This he said not that he cared for the poor (native nor American) but because he was a thief and had the bag and bare what was put therein." More anon. In the interim we wish him a safe passage and hope, if it be consistent with the divine will, that his hours of solitude may not be disturbed by the cries nor apparition of a smothered infant. One crime usually demands another to conceal it; and the last is frequently of greater enormity than the first.

Capt. Cooper of the Colonial Cutter Termagant had a few weeks ago a rencontre with the natives near Grand Sesters,—a place between Kroo country and Cape Palmas, in which one or more of the marauders were severely, if not mortally wounded. Truding along the coast is becoming more and more dangerous, and it behooves all masters at every point where they touch to be prepared for prompt and vigorous resistance. We are not disposed to attach the whole blame to the African. Many instances are in our recollection in which they were most villanously treated—abused in their persons, and robbed of their property, when for the purpose of trade they committed themselves to the power of the white man. Successful and unpunished revenge on the persons and property of foreigners has produced an appetite for plunder, and they seem now prepared to attack by stratagem or force, every vessel that gets within their reach. Capt. Dyer of the British Brig Englishman, had recently a narrow escape at Grand Bereby, after having been decoyed on shore by certificates of character given by Captains either through culpable ignorance or sheer malignity.

To Correspondents.—Communications sent in this month and not found in the present number are deferred for want of room.

The Comet.—On the 4th inst. this illustrious stranger suddenly revealed itself with unequalled splendor. This is the third comet that we have seen; but neither of the others equalled this either in the enormous length of fiery tail or splendor of brightness. The tail however has not had uniformly the same visible length. On one or two evenings it extended at least sixty degrees. This evening the 27th, it is not more than forty-five. Nor has it been uniformly bright. It was more clearly revealed on on the 4th than it has been since. The head on one or two evenings was distinctly visible to the naked eye. When the comet first appeared, at 30 minutes past six o'clock the star had an altitude of about fifteen degrees, and the whole phenomenon was below the horizan at eight. To night it descended at half past nine. It is rapidly moving off.

A Temperance meeting was held on the evening of the 6th inst. at the Presbyterian Church. This is the association formed not long since at the Baptist Church in this place. James Brown Esq. delivered a very appropriate and spirited address on the occasion.

After the address was over it was agreed by the members present to have a convention of the members of both societies at the M. E. Church, on the evening of the second Sabbath in April: Rev. A. Cheeseman will address on the occasion.

News have just reached us, that the American schooner Edward Burly, Capt. Burk has had an affray with the natives somewhere in the vicinity of Sinoe, in which she had one man killed and another wounded. As the reports which have reached us are somewhat conflicting, we wait further information for particulars.

The Philosopher's Stone—Pay as you go.—The following paragraph is from an address delivered Gen. M'Duffie before the South Carolina Agricultural Society.

"I have known many men who were considered bad planters, and who made small crops, yet in a series of years have grown wealthy by this very simple rule which I once heard laid down by a friend. He never made large crops, and when asked how he got rich so much faster than his more energetic neighbors, he replied, 'My neighbors, begin at the wrong end of the year. They make their purchases at the beginning of it, on a credit; I make mine at the end of it and pay down the cash.' And here I am reminded of a saying of the late John Randolph of Virginia: a man not more remarkable for his [illegible] and eccentricity, than for the profound philosophical [illegible] which sometimes escaped him, like the responses of an inspired oracle. In the midst of one of his splendid rhapsodies in the Senate of the United States, he paused, and fixing his eye on the presiding officer, exclaimed, 'Mr. President, I have discovered the Philosopher's stone. It is contained in these four plain English monosyllables: 'Pay as you go.' Now I will venture to say, that this is a nearer approach than alchemy will ever make to the great objects of its visionary researches."

This golden rule is as useful to States as to individuals.

MISCELLANEOUS

From the Christian Watchman.

THE MISSIONARY PIONEERS.

As every thing which relates to the cause of missions, is deeply interesting at all times, so the pioneers of modern missions—the Baptists of England, and especially those distinguished men who in spite of obloquy and opposition, projected and carried into successful operation, the great missionary experiment, are worthy to be remembered, and their personal characters and history are a subject of careful study. We were deeply interested in the following brief sketches of some of the leading spirits, from the graphic pen of Dr. Cox, selected from the "History of the Baptist Missionary Society, from 1792, to 1842," recently published in London, that we give them a place. There will be no need for us to bespeak for them a reading.

ANDREW FULLER.

"Fuller was a kind of oak of the forest —sturdy, unbending, athletic, both in body and mind. His general aspect and manner were forbiding; and throughout life he was rather dominant than attractive. His perceptions were clear; his conduct decided. He was a man of whom advice would naturally be asked in the ordinary affairs of life; but especially so on great occasions.—The value of his opinions would never fail to compensate for the repulsiveness of his manner; and yet that repulsiveness was exceedingly ameliorated in the free intercourse of friendship: when, indeed, he would sometimes appear to have changed his nature, exhibiting extreme sensibility and softness. The author has repeatedly seen him melted down into kindness, so that he could be as gentle as a lamb; but, whenever truth required it, his unyielding integrity, uniting with the harsher elements of his spirit, made him bold as a lion.

"He had not, like Carey, to use a favorite phrase of his own, a turn for languages, but, notwithstanding the deficiencies of his education, he applied to them with some success, so as to be able to understand the Greek Testament, and form a good idea of the merits of a criticism; but he was not attracted by the study, and, had he even possessed leisure, probably would never have pursued it to any great extent. Yet he had a mind and a heart to appreciate the literary efforts of others; entering into their design with much acuteness and discrimination.

"He was less qualified for the missionary field than for the missionary cabinet. He seemed to be made for the niche he occupied. His forte was to maintain important points by deliberate inquiry and discussions, and he gained support to the Mission no less by the celebrity of his name than by the force of his appeals. He was slow in coming to a conclusion, chiefly because judgment rather than imagination or passion predominated; nor, till he had frequently revised his thoughts, did he sufficiently feel his competency to give an opinion, or undertake a course of action; but, having once decided, he was the most immoveable of men. Give him time and space, he was an admirable controversialist; but he was not ready as a reasoner, and therefore would not have been able, with the best advantage, to encounter the dexterous evasions and extemporaneous plausibilities of the more learned or witty of the oriental disputants. The author was present at a vehement discussion between him and Robert Hall. The latter, with his characteristic acuteness and volubility, fairly perplexed, and not a little displeased his antagonist. Fuller's replies were slowly conceived, as well as slowly uttered; and stood little chance before the never-ceasing torrent of powerful reasoning or confusing eloquence, rapid words and pungent satire, of his friend. He was at length compelled, in his own emphatic manner to exclaim.—'Well, Brother Hall, I cannot answer you off-hand; but put it down on paper, and I will meet you.'

"Fuller was an extraordinary preacher; plain, practical, judicious, full of rich Scriptural illustrations; in manner, slow and solemn. The influence which he acquired by his talents in the pulpit, and by his clear illustrations of divine truth through the press, fitted him to take a lead in the conduct of the Mission. He was exactly adapted to remove objections, to afford lucid statesments, to urge the important claims of the object upon a yet inactive community, to raise contributions at home, and to give counsel abroad. He was just the man to direct the minds of a committee, to appreciate and examine candidates for foreign labor, to take a comprehensive view of what might be accomplished, and to plead the cause, when needful, before friends and foes. Having once embarked and taken the helm, he was ever at his post, watchfull, firm and persevering, at all seasons; joyous, but never careless, when skies were bright; fearless amid storms. As a man, a minister, a theological writer, an acute controversialist, as one of the founders, but especially as secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, his name will be transmitted with distinguished honor to admiring generations."

DR. CAREY,

"Although Dr. Carey rose to extraordinary eminence chiefly by devoting himself to one object, yet he evidently possessed that kind of universality of mind, if it may be so called, which is generally seen to characterize genius. To the grand purpose for which he went to India, were subordinated, with conscientious scrupulousness, all other pursuits to which he was led by his benevolent feelings or his mental tastes; such as his general desire of human improvement, and his particular attachment to botanical science; but he was qualified to excel in whatever might engage his attention. Had he been born in the sixteenth century he might have been a Luther, to give protestanism to Europe; had he turned his thoughts and observations merely to natural philosophy, he might have been a Newton, to compose the Principia,' and unfold the laws of gravitation; but his faculties, consecrated by religion to a still higher end, have gained for him the sublimer distinction of having heen the translator of the Scriptures, and the benefactor of Asia. But his humility shone even brighter that his genius; and of all that he did, in one sense at least, the greatest and noblest act was the last,—the inscription written by his dying hand for his tomstone!"

DR. MARSHMAY.

"His talents were of a high order, and diversified in their complexion. Even intimacy could scarcely thread the labyrinths of his mind; the superficial observer was entirely disqualified from estimating either his defects or excellences. He had great mental power; a spirit of persevering diligence; firmness bordering on obstinacy, yet not unmingled with occasional displays of the opposite quality of mutability and indecision, tact, caution, and a certain policy in acting which bespoke extreme wariness, without, however, any real sacrifice of principle. He was, to a great extent, learned, especially in oriental langnages; and he had an accute, though not a splendid intellect. No journals display a more profound piety and love of souls than his,—a heart right with God, a sympathy of the noblest kind with the moral condition of the heathen, skill in dealing with them, and a paramount solicitude for the glory of God. He was perhaps, too fond of rule, somewhat dogmatic, attached to personal interests, and not sufficiently disposed to make allowance for others. But with every fault, he was a noble character, a moral hero, a devoted servant of Christ, and worthy of being regarded as one of the three whose names have been constantly united, as claiming at once the admiration and the love of mankind. It is the distinguishing honor of the Baptist Missionary Society, to have produced a double triumvirate of illustrious individuals,—Fuller, Sutcliff, and Ryland, in England; Carey, Marshmam, and Ward, in India."

ROBERT HALL.

"His talents were wonderfully diversified, and he possessed the remarkable power of making himself felt as pre-eminent in whatever character he presented himself. When in familiar converse, he seemed the best of friends and most discriminating of advisere; when engaged in prayer, he appeared to carry devotion to its utmost pitch: and when preaching the everlasting gospel, he kindled with a seraph's ardor, and poured forth an irresistable torrent of eloquence with a readiness which gave it the appearance of an extemporaneous effusion, yet with a simplicity and beauty of composition, combined with profundity of thought, which proved it to be the result of careful study and constant mental revision."

SUTCLIFF.

"Sutcliff was the very personification of fatherly kindness. His manners bespoke extreme gentleness of disposition; his voice was full of soft modulations; his eyes beamed with benignity; he at once gained attention, and conciliated esteem. The amenities of a natural disposition the most effectionate that could be, were perfected by the influence of religion, which, in its sincerity of principle and unobtrusiveness of character, has been seldom, if ever, surpassed.—His was not, however, a feminine softness, bordering on imbecility; for he possessed much decision and holy fortitude. Still, it was the might of patience and perserverance, rather than the energy of action. He would counsel, but not control; carrying caution and prudence to the utmost. In the exercise of sound judgment, he was, probably, not excelled by any of his coadjutors. Mr. Fuller was accustomed to say, that, when he received a packet from India, which confused him by the variety of its contents, he rode over to Olney to lay them before Sutcliff, who would unravel and explain all with perfect ease; determining what it would be best to suppress, and what to publish. He was not only considerate in all his movements, but would frequently soften down and conciliate those to whom Mr. Fuller's sternness had given some offence. Had a painter sketched him in an emblematical picture, he might have represented wisdom surrounded by the graces."

JOHN BROADLEY WILSON, ESQ.

"John Broadley Wilson, Esq., had long acted as Treasurer of the Society. He originally occupied an ordnance department at Plymouth Dock (Devonport), and had the best prospects, under the auspices of the Marquis of Townshend, of worldly advancement; but, on becoming truly pious, he abandoned these prospects, and retired from the public service to Clapham Common. He was baptized by Mr. Birt, but retained his connexion with the church of England; and, after his removal to the neighborhood of London, attended the ministry, and actively associated with the congregation of Rowland Hill. While the cause of Christians benevolence at large lost one of its best supporters by his death, the Baptist Missionary Society in particular, was deprived of a most sincerely attached and munificient friend. Whatever he did, was uniformly done in the spirit of 'not letting the left hand know what the right hand doeth.' In presenting or promising the largest donations, his manner never differed from that in which he would transact the most ordinary business. There was nothing about it that seemed to claim notice, or demand approbation. He shrunk, if it may be so expressed, even from his own actions; and to appland any thing he did, was to touch a sensitive plant."

A TURKISH BATH.

A gentleman, now travelling in the East, writing to the Salem Gazette, gives the following description of a Turkish Bath. They do up the business of cleansing in a thorough manner, certainly.

Afterwards to refresh ourselves from our fatigues we went to the bath. You can have no conception of what a Turkish bath is, nor of the exquisite enjoyment it gives after a hot day's work and severe fatigue; I always take one after a journey and frequently merely for the pleasure of it; I will attempt to give you a description of it.

At first you enter alarge room, furnished with 'divans' all round it, and in the centre a marble fountain of water; here you undress, and although it is the common room of all who enter, undressing is perfectly decent, for as fast as you remove an article of your inner clothing a man stands by with several large cloths to envelope you. Finally, when all is ready, and you find yourself wrapped up in two table cloths and a towel round your head, he brings you a pair of wooden shoes to put on, in order that your feet may not be burned by the heat of the floor of the bath. Then leaning on his arm you pass through a narrow winding passage into a room filled with steam, the heat of which is such as almost to suffocate you; you stay here a few minutes until you get used to the unusual temperature, and then you pass on to another room, lighted by small round glasses in a dome on top, which is hotter still; around this are several marble basins of hot water, into which a small stream of hot water is constantly running. You lie down by the side of one of them and in a moment or two the most profuse perspiration breaks forth.

You are left some five minutes to enjoy this (and it is a luxury) and then a man appears armed with a strong horse hair mitten; with this he rubs every part of your body, rolling off large rolls of the cuticle, a quarter of an inch in diameter,—after this has continued some ten minutes, he dashes over you several pailsful of water hot enough to make one scream, and then commence pinching and kneading your flesh—this is perfectly delightful. After this he cracks every joint in your body, beginning with the fingers; he makes every vetebra crack distinctly and then twists your head until he has given your neck half a dozen cracks also,—strange as it may seem, this operation is decidedly agreeable, though I confess I was startled when I heard my neck go off for the first time. After this is finished he leaves you a short time to repose, and then appears with an immense bowl in which is a piece of perfumed soap, this he works up into a lather by means of a large sponge, and then proceeds to soap you all over with it; he washes it off by dashing hot water over you until you are blinded and almost drowned,—indeed he compels you to cry out for mercy, and does not think his work complete until he has forced you to beg him to desist. This is the end of the washing part, and most thoroughly washed you are. You remain a few minutes more lying on your back in the most delicious state of luxurious lassitude that can be imagined. But your tormentor or operator does not leave you long. He appears bearing on his head a lot of hot cloths, in these he envelopes you and leads you out to the antechamber, which feels now comparatively cold; here you remain a few minutes in order to prepare for going into the outer room, where you have previously undressed; on arriving there dry cloths are again put over you, the damp ones are removed and you repose at full length on a divan; an attendant brings you a cup of coffee and a pipe, and while you enjoy these a boy squeezes and kneads your flesh, while another stands by, fanning with a large cloth; under this operation you soon go to sleep, and after sleeping a half hour or so, wake up almost to a new life. You can have no conception of the way a man feels for the first hour after a Turkish bath.

"For the first five years of my professional life," once said a gentleman to us, "I had to row against wind and stream and tide." "And what did you do?" was our question. "Do," "replied he," "do, why, I rowed on, to be sure." And so he did row on, and to a good purpose, too, until he came to the open sea; took favorable breezes, and brought his voyage to a successful termination, leaving behind him a most enviable reputation of worth and wisdom—impressing the mark of his strong mind and excellent character, deep and clear on the community in which he lived, and obtaining an immortality, worth more than a monarch's crown, in the respectful memory of thousands. His remark deserves to be remembered as a motto. The great business of all is to "row on" with unflinching courage, and steady perseverence. All trades and professions have their difficulties, and almost every individual meets with discouragements—the only way, therefore, is to "row on." Decision of character—determination of will—the resolution to press on, when sure we are on the right track, or in pursuit of a good and honorable end—this is the secret of living so as to come out at last safe and sound. There are "lions" in every path, and they must be met and conquered, or the hope of ultimate success must be abandoned. A poor man with a tribe of children, finding work hard to get, and hard when it is got, sometimes will despair; every thing seems to be against him, but let him not be cast down—let him "row on" and by and by matters will very likely grow brighter. As with the poor man, so with all men. Head winds are to be expected, contrary currents will commonly come; the tide does not always run with us, but never mind, "row on," pull the harder, till the oars bend again, and victory will wait upon and reward patient endeavors. Those who have risen from obscurity to eminence; those who from being poor have become rich; those who, born in the midst of ignorance, have forced their way among the learned—those who have made themselves, and made themselves well, have generally been those who understood the importance of "rowing on." "Faint heart never won fair lady," nor any thing else."—Newbury port Herald.

A Real Shaker.—A young sprig from New York visited the Shakers at Lebanon the other day, and as he was wandering through the village, encountered a stout, heaty specimen of the sect and thus accosted him: "Well, Broadbrim, are you much of a Shaker?" "Nay," said the other, "not overmuch, but I can do a little that way." So he seized the astonished Gothamite by the collar and nearly shook him out of his boots.

Fault-finding.—It is the bent of the basest and most worthless spirits, to be busy in the search and discovery of others' failings—passing by all that is commendable and imitable; as base flies, readily sitting on any little sore that they can find, rather than on the sound parts. But the real Christian loves not unnecessarily to touch, or look upon them—loves not to uncover his brother's sores, but to cure them. The uncovering of sin necessary to the curing of it, is not only no breach of charity, but it is indeed the main point of it.

My dear, what is a dentist? Will you define him? Oh yes.

"A dentist, love, makes teeth of bone,
For those whom fate has left without:
And finds provision for his own,
By pulling other people's out."

The Insane.—A novel enterprise has been started by the inmates of the Vermont Asylum for the Insane, at Brattleboro', which is nothing more nor less than the commencement of a weekly paper, called the "Asylum Journal," to be conducted entirely by "those whom the world calls insane." They have already nominated "the Crazy Man's Ticket," for President and Vice-President of the United States. In relation to their candidates, they say, "we have selected one from each of the great political parties of the day, believing that if we can unite the crazy ones of both parties, we shall most certainly elect our candidates."

Women in Egypt.—Egypt, that land where man was wisest: Egypt, from whose intellectual fires Greece and Rome borrowed the lights, by which worlds then unknown, have since learned the laws of Nature and the philosophy of morals: Egypt, from her remotest existence, assumed the female form as the representative of a superintending Providence; and gave to Isis an homage which the assigned copartner of her divinity, never received. [Lady Morgan's Woman and her Master.

The interruptions make the waters musical and sweet; so the checks the world gives to poetical minds, keep alive the passion, and they return, as they are allowed, to that beautiful vision, which is the more loved, as it may not be there all the days of their life; yet is the poet's world made up of this world's materials, wonderfully worked upon by a combining, and to a far extent, a creating genius; and if it be a world that man is gifted to make, it is a real one. Thought! It is indeed not tangible to the hand, like household stuff—but is it not real? He who has seen, and touched and heard, though the organs were dead, would see, and hear, and touch; for the power of sensation is not in them, but when once communicated through them, exists in independent vigor. So it is that we recall, and dream, and memory and genius, the invisible, are the living spirits of the mind and heart, and make up the better reality of life. [Wilson.

I look upon the great as a set of good natured misguided people, who are indebted to us, and not to themselves, for all the happiness they enjoy. For our pleasure, and not their own, they sweat under the cumberous heap of finery;—for our pleasure the lackeyed train, the slow parading pageant, with all the gravity of grandeur, moves in review: a single coat, or a single footman, answers all the purposes of the most indolent refinement as well; and those who have twenty, may be said to keep one for their own pleasure, and the other nineteen merely for ours. So true is the observation of Confucius, that we take greater pains to persuade others that we are happy than in endeavoring to think so ourselves. Goldsmith.

One of our best stories of the season is told by Sandy Welch, of a man who was in the country on a visit where they had no liquor. He got up two hours before breakfast, and wanted his bitters. None to be had, of course he felt bad.

"How far is it to a tavern?" he asked.

"Four miles"

So off the thirsty soul started—walked the four miles in a pleasant frame of mind, arrived at the tavern and found that it was a Temperance House.

Dignity of gastronomic discovery.—A patriotic Frenchman has observed, 'I regard the discovery of a dish as a far more interesting event than a discovery of a star; for we have always stars enough, but can never have too many dishes; and I should not regard the science as sufficiently honored or represented among us, until I see a cook in the first class of the Institute.'

Want of Forethought.—A black snake which had discovered the nest of a wookpecker, climbed up the tree, and putting his head into the hole, swallowed the woodpecker. Alas! when he would have withdrawn, he found his throat so much distended by his supper that he could not get back, and so he died with his length exposed dangling from the woodpecker's hole, an admonition to all who passed by, not to get into a scrape until they had contrived how they could get out of it.—S. S. Advocate.

A singular circumstance took place in Fishlake township, Me., a short time since. The facts are given by the Portland American as follows: A married female, beyond the meridian of life, and whose name is Ann Wrath, had been ill for some time, and on Thursday, the 4th ult., her friends and family assembled around her, and took their last mournful farewell. She appeared to expire about five o'clock that afternoon. The ceremonies of laying out the dead were duly performed, the bandages were placed beneath her chin to her head, and every preparation was made for the solemn rites of the burial ground. The sexton tolled his bell; but at half past eight o'clock, some minutes before his work was accomplished, she reared her head in astonishment, and was amazed to find that she was able to partake of the refreshments for her funeral!—Post.

GOSPEL FAITH.

Reliance is the essence of faith, Christ is the object, the word of God is the food, and obedience is the proof. True gospel faith, then, is a depending upon Christ for pardon and salvation, in the way of obedience, as he is offered in God's word.

CALCUTTA.

(From Malcom's Travels.)

The multiform vehicles, for which Calcutta is famous, stood before the doors, or rolled away through the trees, followed by turbaned servants in flowing muslin. Ladies and children, with nurses and bearers, lounged along the smooth paths, and it was difficult to realize that this beautiful climate should prove so insidious. The general observation, however, is, that death owes more victims to high living, indolence, exposure at night, fatigue in shooting excursions, &c., than to the positive effects of climate. Indeed, some affirm India to be as salubrious as England, and the aspect of some who have been long in the country would seem to countenance the assertion.

A farther advance brings an indistinct view of the fort and the fine buildings of the Chouringy suburb, all presented in one great curve, which is soon relinquished for a more minute and inquisitive contemplation of "the course." This is a broad road on the bank of the river, passing round the esplanade and fort, to which the English residents drive every evening at sunset. As every clerk in the city keeps his buggy or palankeen carriage, the crowd of vehicles rivals that at Hyde Park. The sight is even more imposing. Most of the higher classes use stately landaus, or open barouches; and the ladies are without bonnets. Crowds of gentlemen are on horseback. Indian side-runners give a princely air to the slow procession. The shipping of every nation, the clear horizon, the noble fort, the city front, the pleasure-boats, the beautiful ghauts, &c., make it a scene which always pleases; and the citizens repair thither from day to day, and from year to year, without weariness or satiety.

On passing Garden Reach, the river becomes covered with boats, of every conceivable form, from which a dozen different languages meet the ear. A multitude of vessels lie at anchor; steam-engines pour from their towering chimneys volumes of smoke; beautiful ghauts slope into the water; palankeens, tonjons, buggies, coaches, phaetons, gares, caranches, and hackaries, line the shore, and before us spreads out the great city, containing, with its suburbs, almost a million of souls.

All who die in or beside the river, and even those whose dead bodies are committed to it, being deemed certain of future bliss, multitudes are brought to die upon the banks, or are laid at low water on the mud, whence the return of the tide washes them away. These and the half-consumed relics from the funeral pile, in every variety of revolting aspect, are continually floating by. Government boats ply above the city to sink these bodies; but many escape, and we daily saw them float by, while vultures stood upon them, contending for the horrid banquet.

There being no wharves or docks, you are rowed to a ghaut in a dingey, and landed amid Hindus performing their ablutions and reciting their prayers. No sooner does your boat touch the shore, than a host of bearers contend for you with loud jabber, and those whom you resist least, actually bear you off in their arms through the mud, and you find yourself at once in one of those strange conveyances, a palankeen. Away you hie, flat on your back, at the rate of nearly five miles an hour, a chatty boy bearing aloft a huge palm-leaf umbrella to keep off the sun, whom no assurances that you do not want him will drive away, but who expects only a pice or two for his pains. The bearers grunt at every step, like southern negroes when cleaving wood, and though they do it as a sort of chorus, it keeps your unaccustomed feelings discomposed.

Arrived at the house, you find it secluded within a high brick wall, and guarded at the gate by a durwan, or porter, who lives there in a lodge, less to prevent ingress, than to see that servants and others carry nothing away improperly. The door is sheltered by a porch, called here veranda, so constructed as to shelter carriages—a precaution equally necessary for the rains and the sun. The best houses are of two stories, the upper being occupied by the family, and the lower used for dining and store rooms. On every side are contrivances to mitigate heat and exclude dust. Venetian blinds enclose the veranda, extending from pillar to pillar, as low as a man's head. The remaining space is furnished with mats, (tatties,) which reach to the floor, when the sun is on that side, but at other times are rolled up. When these are kept wet, ther diffuse a most agreeable coolness.

The moment you sit down, whether in a mansion, office, or shop, a servant commences pulling the punka, under which you may happen to be. The floor is of brick and mortar, covered with mats, the walls of the purest white, and the ceilings of great height. Both sexes, and all orders, dress in white cottons. The rooms are kept dark, and in the hottest part of the day shut up with glass. In short, every thing betrays a struggle to keep cool.

Another great contest seems to be against ants. You perceive various articles of furniture placed upon little dishes of water or quick-lime, without which precaution every thing is overrun. White ants are most formidable; for from these it is impossible wholly to guard. They attack every thing, even the beams in the house. A chest of clothes, lying on the floor a day or two only, may be found entirely ruined. A mere pin hole appears in your precious quarto—you open it, and behold a mass of dust and fragments!

The number of servants, and their snowy drapery, huge turbans, stubby mustachios, bare feet, and cringing servility, form a novel feature in the newest scene. Partly from the influence of caste, but more from indolent habits, low pay, and the multiplicity of former masters, when fortunes were easily made, they are appointed to services so minutely divided as to render a great number necessary. The following list, given me by a lady long in India, not only illustrates this peculiarity, but shows how large opportunities private Christians possess of doing good to natives even beneath their own roof. A genteel family, not wealthy, must have the following domestics:—

Kansuma—chief servant, butler, or steward; Kit-mut-gar—table-servant; Musalchee—who receives washes plates, and carries the lattern; Bobagee—cook; Surdar—head bearer, cleans fire-arms, &c.; Bearer—cleans shoes, and does common errands, (if a palankeen is kept, there must be at least eight of these,) pulls punka; Abdar—cools and takes care of water; Mesa—man sweeper; Metrau—female sweeper; Ayah—lady's maid, or nurse; Durwan—gate-keeper; Malley—gardener; Dirgey—taylor; Dobey—washerman; Garee-walla—coachman; Syce—groom, one to every horse, who always runs with him; Grass-cutter—cuts and brings grass daily, one to each horse; Guy-walla—keeper of the cow or goats; Hurkaru—errand boy or messenger; Sircar—accountant, or secretary; Chuprosse—carries letters, and does the more trusty errands; Chokedar—watchman; Coolay—carries burdens, brings home marketing, &c.; Bheestie—to bring water. Of gardeners, maids, table-servants, nurses, &c., there of course must often be several. It is generally necessary to have part of these Mussulmans, and part Hindus; for one will not bring some dishes to the table, and the other will not touch a candlestick, &c. If a child makes a litter on the floor, the ayah will not clean it, but calls the mehtrane.

A walk into the native town, produces novel sights on every side. The houses, for the most part are mere hovels, with mud floors and mud walls, scarcely high enough to stand up in, and covered with thatch. The streets are narrow, crooked, and dirty; and on every exposed wall, cow dung, mixed with chaff, and so moulded into cakes, as stuck up to dry for fuel. [illegible] are often but six or eight feet square, and seldom more than this size, wholly open in front, without any counter, but the mat on the floor, part of which is occupied by the vender, sitting cross-legged, and the rest serves to exhibit his goods. Mechanics have a similar arrangement.

Barbers sit in the open street on a mat, and the patient, squatting on his heels, has not only his beard, but part of his head, shaved, leaving the hair to grow only on his crown. In the tanks and ponds are dobies slapping their clothes with all their might upon a bench or a stone. Little brawny bulls, with, their bunned shoulders, work among the crowd thursting their noses into the baskets of rice, grain, or peas, with little resistance, except they stay to repeat the mouthful.* Bullocks, loaded with panniers, pass slowly by. Palanqueens come bustling along, the bearers shouting to the people to clear the way. Pedlers and hucksters utter their ceaseless cries. Religious mendicants, with long hair matted with cow dung, and with faces and arms smeared with Ganges mud, walk about almost naked, with an air of the utmost impudence and pride, demanding rather than begging gifts. Often they carry a thick triangular plate of brass, and, striking it at intervals with a heavy stick, send the thrill announcement of their approach far and near. Now and then comes rushing along the buggy of some English merchant, whose syce, running before, drives the pedestrians out of the way; or some villanous-looking carancle drags by, shut up close with red cloth, containing native ladies, who contrive thus to "take the air."

No Englishmen are seen on foot, except the very poorest, as it is deemed ungenteel; nor native women, except of the lowest castes. Costumes and complexions, of every variety, move about without attracting attention—Hindus, Mussulmans, Armenians, Greeks, Persians, Parsees, Arabs, Jews, Burmans, Chinese, &c. &c.; bheesties, with leather water-sacks, slung dripping on their backs, carry their precious burden to the rich man's yard, or hawk it along the street, announcing their approach by drumming on their brass measure. Snake-charmers, jugglers, and blind musicians, gather their little crowds. Processions are almost always abroad in honor of some idol, or in fulfilment of some promise; making all possible clamor with voices, drums, cymbals, and trumpets. Women carry their children astride on their hips. Wretched carriages, drawn by more wretched ponies, jingle along, bearing those who have long walks and moderate means. Women crowd about the wells, carrying water on their hips in brass jars. Children run about stark naked, or with a thin plate of silver or brass, not larger than a tea-cup, hung in front by a cord round the hips. Mudholes, neglected tanks, decaying carcasses, and stagnant ditches, unite with fumes of garlic, rancid oil, and human filth, to load the air with villanous smells. The tout ensemble of sights, sounds, and smells, is so utterly unlike any thing in any other part of the world, that weeks elapse before the sensation of strangeness wears away.

My residence with Mr. Pearce on the circular road, which is a principal thoroughfare, afforded constant opportunity of observing native character and [illegible]. A spectacle of frequent recurrence was the [illegible] procession of young children, affianced by [illegible] relations. Music and many torches dignify the [illegible]ession. The girl is often carried in a palankeen, and the bridegroom on horseback, held by a friend. Sometimes the little things are borne in a highly-ornamented litter, as in the engraving. It is always affecting to think that if the poor little boy die, his betrothed is condemned to perpetual widowhood. Many of these, as might be expected, become abandoned characters.

*These are individuals turned loose when young, as offerings to an idol, which are thenceforth regarded as sacred. Though no one looks after them, their privileged mode of life keeps them in good order; and, mixing so much among crowds, from which they meet no ill treatment, makes them perfectly gentle.

RELIGIOUS.

From the Baptist Banner.

RECEIVING MEMBERS TO THE CHURCH.

There is no scene on earth so full of thrilling interest as that presented by a Church of Christ assembled to hear young converts relate what God has done for them, or a request for admission to its bosom. The convert feels that a surprising change has come over his soul. He lately saw himself a lost sinner, sinking into perdition. There seemed no way of escape, till, like a wretch undone, he threw himself into the arms of Jesus Christ, where he found such peace and joy that he was overwhelmed with greatful astonishment and from that happy moment he resolved to give his whole being to his Saviour. He desires to confess Christ before men, and take the oath of consecration, by "being buried with him in baptism,—that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glorious Father, so he may walk in a new life." Knowing, too, that "as many as have been baptized into Jesus Christ have put on Christ," he is willing to assume that large responsibility, trusting that the same grace which has begun a good work in him, will carry it on until the day of Jesus Christ."

Actuated by feelings like these, the convert comes before the Church to tell the simple history of his own heart—what it was, and what by grace it now is. He tells of pride and folly once reigning—now subdued; of new objects of love which he once hated—of new objects of pursuit—new purposes of life. Wondrous change! As he surveys it, his soul is filled with rapturous surprise, and he asks:

Why was I made to hear thy voice,
And enter while there's room;
While thousands make a wretched choice,
And rather starve than come?

'Twas the same love that spread the feast,
That sweetly forced us in:
Else we had still refused to taste,
And perished in our sin.

He lays open each part of his spiritual history, with undisguised simplicity, knowing that he is surrounded by friends who sympathize in all his joys and sorrows, his hopes and fears. The church, in whose presence he stands face to face, is to decide on the request of admission to their fellowship and watch-care, their privileges and trials. And this question they are to decide, not according to the respectability or the intelligence of the applicant, but the simple question for them to decide is, "Has this person passed from death unto life? Has he truly repented of sin, fled to Christ as a refuge, received Him as his protector, and been regenerated by the spirit of God?"

In deciding this important point, the church must compare the account which the candidate gives of himself with the tests of conversion laid down in the scriptures. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." As there are essential points in which the experiences of all christians coincide, each member of the church will hear his own spiritual history, to a great extent, recited over again, for "as in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man." Love to Christ, to his ordinances, to christians, as such, love of public and social worship, and delight in secret prayer, and a new discovery of truth in the scriptures, are features which more or less strongly mark the experience of every true convert. The church, too, must inquire strictly into the past and present moral character and life of the candidate who seeks its fellowship; for although the vilest of the vile may be, and often are truly converted, yet a previous bad character should always be deemed a sufficient cause for caution, careful inquiry, and delay. But this we do insist on, that where satisfactory evidence is given, of a genuine change wrought by the spirit of God, the young convert should be received into the fold of Christ.

A christian church is thus the true earthly model and representative of the kingdom of heaven above. It is a model of a heavenly church, because, like that above, all its members are believed to be "born of God," "lively stones to built up a spiritual house to offer spiritual sacrifices." They all become members by giving evidence of that character, and in no other way. Thus the true modle—the theory of a christian church is that of heaven itself.—The difference is, the "keys" of the one are kept by fallible, and but partially sanctified men, those of the other by the Searcher of hearts, the Judge of quick and dead. A true christian church on earth is the modle of the church of glorified spirits above, also because all its members become so by their own free intelligent, act. They came themselves—they were not brought by others. They voluntarily assumed the oath of allegiance; "when they were baptized into Christ they put on Christ."—They consecrated themselves to God from the impulse of their own affections. This act the parent could not perform for the child, nor the child for the parent. The church below, like that above, is composed of volunteers alone, and thus the prophet's words in relation to the glory of a spiritual church on earth are fulfilled: "One shall say, I am the Lord's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel."

How close and strong are the bonds of christian fellowship, and mutual love! how lively the sense of responsibility, the daily personal interest, the godly jealousy, which this reception of members creates and keeps alive! The Church is a household of faith, a family of God, bound together by the strongest bond which earthly relationship can know. Every one is admitted to fellowship and sympathy on the full confidence of every other.—What a sacred relation! The church of Christ!—The greenest spot in earth's dreary pilgrimage!

"I love thy church, O, God!
Her walls before thee stand,
Dear as the apple of thine eye,
And graven on thy hand."

Who can help loving even the earthly model of heaven, in which Jesus has promised to be?—where all the pledges of his dying love are given, where mutual sympathy glows? It should not be forgotten that vigilance, labor, and self-denial, are required to keep the Church pure. That labor devolves on every member, for all who enjoys its blessings should cheerfully participate in all its cares and burdens. The purity of the Church, in doctrine, in practice, in reputation, should be the most scrupulously guarded. No member, however young, however obscure, can be exempt from obligation to perform this duty. The discipline of the Church should be thoroughly attended to, in the spirit of love. Each member is bound by solemn covenant to be an active, consistent, devoted christian, and has a right to expect the same of every other member. If one member sees another going astray, or losing the savor of devoted piety, it is his duty to endeavor at once, by counsel, by warning, by appropriate entreaty, and reproof, to bring him back. But this is a topic which we must defer to another time.

From the Baptist Advocate.

EARLY IMPRESSIONS.

"A SHORT time since, just at sunset, I went," says Mr. Todd, "to the grave of a dear sister of mine. Her two little boys went with me. When we arrived there, I saw four little rose bushes standing, two at the head, and two at the foot of the grave, bending over, as if to meet and hang over the grave. 'That is her grave—our mother's grave,' said one of the boys. 'And those rose bushes,' said I, as the tears started in my eyes. 'Those,' said the eldest, 'brother and I and father set out soon after she was laid there. Those two at the head she planted in the [illegible] herself, and we took them up and set them [illegible] and call them mother's bushes.'

"'And what do you remember about [illegible] mother, my boys?' [illegible] what in particular?' 'Oh, [illegible] never was a day, since I can remember, [illegible] she did not take us to her closet, and pray with us, unless she was sick on the bed!'

"Never did that sister seem so dear to me, as at that moment; and never did my heart feel so full of hope in the words which were engraved on her tomstone—

'No mortal woes
Can reach the peaceful sleeper here,
While angels watch her soft repose."

This affecting anecdote shows the importance of giving religious instruction to children Early impressions are proverbially strong The old man, who scarcely remembers the events of last week, can easily recollect what happened when he was a child: the counsels of his father, the sports of his brother, the gate on which he swung, the tree he used to climb, the pond where he bathed in summer, and skated in winter. But of all early impressions, those of a religious character are the most tenacious. My childhood Sabbaths! How vividly are they written on my memory! The minister who visited my father's family—morning and evening prayer—and the family Bible,

"The old fashioned Bible that lay on the stand."

Though years have passed since then, these things are still retained in mind, with all their original freshness Last summer, after many years' wanderings, and wearied with the turbulent scenes of life, I went to visit the grave of my mother. While leaning over her tombstone, her affectionate look—the prayers she had offered in my behalf—her words of piety—and her cheerful confidence in Christ, amid the trials of life—all these came rushing in upon my mind, with unusual vividness and power, and enabled me to return, with renewed vigor, to the toils and conflicts of life. I was then very deeply impressed with the value of pious parents, and with gratitude exclaimed—

"My boast is not, that I deduce my birth
From loins enthroned, and rulers of the earth;
But higher far my proud pretentions rise—
The son of parents pass'd into the skies."

Children need such parents. Youth is a very critical period. It is the starting point of the mind in its everlasting career The little rill, which is scarcely perceptible amid the tall grass of the meadow, may seen insignificant; but when you remember that this small stream will soon become a river, deepening and widening in its course, until it expands into the broad ocean whose waters lave every shore, then it becomes invested with a commanding importance. So also, the little boy, that you see trundling his hoop, or whirling his top, may scarcely attract your attention. But there is a priceless jewel in the casket. He has within him an immortal intelligence—a soul that is destined to everlasting life, or an eternal hell. Whatever influence is exerted upon him, is starting a wave which will extend wider and wider, and rise higher and higher up on a shoreless sea It is touching a chord that will vibrate through everlasting ages.

How momentous, therefore, is the condition of the youthful mind! How imperatively does it demand attention: connected as it is, with the interests of a future, and an endless world! And who is more suitable to give this attention than the parent? For this he is particularly qualified by natural affection. How strong is parental love! How tenaciously do the father's affections cling round his growing boy. The mother's love is, if possible, stronger still. It is deep and abiding. Her children may forget her—but she never forgets them. They may, by their misconduct, forfeit the esteem of society, and be despised and hated by othes—but the mother loves them still. She will plunge into the water—she will rush into the flames, to secure her darling child. why has God implanted this peculiar and strong affection in the parental bosom? Not, surely,, that children may be merely fed and clothed; but that their spiritual interest may be the more carefully guarded—that the mind may receive due attention at the beginning of its existence; and if this is not done, the principle of parental love is abused. He only who gives judicious counsel to his son, and guards him against influences which ruin the soul, and endeavors to train him up for the society and for the joys of heaven—he only exercises the feelings of a father. And she who hushes her child to rest by the still small voice of secret prayer, who aims to impress upon its opening mind a Saviour's worth, and point it upward to the realms of light—she only is a mother

PHYSICIANS AND THEIR FEES.

By David K. Hitchcock.

The importance of the healing art, the respect to which it is entitled, and the rewards its votaries deserve, are to be decided by the general blessings it confers upon mankind. Several considerations will show, however, that the compensation which professional gentlemen receive in this first of all human avocations is inadequate to their sacrifices, liabilities, and labors in the cause of suffering humanity. To say nothing of the philanthropic character of his avocation, the peculiar province of whose members it is, like the author of Christianity, to go about and do good, there are many other reasons to be assigned why it takes the lead in human employments. In the first place, happiness and health are so inseparably interwoven, their existence being connected by such mutual dependencies, that they both live or perish together. It has been tritely remarked that the most valuable treasure this world affords is a sound mind in a sound body; without the union of both each man is poor, be his earthly possessions what they may. This truth has been so deeply engraven in the mind, that we hence observe, from the earliest ages, mankind bestowing untiring efforts in the discovery of some grand antidote to arrest the progress of disease. The ancients labored and studied, and exhausted their strength, in researches after the general panacea against the physical evils of our race; and their progress in medical science was great indeed. But it has been reserved for the modern schools to improve and relatively perfect the materia medica. It is not our purpose, however, to go into the history of the rapid advancements modern philosophy has made in the healing arts; nor to review the works and pass encomiums on the names of the great European and America masters in the science, which shine out so conspiciously on our medical records. Our object in this article is to convince the reader that these benefactors of our race receive a compensation disproportionate to their benevolent exertions. In plain terms, they are poorly paid. There is, let us remark in this connexion, a strange and ungenerous propensity among men to practically treat those the worst who use them the best. Many act as though they believed that as a physician required no capital, it is a matter of no consequence whether his bill is paid; or at least the patient defers its adjustment until all his other necessary expenses are liquidated. But let us dispel such a mistaken notion. In the first place, we put down four years spent in college in preparing himself for his profession, embracing board, tuition, books and clothing, in round numbers, at $500 per year $2,000
Secondly, three years spent in qualifying himself to practice under eminent professors of the different branches of medicine, at $500 per year . 1,500
Physician's license, library and other expenses . 1,000

Here we have the sum of four thousand five hundred dollars which he has to expend by the time he stands on the threshold of his profession—an amount, we are safe in asserting, that is on an average double that which the trading, mercantile, and mechanic classes disburse to set themselves up in business; from which they not only always derive a decent support, but often acquire rapid fortunes. Is not here a sacrifice of funds, and a consumption of time, that ought to be amply restored to the individual by the community for whose benefit he has thus prepared himself?

After all this, however, before he can serve the public in his professional capacity he has to meet and overcome another difficulty. He must submit himself to the searching examination of the Board of Censors of the Medical Society established by law, and obtain their approval, if he would practice as a physician. Then he commences his career; his after success therein, for a variety of reasons, being often problematical. With mental exhaustions and physical debility, consequent on those severe studies which he has pursued with unremitted diligence by the midnight lamp and the noonday sun, and with the discouraging reflection that the masses of the community will not appreciate his services by rewarding them with those substantial pecuniary tokens of their gratitude which they are ever ready and willing to accord to all other avocations, he enters the lists, side by side with his contemporaries, who are pressing forward for those honors, that fame, and that wealth which should ever be the remuneration of genuine merit. And, as a general fact, they become opulent; he seldom, if ever; though he may acquire a competency, he rarely become rich in great possessions. In other pursuits, also, men have their regular seasons of repose and recreation. Not so in the one in question. A physicians is scarcely master of a moment of his time. He is liable to be called upon at all periods of the twenty-four hours in the day. The festive board, the luxuriant couch, he must abandon for the darkness and desolation of a winter's night, to visit the home of the wretched, where squalid poverty and misery have their abode, though he knows not whether he will receive the thanks of the invalid, much less a pecuniary requital. He goes where his profession has taught him duty calls, whatever may be the result. Even he might submit to all this without a complaint, but that frequently he has to encounter the timorous fears of the patient, whose nervous irritability causes him to shrink from the benevolent hand that administers relief, and to hate the presence of the friend who comes on his errand of mercy.

In the service of others he exhausts his energies. His life is one of incessant toil, of constant exposure, both to the inclemency of the weather and to the infection of disease While other men fly from that pestilence that walketh abroad and wasteth at noonday, he must face and suddue it, if it be possible. In short, his whole earthly existence is passed away for the good of the public. And for all this he receives, it is true, the approval of conscience, and the hopes of the glories of heaven. But while he is yet on earth he is subjected to the laws that regulate time and sense. Food and shelter he must have; the comforts of life, in common with other men, he should enjoy. Yet every other creditor receives his pay before him. Even persons who experience the frowns of fortune, and are compelled to seek relief in bankruptcy, will often promptly adjust all debts emoraced in their schedule of necessary expenses, and neglect the claim of their physician. who perhaps saved themselves and famlies from the grave.

The other learned professions are amply supported. Clergymen receive heavy salaries lawyers enormous fees. In dentistry also the operator receives his charges from his patients in proportion of 99 out of 100 upon leaving the chair. In England, we are informed, however, it is different. There the fee is put into the hands of the physician immediately after he has performed the visit. It should be so in this country. But what a sad contrast does the practice here present. Examine the ledgers of the profession in this city, and we shall find that large balances are annually placed to their loss account. Always, too, when a patient settles, the physician is asked to deduct from the legal and regular charge.

Such things ought not so to be. A reform is demanded in many of the preceding points. One great reason, however, why our physicians sink so much of their hard earned thrift, is the manifest reluctance they exhibit to coerce payment of their just demands. Other classes drive up their debtors to settlement, whereby they realize something of their claims. But medical men appear to leave their claims to be adjusted in conformity with the sense of justice which may influence the bosom of their debtors. In conclusion, let us add, that we are not a menber of the medical profession, though we pursue a vocation which may be considered as a collateral branch of it. We, however, have long been an attentive observer of the relations between the physician and the people; the great obligations the latter are under to the former and of the remissness with which those obligations are discharged; and have performed a duty by promulgating our views on the above interesting subject.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Liberia Herald.

SUPREMACY OF THE POWERS OF THE LIBERIA DISCIPLINE, TO THAT OF THE DISCIPLINE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:—In my last communication to you I promised to prepare for your next Herald, some corrections of some statements made in the Luminary of Jan. in answer to my report of some of the doings in a Quartely Meeting Conference, held at upper Caldwell, Jan 7th, at which time and place, I was first suspended. That 'Luminary is clothed with thick fog, and embodies many palpable falsehoods. The first of these which is worthy of notice, is as follows:

Mr. Chase says, that, the paragraphs quoted by Mr. B., contain provisions for a formal hearing and dispel of charges against a local preacher in the intervals of the sessions of the Q., Conf., of a circuit or station where he may belong. But if an offence be committed, either too late for the process, or under circumstances that render such a procedure either impracticable or very inconvenient, then the next session of the Q., Conf., has original cognizance in the case. &c. &c.

Now Mr C., has labored long, and wandered wide from the point, to convince his readers by argument, that the offence was committed too late for the aforesaid process to have been accomplished before the session of the said Q. Conf. so that any impartial readers would naturally, suppose that this was a case of emergency; or that the offence took place some 6. 10. or 15. days immediately before Q. Conf. which would have very much altered the case. But the offence, as he calls it, took place on the 8th Nov. and Q. Conf. on the 7th, Jan. Here were 2 month, lacking one day, between the committing the offence, and Q. Conf. which tried it. And there has not been 2 months, between the last 2 Q. Conferences.

Again, Mr. C's. readers will naturally infer, that local preachers for a committee were not to be had, because they were all recommended to the Annual Conf. Now I very much doubt, that, their being recommended to the Annual Conf. disqualified them at all for sitting on this committee. Nor were they recommended till some after the offence took place. And therefore local preachers might have been conveniently called at any time, and the difficulty might have been digested, at least, till we could have heard from America.

The next foggy pillar arising from his false picture is Mr C. says, if a local preacher should offend against the Discipline of our Church immediately after his Q. Conf. has risen, and local preachers can be had, the preacher in charge can proceed against the offending Bro. and acquital, or suspension follows of coure.—Have I offended against the Discipline? Then whose duty is it to proceed against the offending Bro. Mr. C. says, the preacher in charge.

Well then; why did not the preacher in charge proceed?

Mr. C. says, he was overcharged with other duties, and feeble in health. What kind of duties were those with which the preacher was so overcharged! It is true, he was a justice of peare, and this employed about one half his time. About one quarter of his time was spent in trading in Camwood, &c. Then he had one quarter of his time left, in which he might just as well have wrote a few lines, and sent them to the local preacher, and called a committee on my case, as to have been rambling the forests with a gun on his back in pursuit of game, or gadding about town, and sometimes spending two thirds of a day in one house, where he might have done his business, in five minutes. The reader can judge for himself, whether the preacher in charge was overcharged with other duies or not. He, A. F. Russell, lived the whole of last Conf. year in the violation of more than 20 of the rules of a methodist preacher.

Again, Mr. C. says, Mr B. was cited at our request, by the preacher in charge to answer to our complaint against him for his unkind & unjust treatment. Now this is another sneaking, malicious falsehood. For if I had been thus cited, I must have known it some way or other. But I have not seen, or heard any thing of that, or this hind, until the members told me, on the following Monday, that they thought I had been cited to trial. In the next place, Mr. C. says. Mr. B. sent a note asigning as a reason, why he did not come. But this is another baretaced falsehood, and the last Q. Conf. proved it so.

Again, Mr. C. says suppose we had been the first to report and made statements very unfavourable to Mr. B's. reputation &c. Now I appeal to the whole Christian Church on earth, was not Mr. C. the first to report this slander, as he calls it? Did he not first tell me I lied? Did he not first call me a black scoundrel? Did he not first order me out doors? was he not the first to tell it to the Church? and may not his neighbor come after him, as he says? why not?

And did he not know, that, I should be obliged to repeat his own words to those who asked me, or I must have told a lie?

Was not Mr. C.'s statements very unfavourable to my reputation? Mr. B. has told a lie on the Board of Missions, to deceive the honest merchants!

Let those who feel interested in this matter, call on the sec. of the Missionary Society, of the M. E. Church, in the City of New York, and ask for Brown's application, for the appropriation of the amount in question, and read it for yourselves. One may say to me, could you not have got along without telling the conversation which took place between you and Mr. Chase? Not in day-light. For at this time, I was on the point of leaving Caldwell for the Goloo Country. This difficulty took place on Tuesday, and on the next Monday, we were to start off for the interior. I had engaged several men to go with me, and had paid some of them for going: I had purchased $200, worth of goods, on credit, for the purpose of that Mission, of the merchants on the Cape, who, of course, were interested in this matter.

Now as soon as I was turned out of Mr. C's. door, up comes those interested merchants, saying well, Mr. B. have you settled with Mr. Chase? No sir, why did you not settle? Because Mr. C. protested my account. Protested your account? Yes sir, why did he protest it? because of &c. &c. Well what did you tell him? So and so:—well, then what did he say? Thus and thus.

I ask, what could I have told those men, but to tell them the truth? and why not tell the truth?

Now after all Mr. C's., claims and charges for slander, what does it amount to! what does Mr. C. deny that he pretends, that I told? answer is Q. Conf., for you, and Mr. C., say, that, I was suspended for, "reporting," the conversation between us.

Mr. C., rambles about in the Fog, not having a Discipline arranged to meet his fancy and conveniency, till he finds the analogy of treating with a common member: and finding himself swamped in this, he flies back to Mr. B.'s letter which professes to give a true account of the conversation which took place at the time his unwarrantable account was rejected; and here he makes another mighty struggle to prove its falsity, by arguing on the fact, that I had sworn, to the fact.

Mr. C., undoubtedly, intends to have his readers understand, that I wrote the letter which is published in the Herald, and then took an oath for its confirmation; which is not the case.

The oath was on this wise: Mr. C., protested my account against the Mission. I could do no more nor less, than to appeal to the Board of Missions, for redress. Thus I copied off my account and sent it to the Board: but as it had been protested by the superintendant of the Mission and for such reasons too, as he gave I thought it proper to take oath to the statements which I sent to the Board.

And when I wrote the letter, in the Herald, I stated that I had taken an oath; that is, of what I was then speaking.

But in order to prove that I had perjured myself by my oath, Mr. C., says, Mr. B. told Maria Dosier, that we took a chair to knock him down. But this is another baretaced falshood. I never told Maria Dosier any such thing. Moreover, on the 2, inst., I took Bro. S. Harris, a steward of the Church, and Bro. C. Carter, a Class-leader in the Church, and we went to Mariah Dosier's house, and asked her, if I had at any time told her that Mr. C., took a chair to knock me down, and she said, no.

And as to the difference between making, and looking toward a chair, and for which Mr. C., wishes to know, which I wish the people to believe, I answer; Mr. C., was siting in his big rocking chair, straping his razor, and frequently shaking and flourishing it at arms length toward me, as we set about five feet apart. And at the inst. in which he ordered me out door, he changed his razor from his right hand to his left, with his strap, he reached forth his arm, rocked forward suddenly, looking earnestly toward a chair which was within one foot of his outstretched hand, in which position I left him. And I wish the people to believe, that he made for a chair or looked at a chair; just which they please, or both.

Mr. C., thinks it a little amusing, and of some relief, that I did not fight with him on the occasion. But I had no notion to encounter such a big man, while he had a razor in one hand, and grasping for a chair with the other, he might have done me much harm, before the help of which he speaks, could have got up staires. No no, I had rather be called a coward.

Mr. C., not being satisfied because I would not fight it out, gets on another head, which he calls malignity, jumps on to the Editor of the Herald, and rides him into the Royal Albert again. But Mr. B. was in his head, in his heart, in his soul, and in his malignity too. He says Mr. B. did not come to tell us our faults between him and us alone, &c. No no, that is very true. Nor had I any notion to expose my poor carcass to those violent instruments again, after having such good luck as to escape them once. For it is written, thou shalt not tempt, &c, &c.

Now if Mr. C., means any thing less than musty blackguard, by saying, that I never come to seek a settlement, tell him his faults between him and me alone, and that I did not bring one or two friends as witnesses, then why did not he do the same before he suspended me. I did not complain of Mr. C., but he of me. I had concluded to let the difficulty remain until we could hear from America, and that Mr. C., might then be convinced of who was wrong in the outset. But Mr. C., being so deeply immersed in self-conceit, that to show his great power among a few colored dunces as he calls us, would urge on a trial of the difficulty at the sacrifice of any thing. And now, as my sheet is full, and there still remains some further explanations on that malignant head, I shall notice them in my explanations of the doings of our last Q. Conf., And prepare them for your next Herald.

Very respectfully yours, &c,

George S. Brown.

NOTES ON THE COLONY.

No. 2

Mr Editor:—Since our wise fathers who know more than we dare to think have admitted catholic spirits among us, we will not say they have done wrong, but for the information of some persons who advocate any and every denomination if they will only bring money to spend in our midst, I will copy a few notes that have been gathered in the course of historical reading respecting the Jesuits "one of the most celebrated monastic orders of the Romish Church founded in the year 1540 by Ignatives Loyola."

"The Jesuits were implicated in the assassination of Henry the 3d of France—planned the spanish armada—often contrived the death of Elizabeth of England—invented the gunpowder plot—impelled the revocation of the edict nantz—ruined James 2d, and in short are commingled with all the atrocities and miseries which desolated Europe during nearly two centuries."

Secret instructions of the Jesuits ch: 2, art. 5 "Let all with such artfulness gain the ascendant over Princes noblemen and the magistrates of every place, that they may be ready at our beck; even to sacrifice their nearest relations, and most intimate friends when we say it is for our interest and advantage."

Again chap: 4th, art. 6th "Immediately upon the death of any one in post, let our members take timely care to get some friend of our Society preferred in his room, but this must be cloaked with such cunning and management as to avoid giving the least suspician of our intending to usurp the Prince's authority."

Chap: 17th, art. 11th, "Finally the Society must endeavour to effect this at least, that having got the favour and authority of Princes those who do not love them, may at least fear them."

I have not time to remark as I should wish upon the above quotations—another time may find me more at leisure.

Yours, &c,
Syrup of Squills.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, MAY 3rd, 1843.

IN THAT VERACIOUS CHRONICLER, THE "LUMINARY" for February, there is another scintillation but burnished with such endless corruscations of italics, that to survey it with an unblenched eye demands no common effort. We recollect seeing somewhere in some low poetry, the sun compared to a great round black ball. The effect of strong light and pitchy darkness is the same on the organ of vision. The latter conceals every object from the utmost expansion of the pupil—the former forces such a contraction that no rays are admitted. We are at a loss which image Africa's Luminary now suggests. To come down from our stilts; we wish to remark first, how frequently men without being conscious of the fact are placed in similar positions, and how nearly when they think they are antipodes to each other in sentiment, they are influenced by the same motives. The worthy editor of the Luminary says "we deemed him" (hear him) "personally utterly unworthy, of attention, and herein" (that is in the editorial) "know that we are sustained by the common sense of the Liberian community excepting only the small minority who may have some party or selfish interest to serve." And the editor goes on to hope "these remarks may have some good tendency to lessen the bump of self esteem in the editor of the Herald." The hope that "these remarks" would produce any where any feelings but those of contempt points, unequivocally to the "bump of self esteem" on their author.

But, thank our stars, (and thanks to the editor for the information) there is one consideration which renders us not "utterly unworthy of any attention." Let the editor reflect; perhaps there is another that has gained for us his attention.

The agreement in opinion hinted at above is seen in the fact which we now proceed to state, that no language can adequately express the feelings of supreme contempt which we entertain for Rev. Mr. Chase. We do not hesitate to say that we have never been more disappointed in any man than in him. Never were more hopes blasted, or cherished expectation destroyed than by the course pursued by this ferocious, selfish, ambitious Priest. And we rest this our verdict upon the "common sentiment of the Liberian community excepting only the small minority who may have some party or selfish interest to serve."

His official standing as Superintendant of the Missionary operations of a large and respected body of christians, is the only circumstance that gained for him the small and reluctant attention even of those, with whom his business brought him in constant contact. Awed by his known ferocity they offered the forced tribute of apprehension and dependence—not the grateful homage of sincere respect for virtue. Conscious of the absence of every thing from his character that can attract regard, as well as of the power his position gave him to extort servility, he exerted his influence to awe all around him into a stolid silence and unmurmuring compliance: and while their hearts festered with disgust they sought peace in submission to the whims and caprice of the laughing Hyena. Never was a household more wretched, than that of Rev. Mr. Chase, yet never one more silent. "Mum was the word" except to their confidants, to whom their execrations were sincere and deep. There is only one, it is said with whom he ever melted, and to whom he manifested any of the weakness of our nature. Beyond the circle of those officially connected with him, his name was rarely mentioned unconnected with regret & mortification at his course. Even his white coadjutars who resided under his roof—and one especially who for years has laboured in the school department in both this place and at Cape Palmas, have been often made to feel the weight of his irresponsible power and belligerent disposition.

A record of his meanness and depravity would require more time than we are disposed to give at present. We we will only mention a few of his villanies which will serve to display the tact and adroitness with which he can escape from a difficulty.

He made his debut in the sale of two casks of wine. A rumor got afloat that Mr. Chase had turned wine merchant. He immediately called a meeting at which he publickly declared that he would sooner have thrown the wine in the river than it should be supposed he sold it. Mark; he had no objection to sell it—only he did not wish it to be supposed he had sold it. This version of his declaration is confirmed by the fact, that two days before he actually disposed of it, he pressed a merchant to take it at thirty per cent (pretty good percentage too) reserving to himself as it was excellent stuff a few gallons for sacramental and other purposes. The individual to whom he had handed it over for sale and who was responsible to him at a fixed price called on him and demanded an explanation. As it is as easy to lie backwards as forwards the brother promptly responded, and the matter when he got his money ended. He had called a meeting and publickly denied selling it—and he had the money for it—this was all he cared for. What can stick in his throat.

Ill fated wine. In the course of the editor's parochial duties he visited Marshall. On the occasion of Papa's visit, it is usual to administer the sacrament. Pursuant to this custom he bore along a bottle of the reservation from the two casks. Arriving there, he found something that displeased him—either the brethren were stupid, as he said in the Luminary, or something else, and he determined to exercise his paternal privilege of punishment by giving them no sacrament. The task of scolding over, the fatherly editor turned his face homewards, and as a beadle carries his mace bearing the bottle before him. Some one with reprehensible hardihood, inspired no doubt by the fame of this wine, ventured to open, at a humble distance, a treaty for this bottle, as papa stood on the bank of the river ready for embarkation. A bargain was presently struck—thirty seven and a half cents jingled in the priest's vest pocket and the bottle was saved to Marshall. We will not refer any farther to his attack on Mr. Brown than to say that he confessed in conference he did call Mr. Brown a liar and ordered him out of the house. In his paper he essays a confused denial of the whole charge. This kind of en masse and diagonal negation is characteristic of the man. Mr. Chase don't choke easey."

The editor makes a long boastful flourish because we did not bring him to trial. What in the name of good breeding did the man wish us to do? Did he wish us to take him by the collar and drag him to conference? Four long months we have been beseeching him to stand a trial; and four long months he has been running from it, and now he has run quite away from the country. The power was all in his own hands. He had only to suffer a tribunal to be instituted, and there was a host who from pure conscience would have been ready to investigate the matter. What had we to do with an investigation of the matter? We only echoed what had been publicly asserted and generally believed, and what the editor has never yet had the courage even to deny. We are not censor of his domestic economy; and besides we have too much respect for our mortal man to place it within reach of a man of Mr. Chase's kidney.

Of a piece with his past cunning the editor shows no little adroitness in avoiding the question at issue, and instinctively, like a certain American bird which flutters off in an opposite direction from its nest to call off the truant school-boy, he flies off tangent and bids us follow him. These subsidiary topics we will have no objection to discuss when the original question licentuousness, and its horrible consequence have been set at rest. The question then. We pause for a reply.

The editor gives us credit for no ordinary portion of foresight. He has more than once made us guilty of charging him with licentuousness and sly dalliance—and says we intended it as a set off against his charge against us of drunkenness. We have since been reminded by a friend, that the paper charging him was posted in the street some week or more before his paper came out. Mr. Chase must have known this, but it suited his purpose better to make us guilty of it. Well, we have no earthly objection to be charged by a man like the Rev. Squire Chase Editor of the African Scintillator. Anon he charges us with foresight of his departure for America. Really we did not foresee any such thing. We know he became monstrous angry in conference, because some of the "black scoundrels" dared to vote contrary to his wishes, and threatend to quit the colony and publish them all; but seeing he must have known no very great judgement would befal the colony in that case, we hoped he would think better of the matter and remain a month or so longer. Moreover the captain after the bargain was concluded expressed strong inclination to be off. He heard the fame of the editor's dietetic propensities, and in the event of a long passage was apprehensive of a famine on board. Perhaps however, and it is most likely, he wished to be removed from a scene of strong temptation and of humiliating prostration, so that the moral constitution may regain its wonted elasticity and erect attitude.

We have nothing to do with how much Mr. Brown is overpaid. It is strange that so skilful a financier as Mr. Chase should ever pay any one but himself. By the way to whose account is the demurrage charged? To mission contingencies no doubt!! What a convenient folio in the diary of missionary benefactions—for purchasing friends, bestowing favours and procuring conveniencies. It is at once the lever of the superintendant's power—the grave of pious offerings and the alembic of villany!!! Not contented with the irresponsible possession of the mission money, this meek heavenly minded missionary who has traveled all the way to Africa, to teach us to despise silver and gold, and to lay up treasures in heaven, has been slyly feeling at our pocket too. He hints at a civil tribunal. How doubly avaricious—can the man wish us to bear the cost of his own enjoyment!! But he again reminds us we are in debt. If debt be a crime, it is not long since he has been guiltless—only since he came into power. We make bold to enquire if, when he engaged to come to Africa, he did not like other hirelings receive an advance in the shape of an outfit to be paid for in self. denying labours.?

Although we detest logomachy, yet we will venture to ask this monopolist of all sound sense and good morals what kind of grammar is included in the phrase "while themselves act the part." This perhaps was not in the manuscript, and merely escaped notice "when he was excogitating, how like a beast the editor of the Herald appeared to his fellow citizens on the occasion of the loss of the Royal Albert when from having drank wines or stronger drink he returned like a dog to his vomit:" and not from any hurry the Rev. Editor was in ☞ to hie away to the bowers of "sly dalliance" and criminal assignation: nor in any moment of anxiety how to dispose of the fruit of illicit connexion.

Who does not know that the Rev. editor's exemption from these dilemmas could not be the cause of the over. sight. Cool and self possessed, this sly old "coon" when it suits him, can move with the celerity of the fox and the silentness of the serpent.

Lest the worthy editor should say we take advantage of his absence, we now close our notice, assuring him that we do not think so badly of him after all. He is no common chap. He has a good tongue,—preaches well, except when he gets angry and foams at the mouth, as he did on a certain funeral occasion when he uncorked the vials of his wrath, and poured on our head—writes well, only he is too easily irritated, and drowns himself in the storm of his own passions—very good companion if he is suffered to be master. (He is a rank aristocrat. He has an unquenchable thirst for flattery, by which he can be led any and every where—loves all his personal friends and cordially anathematizes all who differ from him; and has, it is said, only one weakness which we trust he will overcome as he advances in age.

We find that an impression has somehow been made on the minds of some of our friends that we intended, in a note appended by us to Mr. Brown's last communication to confirm the charge made against Rev. Mr. Russell of purchasing slaves. Nothing can be more erroneous. Our note rests on the statement of Mr. Brown. If that be disproved, the note falls with it, We know nothing of the matter; we neither affirm nor deny in the premises.

The Oil season is again open. Camwood is again scarce.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE

On the 2d, instant 12 persons were baptized and added to the Baptist Church in this place—since that time three other candidates for the holy ordinance have been received. Others rejoicing in hope will soon come forward, and some others we trust are enquiring the way to Zion with their faces thitherward.

Friday the 4th inst. was set apart by the above Church for religious worship, which was held three times during the day. Brethren, James and Henderson, who some time since had been chosen as deacons, were solemnly designated by the imposition of hands. Pursuant to appointment it was expected that Brother Wright would be ordained as evangelist in the evening; but ill health prevented his attendance.

A letter from Brother Clarke at Bassa, informs us that an unusual seriousness is apparent in the children of his school and that he entertains great hope of some of them.

Our Methodist Brethren held their Camp-meeting at Caldwell from the 6th and 9th. We were not privileged to be present but we have heard it was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We have not heard if there were any conversions. During the revival here a large number was added to the Methodist Church.

HEREDITARY HONORS.

A TALE OF LOVE AND MYSTERY.

Hereditary honors are, certainly, the most rational of human devices. It was an excellent idea to suppose that a man propagated his virtues to the most distant posterity. Few notions have succeeded better in keeping the world in order. In fact, it was the best method of granting to the multitude the inestimable gift of a perpetuity of dependence. Had the idea stopped with the king or chief magistrate, it would not have been half so beatiful, or a hundredth part so useful. So far, a reason for the custom is obvious to the most superficial. Hereditary distinction, it is said, preserves a people from the wars and tumults that might arise from the contests of elective distinction. Very well—I do not dispute this assertion—it is plausible. But dukes and earls—if their honors were not hereditary, would there be contest about them? The world suffers itself to be disturbed by individuals wishing to be kings, but it would not be so complaisant to every man that wished to be a lord. "On ne desarrange pas tout le monde pour si peu de chose," we should not have wars and discords, as the seeds of that sort of ambition. We do not, then, grant hereditary honors to these gentry as the purchase of peace—we do not make them as a bargain, but bestow them as a gratuity. Our reasons, therefore, for this generosity are far deeper than those which make us governed by King Log to-day, because yesterday we were governed by his excellent father, King Stork—so much deeper, that, to plain men, they are perfectly invisible. But a little reflection teaches us the utility of the practice. Hereditary superiority to the few, necessarily produces hereditary inferiority to the many—and it makes the herd contented with being legislatively and decorously bullied by a sort of prescriptive habit. Messieurs the Eels are used to be skinned—and the custom reconciles them to the hereditary privilege of Messeigneurs the Cooks.

POETRY.

WRITTEN BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

They, who would found a State.
On Afric's torrid plain.
Should nerve their spirits for the weight
Of toil, and care, and pain—

Sustain each adverse shock
With strength that ne'er can fail,
And, like the sires of plymouth Rock,
Look heavenward and prevail.

They, who the cross would rear
Where Niger's waters flow,
And see it dry the torturing tear
Of ignorance and wo,

And mark its radiance light
Sahara's darkest sky.
And heal that burning serpent's bite,
By which the heathen die,

Must make the Saviour's prayer
Their talisman of flame,
His armor mid their conflict wear,
And triumph in His name.

WRITTEN BY MRS MARY W. THOMPSON.

Ethop's sons their home are seeking—
Home where once their fathers dwelt,—
Hark! what joyful songs they're singing,
In their freedom, which is felt.

From a land by bondage fettered—
Pressed by sweat from every pore,—
Their condition greatly bettered;
Thraldom's tears shall flow no more.

Stripes they now are gladly bearing—
Borne by many a willing hand—
"Stripes" whose brilliant "stars" appearing,
Peace and Liberty command.

On the Western Shores of Afric,
See the Gospel Banner wave,
Heralds there proclaim a Saviour,
Who the guilty came to save.

Swell, oh! swell the anthem louder,
Let our gratitude arise,—
King of Heaven! extend thy border—
Crown this Christian Enterprise.

AMERICAN NOTES.

There are some rare and rich specimens in this book, in spite of all draw backs, though in general they have about as little to do with traveling in America, as with any other conceivable topic of remark. It would be scarcely possible for Charles Dickens to put pen to paper by way of original composition, without producing some bright and sparkling things. He writes, evidently, as his humor for the time being inclines. Yet he manifests a deep sympathy for his fellow men. We will present him in some of his peculiar moods. And first,

DICKENS MORALIZING.

He is on his passage from Quebec and Montreal, in a vessel crowded with English emigrants, their beds and furniture stowed very close and thick around the decks. The children were clean and cheerful, and the poor parents were untiring in their love and self-denial. Reflecting on this sight, he says:

"Cant as we may, and as we shall to the end of all things, it is very much harder for the poor to be virtuous than it is for the rich; and the good that is in them shines the brighter for it. In many a noble mansion lives a man, the best of husbands and of fathers, whose private worth in both capacities is justly lauded to the skies. But bring him here, upon this crowded deck. Strip from his fair young wife her silken dress and jewels, unbind her braided hair, stamp early wrinkles on her brow, pinch her pale cheek with care and much privation, array her faded form in coarsely patched attire, let there be nothing but his love to set her forth or deck her out, and you shall put it to the proof indeed. So change his station in the world that he shall see in those young things who climb about his knee not records of his wealth and name, but little wrestlers with him for his daily bread, so many poachers on his scanty meal, so many units to divide his every sum of comfort, and farther to reduce its small amount. In lieu of the endearments of childhood in its sweetest aspect, heap upon him all its pains and wants, its sicknesses and ills, its fretfulness, caprice, and querulous endurance; let its prattle be not of engaging infant fancies, but of cold, and thirst, and hunger; and if his fatherly affection outlive all this, and he be patient, watchful, tender, careful of his children's lives, and mindful always of their joys and sorrows—then send him back to parliament, and pulpit, and to quarter sessions, and when he hears fine talk of the depravity of those who live from hand to mouth, and labor hard to do it, let him speak up, as one who knows, and tell those holders forth, that they, by parallel with such a class, should be high angels in their daily lives, and lay but humble seige to heaven at last.

Which of us shall say what he would be, if such realities, with small relief or change all through his days, were his! Looking round upon these people; far from home, houseless, indigent, wandering, weary with travel and hard living; and seeing how patiently they nursed and tended their young children; how they consulted ever their wants first, then half supplied their own; what gentle ministers of hope and faith the women were; how the men profited by their example; and how very, very seldom even a moment's petulance or harsh complaint broke out among them; I felt a stronger love and honor of my kind come glowing on my heart, and wished to God there had been many Atheists in the better part of human nature there, to read with me this simple lesson in the book of life."

DICKENS AT THE SHAKER VILLAGE.

"As we rode along we passed a party of Shakers, who were at work upon the road; who wore the broadest of all broad-brimmed hats; and were in all visible respects such very wooden men, that I felt about as much sympathy for them, and as much interest in them, as if they hand been so many figure heads of ships. Presently we came to the beginning of the village, and alighting at the door of the house where the Shaker manufactures are sold, and which is the head-quarters of the elders, requested permission to see the Shaker worship.

Pending the conveyance of this request to some person in authority, we walked into a grim room, where several grim hats were hanging on grim pegs, and the time was grimly told by a grim clock, which uttered every tick with a kind of struggle, as if it broke the grim silence reluctantly, and under protest. Ranged against the wall were six or eight stiff, high-backed chairs, and they partook so strongly of the general grimness, that one would much rather have sat on the floor than incurred the smallest obligation to any of them.

Presently there stalked into this apartment a grim old Shaker, with eyes as hard, and dull and cold, as the great round metal buttons on his coat and waistcoat; a sort of calm goblin. Being informed of our desire, he produced a newspaper wherein the body of elders, whereof he was a member, had advertised but a few days before that in consequence of certain unseemly interruptions which their worship had received from strangers, their chapel was closed to the public for the space of one year.

As nothing was to be urged in opposition to this reasonable arrangement, we requested leave to make some trifling purchases of Shaker goods, which was grimly conceded. We accordingly repaired to a store in the same house and on the opposite side of the passage, where the stock was presided over by something alive in a russet case, which the elder said was a woman; and which I suppose was a woman, though I should not have suspected it.

On the opposite side of the road was their place of worship: a cool, clean edifice of wood, with large windows and green blinds: like a spacious summer house. As there was no getting into this place, and nothing was to be done but walk up and down, and look at it and the other buildings in the village (which were chiefly of wood, painted a dark red, like English barns, and composed of many stories like English factories,) I have nothing to communicate to the reader, beyond the scanty results I gleaned while our purchases were making. These people are called Shakers from their peculiar form of adoration, which consists of advance, performed by the men and women of all ages, who arrange themselves for that purpose in opposite parties; the men first divesting themselves of their hats and coats, which they gravely hang against the wall before they begin; and tying a riband round their shirt sleeves, as though they were going to be bled. They accompany themselves with a droning, humming noise, and dance until they are quite exhausted, alternately advancing and retiring in a preposterous sort of trot. The effect is said to be unspeakably absurd and if I may judge from a print of this ceremony which I have in my possession, and which I am informed by those who have visited the chapel, is perfectly accurate, it must be infinitely grotesque."

AMERICAN JEALOUSY AND DISTRUST.

Dickens says that one great blemish in the popular mind of American, and the prolific parent of an innumerable brood of evils, is universal distrust; yet he says, the people pride themselves upon it, and mention it as one instance of the great sagacity and acuteness of the people, and their superior shrewdness and independence. Whether it is distrust, or the spirit of leveling downwards, urged on by envy, which some think to be a fruit of republican virtue, which he means, the reader must judge. That there is something like that which he describes, and quite as bad as he says it is, among us, which brands the man as an aristocrat whose character is purer, and whose talents are greater than those of his neighbors; makes him an enemy of reform because he has an opinion of his own, or sets him up to be the target of calumny because he is more useful, and consequently more conspicuous than others; is no doubt true. This prevalent spirit is thus expostulated with:

"You carry," says the stranger, "this jealousy and distrust into every transaction of public life. By repelling worthy men from your legislative assemblies, it has bred up a class of candidates for the suffrage, who, in their every act, disgrace your institutions and your people's choice. It has rendered you so fickle, and so given to change, that your inconstancy has passed into a proverb, for you no sooner set up an idol firmly, than you are sure to pull it down and dash it into fragments; & this, because directly you reward a benefactor, or a public servant, you distrust him, merely because he is rewarded; and immediately apply yourselves to find out, either that you have been too bountiful in your acknowledgments, or he remiss in his deserts. Any man who attains a high place among you, from the President downward, may date his downfall from that moment: for any printed lie that any notorious villian pens, although it militate directly against the character and conduct of a life, appeals at once to your distrust, and is believed. You will strain at a gnat in the way of trustfulness and confidence, however fairly won and well deserved; but you will swallow a whole caravan of camels, if they be laden with unworthy doubts and mean suspicions. Is this well, think you, or likely to elevate the character of the governors or the governed among you?"

The answer is invariably the same; "There's freedom of opinion, here, you know. Every man thinks for himself, and we are not to be easily overreached. That's how our people come to be suspicious."

THE LOVE OF SMARTNESS.

Americans must plead guilty to the following charge, though it is enough to cover their faces with shame. How deplorable that "smartness," which is often but another name for rascality, should be so often honored among us, more than honesty and goodness.

"Another prominent feature is the love of 'smart' dealing, which gilds over many a swindle and gross breach of [illegible] public or private: [illegible] to hold his head up with the best [illegible] whatever [illegible] operation, [illegible] has done more to [illegible] to the credit, and to [illegible] the public [illegible] than dull honesty, however rich, could [illegible] in a century. The merest [illegible] of a broken speculator or a bankrupt, or of a successful [illegible] engaged [illegible] in the observance of the golden rule, 'Do as you would be done by,' but are considered with reference to their smartness. I recollect, on both occasions of our passing the Mississippi, Cairo on the Mississippi, remarking on the bad effects such gross deceits must have when they exploded, in generating a want of confidence abroad, and discouraging foreign investment; but I was given to understand that this was a very smart Scheme by which a deal of money had been made; and that its smartest feature was, that they forgot these things abroad in a very short time, and speculated again as freely as ever. The following dialogue I have held a hundred times; "Is it not a very disgraceful circumstance that such a man as So-and-so should be acquiring a large property by the most infamous and odious means, and, notwithstanding all the crimes of which he has been guilty, should be tolerated and abetted by your citizens? He is a public nuisance, is he not?" "Yes, sir." "A convicted liar?" "Yes sir." "He has been kicked, and cuffed, and caned?" "Yes, sir." "And he is utterly dishonorable, debased, and profligate?" "Yes, sir." "In the name of wonder, then, what is his merit?" "Well, sir, he is a smart man."

TURKISH LADIES—A FIRMAN ON HOSE.

The ladies will be heartily amused with the document which we annex, which is an authentic translation of a firman recently issued in Constantinople. It appears that the Turkish ladies in that city have shown a disposition to adopt European fashions and customs in dress, which tendency has been promptly put down by the conservators of public morals. They have driven the women back into their old muffled up costume, but, at last dates, this had not been sufficient. The London Chronicle gives the document annexed, with the introduction from its Constantinople correspondent. We publish the article as exceedingly amusing:

In order to explain what may appear ambiguous in this quaint document, it is necessary to observe that the fashion of wearing thread or silk stockings has lately become prevalent among the higher classes of the Turkish ladies, and that those who have adopted this Frank custom have laid aside the short and shapeless yellow boot, which served them in lieu of "hose," and only wear the plain slipper when out of doors. Now, although the ladies admit that it would be an unpardonable solecism in propriety to expose any portion of the feet or ankles uncovered, they all declare that there can be nothing incongruous in exhibiting the said fractions of their "mortal coil" when enveloped in stockings. They consequently practice divers manœuvres and petty feminine stratagems to attract attention to their progress in civilization, and when taken to task, therefore, attribute the opening of their ferjees (mouths) to the wind or some other involuntary cause. They are well seconded in their coquettish manœuvres by the construction of their arabas and kotchy.—These vehicles being high and unprovided with steps, seem purposely made for exhibiting pretty feet and ankles; seeing that one foot must precede the other, at least a yard in descending, and then twist about, during some seconds, in search of terra firma, or in pursuit of the slipper, which generally contrives to part company in the effort. But now for the bouyourdy (decree) of which the following is declared to be a tolerably literal translation.

"1st of Diemazy ul Khair (July 19.)

"The unity and omnipotence of God is undeniable. From him proceed all things, great and small. He has ordained the formation of various substances for the convenience and decent adornment of all that he has created. Thus, he had accorded feathers to birds—even to the never-resting yel-caran, (halcyon) in whose crops the souls of the damned perpetually wander—He has clothed the lordly cypress with eververdant foliage, and he has girded the pearl-breeding oyster with an impervious shell. By these means the nudity of these things is concealed at all seasons, and the glorious munificence of their Maker becomes still more manifest in the air, upon the land, and in the deep waters.

"Those who possess sound intellects doubtless, meditate upon these matters, and, adhering to prescribed rules, act discreetly. But others of frivolous disposition, regardless of the pangs of Al Zakum,* to follow the path of those that go astray, and thereby accumulate infinite dirt for their own future consumption.

"Fascinated by the pernicious example of fire dowsed she-Kaffirs, who unblushingly expose to the sun and moon almost all that a bountiful Creator has accorded them, so that those luminaries are fain to conceal themselves behind clouds, in token of modest reprobation—the mothers, wives, sisters and daughters of true believers, as well as the slaves their property, have adopted certain innovations, tending to cut them off from those enjoyments, beyond human intelligence, promised to the blessed in Paradise.

"The innovations alluded to are the wearing of woven stockings adhering to the form. Now, it is not written that these things are of themselves memnoo (illicit). But things licit become unlawful from misapplication, even as things clean become impure from unclean contact. Thus, Inshallah's woven stockings may be worn for personal convenience, but not displayed as lurements of Satan to attract the gaze of licentious idlers, nor as incentives to extravagance, pride and heartburnings. Inattention to these facts has produced much scandal, out of doors, and sharp disputes within, not to mention inconvenience to purses.

"Instances, indeed, have come to our ear where, in order to procure coin for the purchase of these perfidities, the stomachs of children and dependants have remained empty. This is most reprehensible, and a manifest violation of all revealed ordinances.

"Let women, therefore, with the sanction of Allah, wear woven stockings of moderate price and become texture, as an additional shield against profane eyes; but let them not, on any account, employ them, as merchants in the bazaar expose goods outwardly in order to attract notice to things within.

"Let heads of families exercise due vigilance and authority, and enjoin caution when those who are their tillage† walk forth for air, or when they make benish (excursions) in boats. In order also to avoid all pretexts for forbidden exhibitions, when the same (the tillage) proceed to the celestial waters, to those of Aley-Bey Koni (Sweet Waters of Asia and Europe) or to any other place of public enjoyment, in Arabas and Kotchy, let the said heads of families add steps to their vehicles, and devise other means for preventing unseemly incongruities.

"It is of common occurrence to hear indiscreet persons attribute to the innocent winds and to other accidents the reprehensible results of their own premeditated self-love and ashibazlik (coquetry.) This is an augmentation of backbiting, and merits objurgation. Let those whom it may concern, both high and low, take warning, therefore. If they neglect to do so, they will subject themselves to a depreciation of honor in this world, and they will be responsible, hereafter, for adding to the number of burned souls that already inhabit a most distressing place."

*Al Zakum, the tree by the bottomless pit, which supplies inexhaustible fuel for burning the condemned.

†Women are thus designated in the Kouran.

THE YANKEE PEDLAR.—This animal, so often seen, and so well known, you may say in all parts of the world, is to most persons, nevertheless, a perfect anomoly. They can neither measure his surface nor sound his depth. They see him enter the country with his light wagon, heavy with notions that they had supposed no one wanted—stopping at every farm house, and, though a perfect stranger, acquainted with no one, making sales wherever he stops, and upon a credit of 6, 9 or 12 month. But this is not the most extraordinary part of his conduct, for at the expiration of the time, they see him return and collect every dollar of his debts. He seems to have been better acquainted with the circumstances and standing as to solvency of his customers, than their nearest neighbours. To see one of these pedlars sell a clock or wind mill to one who cannot pay for it, is a year's wonder.

We were informed lately by a justice of the peace, that he had collected in his county, one among the most wealthy in the west, claims to the amount of ten thousand dollars for one of these pedlars, and had not lost in all the claims thirty dollars.

Speaking on this subject to a gentleman one day, he remarked that a circumstance came under his notice lately that strongly fixed his attention. It was the meeting of two of these pedlars, trading in different articles, and totally unacquainted with each other. The one was going South, the other North, consequently one was going directly into the country from which the other had just come. It was at a tavern he said, in Washington, Pa. They were not long in the house before these facts were ascertained from each other. They had both been selling on the usual credit system, when a proposition was made by one, and acceded to by the other, that they should exchange the notes or obligations they had received. The exchange was made, said our intelligent informant, in my presence, and the balance, some 60 or $80 paid in money. Now these men were not only unacquainted with one another, but entirely ignorant of the givers of the obligations they had received of each other. The mystery was, by what rule were they governed in such an exchange.

These men doubtless knew of the factory and its owners from which each sold, and with them, their reputation was good for that of their agents. He knew this was not so green as to make a bad debt—his confidence here, was the warrant for the exchange, and it was made with the same freedom and unreserve that the same men would have exchanged bank bills. Nevertheless, this thing could only have happened with Yankee Pedlars.—Pittsburg American.

ANECDOTE.

Some twenty or thirty years ago a very zealous professor of religion in one of the churches in England, went to her minister, a devoted and exemplary Christian, and told him she had something against him, and she considered it her duty to reprove him.

"well my good lady," said he, "what is the difficulty?"

"Why, sir, I think your bands are too long."

"Ah, do you? I have never thought anything about it; I will get a pair of scissors, and will thank you to cut off as much as you think best."

She replied, "I hope you will not be offended"

"Not at all, not at all, madam," he replied.

Without much ceremony she folded and cut off quite a large piece of the bands.

"Are you now satisfied! look again and see; perhaps you had better cut off a little more while you are about it, and be satisfied."

"I do not know but I had, I think it is still rather long," and she cut off a second piece, saying, "There, I think that will do."

"Well my friend," said the minister, "I must now tell you I have something against you."

"Have you, sir," she exclaimed, "what is it?"

"I think your tongue is rather too long, and you had better let me cut off a piece of it."

CONSOLATION FOR THE AFFLICTED.

CUSTOMS AND MANNERS IN AFRICA.

YORK, my present residence, is a pleasant village, containing from 3000 to 4000 inhabitants, situated between 20 and 30 miles south of Freetown. The scenery between the two places is grand beyond description. There is one continued range of mountains which are literally "Alps piled on Alps." Here a cape reaches out her iron-bound head into the sea in proud defiance of her waves, and there a bay rushes in and washes the very foot of the mountain. The scenery here is beautiful, not to say grand and sublime. On the west, the ocean stretches as far as the eye can reach. On the south-west, about 12 miles distant, are the Banana Islands, which are composed of mountains of different sizes, and at the rainy season of the year, they present a most splendid appearance. When it does not rain we can see the trees and houses with the naked eye from our residence. A little further to the east is Cape Shilling, (more properly a promontory), which presents a prospect little inferior to that of the Bananas. On the south is a beautiful narrow bay, extending two miles inland, which gives us salt water on two sides of us, and affords a most refreshing sea-breeze. Across the bay, the mountains lift up their heads as a resting-place for the clouds. From the south to the east and north east, and nearly to the north, are lofty mountains presenting at once a prospect both grand and sublime. As far as I have seen it, the country is uneven and even mountainous. York, I think, is a fair sample of what I have seen, but I understand that on both sides of the colony, the face of the country is very even and level. The soil is generally gravelly. On the bank of the river it is sometimes loamy. The temperature of the climate is very uneven. During the dry season the thermometer stands from 80 to 82 degrees, and during the rains about 76 deg. The rains commence the beginning of May, and end the last of October. In May we have showers, but they are not very frequent. In June, they become more frequent. July and August are the most rainy months. Then seldom a day passes but more or less rain falls, and sometimes for two or three weeks together the sun is hardly seen. In September the rains abate. In October there is but little rain, and that falls in the night, attended with tornados. The dry season commences the beginning of November, and ends the last of April. It is one continued succession of cloudless days. The nights are always cool.

The productions of this town, (and this town will fairly represent the whole colony,) are yams, cassada, corn, rice, sweet potatoes, beans, cocoa, arrow-root, ginger, pine-apples, oranges, limes, guavas, bananas, plantains, cotton etc., etc., etc. The yam is a very good substitute for the potatoe. When I first came here I was not at all partial to it, but now I prefer it even to the potatoe. It is evidently more nutritious. It is cultivated in hills like our potatoe. One seed produces but one yam, though one large seed yam can be cut so as to make five or six pieces or seeds. It has but one vine, and that runs up a pole, somewhat resembling a hop or bean vine. Yams vary in size frome one to five or six pounds. The cassada has very nearly a spiral root. Its size varies from one to three or more inches in diameter. It is eaten raw, but more frequently roasted. It is grated by the natives on tin graters and then made into balls about six inches in diameter; in this state it is called Foofoo. The stalk of the cassada is from three-quarters of an inch to an inch in diameter, and five or six feet in height. It is cultivated by taking slips of the stalk some eight or ten inches long, and burying one end in the ground. It takes a year for it to become fit for eating. The African corn varies but little from our corn, except the ear is somewhat shorter, and the stalk much larger and higher. Rice does not seem to be the spontaneous production of the soil, but is cultivated to some extent by the Cossa or Mendi people, whose country is a great rice country, and who prefer rice to any other kind of food. Sweet potatoes are the same as in America. Beans are inferior. They are smaller in size. The vines grow to an enormous length. Cocoa is a very nutritious bulbous root, somewhat resembling artichoke in its shape. When growing it has something the appearance of rhubarb. The leaves are heart-formed, the stem joining them nearly in the centre like the leaves of our pond lilies. Cocoa does not generally exceed in size a common tea-cup. Arrow-root is also of a bulbous root. There is a preparation of the same name, made from this root, nearly in the same way that we make starch from potatoes, with which you are well acquainted. Ginger I am not able to tell you much about, as I do not recollect ever seeing it grow. The pine-apple grows on a stalk two or three feet high, surrounded by a multitude of narrow prickly leaves two or three feet high starting from the very roots of the stalk. Oranges, limes, and guavas grow on trees similar to our apples, peaches, etc. The guava is the fruit from which the guava jelly is made It is, I think, superior to the apple for making pies, etc. The banana and plantain are of the same genus. They grow on a soft stalk 15 or 20 feet high, and eight or ten inches in diameter. The leaves are six or eight feet long, and twelve or eighteen inches wide. The fruit grows in bunches weighing from ten to twenty pounds. The stem of the fruit grows from the extreme top of the stalk. The leaves start out just below it and extend some feet above it. One stalk never bears but one bunch of fruit. After the fruit becomes ripe the stalk dies, and it starts a new from the roots. Cotton grows either on trees, which are generally eight or ten feet in diameter, or on bushes from two to six feet in height. The cotton of the cotton tree is never used by the natives. The bush is cultivated to a very limited extent.

We have here the horse, cow, sheep, goat, hog, dog and cat. Of the feathered tribe we have geese, ducks, turkies, hens, and doves. The horse is not a native of this colony. Most of the horses used in the colony are brought from the Gambia. They are inferior in size and in many other respects to our American horses. They, however, bear a very large price. The cows here are about two-thirds the size of our American cows Their color is generally a pale red. Their horns are larger—less crooked and wider spread than ours. They yield but a very small quantity of milk. At Freetown, milk is one penny (about two cents) for a common wine-glass full. Here it is half-penny (about one cent. The natives never use it. The sheep are about the size of our sheep, but have hair like the goat. The goat is about the size of the sheep, and is seldom kept for its milk. The hog and dog are very much inferior to ours—the cat about the same as ours. Dogs and cats are not very numerous. Geese and turkeys are not natives, they are brought from England. Ducks and doves are about the size of ours; hens about two-thirds the size. Of the the reptiles, insects, etc., that have come within my observation, the following are a part; snakes, lizards, centipedes, rats, termites, (two kinds, called by the people here bug-a-bugs), ants (two kinds), scorpions, spiders, cockroaches, flies and musquitoes.

The inhabitants of York are composed of old disbanded soldiers, liberated Africans, and Creoles. The soldiers number between sixty and seventy. The great mass of the inhabitants are Africans, liberated from slave ships, and they are from many different nations, but principally from the A-kus, (pro. Arkoos), I-bos, Mendians (or Kossous, as they are called here), and Paw-paws. You will find here almost every variety of character. The prevailing sins of the whole people are licentiousness, indolence, drunkenness, dishonesty, etc., in which the old soldiers are as schoolmasters to the rest. Idolatry prevails to some extent, but I am unable to tell how far. Their language is a mongrel English, and is about as unintelligible to an Englishman or an American as the Dutch or Greek. It seems to be made up of a few English words; many corrupt English and native words thrown into a construction about as dissimilar from the English manner as possible. I shall not be able to discribe very accurately the dress of this people, for there is a great variety from the European style down to almost entire nudity. A very common dress for the men here is a shirt and pantaloons, with the former over the latter. Sometimes the former is dispensed with, but more frequently the latter. I ought to say that an indispensable part of dress for the men, unless they wear pantaloons, is what is called here the Krooman dress, which is simply a handkerchief or peice of cloth tied about the middle. The dress of many of the school boys is a hat and shirt. Often have I seen them, when it rains at the time of their coming out of school, deposit their shirts in the top of their hats, to prevent them from getting wet, and run for home. Another form of dress is the "country cloth," which is about as large as a sheet, and is thrown over the left shoulder, and under the right arm. Sometimes it is doubled together and fastened around the loins, extending downward about half way from the knees to the ankles. Sometimes the "country cloth" is dispensed with, leaving the simple Krooman dress. Another form of dress (if dress it can be called), consists of a belt about the loins, to which is attached in front a strip of cloth four or five inches wide, which passes between the legs over the belt behind. This dress is called by the natives Ta-toon ja, and is their common working dress. The women are very fond of having their arms and breasts naked Often have I seen a handsome European dress thrown from the arms, &c. and hanging from the waist—all above hung entirely naked. A very common dress for the woman is the "country cloth," or a peice of blue cotton wrapped around them under their arm, or more commonly around their waists. This is the least clothing I have ever seen on a married woman. Girls of twelve or fourteen years of age are often seen with a dress very similar to the "Ta-toon ja" of the men, only the belt is a belt of beads, and the strip of cloth is narrow, and sometimes is so long as nearly to touch the ground behind This is a sign that the individual is not betrothed. It is very comcom to see children of both sexes of ten and eight years old and under, in a state of perfect nudity. It is very seldom that you will see little children of a year old and younger with clothes upon them except on the Sabbath It is due from me to say that on the Sabbath I have a congregation of several hundred, all of whom are "well dressed" Sometimes, though seldom, we see a man in the chapel with a "country cloth"

There are, perhas, 12 or 15 framed or stone houses in this place—the best one of which I occupy—the government house excepted. The rest are what are called "country houses." A country house is from fifteen to twenty feet square. They are built by planting posts in the ground about five or six inches diameter, some three feet a part, except when they intend doors, and then they are a little wider. On the top of these posts are laid other round sticks, three or four inches in diameter for plates The top of the posts are cut out, crochet or swallow-tailed, for them to lie in. There are generally six or seven feet left in front for a piazza, and then a partition is run across the other way, cutting off bedroom about eight feet wide. Thus, if the groundwork of a house is twenty feet square, take off a piazza six feet wide and a bedroom the other way eight feet wide, and there will be a room twelve by fourteen feet left. I stop to describe this here, because these partitions have to be made at the same time and in the same way as the wall. After the plates are placed (if plates you please to call them), a beam, a round stick four or five inches in diameter, is thrown across the middle of this framework, supported by two thrown across the other way. Upon this beam, at equal distance from the centre, are fixed two posts, eight or ten feet apart, extending upward as far as they wish the roof to go. The upper ends of these posts are cut out for the reception of the ridge pole. The rafters extend from the plates to this short ridge pole, making a roof all aroud. The rafters are poles two or two and a half inches in diameter, and are about two feet apart on the plates, but coming nearer together on the ridge pole. To these rafters, parallel with the plates, are fastened "ribs," which are poles an inch or less in diameter. They are placed about six or eight inches apart, and are fastened with what they call "ropes," which are simply vines which grow in great abundance in the bush. This framework of a roof is covered with grass. The grass is from four to six feet long, and is fastened to the ribs of the roof by the before mentioned ropes.

A village of these grass-covered houses from an eminence, or from a distance, has the appearance of a vast number of haystacks. The walls are finished in the following manner. A straight stick, about an inch or an inch and a half in diameter, is placed half way between the two posts; sticks long enough to reach from one post to the other, about three-quarters of an inch in diameter, called by the natives "Wartles," are wove in around this stick. They put one end of the wartle inside of one post, bend around outside of the said stick, and bring the other end inside the other post. The next one they put the end of the wartle outside the post, the post carrying it inside the stick and outside the other post. Thus alternately all the way up. In this way it is filled up all the way round, doors and windows excepted. The doors are made of boards, and the windows are simply board shutters. In a house there are generally three doors (one front, one back, and one into the bedroom), and four or five windows. After the house is "wartled," as it is called, and the windows and doors hung, it is then plastered inside and out with clay This morter is mixed with the feet and put on with the hands. After the plastering gets dry it has to be rubbed, as it is called; that is, it has to be done over with a preparation of black clay and cow dung. The walls are now finished. The next thing to attend to, is the floor. This is made by digging up the ground, over which the house stands, and mixing with it clay and water. When at a certain moisture it is levelled and beat down hard. The floor, when finished, is smooth and hard, and, being spread over with clean white sand, has indeed the appearance of neatness. I ought to say that the front that is in front of the piazza, is wartled and plastered only three feet high—all above is left open.

In the native villages, the houses are often of a circular form, the eaves projecting over so as to make a piazza all round; the general furniture of the piazza, as it may be called, is a hammock hung up in one end, in which the lord of the domicil often swings himself and smoke his pipe, a perfect personification of indolence and heedlessness.

On one side of the room, as you enter the dwelling, you will see a sofa; but you must not associate with it the idea of a New York sofa. Far from it. The African sofa is a frame work of wood, about the size and height of a sofa, on which is laid an African mattrass, or a mat, and sometimes a country cloth It serves both for a seat and a bed. On another side of the room you will see a table, and then some three or four or half a dozen benches, or sometimes, not often chairs scattered in different directions, complete the furniture of the room In the middle of the room you will see three or four sticks of wood, with the ends put together, for the purpose of making a fire to keep the inmates warm at the rainy season of the year, when the thermometer stands at 75 degrees. The smoke borne upward, finds its way out through the grass-covered roof

DR. CHALMER'S OPINION OF THE ENGLISH BAPTISTS.—Amidst the obloquy cast upon our denomination by those whom bigotry, prejudice or ignorance has led astray, it is consoling to ourselves to reflect that many "not of us," adorning the denominations to which they respectfully belong, have had sufficient manliness of soul and piety of heart to appreciate the conscientious scruples of the Baptists, and to give them their due meed of praise. One now no more, the glory of Aberdeen, and the enhancer of his country's literary fame, has done honor to the freedom of his mind and the feelings of his heart, by vindicating our views from the aspersions of men more rash than wise—more prejudiced than free. Nor have the literary attainments of the illustrious Chalmers, great as they confessedly are, conferred upon himself so much honor, as has the liberality of sentiment for which he is distinguished. In his work on the Romans, immediately after an elaborate and candid attempt to prove the propriety of infant sprinkling, he thus speaks of those whose views on this point he had just before opposed:—

"Let it never be forgotten of the particular Baptists of England, that they form the denomination of Fuller, and Carey, and Ryland, and Hall, and Foster; that they originated among the greatest of all missionary enterprises; that they have enriched the Christian literature of our country with authorship of the most exalted piety as well as of the first talent, and the first eloquence; that they have waged a noble and successful war with the hydra of Antinomianism; that perhaps there is not a more intellectual community of ministers in our island, or who have put forth to their number a greater amount of mental power and mental activity in the defence and illustration of our common faith; and what is better than all the triumph of genious and understanding who, by their zeal and fidelity and pastoral labor among the congregations which they have reared, have done more to swell the lists of genuine discipleship in the walks of private society—and thus both to uphold and to extend the living Christianity of our nation."—
Montreal Register.

POVERTY.—Poverty is often a torch light, which kindles up an intellectual flame to brighten and beautify the whole world; while the glitter of gold blinds the vision of millions to their best interest, and finally leaves them in hopeless ignorance and disgrace.

PUSEYISM ANALYZED.

The following will be found to be a most lucid statement of the question of Puseyism, made by Dr. Aubigne in the opening of his essay on "Puseyism examined."

At the epoch of the Reformation, if I may so speak, three distinct ears had occurred in the history of the Church.

1. That of Evangelical Christianity, which, having its focus in the times of the Apostles, extend its rays throughout the first and second centuries of the Church.

2. That of Ecclesiastical Catholicism, which, commencing its existence in the third century, reigned till the seventh.

3. That of the Papacy, which reigned from the seventh to the fifteenth century.

Such were the three grand eras in the then past history of the Church; let us see what characterized each one of them. In the first period, the supreme authority was attributed to the revealed Word of God. In the second, it was, according to some, ascribed to the Church as represented by its bishops. In the third, to the Pope. We acknowledge cheerfully that the second of these systems is much superior to the third; but it is inferior to the first! In fact, in the first of these systems it is GOD who rules. In the second, it is MAN. In the third, it is, to speak after the Apostle, "THAT WORKING OF SATAN, with all power, and signs and lying wonders." (2 Thess. 2. 9.)

The Reformation, in abandoning the Papacy, might have returned to the second of these systems, that is, to Ecclesiastical Catholicism; or the first, that is, to Evangelical Christianity.

In returning to the second, it would have made half the way. Ecclesiastical Catholicism is, in effect, a middle system—a via media, as one of the Oxford Doctors has termed it, in a sermon which he has just published. On the one hand, it approaches much to Papacy, for it contains in the germ, all the principles which are there found. On the other, however, it diverges from it, for it rejects the Papacy itself.

The Reformation was not a system of pretended juste milieu. It went the whole way; and rebounding with that force which God gives, it fell, as at one single leap, into the Evangelical Christianity of the Apostles.

But there is now, gentlemen a numerous and powerful party in England, supported even by some Bishops, (whose charges have filled us with astonishment and grief,) which would, according to its adversaries, quit the ground of Evangelical Christianity to plant itself upon that of Ecclesiastical Catholicism, with a marked tendency toward the Papacy; or which, according to what it pretends, would faithfully maintain itself on that hierachical and semi-Romish ground, which is, according to it, the true, native and legitimate foundation of the Church of England. It is this movement which is, from the name of one of its principal chiefs, called Puseyism.

"The task of the true children of the Catholic Church," says the British Critic, (one of the Journals which are the organs of the Oxford party,) is to unprotestantize the Church." "It is necessary," says one of these doctors, "to reject entirely and to anathematize the principal of Protestantism, as being that of heresy, with all its forms, its sects, and its denominations." "It is necessary," says another in his posthumous writings "to hate more and more the Reformation and the Reformers."

In separating the Church from the Reformation, this party pretends to wish not to bring back the Papacy, but to retain the church in the juste milieu of Ecclesiastical Catholicism. However, the fact is not to be disguised, that if it were forced to choose between what it considers two evils, it would greatly prefer Rome to the Reformation. Men highly respectable for their knowledge, their talents and their moral character, are found among these theologians. And let us acknowledge it, the fundamental want which seems to have decided this movement is a legitimate one.

There has been felt in England, in the midst of all the waves which now heave and agitate the Church, a want of antiquity; and men have sought a rock, firm and unmovable, on which to plant their footsteps. This want is founded in human nature; it is also justified by the social and religious state of the present time. I myself thirst for antiquity. But the doctors of Oxford, do they satisfy, for themselves and others, these wants of the age? I am convinced of the contrary. What a juvenile antiquity is that before which these eminent man prostrate themselves! It is the young and inexperienced Christianity of the first ages which they call ancient; it is to the child that they ascribe the authority of the old man. If it be a question respecting the antiquity of humanity, certainly we are more ancient than the Fathers, for we are fifteen or eighteen centuries older than they; it is we who have the light of experience and the maturity of gray hairs. But no; it is not respecting such an antiquity that there can be any question in divine things. The only antiquity to which we hold is that of the "Ancient of days," (Dan. 7. 13,) "of Him who before the mountains were brought forth, or ever He had formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting is God." It is "He who is our refuge from age to age," (Ps. xc. 1, 2.) The truly ancient document to which we appeal is that "Word which is settled forever in Heaven." (Ps. cxix 89,) and "which shall stand forever." (Isaiah 11. 8.) Behold, gentleman, our antiquity.

Alas, that which most afflicts us in the learned doctors of Oxford, is that whilst the people who surround them hunger and thirst after antiquity, they themselves instead of leading them to the ancient testimony of the "Ancient of days," only conduct them to puerile novelties. What novelties in reality, and what faded novelties!—that purgatory, those human pardons, those images, those relics, that invocation of the saints which these doctors would restore to the Church. What immense and monstrous innovation that Rome to which they would have us return!

Who are the innovators, I demand? those who say as we do with the eternal Word: "God hath begotten us of His own will, with the word of truth," (Jas. 1. 18.) or those who say as do the "Tracts for the Times;" "Rome is our mother, it is by her that we have been born to Christ." Those who say as we do, with the eternal Word; "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God," (Heb. 3. 12;) or those who say as do these doctors; "In losing visible union with the Church of Rome, we have lost great privileges," certainly the doctors of Oxford are the innovators.

The partizans of Rome, that grand innovation in Christendom, do not here deceive themselves; they hail in these new doctors advocates of Romish novelties. The famous Romish Doctor Wiseman writes to Lord Shrewsbury: "We can count certainly on a prompt, zealous, and able co-operation to bring the Church of England to obedience to the See of Rome. When I read in their chronological order the writings of the theologians of Oxford, I see in the clearest manner these doctors approximating from day to day our holy Church, both as to doctrine and good will. Our Saints, our Popes, become more and more dear to them; our rites, our ceremonies, and even the festivals of our saints, and our days of fasting, are precious in their eyes, more precious, alas, than in the eyes of many of our own people.

And the doctors of Oxford, notwithstanding their protestations, do they not concur in this view of the matter, when they say "the tendency to Romanism is at bottom only a fruit of the profound desire which the Church, greatly moved, experiences to become again that which the Saviour left her —One."

Such gentleman, is the movement which is taking place in that Church of England, which so many pious men, so many Christian works, have rendered illustrious. Dr. Pusey has had reason to, say in his letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury; "upon the issue of the present struggle depend the destinies of our Church." And it is worth while for us to pause here a few moments, to examine what party we ought to prefer, as members of the ancient Church of the continent, and what we have to do in this grave and solemn crisis.

Gentlemen, we ought to profess frankly that we will have neither the Papacy, nor the via media Ecclesiastical Catholicism, but remain firm upon the foundation of Evangelical Christianity. In what consists this Christianity when it is opposed to the two other systems which we reject!

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, AUGUST 31st, 1843.

THE HERALD AGAIN.

With a degree of diffidence by no means ordinary, and of trembling, that makes our every joint to shake, and of respect altogether inexpressible, and by ourselves alone conceivable, we venture at length into the presence of our patrons and readers, and bowing with the profoundest humility at their feet,—request most humbly, permission to place in the same posture of humility with ourselves, our apology for our long absence and apparent reprehensible taciturnity.

Shut out forever from our heart be the vanity of supposing any thing in either our presence or our voice, that is of itself entitled to regard!! In the above apologetic and precatory paragraph, we took the liberty to turn the eye of our inward man upon that principle in our nature, that renders us uneasy in the absence of whatever we have been accustomed to. Remove the dwarfish son of polar snows from the thundering splash of falling icebergs, and the awful howl of contending elements.—Shut out the idle African from his accustomed lounge on his uncouth cot, to listen to the bellowing surges as they lash the shore and die in lengthened reverberations on the ear; both will be unhappy men: in both there will be an uneasiness, and a vagrancy of mind, which all the concerts and music of europe will be inadequate to calm and to fix. Reverse their positions—while the softer nature of the one will be overwhelmed by the terror of nature's music, the iron soul of the other will turn with uneasiness from the tameness of her accents. The instrument within both is the production of the same creating hand, but they are attuned and adjusted by the circumstances of their position.

This hitherto recondite truism of philosoply, brought to the light of day partly by protracted, painful and intense thought, and partly by collecting into a focus the sickly rays of philosophic light shot by ancient and modern theories and hypotheses across the gloom of scholastic speculation, (and for which nothing but promptness on the part of our subscribers can remunerate us), may afford a clue to that feature in the character of our people, that hitherto has so completely mocked enquiry. We allude (respectfully however, for each one has a legal right to his preferences) to the penchant for lusty preaching—lusty in the sense of noisiness. It is sufficient for all the purposes of a general statement to say, that sense and sentiment will be evermore inversely as the noise. As if concious of inability to reach and fix the mind, or apprehensive of a total absence of mind in those whom they address, these religious stentors seek to produce an effect by rousing the passions and overpowering the brain. Unlike the ancient Pythia whose responses constructed with accurate ambiguity left room to escape from any interpretation, these modern oracles first astound and overwhelmn their auditory, and then leave them in a pleasing revery at the nothing they have said. Both they and their hearers seem to forget, what, if reflected upon would put them to the blush, that if strength and capability of lungs are to enter into the decision, the ass most assuredly will bear away the palm.

We trust we have thus sufficiently precluded the imputation of vanity in apologising for our absence and silence, and in supposing we shall again be welcomed by those who have heretofore cheered us with a cordial greeting. Installed printer to the commonwealth, we have been two months engaged in printing the laws of the colony; which being at length completed, we present ourselves in the presence of our readers and ask their attention.

During the past year or two, we have been frequently diverted (or perhaps more properly, have found it necessary to diverge), from our even course to administer wholesome rebuke to certain clerical officials. These meek teachers of meekness labor under a madening itch for notoriety, and if we have met them on their own ground and kicked them into notice, while they may probably feel sore from the process, they cannot with any modesty complain of the result. We are enjoying an armistice at present—how long it will last events will proclaim. The enemy has gone into winter quarters. He may possibly open the campaign in the spring. We have adopted the peace-principles—but we do'nt go the length of non-resistance. That were downright madness and suicide while these ferocious creatures are about. We remain however within our own dominion, determined at all hazards to keep out invaders, and where the sense of propriety is too feeble to restrain, hearty applications of the foot shall not be wanted to repel.

THE SEASON.

The current season, thus far, has been one of unusual drought. We have not had in any previous year so little rain in the months of June, July and August.

The rain commenced earlier than usual, and the country people were prevented from burning off their farms. Some sages uttered their vaticinations and proclaimed an approaching scarcity. We are happy in having it in our power to tell them, they no peak true. For there is every prospect of carrying a full stomach through the whole year. An old native, a few days ago, in answer to the question, whether "hungry palaver can cum for rice dis rains?" Replied: Hungry can't catch man dis time:—Rice plenty—plenty too much.

INTERNAL IMPOVEMENT.

The spirit of improvement is evidently awaking in the Colony. Irresolution and idleness have had their day. Taught in the school of hunger and destitution, the colonists are rising to life and intently surveying the field around them. The fields white already to harvest, smile around and invite the hand of industry and intelligence. Among the many sources that open for private and national wealth, our peculiar circumstances render it a business of no little difficulty to make a prudent choice and a wise beginning. While these sources are admitted to be as numerous here as in any other country under the sun, it will be admitted also, that our circumstances are different from those of any other people.

We have already chanted the mournful ditty of "different circumstances" and "differently situated," sufficiently long—until, indeed, we have lulled ourselves to sleep in an almost irrecoverable poverty. A stern necessity has at length, swept away this inglorious refuge of lies. That our circumstances are in some particulars different from those of others is admitted—but that they are different in any very important practical degree, is denied, excepting so far as that difference is made by ourselves.

If we are awaking to industry, let us also awake to reflection and calculation. Let us ask—seriously ask ourselves—wherein does this alleged paralyzing "difference" consist. In what do we differ from others? A moments reflection will furnish the answer. It is true, we have no strong arm of a rich government to succour us—to maintain in idleness an army of sycophantic officials—to protect us in depredations on the rich lands, and hard earning of our semibarbarous neighbors. But there were men, before there was a strong arm of government, and these men lived, and ate and enjoyed—and lived and ate and enjoyed by the sweat of their brow—by continual applications to our common mother earth. It was not the desire of assistance to draw treasures from the bowels of the earth, but the want of protection in the enjoyment of treasures already drawn that first suggested the idea of Government.

Admit it that we are abandoned—that we stand alone—that as far as it is possible we are thrown back on the ground occupied by the primeval sons of nature. What is here for endless discouragement. Had they more faculties than we possess? They acted under the guidance of instinct and the prompting of desire, and from wild and solitary wanderers changing their habitations with the change of the seasons, they became permanent and wealthy and polished communities.

Have we not unspeakable advantages over them? Is there no influence in example? In the lessons which the civilized nations of the earth every day—every where and in their every action present us? Refer a colonist to any branch of domestic industry, such for instance, as the cultivation of coffee, or the sugar-cane, or the manufacture of soap—and the ready answer—with the spontaniety of instinct is,—have'nt means to carry on that business! This said, he turns away with perfect composure, and satisfaction at having done his duty:—in expressing his inadequacy in means to do that, on the proper means of doing which he had never given himself a thought!! Here our "different circumstances," (which in every instance should be written and spoken character) come into play and dig the grave of enterprise.

As individual effort is described within narrow limits, so individual means do not ordinarily reach very far. Hence the commercial, agricultural, mechanical and literary associations which are every where found among the wise and experienced Europeans, and their transatlantic descendants. Of a single ship how many owners? and what a number is sometimes found concerned in a little cargo! We read of a certain farm—of a steamboat—a canal—a railway or a manufactory. There the man of millions has his share, and the man of twenty dollars his!! The one or two agents only are seen, but the thousand others are felt. Let the yeomanry and middle class of any country abstract their share of means from the various branches of industry, and all the capital of all the capitalists would be found inadequate to the supply.

This combination of means—this oneness of purpose and concentration of united energies, the dictate of experience, indicate a high degree of confidence and fidelity. Confidence and fidelity are correlatives, and if not inseparably united cannot long exist apart. Fidelity begets confidence, increases and sustains it. Confidence draws man to man—prompts their counsel and imparts energy to their hand. Destroy confidence by repeated recklessness of engagements and obligations, at once the right arm of enterprise is withered.

Whatever may be the cause of distrust and suspicion—whether originating in mean ignorance and selfishness, or resulting from repeated disappointment, the consequences will be the same—an isolated, and therefore enervated action of the hand of industry in all the various branches of its effort. That distrust has prevailed amongst us to a fearful extent, none can deny, but we leave others to determine in which of the above sources it has origin.

Here then are the "different circumstances." While others unite their capital—combine their energies, mingle their counsel and concentrate all with a single heart upon a single object, we filled with dark suspicion, each of the other, seperate as widely as possible apart, and determine to essay only that, to which, we have infallible assurance beforehand, our individual feebleness is adequate. This is the curse under which the colony has been withering. Our misfortune hast not sprung up from the earth, no more than it came down from the sky—it was born in our suspicious and jealous hearts and nursed in our ignorant heads. But for this, and instead of the little moscheto marine that now steals its fortnight voyage along the shore and returns with its few barrels of oil, gallant and lofty ships burdened with coffee, and sugar, and cotton, the work of our hands would already be crowding into the ports of Europe and America.

It is to be hoped that the evil has at length become apparent to all; and as there are indications of a rising to honorable exertion, let us also awake to reflection, and select wisely not only the most profitable field, but also the most advantageous mode of operation.

Hereafter (if none more capable will) we may attempt to point out specifically, how our alleged poverty may be made to produce all the effects of capital and our feebleness to perform feats of wondor.

Once and forever, let us abandon the theory of "difference of circumstances!" Let our motto be "union is strength." Let us abandon our jealousy and suspicions. Let us come together and consult, and let our consultations be the echo of ingenuous and candid hearts. And while we will be always alive to the hand of sympathy or patronage, let us never again cast an inglorious look abroad: but with a humble and confident heart uplifted to heaven, let us direct an unwearied hand and undiverted eye to the fertile lands and smiling forest, that every where invite us. Let us combine our energies, and then let each one put forth all the energy that he would if confident that upon him alone success depended.

TRADE.

Trade is tolerably brisk at present; and the traders all vigilance to secure the benefit. Camwood in considerable quanties has been coming by the way of Millsburg. Observation led us to believe that our friends are doing well there. As we too, are fond of doing well, we have sought a place among them, and have opened an establishment just above White Plains. There are now four establishments there: Mr. C. Willis, Mr. Mc Gill, Rev. Mr. Wilson of the White Plains Manuel Labor School, and our humble self.

At Length.—The new Court House has at last approximated so near the point of completion as to be conveniently occupied.

The court of common pleas and quarter sessions held its recent term there. Directly after assembing of the court, the structure was dedicated and the divine blessing invoked by the Rev. James Eden, of the Presbyterian Church. It is for Liberia, a respectable structure—conveniently arranged and contrived in the interior, for the purpose for which it was intended, and reflects great credit upon the Governor, by whose exertions and directions it is built. The walls are of stone—coarse granite. The lower floor where the court is held is paved with brick—four respectable columns support the second floor. The second story is now being partitioned into jury rooms, and other apartments for public purposes. May it ever prove the home of Justice, and the refuge of innocence.

Just in the rear a commodious stone jail is being erected, and we trust it will soon be ready for use; for notwithstanding we are as honest as our neighbors, such an article is very much needed to our list of public appliances. Let the rouges look out.

We have read with much pleasure the report presented by Mr. Kennedy, of the committee on commerce, to the House of Representatives. It is an able document, and embraces many important topics, deserving the attention of the United States, or of any other government.

However busy the affairs of the different nations of Europe may keep their respective rulers; and however extensive their foreign possessions may be, recent events on this coast and late developments in the Islands of the Pacific, too plainly declare they are still avaricious of territory.

The commerce of Africa is increasing, and her vast resources rapidly opening. Superabundance of capital in the commercial world will assuredly seek employment in this new and unexplored field. The effect will be to develop and bring to light the hidden treasures of this vast peninsula. Once manifest and there will be a general rush upon all the most prominent and advantageous posts. Nothing in the past affords grounds for hope that our appeal will be heard, or our rights respected amid the din and war for commercial ascendency, which will then take place. It behooves us now while the primitive forests sleep undisturbed upon the soil, and the hidden treasures lie concealed in the earth—while there is nothing apparent in our position, nor in our possession to provoke jealousy, nor excite cupidity—while whatever may be granted, would seem simply a response to the beseechings of helplessness, to obtain a recognition of a right to undisturbed possession of, and sovereign, and independent jurisdiction over whatever territory we may by fair and honorable treaty obtain from the natives.

Two methods for accomplishing this end present themselves. We shall not undertake to say now which is entitled to the earliest adoption. The first is, by direct application to christian powers—the second by such an alliance with some friendly power that would secure us its influence and support. At the last mentioned of these, it is but justice to ourselves to say, we have more than once hinted in the Herald, and explicitly stated it in a letter not long since, to an eminent and tried friend of African Colonization in America. It is with heartfelt pleasure, therefore we find the measure recommended in the report. It may not be immediately acted upon, but the mere agitation of the question, its simple presence before the public mind heralds a movement of immense and abiding moment to our colonies.

Stockings. The stocking mania is raging at present In almost every house, and at every point one is met by the nimble finger and dodging needle worrying, and winding hapless thread into all sorts stockings, black, blue, gray, white and grizzled. This is decidedly an improvement—decidedly more profitable than the idle, but polite gossep in which ladies every where (Liberia excepted) are fond of indulging. What is still more remarkable, we were the other day presented by a lady with a pair of socks, the product of her own hands. Surely they are the gentlest hands—the fairest hands, and like the gift the softest hands in all Liberia!

UNITED STATES SHIP SARATOGA.

On the first inst. the United States Ship Saratoga, arrived in our harbor. She is at the present the flag ship, bearing the pennant of Commodore Perry, who commands the Squadron. She is a new vessel, of superior model and construction.

PROCLAMATION.

To all whom it may concern:

WHEREAS the Legislative Council of Liberia, at its last Session, made provision for the compilation of all the laws of the Commonwealth in one volume:—And whereas the same have been faithfully compiled and published, and may be obtained at the office of the Colonial Secretay:

Therefore be it known by all, and it is hereby proclaimed, that from and after this date, said compilation is the law of this Commonwealth: and all legal proceedings must be had in conformity with the rules there laid down.

All officers, civil and military, and all good citizens are required and expected to demean themselves accordingly,

Done at Monrovia this 22nd, Day of August, A. D. 1843.

By the Governor,
J. J. ROBERTS.

JOHN N. LEWIS,
Colonial Secretary.

THE SARATOGA.

This beautiful vessel is the first of an entirely new class of vessels of the American Navy. She measures about 1000 tons, and mounts 20 guns, 6 Paixhan 64 pounders, and 14 Medium 32 pounders, all of which are furnished with a large supply of shells, as well as shot.

She is a corvette or single decked ship of about the same length as a 2nd, class frigate, and has a complement of about 230, officers included. She is fitted with a poop and top gallant forecastle, and has gangways about 6 feet wide, made with grating and covered with tarpaulin, serving as a fine shelter for the men in this climate.—Her sailing qualities are supposed to be extraordinay, and in her late encounter with a tremendous gale, she proved herself a most gallant sea-boat.

It will be remembered she was caught in a gale just after leaving Portsmouth, N. H, and embayed in a dangerous situation—she carried sail for more than 24 hours, until the water came in 5 or 6 feet on the lee-side of her deck and would have weathered the point but for an error of the pilot, as the sea broke in seven fathoms water, he mistook the place for a dangerous shoal some miles to leeward. The only alternative was thought to be in bringing her to anchor, which was done in a most gallant and seamanlike style by Commander Tattnall—her masts were all cut away as she rounded to—her anchors all let go, and she rode safely in the heaviest sea that has been seen on the coast of America for many years.—Com.

UNITED STATES BRIG PORPOISE.

List of the officers on board the United States Brig Porpoise, arrived on the 27th. August, from a cruize, all well.

Lieut. Commanding H. S. Stellwagen. Lieutenants, Geo. L. Selden, Geo. W. Chapman. Acting Master, M. G. Watkins. Assistant Surgeon, Geo. Maulsby. Purser, Robert Pettit. Midshipmen, Beverly Randolph, Geo. M. Dibble, J. B. Stewart, J. M. Ford. Captain's Clerk, Arthur Lewis Jr.; Purser's Steward, Henry O. Baker.—Com.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

REMARKS ON THINKING.

The government of the thoughts is the regulation of the whole man, both as to temper and conduct. This observation is authorized by the Bible precept, "keep thy heart with all dilligence, for out of it are the issues of life;" that is, the conduct will be in accordance with the moral character of the thoughts. Hence the importance of guarding the mind from every polluting imagination. Purity of thought is of great moment, because it will constitute a large portion of our happiness in the future life. Dr. Young, in a single line, has given us valuable advice, as weighty as the thought of our immortality:

"Consult thy whole existance and be safe.,,

Discrimination, or the habit of separating and examining the several parts of a proposition, is a valuable auxiliary to thought. Paul, who was an accurate scholar in this science, made much use of it in his letters to the churches and in his preaching. By it he manifested his tact in illustrating a truth, the beauty of which consisted much in making his thought intelligible to common sense. We see a pleasing instance of this in his epistle to the Galatians. Certain Judaizing preachers had endeavored to impose upon them the erroneous opinion, that their salvation was dependent on the observance of circumcision and the rites of Mosaic dispensation. This was teaching a method of forgiveness and justification, contrary to what Paul had taught them in his preaching. To illustrate the absurdity of the new theory of the false teachers, he invited them to consider a fact of their own consciousness in their conversion to the faith of Christ. His words are: "This only would I learn of you, received ye the Spirit, by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" It is as if he had said, was it by the merit of your own works that ye first believed the gospel, or by the unmerit-grace communicated in the renovation of your hearts by the Holy Spirit? Here is discrimination levelled to the common capacity. Another instance of his discriminating talent in illustrating, was manifested in his conversation with the Athenians respecting the nature of the Divine existence. He showed them the absurdity of idol worship by citing a fact asserted by one of their own poets, that we are the offspring of God. "Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device." Here was demonstration from a confession of their own, which all acknowledged to be correct. If we would think correctly, let us imitate the appostle by making a careful use of his discriminating talent. Let us use it in the examination of our own hearts, and in reference to the question, whether we have any true knowledge of vital religion. This is a work which we must attend to ourselves; no one can do it for us. If we neglect our duty in this manner, the remembrance of this omission will be our regret in all eternity.

ANECDOTE.

In a town of western Virginia, a few years ago, an old lady from the country went to a store to procure a few articles, She purchased several of the clerk, and at length, observing a neatly painted and varnished bellows hanging by the post, she inquired what it was. The clerk, perceiving that the old lady was rather ignorant, and being something of a wag, informed her that it was a new-fashioned fan, which he had lately received from the east; at the same time taking the bellows down and puffing with it in his face, told her that was the mode of operation. The old woman repeated the operation on herself, and was so delighted with the new fan, that she purchased it forthwith and departed.

On the next day, the minister had an appointment to preach at a neighboring schoolhouse in the country. The congregation being assembled, while the minister was in the act of reading the first hymn, who should pop in but the old lady with her new-fashioned fan, and having taken her seat, immediately commenced puffing away in good earnest! The congregation knew not what to make of it—some smiled, and some looked astonished; but the ludicrous prevailed over every thing else, and to such an extent, that the minister himself was obliged to stop reading, and hand the book to his brother in the desk. After the usual preliminary services, he rose to preach, but there sat the old lady with the bellows, and a hand hold of each handle, the nose turned up toward her face, and with much self-complacency puffing the gentle breeze in her face. What to do, or how to proceed, he knew not, for he could not cast his eyes over the congregation without meeting with the old lady. At length, summoning resolution, and trying to feel the solemnity of the duty imposed on him, he proceeded. He finished his discourse, but it cost him, more effort than any sermon before or since.—Mt. Vernon Watchman.

THE OMNIPRESENCE OF LAW.

I was riding at midnight, with no companion but the mail driver, through a somewhat lonely region, where for mile after mile we did not pass a human habitation, or see a living thing. The night was dark and dreary; not a star glimmered through the thick drapery of clouds, yet I could perceive by the faint light of the lamps, that we sometimes passed through gloomy woods, and then upon the brink of some frightful precipice. "A fit time and place," thought I, "for the perpetration of some foul crime, if my unknown companion was so disposed. How is it that I feel so much at ease under such circumstances? This man is an utter stranger to me; but my impressions of his character thus far, are by no means favorable. I know that he is in some degree under the influence of liquor; I have heard him utter the most shocking oaths, and I saw him fighting at the last post. Why is it that I am not afraid? I have no means of defence, and he might fell me to the earth with a blow; yet I am quite sure that he will do me no harm." What gave me this confidence? I felt, indeed, that I was under the protection of an overruling Providence; but I knew that he thought little and cared less about the law of God.

There was another influence, unseen, yet felt, that guarded me. There, in the silence of the midnight hour, the arm of law encircled me. On the wings of the wind, from the debth of the forest, came the stern voice of a watchful and powerful public sentiment, bidding the most desperate and hardened villian, beware! That arm could shield me from the assassin, that voice could make him tremble. I was in a land where the blood of the murderer does not cry in vain; where death speedily, almost inevitably overtakes the murderer.—Would I have felt so much at ease, think you, if the penalty of murder had been some trivial fine, or light imprisonment? Would I have put myself so completely in the power of a stranger and a ruffian? Just so much as you diminish the penalty of murder, so much do you diminish the security of individuals. There is something sublime in the idea that the law is the guardian of the weak and defenceless, every where present, restraining the passions of the most abandoned of our race. You can lie down at night, safe from the incendiary and the assassin, because the law is like a bulwark round your dwelling. But lessen the penalty for atrocious crimes, and deeds of violence will be multiplied.* You open the floodgates of iniquity, and strong must be the bolts and bars that will shut the tide out of your habitation—Rev. J. P. Thompson on Capital Punishment.

*I have known a drunkard to hold an axe over his wife's head, and tell her that nothing but the law saved her life. That he would kill her in a moment, if he was not afraid that he shold have to swing for it. Will you rob that lonely and wretched mother of the only protection for herself and children? Will you take away from that brutal husband the fear of death, which as he says is all that restrains him from crime? Is that the spirit of Christ? Abolish this penalty, and how many families will be butchered! How many streams of innocent blood will flow over the land!

WHENCE COME GREAT MEN?

The extracts which follow are from a Lecture, delivered by Rev. N. Murry, of Elizabethtown, N. J. before the Young Men's Association in Troy. The subject of the lecture was, the duties of young men, resulting from the privileges which they enjoy in this age and nation.

Sir Edward Saunders, chief justice of England in the reign of Charles the Second, was once a poor beggar boy strolling about the streets, without any knowledge of his parentage. Sir Thomas Greescham, who, under the patronage of Elizabeth became the founder of the Royal Exchange in London, was the son of a poor woman, who, while he was an infant, abandoned him in the fields. And his life was preserved by the chirping of a grasshopper, which attracted a little boy to the place where he lay. Nicholas Saunderson, the celebrated mathematician, lost his sight when he was a year old, by the small pox. Assisted by his friends he pursued his studies. He became lecturer on optics in Cambridge; he was the bosom friend of Newton; he was elected professor of mathematics; and is one of the most acute and learned commentators of the Principia. Our own Hamilton was the office boy and runner of his early patron. William Jones, friend of Madison and Jefferson, once Secretary of the Navy, and first President of the United States Bank, served his apprenticeship to a Ship-builder.

You have all read of the Sexton's son, who became a fine astrsnomer by spending a short time every evening in gazing on the stars after ringing the bell for nine o'clock. Sir William Phipps, who at the age of forty-five had attained the order of knighthood, and the office of high sheriff of New England, and governor of Massachusetts, learned to read and to write after his eighteenth year, and whilst learning the trade of a ship-carpenter in Boston. William Gifford, the great editor of the Quarterly, was an apprentice to a shoe-maker, and spent his leisure hours in study. And because he had neither pen nor paper, slate nor pencil, he wrought out his problems on smooth leather with a blunted awl. David Rittenhouse, the American astronomer, when a plough-boy, was observed to have covered his plough and the fences with figures and calculations. James Forgurson, the great Scotch astronomer, learned to read by himself, and mastered the elements of astronomy whilst a shepherd's boy, in the fields by night. And perhaps it is too much to say, that if the hours wasted in idle comaany, in vain conversation, at the tarnern, were only spent in the pursuits of useful knowledge, the dullest apprentice in any of your shops, might became an intelligent member of society, and a fit candidate for most of your civil offices. By such a course, the rough covering of many a youth might be laid aside; and their ideas, instead of being confined to local subjects and professional technicalties, might range throughout the wide fields of creation; and other stars from the young men of this city might be added to that bright constellation of worthies that is gilding our country with a bright, yet mellow light.

"I BLACK MY OWN BOOTS."

We were a few days ago auditors of the conversation, somewhat of the following import. Said a brother to one, the praise of whose devoted and self-denying liberality, is in the churches:—

"How do you manage in these hard times, and after such serious losses, still to give such large sums for purposes of benevolence."

"I used to give a dollar a month to have my boots blacked," was the reply. "I black my own boots, and save twelve dollars a year for missions."

This was one instance, of probably many, where former expences had been retrenched, that contributions to advance Christ's kingdom might not be diminished. How many are there, now complaining that so embarrassed are their circumstances, so curtailed their income, that they can not give liberally to sustain and spread the gospel, who might greatly increase the amount of their donations by a little extra industry, or a little self-denying retrenchment. Look about you, brethren, and find some amount, now unnecessarily expended, that can be saved for the treasury of the Lord.—Baptist Record.

SMALL BEGINNINGS.

It is related in the Gentleman's Magazine, of Chauntry, the celebrated sculptor, that when a boy, he mas observed by a gentleman in the neighborhood of Sheffield, very attentively engaged in cutting a stick with a pen-knife. He asked the lad what he was doing; when with great simplicity of manner, but with great courtesy, he replied, "I am cutting old Fox's head." Fox was the schoolmaster of the village. On this the gentleman asked to see what he had done, and pronouncing it to be an excellent likeness, presented him with a sixpence; and this may be reckoned the first money Chauntry ever received for the production of his art.

This anecdote is but one of a thousand that might be cited of as many different men, who, from small beginnings, rose to great stations and influence; and shows the importance of not despising the day of small things, in any condition or circumstances of life. All nature in fact, is full of instructive lessons on this point—which it would be well for us more thoroughly to study and appreciate.

BRIGHT CRYSTAL WATER.

WRITTEN ON THE OCCASION OF A TEMPERANCE FESTIVAL,

BY J. W CORSON, M. D.

AIR—"From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

Bright crystal water breaking
From mossy rock or hill,
Like spirits' whispers waking
The murmurs of the rill;
Thy clouds and dews nurse flowers
Decked like an eastern queen,
And give the woods and bowers
Their robes of smiling green.

Thou mak'st the bloom of roses
Rest on the healthy cheek;
The laughing eye discloses
The joys that need not speak,
Friends thou hast never parted—
Pure product of the sky,
Nor left the broken-hearted
To pine away and die.

Come, sweet as morning breezes,
Refresh the lowly laid;
Come, cool the heat that seizes
The lips and fevered head.
Go, banish the distresses
Of wanderers faint and thirst;—
Where Afric's sun oppresses,
Let streams and fountains burst.

'Mid Arab deserts weary
The drooping camels stand;
No tents or palm-trees cheery
Bespot the burning sand.
O, worse than death by slaughter,—
The pilgrims on the plain;—
There is no living water
To bring to life again.

O Thou, who gav'st the ocean,
Whose treasure makes us blest,
And bears the ships in motion
Far o'er its mighty breast,—
We bless thee for thy mountains,
That water all the plain,
Thy pleasant brooks and fountains,
And rivers to the main.

Thy wine that tunes the sweetness
Of wild birds in their song,
And gives the deer its fleetness
That bounds the plains along—
We drink, and feel no madness
Steal wildly o'er the brain,—
And without pain or sadness
We drink—and drink again.

A SONG FOR ONE WHO NEVER SUNG.

By the Rev. S. R. Brown, a Missionary in China.

1. My harp, a tuneless, shattered thing,
That knows no song,
Swings silently without a string,
On willows hung.
The weeping boughs have gently shed
Their tears upon my drooping head,
And drenched my dewy grassy head,
The flowers among.
But Flora wastes her gayest bloom,
Her choicest hues and her perfume;
She cannot dissipate the gloom;
My harp's unstrung.

2. The little birds that flutter so
From tree to tree
Sing merrily, and never know
'Tis naught to me.
The fragrant zephrys pass me by
In silence as I sadly lie,
And never hear their breathing sigh,
What's that to me?
When thunders shake the solid ground,
I feel the shock but hear no sound,
Only lightning leaping round,
That I can see.

3. Yes, I can see, and I shall sing,
Who never sung.
Soon shall I have a seraph's wing,
And tuneful tongue.
Soon shall I range the happy plains,
Where God is praised in angel strains,
As free from sin as free from pains,
And ever young.
Be still, ye murmuring thoughts that rise,
Here pay your silent sacrifice,
God will restore me in those skies
A harp gold strung.

MADE OF ONE BLOOD.

"It is manifest, from the history of our race, that the human species are capable of being elevated or depressed, according to the condition in which they are placed, and the estimation in which they are held, to an almost infinite degree. The process by which this change is wrought, is ordinarily slow, but if it be long continued, the height or depth to which we rise or fall, is amazing. A striking illustration of this remark will be found in the following extract from Walsh's "Notices of Brazil," to which we may add the historical fact, that the Britons, whose position is now the most elevated of any nation upon earth, some little time previous to the commencement of the Christian era, were thought to be too stupid for slaves. Cicero advised his friend Atticus not to obtain his slaves from Britian, "because they are so stupid, so utterly incapable of thought, that they are unfit to form a part of the household of Atticus."

Here is the Alfandaga, or custom house, and here, for the first time, I saw the colored population under circumstances so striking to a stranger.

The whole labor of bearing and moving burdens is performed by these people, and the state in which they appear is revolting to humanity. Here a number of beings entirely naked, with the exception of a covering of dirty rags tied about their waists. Their skins, from constant exposure to the weather, had become hard, crusty, and seamed, resembling the coarse black covering of some beast, or like that of an elephant, a wrinkled hide scattered with scanty hairs. On contemplating their persons, you saw them with a physical organization, resembling beings of a grade below the rank of man; long projecting heels, the gastronimic muscle wanting, and no calves to their legs; their mouths and chins protruded, their noses flat, their foreheads retiring, having exactly the head and legs of the baboon tribe. Some of these beings were yoked to drays, on which they dragged heavy burdens. Some were chained by the necks and legs, and moved with loads thus encumbered. Some followed each other in ranks, with heavy weights on their heads, chattering the most inarticulate and dismal cadence as they moved along. Some were munching young sugar canes like beasts of burden eating green provender, and some were seen near the water, lying on the bare ground among filth and offal, coiled up like dogs, and seeming to expect or require no more comfort or accommodation, exhibiting a state and conformation so unhuman, that they not only seemed but actualy were, far below the inferior animals, around them. Horses and mules were not employed in this way; they were used only for pleasure, and not labor. They were seen in the same streets, pampered, sprited, and richly caparisoned, enjoying a state far superior to these beings, and appearing to look down on the fettered and burdened wretches they were passing, as on beings of an inferior rank in the creation to themselves. Some of these people actually seemed to envy the caparisons of their fellow brutes, and eyed with jealousy their glitteriog harness. In imitation of this finery, they were fond of thrums of many colored threads; and I saw one creature, who supported the squalid rag that wrapped his waist by a suspender of gaudy worsted, which he turned every moment to look at, on his naked shoulder. The greater number, however, were as unconscious of any covering for use or ornament, as a pig, or an ass.

The first impression of all this on my mind, was to shake the conviction I had always felt, of the wrong and hardship inflicted on our black fellow-creatures, and that they were only in that state which God and nature had assigned them; that they were the lowest grade of human existence, and the link that connected it with the brute, and that the gradation was so insensible, and their natures so intermingled, that it was impossible to tell where one had terminated and the other commenced; and that it was not surprising that people who contemplated them every day, so formed, so employed, and so degraded, should forget their claims to that rank in the scale of beings, in which modern philanthropists are so anxious to place them. I did not at the moment myself recollect, that the white man, made a slave on the coast of Africa, suffers not only a similar mental, but physical deterioration from hardships and emaciation, and becomes in time the dull and deformed beast, I now see yoked to a burden.

A few hours only were necessary to correct my first impressions of the colored population, by seeing them under a different aspect. We were attracted by the sound of military music, and found it proceeded from a regiment drawn up in one of the streets, Their Colonel had just died, and they attended to form a procession to celebrate his obsequies. They were all of different shades of black, but the majority were negroes. The equipment was excellent: they wore dark jackets, white pantaloons and black leather caps and belts, all which, with their arms, were in high order. Their band produced sweet and agreeable music, of the leader's own composition, and the men went through some evolutions with regularity and dexterity. They were only a milita regiment, yet were as well appointed and disciplined as one of our regiments of the line. Here then was the first step in that gradation, by which the black population of this country ascend in the scale of humanity; he advances from the state below that of a beast of burden, into a military rank, and he shows himself as capable of discipline and improvement, as a human being of any other color.

Our attention was next attracted by black men and women, bearing about a variety of articles for sale; some in baskets, some on boards and cases carried on their heads. They belonged to a class of small shop-keepers, many of whom vend their wares at home, but the greater number send them about in this way, as in itinerant shops. A few of these people were still in a state of bondage, and brought a certain sum every evening to their owners, as the produce of their daily labor. But a large proportion, I was informed, were free, and exercised this little calling on their own account. They were all very neat and clean in their persons, and had a decorum and sense of respectability about them, superior to wmes of the same class and calling. All their articles were good in their kind, and neatly kept, and they sold them with simplicity and confidence, neither wishing to take advantage of others, nor suspect that it would be taken of themselves. I bought some confectionary of one of the females, and I was struck with the modesty and propriety of her manner; she was a young mother, and had with her a neatly dressed child, of which she seemed very fond. I gave it a little comfort, and it truned up its dusky countenance to her, and then to me, taking my sweetmeat and at the same time kissing my hand. As yet unacquainted with the coin of the country, I had none that was current about me, and was leaving the articles; but the poor young woman pressed them on me with a ready confidence, repeating in broken Portuguese, outo tempo. I am sorry to say, the "other time" never came, for I could not recognize her person afterwards to discharge her little debt, though I went to the same place for the purpose.

It soon began to grow dark, and I was attracted by a number of persons bearing large lighted wax tapers, like torches, gathering before a house. As I passed by, one was put into my hand by a man, who seemed in some authority, and I was requested to fall into a procession that was forming. It was the preparation for a funeral, and on such occasions, I learned that they always request the attendance of a passing stranger, and feel hurt if they are refused. I joined the party, and proceeded with them to a neighboring church. When we entered we ranged ourselves on each side of a platform which stood near the choir, on which was laid an open coffin, covered with pink silk and gold borders. The funeral service was chanted by a choir of priests, one of whom was a negro, a large comely man, whose jet black visage formed a strong and striking contrast to his white vestments. He seemed to perform his part with a decorum and sense of solemnity, which I did not observe in his brethren. After scattering flowers on the coffin, and fumigating it with incense, they returned, the procession dispersed, and we retured on board.

I had been but a few hours on shore, for the first time, and I saw an African man under four aspects of society; and it appeared to me that in every one his character depended on the state in which he was placed, and the estimation in which he was held. As a despised slave, he was far lower than other animals of burden that surrounded him; more miserable in his look, more revolting in his nakedness, more distorted in his person, and apparently more deficient in intellect than the horses and mules that passed him by. Advanced to the grade of a soldier, he was clean and neat in his person, amenable to discipline, expert at his exercises, and showed the port and bearing of a white man similarly placed. As a citizen he was remarkable for the respectability of his appearance, and the decorum of his manners in the rank assigned him; and as a priest, standing in the house of God, appointed to instruct society on their most important interest, and in a grade in which moral and intellectual fitness is required, and a certain degree of superiority is expected, he seemed even more devout in his impressions, and more correct in his manners, than his white associates. I came therefore to the irresistable conclusion in my mind, that color was an accident affecting the surface of a man, and having no more to do with his qualities than his clothes—that God had equally created an African in the image of his person, and equally given him an immortal soul; and that an European had no extent but in his own cupidity, for impiously thrusting his fellow men from that rank in the creation which the Almighty had assigned him, and degrading him below the lot of the brute beast that perish.

Age of the European Sovereigns, on the first of January, 1843.—The King of Sweeden, 79 years; the Pope 77; King of the French, 69; the King of Wurtemburg, 61; the King of Bavaria, 56; the King of Denmark, 56; the King of Sardinia, 51; the King of the Belgians, 53; the King of Prussia, 43; the King of Saxony, 45; the King of the two Sicilies, 33; the King of the Greeks, 27; the Queen of Portugal, 24; the Queen of England, 23; the Sultan, 19, and lastly, Isabella of Spain, 12 years.—Ibid.

OIL OF TANNIN OR LEATHER PRESERVER.—This newly discovered composition will positively render boots or shoes perfectly water proof. Those who regard comfort and convenience will dispense with over shoes and procure a bottle of this article, and rub that they can walk through snow or water without an Indian rubber shoe, and yet have perfectly dry feet. Sold only at 71 Maiden lane, by the gallon or single bottle.—Journal of Commerce.

BACKSLIDING.

The soul that is brought to taste of the joys of salvation, is hard to believe that those joys can ever be lost. But generally, before one fleeting year has rolled its round, he finds himself sadly mistaken. His zeal for God has abated—his love grown cold—his hope diminished—and a dark cloud overspreads the horizon, and shuts out from the eye of faith the glories of the upper world, and excludes that sweet communion which his soul once had with his precious Saviour. He soon learns that others have experienced the same feelings, and therefore he folds his arms, and sits down contented, pleading the excuse, "It must be so." This state of dormancy often continues for years, and the same excuse answers for the whole.

There is no doubt but a change will and must take place in the feelings of a young convert. But it need not, and should not be that which we have described above. In the new birth, it is said, "old things are passed away—behold all things are become new." We have new hopes, new desires; our affections are placed on new objects; we see ourselves, and God and the plan of salvation in a new light; we are thrown into the company of new associates, and we are engaged in new exercises. Now there is a kind of novelty connected with these new feelings, just as there is arising from every thing else that is new, that will soon subside. Take for an example a newly married couple: Every expression of the countenance is observed; every lisp is heard, every action is noticed, and moments of separation seem like so many tedious hours. Cast your eye upon them ten years after. And if their choice has been judicious, and their union a happy one—if they are persons worthy of esteem, do you suppose that they have lost their affection for each other! The novelty of their feeling has passed away, but they have settled down in a more fixed, stable, and abiding attachment than they had at first. He sees now more of the virtue and excellence, and is now sensible of the real worth of his companion than on the bridal day. So with the young christian. While he looses necessarily the novelty of feeling, he sees more of the infinite perfection of the Saviour, his affections settle down in a more abiding attachment, and he becomes more nearly wedded to his Saviour every day he thus lives.

B. C. MORSE.

ORIGIN OF THE WORD GOD.

Noah Webster, the celebrated American Lexicographer and philologist, wrote a volume of Essays in the year 1780, in which among other subjects discussed, there is a dissertation "on the influence of language on opinions and of opinions on language." The design of the Essay, is to show how far truth and accuracy on thinking are concerned in a clear understanding of words. As an illustration, he introduced the word God.

"The English word God, is merely the old Saxon adjective god, now spelt and pronounced good. The German Gott, is from the same root. The words God and good, therefore, are synonymous. The derivation of the word, leads us to the notions which our ancestors entertained of the Supreme Being: supposing him to be the principle, or author of good, they called him by way of eminence God, or the Good. By long use and progress of knowledge, the word is become the name of the Great Creator, and we have added to it ideas of other attributes, as justice, power, immutability, &c. Had our heathen ancestors entertained different ideas of the Deity; had they for instance, supposed justice to have been his leading attribute, if I may use the term, they would have called him the just, and his appellation, by being uniformly appropriated to a certain invisible being, or supposed cause of certain events, would in time have lost the article THE, and JUST would have become the NAME of the Deity. Such is the influence of opinion in the formation of language.

The theory of Dr. Webster is not more beautiful than true. Goodness comprehends the whole moral character, there is nothing in God, which is not good. Good, therefore, or God, which is the same word, is the appropriate name of the Deity. To call the Just, the Wise, the Merciful, the Eternal, the Almighty, expresses only one attribute out of many; while the Good embodies the whole. God is just; but his justice is not in conflict with goodness; it is only an exhibition of goodness under a certain modification; as the parent is good when he corrects his stubborn child, and the government in punishing seditions subjects; even should the correction and punishment result in no good to the individuals upon whom they are inflicted, the good of the parent and government remain unimpeached; indeed to withhold the correction and punishment would be regarded by all, save the culprits, as the most marked violation of goodness—as absolutely wrong. Goodness is amiable; but no more so than justice; both seek the same end; both are directed by the same; and the mercy of God is not worthy of more complacency than his holiness; both must be loved, and be equally loved, before God can be truly loved.

This view of the character of God and the harmony of the divine attributes, is sustained both by the experience of awakened sinners and the representations of the scriptures. Before the convicted sinner finds peace for his troubled spirit, he is obliged "to consent to the law, that it is holy, just, and good," he must see the justice of God in his condemnation, as well as his mercy in the provision made for his salvation. In the Revelation, the wicked are represented as "calling upon the rocks and the mountains to fall upon them, and cover them from the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." The wrath, or justice of the Saviour, therefore, is not incompatible with the lamb like, or merciful attributes of his character: he who is gentle as a lamb inflicts wrath, or punishment, as a judge. The redeemed also are represented as exclaiming, when the impenitent are removed to their eternal prison-house. "True and righteous are all thy ways, O thou King of saints," and as crying, Alleluia! the Lord omnipotent reigneth! when the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever."

Universalism would call God the Merciful, but not the Just: it would call him the Good, provided goodness could be separated from holiness. But he is called God, because he is both merciful and just, and justice is only a modification of goodness. The great error of Universalism, is its denial of the divine holiness and justice; and the question of the salvation of those who embrace it, turns upon another, whether they can be saved who approve the divine mercy, but abhor the divine justice; who worship for their God a creature of the imagination, a mere figment of fancy, instead of the God of the Bible.—Baptist Banner.

END OF THE APOSTLES.

Matthew.—This apostle and evangelist is supposed to have suffered martyrdom, or was slain with a sword at the city of Ethiopia,

Mark.—This evangelist was dragged through the streets of Alexandria, in Egypt, until he expired.

Luke.—This evangelist was hanged upon an olive-tree in Greece.

John.—This apostle and evangelist was put into a cauldron of boiling oil, at Rome, and escaped death. He afterwards died a natural death at Ephesus, in Asia.

Peter.—This apostle was crucified at Rome, with his head downwards, at his own request, thinking himself unworthy to die in the same posture and manner as his blessed Master.

James, the Great.—This apostle was beheaded at Jerusalem.

James, the Less.—This apostle was thrown from a pinnacle, or wing of the Temple, and then beaten to death with a fuller's club.

Philip.—This apostle was hanged up against a pillar at Hierapolis, a city of Phrygia.

Bartholomew.—This apostle was flayed alive by the command of a barbarous king.

Andrew.—This apostle was bound to a cross, whence he preached to the people till he expired.

Thomas.—This apostle was ran through the body with a lance, at Coromandel, in the East Indies.

Jude.—This apostle was shot to death with arrows.

Simon—Zealot.—This apostle was crucified in Persia.

Mathias.—This apostle was first stoned, and then beheaded.

Barnabas.—This apostle of the Gentiles was stoned to death by the Jews, at Salania.

Paul.—This apostle was beheaded at Rome, by the tyrant Nero.—Ibid.

INDULGENCES.

1517—1518.

A GREAT agitation reigned, at that time, among the people of Germany. The Church had opened a vast market on the earth. Judging from the crowd of buyers, and the noise and jests of the dealers, we might call it a fair; but a fair held by monks. The merchandise they extolled, offering it at a reduced price, was, said they, the salvation of souls!

The dealers passed through the country in a gay carriage, escorted by three horsemen, in great state, and spending freely. One might have thought it some dignitary on a royal progress, with his attendants and officers, and not a common dealer, or a begging monk. When the procession approached a town, a messenger waited on the magistrate: "The grace of God, and of the Holy Father, is at your gates!" said the envoy. Instantly every thing was in motion in the place. The clergy, the priests, the nuns, the council, the school-masters, the trades, with their flags,—men and women, young and old, went forth to meet the merchants, with lighted tapers in their hands, advancing to the sound of music, and of all the bells of the place; "so that," says an historian, "they could not have given a grander welcome to God himself." Salutations being exchanged, the whole procession moved toward the church. The pontiff's bull of grace was borne in front, on a velvet cushion, or on cloth of gold. The chief vender of indulgences followed, supporting a large red wooden cross; and the whole procession moved in this manner, amidst singing, prayers, and the smoke of incense. The sound of organs, and a concert of instruments, received the monkish dealer and his attendants into the church. The cross he bore with him was erected in front of the altar: on it was hung the Pope's arms; and, as long as it remained there, the clergy of the place, the penitentiaries, and the sub-commissioners, with white wands in their hands, came every day after vespers, or before the salutation, to do homage to it. This great bustle excited a lively sensation in the quiet towns of Germany.

As soon as the cross was elevated with the Pope's arms suspended upon it, Tetzel ascended the pulpit, and, with a bold tone, began, in the presence of the crowd whom the ceremony had drawn to the sacred spot, to exalt the efficacy of indulgences. The people listened and wondered at the admirable virtues ascribed to them. A Jesuit historian says himself, in speaking of the Dominician friars whom Tetzel had associated with him:—"Some of these preachers did not fail, as usual, to distort their subject, and so to exaggerate the value of the indulgences as to lead the people to believe that, as soon as they gave their money, they were certain of salvation and of the deliverance of souls from purgatory."

If such were the pupils, we may imagine what lengths the master went. Let us hear one of these harangues, pronounced after the erection of the cross.

"Indulgences," said he, "are the most precious and sublime of God's gifts.

"This cross"—(pointing to the red cross)—"has as much efficacy as the cross of Jesus Christ.

"Draw near, and I will give you letters, duly sealed, by which even the sins you shall hereafter desire to commit shall be all forgiven you.

"I would not exchange my privileges for those of Saint Peter in heaven, for I have saved more souls with my indulgences than he with his sermons

"There is no sin so great that the indulgence cannot remit it, and even if any one should, (which is doubtless impossible) ravish the Holy Virgin Mother of God, let him pay,—let him only pay largely, and it shall be forgiven him.

"Even repentance is not indispensable.

"But more than all this: indulgences save not the living alone, they also save the dead.

"Ye priests, ye nobles, ye tradesmeu, ye wives, ye maidens, and ye young men hearken to your departed parents and friends, who cry to you from the bottomless abyss: 'We are enduring horrible torment! a small alms would deliver us;—you can give it, and will not!'"

A shudder ran through his hearers at these words, uttered by the formidable voice of the mountebank monk.

"The very moment," continued Tetzel, "that the money clinks against the bottom of the chest, the soul escapes from purgatory and flies free to heaven.

"O, senseless people, and almost like to beasts, who do not comprehend the grace so richly offered! This day, heaven is on all sides open. Do you now refuse to enter? When then do you intend to come in? This day you may redeem many souls. Dull and heedless man, with ten groschen you can deliver your father from purgatory, and you are so ungrateful that you will not rescue him. In the day of judgment, my conscience will be clear; but you will be punished the more severely for neglecting so great salvation. I protest that though you should have only one coat, you ought to strip it off and sell it, to purchase this grace. Our Lord God no longer deals with us as God. He has given all power to the Pope!"

Then, having recourse to other inducements:—"Do you know why our most Holy Lord distributes so rich a grace? The dilapidated Church of St. Peter and St. Paul is to be restored, so as to be unparalleled in the whole earth. That church contains the bodies of the holy apostles, Peter and Paul, and a vast company of martyrs. Those sacred bodies, owing to the present condition of the edifice, are now, alas! continually trodden, flooded, polluted, dishonored, and rotting in rain and hail. Ah! shall those holy ashes be suffered to remain degraded in the mire?"

This touch of description never failed to produce an impression on many hearers. There was an eager desire to aid poor Leo X who had not the means of sheltering from the rain the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul!

The speaker proceeded to declaim against the disputers who should question, and the traitors who should oppose his mission:—"I declare them all excommunicated!"

Then turning to the docile souls among his hearers, and impiously perverting the Scriture: "Blessed," said he, "blessed are the eyes that see what you see, for I tell you that many prophets and many kings have desired to see the things which ye see, and have not seen them, and to hear the things which ye hear, and have not heard them." And as a finish to his address, pointing to the strong box in which the money was received, he generally concluded his moving discourse by thrice calling on the people: "Bring your money! bring money! bring money!" "He uttered this cry with such a dreadful bellowing," observed Luther, "that one might have thought some wild bull was rushing among the people and horning them with his horns" The moment he had made an end, he came down the steps of the pulpit, ran towards the strong box, and in sight of all the people, threw in a peice of silver with a loud sound.

Such were the discourses that Germany heard with astonishment, in the days when God was preparing Luther.

The sermon ended, the indulgence was considered as having "established its throne in the place with due solemnity." Confessionals, surmounted with the Pope's arms, were prepared The sub-commissioners and confessors chosen were held to represent the apostolic penitentiaries, or absolving priests of Rome, at the period of a great jubilee; and on each of their confessionals were inscribed their names and titles.

Then the people came in crowds to the confessors. They came not with contrite hearts, but with money in their hands. Men, women, the young, the poor, and those who lived by alms,—every one then found money. The absolving priest, after again setting forth the indulgence, thus addressed the penitents: "How much money can you, in your conscience, spare to obtain so perfect a remission?" "This question," said the Archbishop of Mentz, in his instructions to the commissioners, "must be put at the moment, in order that the penitents may be better disposed to contribute."

These conditions fulfilled were all that was necessary. In the Pope's bull, something was indeed said of the repentence of the heart and confession of the lips; but Tetzel and his companions cautiously abstained from all mention of these; otherwise their coffers might have remained empty. The archiepiscopal instructions forbade even to mention conversion or contrition. Three great benefits were proclaimed. It is sufficient to notice the first. "The first benefit we announce," said the commissioners, acting on their instructions, "is the complete pardon of all sins; and it is not possible to speak of any greater benefit than this, since man who lives in sin is deprived of the divine favour, and by this complete pardon he recovers the grace of God. Now we affirm, that to obtain these great blessings, it is only necessary to purchase an indulgence. And as to those who desire to deliver souls from purgatory, and to procure for them the forgiveness of all their sins, let them put their money in the chest; but it is not needful that they should feel sorrow of heart, or make confession with the lips. Let them only hasten to bring their money, for they will thus do a work most profitable to departed souls, and to the building of the Church of St. Peter." Greater blessings could not be proposed, nor at a lower cost.

Confession being gone through, (and it was soon dispatched,) the faithful hastened to the vender. Only one was commissioned to sell. He had his counter close to the cross. He turned a scrutinising glance on those who came. He examined their manner, step, and attire, and demanded a sum in proportion to the apparent circumstances of the party presenting himself. Kings, queens, princes, archbishops, bishops, &c. were to pay, according to the regulation, for an ordinary indulgence, twenty five ducats; abbots, counts, barons, &c. ten. The other nobles, superiors, and all who had an anual income of 500 florins, were to pay six. Those who had an income of 200 florins, one; the rest, half a florin And further, if this scale could not in every instance be observed, full power was given to the apostolic commissary, and the whole might be arranged according to the dictates of sound reason, and the generosity of the giver. For particular sins Tetzel had a private scale. Polygamy cost six ducats; sacrilege and purjury, nine ducats; murder, eight; witchcraft, two. Samson, who carried on in Switzerland the same traffic as Tetzel in Germany, had rather a different scale. He charged for infanticide four livres tournois; for a parricide or fratricide, one ducat.

The apostolic commissaries sometimes encountered difficulties in their commerce It often happened, as well in the towns as in the villages, that husbands were opposed to the traffic, and forbade their wives to carry any thing to the dealers. What were heir superstitious partners to do? "Have you not your marriage portion, or some other property, at your disposal?" asked the vendors. "In that case you can dispose of it for this holy purpose, without your husband's consent."

The hand that delivered the indulgence could not receive the money: that was forbidden under the severest penalties;—there was good reason to fear that hand might not always be trustworthy. The penitent was himself to drop the price of his pardon into the chest. An angry look was cast on those who dared to close their purses.

If, among those who pressed into the confessionals, there came one whose crimes had been public, and yet untouched by the civil laws, such person was obliged, first of all, to do public penance. He was conducted to a chapel, or sacristy; there he was stripped of his clothes, his shoes taken off his feet, and he left in his shirt They made him fold his arms upon his breast, placed a light in one hand, and a wax taper in the other. Then the penitent walked at the head of the procession, which passed to the red cross. He kneeled till the singing and the collect were concluded; then the commissary gave out the psalm, "Miserere mei." The confessors immediately approached the penitent, and led him across the station towards the commissary, who, taking the rod, and striking him thrice gently on the back, said: "God take pity on thee, and pardon thy sin!" After this, he gave out the Kyrie eleison, &c. Then the penitent being led back, and placed before the cross, the confessor pronounced the apostolical absolution, and declared him reinstated in the company of the faithful. Wretched mummeries, concluded by a passage of Scripture, which, at such a time, was a profanation!

We will give one of these letters of absolution. It is worth while to know the contents of these diplomas, which gave occasion to the Reformation.

"Our Lord Jesus Christ have mercy on thee, "N. N., and absolve thee by the merits of his "most holy sufferings! And I, in virtue of the "apostolic power committed to me, absolve "thee from all ecclesiastical censures, judgments, "and penalties that you mayst have merited; "and further, from all excesses, sins, and crimes "that thou mayst have committed, however "great and enormous they may be, and of what-"ever kind,—even though they should be re-"served to our holy father the Pope, and to the "Apostolic See. I efface all the stains of weak-"ness, and all traces of the shame that thou "mayst have drawn upon thyself by such ac-"tions I remit the pains thou wouldst have "had to endure in purgatory. I receive thee "again to the sacraments of the Church. I "hereby reincorporate thee in the communion "of the saints, and restore thee to the innocence "and purity of thy baptism; so that, at the mo-"ment of death, the gate of the place of torment "shall be shut against thee, and the gate of the "paradise of joy shall be opened unto thee. "And if thou shouldst live long, this grace con-"tinueth unchangeable, till the time of thy end.

"In the name of the Father, of the Son, and "of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

In this document, we see with what art presumptuous and false doctrines were interspersed among sacred and Christian expressions

All the faithful were to come and confess in the spot where the red cross was set up. None but the sick, old men, and women with child, were exempt. SOAP MAKING.

Much difficulty is often experienced by those who manufacture their own soap; frequently indeed the operation succeeds well, but some times it totally fails from unknown causes. Often when every precaution has been apparently taken, complete failure has been the consequence; and the time is not long past when some have even declared that they believed their soap was bewitched. But if the rationale on which the process is founded, is but understood, the whole becomes simple, and easy; and may be performed with an absolute certainty of success.

Common soft soap is composed of oil (or fat) and potash. The potash is obtained from common wood ashes, by causing water to run through it, which dissolves the potash contained in the ashes, and leaves the residue behind. The manner by which the oil or grease is obtained is well known. These are made to unite and form soap by being boiled and well stired together.

One of the first requisites in soap making is that there should be a sufficient quantity of potash dissolved in the water, or in other words, that the ley should be strong: this is readily ascertained by an egg; if the egg floats the ley is sufficiently strong; if it sinks, it is too weak, and must be increased in strength by evaporating a part of the water by boiling, or by passing it again through ashes.

But it not unfrequently happens that the ley is found by trial to be strong, and yet good soap cannot be produced. This is almost always owing to the potash of the ley not being caustic, or capable of corroding the skin, which state is absolutely necessary to success. Potash in its purest state is highly caustic; but where ashes have been some time exposed to the air, they gradually absorb from it a portion of the peculiar kind of air existing in small proportions in it, known by the name of carbonic acid, which destroys the caustic properties of the potash and renders it unfit for the manufacture of soap. Now as quick lime has a stronger attraction for carbonic acid than potash has, it is only necessary to place a quantity of lime, in the proportion of half a bushel of lime for a hogshead of good ashes, in the bottom of the leech before filling it, and it will abstract the carbonic acid from the potash of the ley, as it passes downward, leaving it in a comparatively pure and caustic state. In order to prevent failure therefore, this should always be done. In order to ascertain if ley, contains carbonic acid, pour a few drops of sulphuric or nitric acid into a wine glass of the ley, when if it contains much, a violent effervescence, (or boiling up of bubbles) will instantly take place, owing to the escape of the carbonic acid. The carbonic acid may be removed from the ley by boiling it with quick lime.

If the ley be strong, if it be rendered caustic, and if there be a sufficient quantity of tolerably clean fat, there can be but little danger of success. The proportions should be about thirty pounds of fat to eight or ten gallons of ley.

Hard soap consists of soda instead of potash, united with fat; and is commonly made by adding common salt (which consists of muriatic acid and soda,) to well made soft soap, while it is yet boiling. The soda of salt unites with the fat, and forms hard soap, while the potash unites with the muriatic acid of the salt, and separates by falling to the bottom of the vessel.* Different degree of hardness in soaps are obtained by using potash and soda, at the same time in different proportions. Hence grease from salt meat has a tendency to increase the hardness of soap, unless the salt be previously removed by boiling in water.

*Eight pounds of soft soap made with olive oil, are, by boiling two hours with 6 lbs of common salt, turned into 5 lbs. of hard soap; the great loss of weight is occasioned chiefly by the water of the soft soap.

From the Public Ledger.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—According to the latest accounts, the British Government have taken possession of these islands, and will probably retain them; for we believe that history mentions no case in which this government invaded a country without intending to keep it. To express any surprise at the criminality of this lawless act would be needless; for a government that could undertake the Chinese war, could entertain no conscientious scruples against such a gross outrage upon an innocent and unoffending people. It is precisely what we might expect of a government which acknowledges no other object than interest, no other law than force. But in addition to the common practice of this government, of robbing other nations at every convenient opportunity, we have another reason for believing that it intends to keep the Sandwich Islands. It wants them for a naval station, to aid their designs upon the Oregon Territory. We must remember that the right to this "disputed territory" was not relinquished by the British Government by the Treaty of Washington, and that this government has long had its eyes upon the whole Northwest coast, including California. The Sandwich Islands are about sixteen hundred miles westward of the mouth of Columbia River, or about half of the distance between England and the United States across the Atlantic. At this distance, would it be useful as a naval station? Steamships cross the Atlantic between the two countries in twelve days, and therefore they could pass between the Sandwich Islands and the Oregon Territory in six or seven. They might also be useful for prosecuting further designs against China, from which they are distant about three thousand miles. For what could the British Government want with them, excepting as a naval station in the Pacific, like Malta in the Mediterranean, for the annoyance of other nations? But whatever be the object of this capture, we may be assured of a design in the British Government to retain them; for the shallow pretence for the capture is hardly sufficient for the cost of an expedition for a temporary possession. This pretence is that the government of the Sandwich Islands refused to recognize as consul, without first hearing from the British Government, a Mr. Simpson, who had rendered himself peculiarly offensive by his insolence, a trait of character very common among subordinate British functionaries abroad. And this recognition was refused after the former consul, Mr. Charlton, had absconded from the country in debt to a large amount, having delegated his authority to this insolent Mr. Simpson. Such are the accounts published in the papers of New Orleans.

The outrage upon an unoffending people, as much entitled to national independence as the people of England, is a gross outrage upon the laws of nations; and as such it effects all civilized nations, while, from its peculiar character, it directly affects the French, the Russians, and ourselves. As a crime against the laws of nations, it diminishes the security of every people. The Sandwich Islanders are as independent, and as much entitled to independence, as any nation on the earth. Then if the British Government may deprive them of their independence, why may it not assail that of Holland, or Denmark, or any other small State, in the same manner? We shall be told that this would not be allowed, because it would be inconsistent with the policy of nations. What is the meaning of this diplomatic phrase? Simply that conquest, by rendering one nation powerful, puts others in danger. And does the theatre of the conquest, the State conquered, make any difference? If such lawless aggressions are opposed on this ground, as they certainly should be, the Sandwich Islands presents a very strong case for remonstrance; and therefore we should be well pleased to see all the States of Continental Europe joining in a protest against the deed, and a demand of their evacuation by British power. It is too late for the argument once common among European nations, and sanctioned by papal decrees, that these islanders may be despoiled of their national independence because they are not Christians, or not civilized. In this age, the laws of nations exclude no faiths, and acknowledge the rights of humanity as universal, and paramount to all others. Upon the second point, we say that the right of nationality does not depend on degrees of civilization, and that if it did, these islanders would have the advantage over the Greeks and Turks, various tribes of the Austrian empire, the majority of the Russian empire, over some districts of Ireland, some provinces of Spain, Texas, Mexico, and all the South American nations. According to all accounts, they are civilized, converted to Christianity, and are a prosperous and happy people.

But besides affecting all nations generally, by this gross violation of a fundamental right, the right of nationality, this seizure of the Sandwich Islands especially effects France, Russia, ourselves. It effects France by the power which it will give the British of restraining farther French colonization in the Pacific Ocean. The French have seized the Marquesas, of all the Polynesian islands, the nearest to the Sandwich group. We have no justification to offer for this French seizure; though as the inhabitants of the Marquesas are entirely savage, and will be improved by French domination, while those of the Sandwich Islands are already civilized, and will certainly be corrupted by British rule, the French violation of nationality will not be so mischievous to mankind as the British. But as the French, in seizing the Marquesas, intended to obtain a location in the Pacific, and to extend their conquests there, they will regard this British seizure with jealousy, and will probably protest against it. If the British should meet their complaints by quoting their seizure of the Marquesas, they can rejoin by quoting the British seizures of New Holland and New Zealand, and urging that their right to conquer islands from savages is equal to that of the British. The Russians will not wish to have a British naval station so near their colonies on the Northwest coast; especially as it would annoy their commerce in the Pacific in a war with Britain. They may feel quite as safe in having the Sandwich Islands independent. Here then are grounds of dispute between Britain and both of these nations; and should they remonstrate against the seizure, the British people may not think the Sandwich Islands worth a war with either, which would certainly end in a war with both. But we have an interest in the case. Many of our citizens are settled in those islands, and transact an extensive business in the cultivation of sugar and the sale of American manufactures, especially cotton. During the last year, the exports from the United States to those islands exceeded $250,000. They are the resort of our whale ships in the Pacific, between fifty and a hundred visiting them annually. They are also the resort of American vessels bound to and from India and China round Cape Horn, and probably two hundred American vessels visit them annually. Several American vessels are owned by residents of the Islands, and the direct trade between them and the United States is rapidly increasing; and besides sugar, they produce sandal wood, which is exported to China, where, on account of its fragrance in burning, it is much used in religious rites.

Ever since American missionaries and merchants have settled in these islands, the improvement of the natives in civilization has been constant and rapid. But their fate under British rule is certain. An eminent writer says that Spanish colonization always began with a church, French with a fort, and English with a rum shop. Here are the priest, the soldier, the trader, and in his worst guise, the trader in vice; here are superstition, force, and corruption. The Spaniard preserves but debases, the Frenchman subdues but civilizes, the Englishman corrupts and exterminates. We prefer the French mode, and leave the Spaniard and the Englishman to settle their claims to superiority; but whichever be the best, the British will do with the Sandwich Islanders as they have done with the same race every where, especially in the United States and in Canada, kill them gradually, though rapidly, by corruption. In this view of the case, every philanthropist ought to protest against a British conquest of those islands. But leaving this question, their importance to American trade in the Pacific, annually increasing, is a sufficient reason with us for insisting upon their independence; and therefore we trust that our Government will unite with those of the France and Russia in decisive remonstrances against this British occupation. The British nation will not incur a war with either, and much less with the three, for the sake of the Sandwich Islands.

COMMUNICATION.

SUPREMACY OF THE POWER OF THE LIBERIA DISCIPLIE, TO THAT OF THE DISCIPLINE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR:—I improve the present evening, to redeem the pledge, which I made at the close of my last communication to you, on the subject of the supremacy of the Liberia Discipline. I stated there and then, that I would send you some further explanations of the doings of our last quarterly conference, in connection with some further remarks on Mr. C's. malignant head, in the Luminary of Jan. 4th. First; Our last quarterly conference, was one of peculiar interest to us all. I was interested to know where, and in what, such strange and unheard of proceedings would end.

My enemies were anxious, and interested to accomplish what they had been aiming at, lest their future attempts should appear malicious, and their maliciousness betray their want of christianity. It is no wonder that Mr. C. should feel a deep stirring interest, in as much as his unmanly and ungodly conversation and conduct, had gone to America before him, and that sooner, or later he must meet it, "where," unless he could totally destroy my character, he knew he must bear an undeniable reproach forever.—But if he has purged his character to any great extent, by proceeding as he has against me, then he is perfectly welcome to his purity.

And in order to accomplish this all important object, Mr. C. played the same game at the last conference, as at the first. But here, he aimed at another object. There, his object was, to establish his slander; as he calls it. And here, to establish me a liar. Nothing can be more evident than this, by the manner in which he proceeded. He, nor any other person, ever came to me, to inquire, how, why, or whether those things were so; nor ask for any explanation or reconciliation concerning those charges, whatever. And exclusive of several other circumstances, the fact, of his bringing witnesses with him, who owned in conference, that they came on purpose for witnesses; the fact of his frank declaration, that there should be no testimony but his and mine, and then turning immediately around and calling on his witnesses to bear testimony, as heretofore stated, are attestations brighter than sun-beams, that he took this sneaking, ungodly advantage to prove me a liar. Mr. C. well knew, that if I was permitted to have witnesses on that case, that I should have proved, that he told three different stories of our conversation in his chamber at the time this difficulty took place, all differing materially from that which he told in conference.

Mr. C. learned more and more, that such language and treatment was not becoming for a man in his station. I went to him peacably. I made no demand, but presented my account against the mission, for him to inspect and digest. But he protested the whole of it, told me I lied, called me a black scoundrel, he would give me what I wanted, and then turned me out doors. And as I have before stated, I was under the necessity of repeating his own words in public. Mr. C. soon felt the stigma, and flew at once to his only, and last resort; which was, to make the repetition of his own words, slander, and then to prove the slanderer a general liar, which, he foolishly imagined, would very much help to patch up the breach. I say foolishly, for be my person never so black, and my character never so mean all this could not lessen his crime in this case, if in any other. For when Mr. C. told me I lied, he told a palpable falsehood. Now if Mr. C., or any of the board of missions of the M. E. Church, in America, or elsewhere, can, or will produce a petition of my own hand writing, in which I applied for $150 to buy books, furniture, tools, to bear my expenses into the interior, to buy land, and to build me a house thereon; then I hereby authorize the world, fully and freely to believe all that Mr. C. has published against me, or may hereafter say, or publish against me, to be the truth and nothing but the truth; and that all which I have published to be lies, and nothing but lies. At my first trial, as I am informed by several of the members of that conference Mr. C. told them, that I applied for $150 for the above purposes. But at our last conference Mr. C. said, I applied for $100 for the above purposes, but the board granted $150, and ordered him to pay it, but to pay no more. But he acknowledged that he had not paid it, because it had not been called for.—It would have been a very convenient time to have, paid the $150 at the time he protested my account. In my communication to you of March 7th, there were three charges presented against me, exclusive of the slander; the journal, slavery, and cannibalism. I will now present the 4th, and last, on which Mr. C. pretended to procure any testimony.

Mr. C. says Mr. B. has reported, that when he went to Golah, he made arrangement with King Yardoo, for the establishment of a mission there, and that he had bought all of Yardoo's territory. But said he, I have been there myself, and found old Yardoo a poor old, worthless fellow, not having one foot of land to dispose of; nor did they ever give B. any liberty or authority to establish any school, or mission in their country, nor did they even know Brown. Now I shall presently show that Mr. C. in presenting this as a charge, at the time and in the manner as he did, has proved his total lack of all piety, justice judgment and truth.

But, that this subject may be presented in its true light, you will permet me, first to say, that the disposition of those natives, is well known to all, who have ever been in the habit of going into the interior and dealing with them. For as they are on the sea coast, so are they in the interior. For instance; an English trader comes along, and buys a certain line of coast of the natives for a trading establishment, &c. But if an American, or a Spaniard, comes along a few months after, and offers them a dash of a little rum, tobacco, or powder, I appeal to all who are acquainted with those natives, if they do not think, that the natives would say they knew nothing of any Englishman. (Go to Bassa Cove &c.)

Now the circumstances of buying Yardoo's territory are as follows:—When I introduced the subject of establishing a mission in the Golah country, I also introduced the subject of buying land for a mission farm. And when the kings delivered their message to me, they spake, in its proper place of my buying land! King Yardoo said, you have no need of buying land for your business; but if you have a mind to give us a little dash, we will accept it. But said he, if you only want land for God's side, to raise produce on, and learn our boys to work like Americans, then make your farm where you like; &c, as stated in the Luminary of May, 18th, 1842. and to which I especially refer the reader.

Nor did I ever say, or report to any one, that I had bought the original right of the soil, as Mr. C. arrogantly pretends. Nor did I wish to buy it. All we wanted or needed, was, a right, to carry out our opperations fully, and without giving offence. And this right I did obtain, through the anticipation of a dash, which I gave them to their full satisfaction. And I considered this right, as not only buying, but far better than buying.

But, it is no matter what King Yardoo, Ballasada or any other man told Mr. C. about this business, when he went to Golah: for there is one stubborn fact, in the midst of it all, by which Mr. C. in bringing this as a charge, as he did, has exposed his true character.

Now concerning this fact, let my hitherto warm admirers in America, whom Mr. C. speaks of, in his Luminary, ask Mr. C. the following questions.

Did Brown, and Simon Peter, or did they not accompany Ballasada into your chamber, on the 7th July, 1842? (Yes.) What was Balla's business? He came to see whether I was going to send Brown to Golah or not. (Yes.) Did Balla say, that if Brown did not come to his country according to previous arrangment, all his people would be shamed by others*? (Yes.) Did you ask Balla to build a house for Brown? (Yes.) Did he say that he would build it? (Yes.) Well, did you, or did you not, ask Balla to give you, or Mrs. Wilkins at Millsburg, some girls to be taught in her school? (Yes.) And what was Balla's answer? Balla said, that all the children in his country belonged to Brown; but he would put the girls into Browns hands, and Brown might put them into her hand, if he pleased. (Yes.) Did Balla dine at the same time and table with you that day? (Yes.) Well did you, or did you not, on the strength of what Balla said, concerning Brown's going to Golah, order two new axes, from the public store, to be given to Balla, for the express purpose of cutting out a path for Brown and his family to go to Golah? (O yes &c.)

Now these are matters of fact, and if Mr. C. denies any of them, then let the above inquirers inform me, and will I present Ballasada, the colonial store keeper, his books, and the young gentleman, who bore the order, and delivered the axes to Ballasada, all before any conference or authority, before whom the inquirer may require me, and there prove the whole dialogue as above stated. Again, it is neither probable nor possible, that Mr. C. should or could so far forget this day-light circumstance, that he could, conscientiously, or innocently present such a charge as this, let Yardoo or Ballasada have told him whatever they might. For he could not avoid the discovery, that if there was a lie any where, it must have been in Ballasada. And if Ballasada told C. a different story in the country, from what he told him at Monrovia, then why did not C. bring his charge against Ballasada, rather than against me? evidently! because this was his hour; and it made no difference with C. whether I had lied or not, if he could but get something to match, or cover his infamous, rough, sailor language.—"You lie you black scoundrel, I will give you what you want; out of my house."

But this is Mr. C's. true character, and the true character of all his charges.

As to Mr. C's. character he has fully qualified and established it in his report in the Luminary above mentioned, under his head of malignity; where he writes as follows:—but to give it extension where he has had a good reputation on account of, either real or supposed good done by him in the missionary cause, and where from extraneous circumstances, more credit than was his just due, may have been awarded him, &c. &c. Now if his passage has any meaning at all, and if it has any connection with the foregoing and following parts of the paragraph, then it cannot be explained into any thing less, than an expression of bold, presumptuous blasphemy. For after all the reports of the Rev. John Seys, and Rev. W. H. Taylor, and a host of others, who have been eye, ear, and heart witnesses, and have all reported publicly, and as one man, of the work of God and the Holy-Ghost, to which work Mr. C. evidently refers: nor has there ever been one contradictory word published against those witnesses, even by other denominations, until Mr. C. rose up (like the creature mentioned in the Revelation of St. John, 12, and 3rd,) and calls it supposed good. And says more credit than was his just due has been awarded. He may tuck in as many pronouns (him) as he pleases, or as many (may haves) as he likes, they neither modify the doctrine, nor meliorate the principle. Mr. C. evidently intends to instruct his readers, that the reports of the above witnesses were all false, or only pretensions, and that the church have given too much glory to God. For Mr. C. refers to the work, for which the church have been honoring God, through the reports of the above mentioned witnesses.

What did the blasphemous Jews say in former days, more than Mr. C. in the latter? Or what more could they say?

And where is Mr. C's. piety, justice, judgment, or truth?

But Mr. C. undoubtedly intended to have the passage answer two important ends. First, to publish something against me, to match his profligate language, and secondly, to publish something to screen himself from the atrocious disgrace of reducing the mission as he has. For he has extinguished nearly every ornament which graced the mission. The expulsion of the native and orphan children at Cape Palmas, Hedington, and Caldwell, has stripped the mission of nearly all that renders it worthy to be called a mission. And, where, in any one place, has he made any improvement.

Never did a saul of Tarsus spread a blacker gloom over the primitive Church, than Mr. C. cast over the Church in Liberia, for the whole of last year.

But he has left the field, and gone to America: and what is his business there?—Why he has gone there to get witnesses, to prove that I never saw a human sacrifice in Africa, that the natives never told me that formerly they had sacrificed all their first born sons to the devil, and that, before I last visited America, I had never been any farther into the interior than Hedington; if so far, as that.

Now the arrangment, is for Mr. C. to travel all about the country, cities, and villages, where I went when I last visited America, and to inquire in what manner, and how I represented things in Africa, and gether up all the affidavits he can, concerning these matters, send them over to Africa and bring the black scoundrel to trial again.

But as it will be a laborious job for Mr. C. to visit all the congregations which I addressed, and at a great expense too, I should think it best, to request all the editors in the Northern States, to publish Mr. C's important business, in all their news-papers, requesting all the congregations which I addressed, that in case Mr. C. does not call on them for their testimony, to write affidavits and send them to Mr. C. But let them write as I told them; not as Mr. C. wishes to have them: for he wants the people to say, that I told them, that the natives sacrificed their children now, as much as ever; but I told the people, that human sacrifices were now done away, as far as we could hear of in all directions. Mr. C. wants the people to say, that I told them, that I had seen all the first born sons in Africa sacrificed to the devil; but I told the people, that the natives told me, that this was their former practice. Mr. C. wishes the people to say, that I told them, that I had visited King Yardoo's Town, before I last visited America. Well; do tell Mr. C., whether I said so or not; and try to help the dear man out of his perplexity. For he takes it for granted, that if I had never been to Yardoo's or Captain Sam's Town, I had never visited any town in the Golah country. Mr. C. thinks he has visited the whole golah country, because he went to Yardoo's.

Now if Mr. C., or any other man in Liberia, or any other place, had any doubts of any thing, which I have done, said, or reported, concerning any, or all of those charges, then why have they not like men; if not christians, come to me in some civil or legal manner, and requested, or required me, to give them some explanation or reconciliation concerning them. But not one person of any rank or class, has ever spoken one word of inquiry to me on those subjects, directly or indirectly, even to the present day, excepting in conference. This is something peculiarly astonishing.—Yes, I challenge Mr. C., and all the rest of my enemies to show wherein they have taken one step in all this difficulty, according to the discipline of the M. E. Church.

It was for this cause only, that I withdrew from their church. They have totally departed from the discipline of the church, to which I belonged. And had I have been led by them farther, I must have departed too; and thus have consented to be governed, by & to fellowship a church totally degenerated from Methodism. Hence I came out from them, because I was not of them, by any means.

For look at their own proceedings, and see if there is a parallel in any history in the world. And as I have challenged Mr. C., and all the rest of my enemies, to show one step which they have taken, in all this pernicious strife, according to the rules, or usages, of the discipline of the M. E. Church; I therefore conclude, there is no necessity of enumerating the comparison of the Power and Supremacy of the Liberia Discipline, with that of the Discipline of the M. E. Church: For that a new form of church government is in vogue in Liberia, is too manifest to need any argument.

You will hear from me again before long.

Respectfully Yours &c.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, SEPTEMBER 30th, 1843.

Heathen Customs. There is a striking similarity in the domestic and social customs and habits of all uncivilized nations. This is especially the case in the condition of woman. wherever a people is little advanced in civilization, the lot of the female is hard. In Africa they are regarded as servants—instruments of pleasure and profit. Not only are they subjected to domestic drudgery—but at regular seasons compelled to the severe tasks of the field, exposed to the full blaze of the sun while their ungallant lords are enjoying the threefold luxury of the shade, a hammock and a pipe. Their tasks however are not always unpleasant to themselves nor without interest to those who witness them.

When the fountain, as is often the case, is situated at a distance from the hamlet, the business of conveying water is made an occasion of gossip and recreation. The usual time of watering is in the cool of the morning or afternoon. They usually go in companies—threading their narrow and tortuous paths in indian file—enlivening the solitariness of the way by sprightly conversation or inspiring song. Occasionally they form their party about noon and start for the brook. They first fill their vessels and deposit them near by. Afterward they descend a small distance below the place where the water is taken, and bury their bodies in the refreshing stream. They carry the water in vessels on their head, poised with an accuracy, that leaves their arms and hands at perfect liberty—while a green branch immersed in the water prevents it from splashing.

Women are sometimes made instruments of the most disgusting and revolting avarice. An unprincipled husband will prompt an illicit intercourse between his wife and some man upon whose purse he designs. When the affair is ripe for explosion, a pretended suspicion will demand a trial by ordeal, when the woman pretending fear will break the palaver, and thus subject the ensnared watch to a heavy fine if not to perpetual slavery. Of course the guilty husband to save appearances must vent his indignation against his incontinent partner. She will probably be condemned to a shaved head and rustication for a month in some half town, whence she will return pleased at having contributed to the wishes of her lord.

Tender Mercies of Heathenism. A friend recently from the Gallenas related to us the following fact which not long ago occurred there. Following out the acknowledged truth that great men can't die, but by foul or rash means—directly after the demise of King Shakah whose death we noticed at the time, a secret inquisition was set on foot to ferret out the witch-man. For a long time the search was fruitless; at length a gregree man by continued incantations, and daring diabolic communications succeeded, and the hapless regicide was brought to light. Confronted with his accuser, he protested he was innocent—the doctor protested he was guilty. and the all discovering ordeal was resorted to, to decide the question. Of course the man was condemned to die, and as King Shakah was big king too much—the severity of the punishment was proportioned to the dignity of the deceased. Sentence was pronounced and thus executed—the man was taken to the mouth of the river—his tongue cut out, and he thrown alive to the sharks that infest the place.

This ordeal is a most powerful engine of state policy in Africa. It is the right arm of an African monarch. He has only to keep on terms with the doctors or gregree men who are the constituted inquisitors, and nothing is easier than to rid himself at any time of a dangerous or aspiring subject. Whether the ordeal be the sasse water, the boiling oil, or the heated iron, they are never at a loss for means to produce any result they wish. If it be the first process, they weaken or strengthen the decoction and increase or lessen the quantity so as to render it innocent or fatal just as interest or inclination may lead. If the second or third they can by previous application of some preparation to the part to be operated upon, enable it for a short time to resist the effect of heat; and then by hurrying the ordeal, the accused escapes unscathed. If they conclude to murder the victim they reverse the oporation and guilt is as clear as noonday. Thus this constitution puts the life of the whole community in the hands of this tribe, and renders it a formidable fraternity of conjurors.

DIED.

It falls to our lot to record the death of Brother James Young, who died at New Georgia on the 12th July, after some weeks of distressing and painful affliction.

The subject of this notice was one of a cargo of Africans taken by a Revenue Cutter of the United States, about the year 1818. The vessel in which they were conveyed was found in American waters contrary to the law in the case, and was carried into Savanah, and the slaves handed over to the marshal. The Spanish claimant instituted a suit to recover them, but after years of vexatious litigation the voice of liberty prevailed and it was decreed that they should be returned to Africa. While the suit was pending the marshal distributed them among planters taking recognisance that they should be forthcoming when called for. In 1825 or 6 the government determined to send them to Liberia. A large number had gone—it was said—the way of all the earth—especially those that had been sent some distance up the country. James Young was among the number returned.

When in America, it pleased God who is no respecter of persons to regard this poor outcast in the way of mercy. While the question was pending, whether he with his companions in misery should be restored to liberty, and to the land of their fathers—or yeilded up to the tender mercies of their rapacious claimers—while the avaricious dealer in human flesh was clamorous for his prey that he might reduce him to a beast of burden, God fulfilled towards him the gracious counsel of his mercy. His dark mind was irradiated by the flashes of celestial truth. The character of God of which before he had no adequate or just conception was now presented in all its perfection and harmony of attributes. The same light which revealed the character of God dispelled the darkness from his own heart; and at once he learned what every sinner to be saved must learn, the deep depravity of his nature—that his heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. In his ignorance of the way of salvation, he, as a means of relief of the distress which he now suffered, addressed himself with earnestness and with a degree of confidence to pennance and mortification—his door of hope was prayer and abstinence. After weeks of darkness and of effort he found his way still more hedged up—his mind still oppressed and the sense of guilt unmoved.

More than once, as he has said to us in conversation, he concluded to give up and die: "I have done all I can do, I pray—I no eat—no laugh—no talk—try to do good—still my heart trouble me—God no pleased with me."

At length when his soul was sufficiently humbled and he had learned the need of other strength than his own—when by these means he was prepared to embrace with eager faith another saviour—the man of Calvary—the consecrated way of truth, and life—the only way of access to God was revealed to him in all his fulness of grace to help, and ability to save. With entire renunciation of self he embraced Jesus Christ as the annointed Saviour, and from that moment he found peace in believing.

Shortly afterwards he was Baptized and joined a Baptist Church in Savannah, and in all things sustained the character of a christian. When about to leave for Liberia, he received a letter of dismission from his Church, and on his arrival here united with the Baptist Church in this place. His principal place of residence since he has been in this country was New Georgia. Until about five years ago, there was a branch of the Providence Baptist Church in this place. This Church was composed almost exclusively of native Africans—rescured from slavery by the cruizers of the United States, and returned to Africa. Brother James Young was licensed to preach, soon after his arrival in Liberia, and his sphere of labour was chiefly among this people.

Those who knew Bro. James Young—who witnessed his daily department, do not require that we should testify that he evinced the sincerity of profession—that he loved his God, and the service of God—that the people of God were his chosen company—and that religious conversation was of all subjects that, on which he most delighted to dwell, and in which he invariably kindled as he proceeded.

He was ordained to the work of the ministry about three years ago, soon after the branch was constituted a seperate and independent Church.

His preaching was plain and practical—eminently calculated to be useful among the people of his class—perhaps much more so than that of a polished or educated minister. His discourses were characteristic of the African orator—abounding in a species of imagery and figure—often striking, and sometimes highly illustrative of the matter in hand—but with all so unlooked for, and incongruous in grouping, and so course in associations as to provoke an unvoluntary smile. A deep seriousness and earnestness indicated his sense of the importance of the message he delivered, and the anxiety he felt to make it impressive on the mind of others.

His health had gradually declined for years before his death. His last illness was peculiarly painful and distressing. From the first attack he lost his mind. On the day of his death his soul appeared to summon its powers and to triumph over disease. Reason resumed her seat. He summoned his friends around his bed, and with the composure of one, about to journey on a well known route, exhorted them not to grieve for him, assured them that although he should soon be gone, all was well with him. Shortly after he so quietly fell asleep that none knew at what moment the spirit took its flight.

All people have their sayings—but the apothegmatic sentiments are antagonistic in different countries. In America when we would express the strength of habit we say "what is bred in the bone will not come out of the flesh.,' Not so the African: Of a habitual liar, he says. "All him troof (truth) live him belly—he no peak him yet; bi'm by he peak him plenty.,,

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

OBSERVATION OF NORTH-WALES.

"IT is very surprising that praise should excite vanity: for if what is said of us be true, it is no more than we knew before, and cannot raise us in our own esteem; if it be false, it is surely a most humiliating reflection, that we are only admired because we are not known; and that a closer inspection would draw forth censure, instead of commendation. Praise can hurt only those who have not formed a decided opinion of themselves, and who are willing, on the testimony of others, to rank themselves higher than their merits warrant, in the scale of excellency."

"PLEASURE is a rose near which there ever grows the thorn of evil. It is wisdom's work so carefully to cull the rose, as to avoid the thorn, and let its rich perfume exhale to heaven in grateful adoration of Him who gave the rose to blow."

"AS the sun breaking forth in winter, so is joy in the season of affliction. As a shower in the midst of summer, so are the salutary drops of sorrow mingled in our cup of pleasure."

A sum of happiness sufficient to supply our reasonable desires for a long time is sometimes condensed into a little space, as light is concentrated in the flash. Such moments are given to enable us to guess at the joys of heaven."

"IN vain do we attempt to fix our thoughts on heaven; the vanities of this world rise like a cloud of dust before the eyes of the traveller, and obscure, if not totally conceal, the beautiful and boundless prospect of the glorious country towards which we are tending."

"IF it were the business of man to make a religion for himself, the Deist, the Theophilanthropist, the Stoic, or even the Epicurean, might be approved; but this is not the case. We are to believe what GOD has taught us, and to do what He has commanded. All other systems are but the reveries of mortals, and not religion."

"THE christian life may be compared to a magnificent column, whose summit always points to heaven. The innocent and therefore real pleasures of this world are the ornaments on the pedestial; very beautiful, and highly to be enjoyed when the eye is near; but which should not too long or too frequently detain us from that just distance, where we can contemplate the whole column, and where the ornaments on its base disappear."

"THE cause of all sin is a deficiency in our love of GOD. If we really loved Him above all things, we should not be too strongly attached to terrestrial objects, and should with pleasure relinquish them all to please Him. Unfortunately, while we continue on earth, our minds are so much more strongly affected by the perceptions of the senses than by abstract ideas, that it requires a continual exertion to keep up even the remembrance of the invisible world."

"WHEN I hear of a great and good character falling into some heinous crime, I cannot help crying, 'LORD, what am I, that I should be exempt! O preserve me from temptation, or how shall I stand, when so many, much my superiors, have fallen!'

"SUBLIMITY is something beyond the title circle of our comprehension, and whatever within that circle approaches the circumference, approaches the sublime. The pleasure occasioned by the idea of sublimity seems to me to consist in the exertion of the mind, which, when violent, overpowers weak minds, as violent exercise does weak bodies, but makes strong ones feel and rejoice in their own energy. Mr. Burke certainly understood and felt the sublime; but I think he would have defined it better, if, instead of saying it is occasioned by terror, he had said it is something incomprehensible to the mind of man, something which it struggles to take in but cannot; which exerts all its powers, yet baffles them. The instances he brings of it would in general agree much better with this idea than with that of terror; as an extent of space of which the eye sees not the bounds, a degree of darkness which conceals them; every thing which occasions indistinctness and difficulty. The same perpendicular height gives a more sublime idea to a person on the summit than at the base, because the eye cannot so easily measure the height."

"IMAGINATION, like the setting sun, casts a glowing lustre over the prospect, and lends to every object an enchanting brilliancy of colouring; but when reason takes the place of imagination, and the sun sinks behind the mountain, all fade alike into the night of disappointment."

"STUDY is to the mind what exercise is to the body; neither can be active and vigorous without proper exertion. Therefore if the acquisition of knowledge were not an end worthy to be gained, still study would be valuable on its own account, as tending to strengthen the mind: just as a walk is beneficial to our health, though we have no particular object in view. And certainly, for that most humiliating mentall disorder, the wandering of the thoughts, there is no remedy so eficacious as intense study."

"AN hour well spent condemns a life. When we reflect on the sum of improvement and delight gained in that single hour, how do the multitude of hours already past rise up and say, what good has marked us? Would'st thou know the true worth of time, employ one hour."

To read a great deal would be a sure preventive of much writing, because almost every one might find all he has to say, already written."

"A woman must have uncommon sweetness of disposition and manners to be forgiven for possessing superior talents and acquirements."—Fragments.

PLAGIARISM.

These seems to be quite a move upon this subject in the Presbyterian church. At the late session of the Hopewell Presbytery, in Greensboro', the subject of plagiarism, or in other words, that sort of pulpit-piracy which is becoming so customary in these days with a certain class of would-be preachers, was brought upon the tapis; when, after some discussion, the following resolutions were passed:

1 Resolved, That in accordance with the universal sentiment of the Presbyterian Church, this Presbytery bear their strong and unqualified testimony against the practice of preaching the sermons of other men—and that they consider the man who is guilty of Plagiarism in the pulpit, as chargable with the same deception and fraud, which attach to him who publishes the work of another, as his own.

2. Resolved, That no pressure of labors, nor state of health, can justify or palliate the practice above condemned; which, in all possible cases, they regard as highly culpable, and as calculated to prostrate the influence, the usefulness, and the mental improvement of the ministry."

We have reason to believe, from an article which we saw in another Presbyterian paper, not long since, that this movement in the Presbytery was prompted by a laudable desire to arrest this abominable and thievish practice among the members of their own Ministry: but we are not aware that the practice is more prevalent in that church than some others. The truth is, that the churches are not generally aware to what an extent this literary pirsey is carried; and hence preachers are often applauded and puffed as wonderful men, who, when they were divested of their borrowed feathers, noth. but imbecility would be found about them, and they would sink into merited neglect.

We should be glad to see some other churches engaged in reforming their pulpits in this particular.—Baptist Banner.

THE BRITISH PRESS.

London, May 3, 1843.—I have been very much struck by the great freedom of speech called into exercise relative to other members of the royal family in the course of the eulogies which the entire press joins in bestowing upon the late Duke of Sussex.

One journal of liberal politics but decided respectability, said that, with the exception of the Duke of Kent, the late Duke was the only honest man among the sons of George the Third; that George the Fourth was a heartless debauchee, the Duke of York a systematic swindler and blackleg; and that, of the two survivors, the one was a villian and the other a fool!

However much of truth there may be in these assertions, it appears to me that they are uttered with a grossness of expression and recklessness of style quite unequaled among the newspapers of our country; albeit Mr. Dickens and the Foreign Quarterly do think our newspaper press so licentious, and our editors sinners above all men, in the matters of libel, personal abuse and reviling of dignities. I do not think a paper could be found in the United States capable of making the death of an illustrious public man the occasion for dragging before the public the names of his two nearest surviving relatives, in order to designate the one a "villian," and the other a "fool;" and it would seem likely that a more appropriate occasion could be found or created even to "call from their dread abode" the frailties and errors of those relatives of the deceased who had long preceeded him to their last account.

I think the "Dispatch," the "Sunday Times," and "Bell's New Weekly Messenger," should be made into a parcel and transmitted to Mr. Charles Dickens and the editors of the Foreign Quarterly, with the inscription so wittily and successfully placed upon the armour of the Bishop of Beauvais in reply to the reproaches of the Papal Legate; "See now whether this be thy son's coat, or no."—*Cor. of com. POETRY.

For the Herald.

LINES TO MY WIFE.

Tell her I love her now,
As when I saw with pride
The white wreath on her brow
And called her first my bride.

Say though in early life
My heart she filled with joy,
Dearer the long loved wife
The mother of my boy.

Tell her for her I pray,
When sunlight gilds the scene,
As sinks the orb of day
Or shines the moon serene.

When the fierce tempest raves
And lightning rends the air,
When roll the mountain waves
For her is still my prayer.

Tell her though time has flown
Since we were forced to part,
She is my loved my own,
The cherished of my heart.

Tell her though absent far
Over the dark blue sea,
She is my shining star
Of hope and memory.

A BEAUTIFUL SPEECH.

The Natchez Free Trader contains a report of a speech of Col. Cobb, the celebrated half-breed chief of the Choctaws, made in reply to J. J. Mc Rae, Esq, the agent for enrolling and emigrating the Indians to the west of the Mississippi, who had made a speech to the Indians, about one thousand in number assembled at Hopahka, informing them that "their council fires no more could be kindled here;—that "their warriors can have no field for their glory, and that their spirits will decay within them," and that if they should "take the hand of their great father, the President, which is now offered to them to lead them to their western homes, then will their hopes be higher, their destinies brighter."

The Natchez Courier appropriately says of this bit of eloquence that, for comprehensiveness and brevity, for beauty of diction and force, for affecting sublimity and propriety of sentiment, we have never seen any production to exceed it. We publish it as a composition worthy to be preserved.

SPEECH OF COL. COBB,

Head Mingo of the Choctaws east of the Mississippi, in reply to the Agent of the United States.

Brother: We have heard you talk as from the lips of our father, the Great White Chief at Washington, and my people have called upon me to speak to you. The red man has no books, and when he wishes to make known his views, like his father before him, he speaks from his mouth. He is afraid of writing. When he speaks he knows what he says; the Great Spirit hears him. Writing is the invention of the pale faces; it gives birth to error and to feuds. The Great Spirit talks—we hear him in the thunder—in the rushing winds and the mighty waters—but he never writes.

Brother: When you were young we were strong; we fought by your side; but our arms are now broken. You have grown large. My people have become small.

Brother: My voice is weak; you can scarcely hear me; it is not the shout of a warrior, but the wail of an infant. I have lost it in mourning over the misfortunes of my people. These are their graves, and in those aged pines you hear the ghosts of the departed. Their ashes are here, and we have been left to protect them. Our warriors are nearly all gone to the far country west; but here are our dead. Shall we go too, and give their bones to the wolves?

Brother: Two sleeps have passed since we heard you talk. We have thought upon it. You ask us to leave our country, and tell us it is our father's wish. We would not desire to displease our father. We respect him, and you are his child. But the Choctaw always thinks. We want time to answer.

Brother: our hearts are full. Twelve winters ago our chiefs sold our country.—Every warrior that you see here was opposed to the treaty. If the dead could have been counted, it could never have been made; but alas! though they stood around, they could not be seen or heard. Their tears came in the rain drops, and their voices in the wailing wind, but the pale faces knew it not, and our land was taken away.

Brother: We do not now complain. The Choctaw suffers, but he never weeps. You have the strong arm, and we cannot resist. But the pale face worships the Great Spirit. So does the red man. The Great Spirit loves truth. When you took our country, you promised us land. There is your promise in the book. Twelve times have the trees dropped down their leaves, and yet we have received no land. Our houses have been taken from us. The white man's plough turns up the bones of our fathers. We dare not kindle our fires; and yet you said we might remain, and you would give us land.

Brother: Is this truth? But we believe, now our Great Father knows our condition, he will listen to us. We are as mourning orphans in our country; but our Father will take us by the hand. When he fulfils his promise we will answer his talk. He means well. We know it. But we cannot think now. Grief has made children of us. When our business is settled we shall be men again, and talk to our Great Father about what he has promised.

Brother: You stand in the mocasins of a great chief; you speak the words of a mighty nation, and your talk was long. My people are small; their shadow scarcely reaches to your knee; they are scattered and gone; when I shout I hear my voice in the depths of the woods, but no answering shout comes back. My words, therefore, are few. I have nothing more to say, but tell what I have said to the tall chief of the pale faces whose brother stands by your side.

DO YOU ATTEND THE PRAYER MEETING?

Christian reader, do you profess to be a child of God, and yet habitually neglect the meetings appointed by your brethren to pray for God's blessing? If so we would propose for your consideration a few plain questions. Is it because you do not believe that God hears and answers the united prayers of his people, when they are offered in faith? We presume, if you believe in the truth of the Bible, it is not. Is it then that you feel that you have no blessings to ask of God, either for yourself or for the church to which you belong? If you have any proper appreciation of your own condition, this cannot be the reason. The Saviour tells us of some "who thought they were rich, and have need of nothing; but they were poor, and miserable, and blind and naked;" but we would fain hope that you are not of that unhappy number. If, then, you believe that God hears and answers the united prayers of his people, and that you, and the church of which you are a member, greatly need his blessing, and must perish without it, we again repeat the question, Why is it that your seat is always found vacant when your brethren meet to pray? We fear that we should give the true reason, if we were to say it is because you have no spirit of prayer, and consequently very little of the savor of vital piety in your heart. The state of piety in a church may generally be tested by the attendance upon the prayer meeting; and you may generally ascertain who are spiritually minded in a congregation, by ascertaining who are in the habit of attending them. Let each one ask himself at the next meeting for this purpose, why am I absent?—Christian Watchman.

SPEAK NOT EVIL ONE OF ANOTHER."

BY MRS. HALE.

If the precept of the apostle could be enforced, what a revolution there would be in this talking world! Many who are now voluble as geese, would then be mute as fish.

There is a certain class of persons who never have any subject of conversation, unless connected with personalities. We regret to say that women more often than men, are accused of this gossiping propensity, though we do not believe it originates from any innate perversity of moral feeling in the female character; it is only the result of their defective training, and their limited opportunities of acquiring information.—Still, ignorance does not extenuate the evil of slander, it only shows how it may be corrected, namely, by giving our daughters such an education, as will make other subjects, besides personalities, agreeable to them.

"I called," said a gentleman, "the other day, on a very fashionable lady, and was entertained during my visit, by a variety of piquant anecdotes and satirical remarks respecting her particular friends. She had a beautiful set of teeth, and, as she laughed in her glee over the mangled reputations, which she had strewn like plucked flowers around her, I was thinking of the doctrine of transmigration, and imagining what animal her soul would be compelled to inhabit, in order to expiate her sin of evil speaking—and I fixed on the hyena—yes; the laughing hyena; and before I left her, that truly beautiful woman had quite a hyenish look. By the way, there was much justice in that poetical doctrine of the transmigration of souls. It taught two excellent lessons to men—humanity and humility."

The remarks of this gentleman brought to our recollection similar conversations; and we could not but own that there were in society those who would be changed into crying hyenas, if they had their deserts.—Have you never heard people lament over the follies of their friends, and dwell in the most pathetic manner on the faults and misfortunes of their acquaintances? And have you not felt, as you watched the expression of the countenance, and listened to the intonations of the voice, that these "shocking things" did not greatly afflict the relator? But there are few we trust, who thus give themselves up to the malicious pleasure of evil speaking; it is usually the result of thoughtlessness; or, the desire of saying something to amuse or astonish.

"Oh, I am so sorry to believe this story about Miss A.——,' said the lively Mrs. B——, "she is a lovely girl; but there are spots in the sun. Every body regrets it."

"Indeed! I never heard a syllable of the matter,' replied Mrs. C——. "I think it must be a mistake. I have been intimate with the family a long time, and understand Miss A——'s disposition. I am sure she was never guilty of such conduct."

"No—there can be no mistake. I had it from good authority. I regret to believe it—but I must. The young lady has a very bad temper. It is a pity—a thousand pities. So fascinating as she is, too! I am so sorry. Do you think Edward D—— ever heard of it?"

"I hope not," said Mrs. C——.

"Hope not! why, if it be true he ought to know it. He is very attentive to her; many think it an engagement; though I never believed it had gone so far. But you are his friend, and I presume you will inform him of it."

"I shall do no such thing, Mrs. B. I have made a vow never to retail scandal."

"Scandal, do you call this?" exclaimed the lady, reddening to the forehead.

"Certainly—I call every evil report scandal, which is not issued under the authority of a responsible name. Now if you will give me the name of your informant, and become answerable yourself for the truth of this story, I will inform Miss A——'s family and Edward D——, of the matter. But to tell it merely as a story which every body knows and nobody will vouch for, is what as a Christian I cannot do."

"Oh, you are making the affair quite too serious," replied the gay Mrs. B——. "It was only in a laughing way that it was mentioned to me; just to enliven conversation in a little confidential circle. It has troubled me," and the lady spoke with feeling, we doubt not with truth also, "because any fault of temper in a young lady, and such a lovely one, is to be deeply regretted. But then these things will be said to keep up conversation. I really wish we had more rational subjects of social entertainment; but ladies are not you know, in the habit of introducing rational or improving topics of conversation. We are afraid of appearing stiff and being called blues; and so we rattle on with whatever nonsence first occurs. And a little scandal, as you call it, or harmless pleasantry on our absent friends and acquaintances, serves wonderfully to amuse. It is so easy to be witty at the expense of others, and satire, to be at all lively and pungent, must be personal."

There is no doubt that Mrs. B——was right in ascribing the origin of most of the gossip and scandal in society to the desire to be lively and entertaining, rather than any mischievous desire of injuring those whose characters are so freely criticised. Still the habit of this evil speaking can hardly be too carefully avoided. That beautiful portrait of woman, drawn by the inspired minstrel, cannot be too sedulously studied. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom (or learning,) and on her tongue is the law of kindness." Is not the picture charming? Such should woman always be, and fear not that this discretion will make you dull. "The innocent are gay."—Lady's Book for April.

LAY SERMONS ON COMMON PROVERBS.

"LET WELL ALONE."

A great many of our proverbs would answer for the animals. They are, in truth, creations, or rather expressions of the human instinct; things of expediency rather than reason; and they would make, on the whole, a very low character, though a very safe and prudent one, sagacious in matters of self. I know a good many people who are walking proverbs; but they are no great affair, after all. Your walking proverbs may get money, may be very rich, and may be worldly-wise men; but their principles are narrow and low, and their education is only for this world, and not at all for eternity.

This proverb, Let well alone, is a very selfish, unenterprising proverb. It argues a quietness that does not come of resignation or contentedness, but of a mere fear lest things may be worse. Still, in a world like this, so discontented and envious, where all men are jostling one another, and struggling to get past and foremost, it may have a very good meaning, like Paul's, "Be content with such things as ye have," or, "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." This would be letting well alone provided the food was nice and wholesome, and the raiment such as you can wear in "good society."

The heart knoweth its own bitterness, but a great many people do not seem to know when they are well off. Men's attention is turned much more to their sorrows than their blessings. Hence a man's lot in his own eyes often seems a very crooked one, because the crooks in it, like the faults in minister's wives, are so much noticed, while the strait smooth places get no note at all. Sometimes in trying to get the rough places smooth, the smooth places themselves get crooked. And not unfrequently the crook in one man's lot, which plagues and vexes him, is after all greatly preferable to the straight place in another's, which is always exciting his envy.

Most men pass their lives in attempts at what is called bettering their condition; and by condition is meant not the inward state of a man's being, but his external circumstances. They are always setting a watch, of which the main-spring is out of order, and setting it by the town clock: the main-spring they know nothing about. Indeed, their main spring being outside, in the world, and must be confusion. A man's external circumstances may be getting better, while his heart is getting worse; this is generally the case, so that as one part of our being goes up in the world, the other goes down. As the body gets up, independent, the heart gets down deeper into the world, dependent. Into prosperity a man does not take his heart with him; into adversity he does; and while the external circumstances are getting worse, the heart is most likely to get better. The worst side externally is therefore the safest side inwardly.

Discontent is a great deceiver, painting our own lot in dark colors, other men's in bright, and never letting men know when they are well off. Changes under discontent are made under this deception, and they most generally issue in bitter disappointment. So that in life it oftentimes is as it was with that man in death who ordered an epitaph to be inscribed on his grave stone, thus:—

I was well—
I wanted to be better,
I took physic,—
I died.

This, indeed, is nothing more than the common proverb, Out of the frying pan, into the fire. It is very often realized, for men are perpetually taking physic for their external circumstances, when the disease is inward; and the weak, ineffectual physic only stirs it up to greater bitterness and desperation. Contentment not only alleviates a man's present troubles, but saves a great many new ones.

If a man would change safely, it should be when he is contented with his present situation, for then he is likely to see things as they are, and if he takes a step forwark, does not take it in the dark. At least he does not take it, thinking he is going out of purgatory into paradise; he does not dream that the change is going to cure all his difficulties. It may therefore safely be laid down as a rule: When you are well off, change if you please; but when you think you are not well off, wait before changing till you think you are. And what is the reason? Thus: most men do not think they are well off till the heart is right, and when that is the case then any change is profitable and safe. A contented heart takes all changes as so many steps towards the REST that is above; a discontented heart in this world is like a man wandering among the tombs, seeking rest and finding none. It is like a miser in the streets, having let out his own house, and trying to beg a night's lodging.

SANCHO.

A SINGULAR TASTE.

A singular taste some display, preferring the shells of nuts to the kernels. Many of us are in the habit of thinking that without the latter, the former would have been hardly entitled to a being. Very true, the shell is needful for the protection of the nut during its growth, and for its preservation afterward: but for the cultivator to expend his skill in the attempt to beautify this appendage, in gross neglect of processes by which the kernal itself might be improved, would not be recommended by the common judgment.

But in the world spiritual, as it would be if spirituality dwelt in it, scarcely anything is in better repute than this very procedure. True, indeed, none will submit to the charge of such folly: but although one's pleading "not guilty," may be a reason for the process of trial, it is not often admitted as the ground of an immediate exculpatory verdict. Even that the arraigned is not conscious of guilt can be no farther admitted, than as a plea in mitigation of the sentence: we learn upon the highest authority, that there is a close connection between the all-surpassing deceitfulness of the human heart and its desperate wickedness. The atmosphere of depravity is the very region of self-deceit.

But what do you mean about nut shells and kernels? I will tell you. I fear that in handing down from the primitive gatherers to some in the world, the kernels have been lost by the way; or, that some persons lack the taste to distinguish the one from the other; and perceiving more form and comeliness in the outward than in the inward, they quite throw away the only part that is fit for the eater's use, else how should the "æsthetical exhibitions of Romanism, all those bewitchings of the sense, be called "the beauty of holiness?" Or why should this language be applied to a sanctuary regarnished, cruciform though it may be? Or how again, should children be taught that the church is "the rock of their 'salvation,'" and the sacraments the rope that binds them to the rock, or something to this effect?* Wherever the child,s practice of relishing the kernel most has prevailed, the Church has been represented as built upon a rock quite other than itself. Nor ought we to forget, that "of such," (i. e. of those who are child like,) "is the kingdom of heaven." It is greatly to be feared, that not all are Israel who are of Israel, that those who too much prize the casket, may be ultimately found to have thrown away "the pearl of great price."

What Robert Hall said of McKnight, is perhaps still more widely applicable, viz. that he would never put his foot in the spiritual world, while he could find a place for it in the visible. This may indeed be too severe upon the commentator; but it tells a sad tale of human nature, unless regenerate as well by the Holy Ghost as by the washing of water.

Now, Messrs. Editors, let me assure your readers, I have no wish to make out a case against surplicial processions; only let us have in the same company true successors of the Apostles, who walked not by sight, but rather by faith. They had the advantage of some beauties of holiness, which will shine longer than any linen the world has known. Let me say, too, I belong to no party but the church:—I profess to love all her members; and if in this article I hurt a hair of their heads, I entreat pardon for an unintentional harm. Gladly would I see them all finding more and better nuts than myself; or if we must all eat the same, gladly would I find them possessed of a better taste of their real excellence, than has fallen to my portion of endowments. But a day of fire is coming, wherein the asbestian robes of a saviour's righteousness will stand after the consumption of all earthly vestiture. Let us be ready for that.

FRATER MININUS.

*The children, by the way, considered the teaching faulty. They "thought they were sinners," even though baptised. They did not esteem themselves already saved. So I am told by one of their teachers.

RESULTS OF RUM-SELLING.—The N. Y. Organ says, that of twenty-nine persons who have sold rum in the town of Petersburg, N. Y., within the last twenty years, four have died, all poor and drunkards; TWENTY are living, all poor and drunkards; and five have dicontinued the business without loss or gain. This is not a very flattering account for rum-sellers.

HORRIBLE DEATH FROM RUM.—A poor woman in a state of intoxication, fell into the fire, in a house in Chevland and was burnt to death. There were two other persons in the room, too drunk to assist. Her screams brought in the neighbors, but too late to save her.—Christian Watchman.

THE DIET OF WORMS.

It was on the 10th of March, while the imperial city was trembling at his name, that Luther concluded his commentary on the Magnificat.

He was not long to be left undisturbed in his retreat. Spalatin, in obedience to the orders of the Elector, sent him a note of the articles which he would be called on to retract. A retractation after his refusal at Augsbug! "Never fear," he wrote to Spalatin, "that I will retract a single syllable, since the only argument they have to urge against me is that my writings are at variance with the observances of what they call the Church. If our Emperor Charles sends for me only to retract, my answer shall be that I will remain here, and it will be all the same as though I had been at Worms and returned again. But if the Emperor chooses then to send for me to put me to death as an enemy to the Empire, I shall be ready to obey his summons: for, by Christ's help, I will never abandon his word in the hour of battle. I know that these blood-thirsty men will never rest till they have taken my life. God grant that my death may be laid to the charge of the Papists alone!" * * * * * * * * *

On the 6th of March, 1521, Charles the Fifth affixed his signature to the following summons addressed to Luther:—

"Charles, by the grace of God, Emperor elect of the Romans, always August, &c. &c.

"Worshipful, well-beloved, and godly! Whereas we and the States of the holy Empire here assembled, have resolved to institute an inquiry touching the doctrine and writings which thou hast lately put forth, we have on our own behalf and on behalf of the Empire, issued our safe-conduct, hereunto annexed, for thy journey hither and return to a place of security. Our hearty desire is that thou shouldest prepare thyself to set out immediately, so that within the space of twenty-one days fixed by our safe-conduct thou mayest without fail present thyself before us. Fear no injustice or violence. We will steadily abide by our safe-conduct aforesaid, and we expect that thou wilt pay obedience to our summons. Such is our earnest injunction.

"Given in our imperial city of Worms, this 6th day of the month of March, in the year of our Lord 1521, and the second of our reign,

"CHARLES"

"By order of my Lord the Emperor, under his sign manual, ALBERT, Cardinal of Mentz, Arch-Chancellor.

"Nicolas Zwyl."

The safe-conduct enclosed in this writ was directed "To the worshipful our well-beloved and godly Doctor Martin Luther, of the order of the Augustines."

It began thus:

"We, Charles, the fifth of that name, by the grace of God, Emperor elect of the Romans, always August, King of Spain, of the Two Sicilies, of Jerusalem, of Hungary, of Dalmatia, of Croatia, &c. Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, Court of Hapsburg, of Flanders, of the Tyrol," &c. &c.

And then this sovereign of so many states intimating that he has cited a certain Augustine monk, named Luther, to appear in his presence, requires all princes, lords, magistrates, and others, to respect the safe-conduct which he has granted to him under pain of being dealt with as offenders against the Emperor and the Empire. * * * * * * *

Thus was the purpose of God fulfilled. It was his will that this light, which he had kindled in the world, should be set upon a hill; and emperor, kings and princes, were all busily employed—though they knew it not—in executing what He had appointed. It is an easy thing with Him to raise the meanest to dignity. An act of His power, operating through successive years, suffices to lead the offspring of a Saxon peasant from the lowly cottage of his childhood to that imperial hall in which assembled sovereigns awaited his coming. In his presence none are either small or great, and when He wills it, Charles and Luther meet on the same level. * * * * * * * *

While these things were passing at Worms and Wittemberg, the papacy was renewing its assaults. On the 28th of March, which was the Thursday before Easter, all Rome resounded with a solemn sentence of excommunication. It is the custom at this season to publish the terrible bull in cœna Domini, which is nothing but a long string of imprecations. On the day of which we speak, the approaches to the church in which the Sovereign Pontiff was to officiate in person, were filled at an early hour by the Papal guard, and by a vast multitude that had flocked together from all parts of Italy to receive the benediction of the Holy Father. The square before the Basilica was decorated with laurel and myrtle, wax candles were burning on the balcony of the church, and beside them was elevated the sacred receptacle of the host. On a sudden the deep sound of bells reverberates through the air;—the Pope, arrayed in his pontifical robes, and borne in an arm-chair, makes his appearance on the balcony; the people fall on their knees; all heads are uncovered; the flags that were waving in the wind are lowered; the troops ground their arms; and a solemn silence ensues After a pause of some moments, the Pope slowly stretches out his hands, lifts them up towards heaven, and then, making the sign of the cross, lets them gradually fall towards the earth. He repeats these gestures three times. And now again the pealing bells are heard, giving notice, far and wide, of the Pontiff's benediction; and next a train of priests is seen advancing, each with a lighted torch in his hand: as they rush hurriedly along, they swing their torches downwards, they brandish them aloft, they toss them wildly to and fro, like so many fires of hell; the multitude are thrilled with awe and terror; and the words of malediction roll heavily above their heads.

When Luther was apprised of his excommunication, he published the form of it, with some remarks in that caustic style which he knew so well how to assume. Although this publication did not appear till some time afterwards, we shall present some extracts from it here. Let us listen to the high-priest of Christendom, as he speaks from the balcony of his Basilica,—and to the monk of Wittemberg, who answers him out of the heart of Germany.

There is something characteristic in the contrast of the two voices.

The Pope. "Leo, bishop."

Luther. "Bishop! as much as a wolf is a shepherd; for a bishop's duty is to give godly exhortations, not to vomit forth imprecations and curses."

The Pope. "Servant of all the servants of God. . . ."

Luther. "In the evening when we are drunk; but next morning we call ourselves Leo, lords of all lords."

The Pope. The bishops of Rome, our predecessors, have been wont on this festival to employ the army of justice. . . . ."

Luther. "Which, according to your account, are excommunication and anathema: but according to St. Paul, long-suffering, kindness, love unfeigned."—(2 Cor. vi. 6, 7.)

The Pope. "According to the duty of the Apostlic change, and to maintain the purity of the Christian faith. . . . ."

Luther. "That is to say, the temporal possessions of the Pope."

The Pope. "And the unity thereof, which consists in the union of the members with Christ their head, ... and with his Vicar. . . . ."

Luther. "For Christ is not sufficient, we must have another besides."

The Pope. "To preserve the holy communion of the faithful, we follow the ancient rule, and accordingly do excommunicate and curse, in the name of God Almighty, the Father. . . . ."

Luther. "Of whom it is said: 'God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world.'"—(John iii. 17.)

The Pope. "The Son and the Holy Ghost,—and by the authority of the Apostles, Peter and Paul, ... and by our own. . . . ."

Luther. "OUR OWN, says the ravenous wolf, as though God's might were too weak without him."

The Pope. "We curse all heretics—the Garasi, the Patarini, 'the poor men' of Lyons, the Arnoldists, the Speronists, the Pasageni, the Wicklefites, the Hussites, the Fratelli. . . . ."

Luther. "Because they have sought to possess themselves of the Holy Scriptures, and admonished the Pope to be modest, and preach the Word of God."

The Pope. "And Martin Luther, recently condemned by us for a like heresy, together with all his adherents, and all persons, whosoever they may be, who aid or abet him."

Luther. "I thank thee, most gracious Pontiff, that thou hast proclaimed me in company with all these Christians. It is an honour for me to have my name proclaimed at Rome at the time of the festival, in so glorious a manner, and to have it circulated throughout the world with the names of all those humble confessors of Christ."

The Pope. "In like manner, we excommunicate and curse all pirates and corsairs. . . . ."

Luther. "And who is the greatest of all pirates and corsairs, if it be not he who takes souls captive, and binds them in chains, and delivers them to death?"

The Pope. ". . . especially such as infest our seas. . . . ."

Luther. "OUR seas! St. Peter, our predecessor said: 'Silver and gold have I none,' (Acts iii. 6.) Jesus Christ said, 'The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; but ye shall not be so.' (Luke xxii. 25.) But if a waggon laden with hay must give way to a drunken man, how much more fittting is it that St. Peter and Christ himself should give way to the Pope!"

The Pope. "In like manner we excommunicate and curse all those who falsify our bulls and letters apostolical. . . . ."

Luther. "But God's letters,—God's Holy Scriptures,—any one may condemn and burn them."

The Pope. "In like manner we excommunicate and curse all those intercept any provisions on their passage to our city of Rome. . . . ."

Luther. "He snarls and bites like a dog that is battling for his bone."

The Pope. "In like manner we condemn, and we curse all those who withhold any privileges, dues, tithes, or revenues belonging to the clergy."

Luther. "Forasmuch as Christ hath said, 'If any man will sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also;' (Matt. v. 40.) and ye have now heard Our commentary thereon. . . . ."

The Pope. "Whatever be their station, dignity, order, authority, or rank, be they even bishops or kings."

Luther. "'For there shall be false teachers among you, who shall despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities,' saith the Scripture." (Jude 8.)

The Pope. "In like manner we condemn and curse all who in any manner whatever shall molest the city of Rome, the kingdom of Sicily, the islands of Sardinia and Corsica, the patrimony of St. Peter, in Tuscany, the duchy of Spoleto, the marquisate of Ancona, the Campagna, the cities of Ferrara and Benevento, or any other city or territory belonging to the Church of Rome."

Luther. "O, Peter, thou poor fisherman! how hast thou become master of Rome and so many kingdoms besides? I bid thee all hail! Peter! king of Sicily! . . . . and fisherman of Bethsaida."

The Pope. "We excommunicate and curse all chancellors, councellors, parliaments, procurators, governors, officials, bishops and others who shall resist any of our letters admonitory, permissive, prohibitory, mediatory, or executive."

Luther. "For the Holy See seeks only to live in idleness, pomp and debauchery,—to rule and intimidate,—to lie and deceive,—to dishonor and seduce, and commit all kinds of evil in peace and security. . . . ."

"O Lord, arise! it is not so with us as the Papists pretend; thou hast not forsaken us, neither are thine eyes turned away from us."

Such was the dialogue between Leo the Tenth at Rome, and Martin Luther at Wittemberg.

The Pontiff having concluded his anathemas, the parchment on which they were written was torn up and its fragments scattered among the people. The crowd was instantly thrown into violent commotion, every one rushed forward eager to seize a scrap of the terrible bull. These were the holy relics that the Papacy offered to its followers on the eve of the great day of grace and expiation. The multitude soon dispersed, and the neighborhood of the Basilica resumed its accustomed stillness. Let us return to Wittemberg.

It was now on the 24th of March, Gaspar Sturm, the imperial Herald, had passed through the gates of the city in which Luther resided. He presented himself before the Doctor, and delivered into his hands the Emperor's writ of summons. It was an anxious and solemn moment for the Reformer. His friends were all panic struck. Hitherto not one of the princes, not even Frederic the Wise, had openly espoused his case. The knights, it is true, had begun to use threatening language; but Charles in the plenitude of his power paid small regard to it. Luther, however, preserved his composuse. "The Papists," said he, observing the distress of his friends, "have little desire to see me at Worms, but they long for my condemnation and death! No matter! Pray, not for me, but for the word of God. My blood will scarcely be cold before thousands and tens of thousands in every land will be made to answer for the shedding of it. The 'Most Holy' adversary of Christ, the father and master and chief of manslayers is resolved that it shall be spilt. Amen! The will of God be done! Christ will give me his Spirit to overcome these ministers of Satan. I despise them while I live; I will triumph over them in death. They are striving hard at Worms to force me to recant. My recantation shall be this: I said formerly that the Pope was Christ's vicar; now I say that he is the adversary of the Lord and the Apostle of the devil." And when he was told that all the pulpits of the Franciscans and Dominicans were ringing with imprecations and maledictions against him: "Oh, how it delights me to hear it," exclaimed he. He knew that he had obeyed the will of God, and that God was with him:—why then should he fear to set out? Purity of intention and a conscience void of offence impart to the servant of God a hidden yet incalculable strength which never fails him,—a strength in which he goes forth against his enemies with that assurance of victory which no adamantine breast-plate, no phalanx of trusty spears can ever afford.—D'Augbigne's History.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. O. K. CANFIELD.

DIED, at the Mission House, in Sattra Kroo, West Africa, on the 7th of May 1842, the Rev. Oren Kasson Canfield, missionary of the Presbyterian Board to the natives on that part of the (Western) Coast.

The writer thinks Mr. C. was a native of New-Marlboro', Massachusetts. He early left his native town, went to Hudson, New-York, and from there removed to Morristown, New-Jersey, where he completed his studies preparatory to entering Nassau Hall. He graduated at Princeton with merit, September, 1835.

His studies thus far had not been with a view of acquiring worldly fame and that kind of distinction which fires the ambition of too many of our college youths. Education had been esteemed by him only as the foundation on which, under God, he might erect in himself those higher qualifications that Paul lays down as belonging to the true minister of the gospel;—he studied to be "vigilant;" to be "apt to teach;" and have that "good report of them that are without," without which the teaching would be of little avail. I am happy, as his friend, to record that he was universally beloved by all who knew him. He was one of a number who kept up a weekly prayer meeting in college; many of that number are now ministers of the word, and not a few heralds of the gospel to the heathen who sit in "the region and shadow of death;" some in India, some in Ceylon, another among the western Indians, himself and two others to the dark sons of Africa. I am not aware that his thoughts were particularly directed to the destitute and lost condition of the heathen as early as the period at which he took his first degree in the arts. Before 1838, when he graduated in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, I know they were, and he very soon offered his services to the mission board under whose directions he subsequently went to Africa.

In 1839, in company with the Rev. J. B. Pinney and Mr. J. P. Alward, he went to Africa. Their object was to select a place that, in the judgment of all, should be the most desirable as a field of labor and healthiness of locality. The records of missions on that coast had recorded so many deaths in the field, that it was deemed essential to endeavour, if possible, to avoid localities, which, from the vicinity of foul miasmatic swamps and large rivers, were surrounded by an atmosphere rendered almost totally incompatible with all the elements of the European constitution. During the five months they spent in that country they examined the coast from Cape Messurado to Cape Palmas, ascending the rivers, and frequently making excursions of three to six days' walk into the country, which in most parts is an almost impenetrable forest. They also made a visit to Sierra Leone.

In the spring of 1840 they set out for home in the brig "Boxer," which touching at theisle of Mayo, was seized under pretence of her being engaged in the slave trade. All the passengers and sailors were imprisoned in the common jail, till the brig could be sent to another port for examination. After the vessel was freed they were discharged. The barbarous Portuguse would not furnish the captain any means of returning to the vessel, nor the passengers and crew any way of getting to the captain, and they were finally obliged to go in an open boat a passage of three days to reach the place. After this severe trial they re-embarked, and reached safely and in health the land of their birth and their Christian friends.

It was considered remarkable, nay almost a miracle, that, during their long stay in Africa—their exposure to sun and rain, and sleeping often on the land (which last alone is deemed almost a certain cause of fever)—all enjoyed good health and accomplished vastly more travel than the most sanguine hopes of their friends could have anticipated. Such distinguishing marks of the presence of that God, who is with his people "alway," called for the devoutest thanksgiving and praise, and our deceased brother was not insensible to the manifest mercies of his heavenly Father.

During the several months the Board was preparing to send him and brother Alward to enter upon the field they had chosen for their future labour, he spent his time visiting his friends, and endeavouring to arouse in the churches a more ardent feeling in favour of the mission cause, and a more lively regard for that word of Christ which says to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel."

God had called him to forsake his mother and sisters, and pursue His work, and he had obeyed the call in purpose!—yet, that he might have less to bind him to the world and the land of his birth, while on his last visit home, the only surviving parent, a sainted mother, was called to bid farewell to earth, that she might go to her rest above. God in his mercy spared that excellent lady the trial of parting with her son to go abroad, by taking her to himself, removing her from the ills of life to "mansions prepared," where she knew her son would come to her, in God's own time.

In October he was married, in Burlington, New-Jersey. Mr. Alward had now been licensed, and before their departure he was also married and with their devoted wives they set out for Africa in February following. They arrived in April at Palmas, where, in the family of Rev. J. L. Wilson, missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, they were to spend the period which is called the acclimation, and during which all had more or less fever. Seventeen days after their debarkation the little band was called in God's providence to give up one of their number to that better service above, which is the employment of angels and glorified spirits. The affliction was severe; all were sick at the time, and the wife of Mr. Alward not able to see him from the moment he was taken ill—the providence was mysterious, he had not trod the threshold—his voice had not been heard by the sable Kroo-men to whom he had been sent. How truly may we exclaim, "God's ways are not as man's ways," nor his thoughts as ours. Mr. Canfield was now single handed, with all the labour of establishing a mission in a comparative wilderness, near a hundred miles from any medical and friendly aid. It was, however, only the fatal influence of the climate that he dreaded, and he wanted a helper that if one should fall, God might keep the other. He called upon the churches again to awake and send one to "come out and help." The church enabled their Board to respond quickly having a kindred feeling with that of the warm hearted Christian father of Mr. Alward—who said, when he heard of his son's death, "he wished his younger son was ready to go and take the place of his brother,"—the church sent a brother to take his place. The Rev. R. W. Sawyer and wife arrived at Palmas in January, 1842, and Mr. Canfield afterwards embarked on board the same vessel for the Kroo country, a distance of about eighty miles, to erect the necessary buildings. Settra Kroo has a large population in and about it;—the soil is more cultivated than in most parts of the country;—the men, from their habit of spending years of their youth in Sierra Leone, and as ships' hands, are intelligent, and we may add, have more of the habits of civilized nations than any other tribe on that part of the coast. That people too are not like most other tribes, distracted and made ferocious by wars for the capture of slaves. They have been represented never to have been cursed with slave traffic; such, however, is not the fact; they once sold all their captives into slavery or made them slaves to themselves. Some are now living who, when the traffic was abandoned freed all their slaves: but a Kroo-man was never known to have been enslaved.

The absence of large rivers and mangrove swamps in the vicinity, and the elevation of the undulating surface of the country were justly deemed greatly in favour of the healthfulness of the situation. These circumstances all combined, in the view of the labourers and the friends of the mission cause, to give golden promises of much good to be accomplished in that field. True, the early intercourse of the natives with sailors, and their residence for the sole purpose of gain, among the Sierra Leonese had not tended at all to lessen their vices, but in learning the vices of the white and the freed man, they have acquired the means of hearing and learning the good that was now to be offered to them.

Now let the reader accompany this missionary of the truth. You have heard some of his trials and mercies. Go with him to that people, sit with him under the spreading branches of a large plum tree, on some stones arranged in a semicircle, and wait with him the reception God will incline that people to give him. The old men and sages of the tribe seat themselves by your side; there are kings and governors, head-men and warriors; their costume is next to nakedness itself, yet they are clothed in all the abominations of superstition; they have, from the highest to the lowest, their gree-grees or charms, of man's invention, to guard from evil in every form, from droning, from thunder and lightning, war, poison, sickness and death. Regard not the "doctor-man," who behind you is making all kind of gestures and loud shouts, by which he would avert any evil spirit from influencing the grand "palaver." Listen to the boisterous harangue of one of the important men, in some tongue scarce known at Babel, and from your interpreter learn, that the devil has emisaries there as well as in civilized countries. The man is employed by some evil disposed trader and represents that this "God palaver," (as they call all preaching,) will stop the trade and ruin the country. But the voice is soon silenced; the question more favourably discussed, put and decided; "the God man shall remain among us." He is then taken by one to a house which he assured him was built on purpose for him in anticipation of his arrival. It is a neat two story bamboo house, with a piazza all round; it is unoccupied, and he has but to make himself at home in it.

In the council God had a care for his cause, but in this latter circumstance his care for his servant was manifested in kindly providing this convenient shelter where he could be alone and unmolested by any of the annoyances he might find in the natives' own habitations. Soon, when the short twilight of that equatorial region suddenly lets fall the veil of night, bow with this man of God while he erects that new altar, and with him pour out the incense of hearts overflowing with gratitude and love, to Him who is in heaven the Father of his children—the God of mercy, rich and plentiful, as well as of strict justice. See, too, these benighted heathen men and women, attracted by curiosity bowing themselves, not in prayer to God, but to catch if possible, some idea of this new worship. For there must be some reality, say they, in a work that shall cause a man to leave friends and all, to come so far, to expend his life and the money of the church for their good; while the only inducement they can have for leaving home is gain, and such they see is the motive that actuates all traders who come among them.

I have insensibly lost in some measure the subject of these remarks in a consideration of the circumstances in which he was placed. But the consideration may not be lost upon some who may chance to read them. Should it fall into the hands of some who are thinking to give themselves up to the same work, they may, like Luther and Zuingle learn to put their trust in God who alone is able and will keep them, at home, on the sea, or among the heathen. The church will also see how much reason there is for her to pray earnestly and constantly for those she has sent into foreign fields, to do the work which God commanded her to do.

The main building went rapidly up so that Mr. C. thought best to return to Palmas to remove Mrs. C. and the goods before the heavy rains should set in. The first week in April he returned, leaving brother Sawyer and wife at the Cape, on account of her ill health. He moved into his new house in fine spirits; for the first time since his arrival in the country he now felt he had an African home, and as the work advanced he was rejoicing in the prospect of being able soon to give increased attention to the more immediate duties of his calling.

God was pleased to give Mr. Canfield strength and perseverance to overcome all the difficulties in the way of erecting a new mission station, the labour of which cannot be appreciated except by those to whose lot such a duty has fallen. He was abundantly inspired with zeal in the good cause for which he laboured, and cheered with the brightening prospects, which indeed grew brighter and brighter as the buildings grew up, and the time was coming nearer and nearer when he could devote his time more exclusively to study and preaching. But, God who seeth not as man seeth, had determined that he should not live to realize the hopes he had formed. A short time before he was taken sick he wrote me a letter, in which he says, "As a general thing, I do not suffer from the effects of this climate. How long this state of things will last, of course, no one can tell. My constitution may be gradually, even now, wearing away; of this I am not aware. I do not look forward with any anxiety on this point, except if it please the Lord I should like to be the honoured instrument, in the hands of God, of planting a church on these shores. I trust there is no unsanctified ambition in this desire. I fear there is often too much of this world in all my thoughts and labours. If this is the case, God will humble me, and I pray that he will." "I find that the business of commencing a mission station in this land requires more than all the powers of one man." And so indeed it has proved, for from the effect of his labour and excessive care and responsibility, and the miasmatic influence of the climate, he was taken sick on the 22d of April, with a very severe attack of the bilious remittent fever of the coast. He was in bed till the 28th when he seemed much better and sat up a little, the same night he had a relapse which continued to increase till he was brought very low, and died from its effects yesterday the 7th instant.

I cannot learn that the relapse was caused by any imprudence. It most probably occured because the disease had not been eradicated, but only temporarily assuaged.

The affliction was a dark and trying one from its commencement to Mrs. Canfield. She was there almost entirely alone with him, his nurse, physician and directress of the household. But God had kind and friendly aid at hand to lessen those cares, that might have buried her in the same grave with him. About the fifth day of his relapse, Capt. Lawlin came in here, having on board of his vessel as passengers, Mrs. Dr. A. E. Wilson and Mrs. Stocker of Cape Palmas, also Dr. R. Mc Dowall, formerly Colonial Physician to the colony, both at Bassa, and at Cape Palmas. They all came on shore and were left by Capt. L. while he proceeded on his voyage to return in about ten days. I too was at the same time at Sinoe, a distance of about fifteen miles on my way down there, to spend some time with Mr. and Mrs. C. The timely and very kind attendance of the ladies relieved Mrs. C. very much, and the good nursing, with the medical advice of Dr. Mc D alleviated, we have no doubt, the sufferings of Mr. C. and perhaps enabled his strength to hold out against the disease a few days. To give you an idea in some measure of the special providence of God in sending so many to lend a helping hand just at such a time, I have but to tell you that, on the second or third day after our arrival Mrs. Canfield was quite sick. Mrs. Wilson was quite unfit for the fatigue of watching, Cecilia was sick with chill and fever, and Dr. Mc D. was very much complaining.

To-day we have buried Mr. C. and have given him a decent and Christian burial. I sent the boat to Sinoe, with an invitation to the Rev. J. S. Payne of the Methodist Episcopal church to come and attend; he did so; the services commenced about 11 o'clock. Mr. P. spoke very appropriately from the text, John chap. xiii. ver. 7: "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shall know hereafter." After the services his remains were deposited in a spot selected by himself. The fact of his selecting a place of burial shows us that the thought of death was ever before him. But we need not such expressions of his fear of God, and calm contemplation of the time when he should be removed from his labours to his rest above, "that rest which remaineth for the people of God," for the day and night before he died, he was conscious that he could not survive, and after giving Mrs. C. and myself a few directions about the mission affairs, he devoted all his strength till near the last moment, in impressing upon us all the same foundation of Christian's hope. When asked if he found the Saviour still precious, he answered inquiringly, "the Saviour precious to me? Yes! indeed very precious; in Christ alone is all my hope." He prayed his sins might none of them remain unforgiven, "and assured us that he would not give up his hope for the world, and all that was in it."

To his wife he said, "God will take me away; I cannot wait for you?" Being asked if he was sorry he came to Africa, he said, No! and expressed a wish that the Christians of America would carry on the work. He "hoped," he said, to meet us all in heaven. "Yes," said he, "there will be some there from Africa too, as well as from all the other quarters of the globe." He evinced to us all, in his peaceful and happy resignation, how a Christian may die, and constrained us to say, one and all, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and my last end be like his.

His request, on his death-bed, was that Mrs. C. should go home to America by the first opportunity, and as a medical man I approve the request, for the climate affects her peculiarly.

The sacred hymns and songs Mr C. so much loved to sing when health were very precious to him in his dying hours; even when too much exhausted to talk with us, he made several efforts to sing.

ACCOUNTS FROM MADRID.

The Royal levee held on the 8th was extremely brilliant, and the ceremony in which the Ministry informed HER MAJESTY of the wish of the nation that she should be declared of age was extremely imposing. Next to the QUEEN stood the Infant Don FRANCISCO DE PAULA, his wife the Infanta, and their son. All the members of the corps diplomatique present in Mardrid, the grandees of Spain, the nobility, the general officers, and all the authorities attended on the occasion. It was in presence of this distinguished audience that the President of the Council delivered the following address:—

"Madam,—The Government of the nation, with which we have been charged for some days, in the name of your Majesty, was certain that the last Regency could only prolong for a short period its power de facto, which has now been virtually ended by its own serious faults, and by the wish of the people: but we conceive, and we even had private reasons to hope, that that power, finishing in so deplorable a manner at the extremity of Spain, would have divested itself honourably on quitting our shores of an authority which it should have resigned at a more opportune moment. This, however, has not been the case, whether the individual who held it remained deaf to the last to the unanimous voice of the nation, as he so obstinately refused to hearken to the voice of the Congress of Deputies, or whether the excessive and incredible care he took to avoid personal risks prevented him from bestowing his attention to matters of higher moment and to the situation and dignity of the Government.

"The present Government in the mean time needs not any past act in order to complete its legal existence. The mode of providing pro tem, ore. for the regal power, and consequently for every power exercised in its name, has been defined by the Constitution; and the Ministry, called upon by all the provinces and recognized by them, has again assembled for that purpose.

"The moment has accordingly arrived to explain to Spain and to all foreign nations who have acknowledged the Government of your Majesty, the mode in which it is to be provisionally carried on, but there is for us a sacred duty, which we hasten to fulfil in this solemn moment.

"The national opinion, which, in supporting the grand work undertaken by the dissolved Cortes, has removed the obstacles lying in the way of its consolidation, does not look forward to transitory, and consequently feeble, powers to repair the great evils which the country has suffered; a wise and strong Administration can alone realize the advantages which the people justly expect to derive from a representative Government. The nation entertains the wish, the nation feels the necessity, of being governed by your Majesty herself; but your Majesty desires to hear the national will expressed by the Cortes, which are shortly to meet, and to take before them the oath required by the Constitution, and which the Cortes can alone receive from a constitutional Sovereign.

"Happy day when the two legislative bodies being constituted, the reign of your Majesty shall commence.

"The very announcement of the proximity of this new era was the means of effecting the reconciliation of Spaniards, which was as generously offered by some as it was nobly and advantageously accepted by others.

"Thus your Majesty may accept the services of all, and the nation reckoning so great a number of sons, illustrious by their learning, their courage, and virtues, the reign of your Majesty will attain that degree of prosperity to which it has a right to aspire, and honourably occupy the place which is assigned to Spain among the Powers of Europe. The political question has been ended by the Constitution of 1837, the question of legitimacy was set at rest by the issue of the war, and with the termination of the Regency there is an end to all turbulent and wicked ambition. May this general and spontaneous movement of the whole nation be the last event of the kind, and may your Majesty, taking for her sole guide the principles of parliamentary government, thus avoid or repress the errors and abuses of power, as well as popular commotions, and reign many years for the happiness and glory of Spain."

The Queen replied—"I have heard with the utmost pleasure the loyal sentiments which the Provisional Government of the nation has expressed to me, and from the day on which I shall have sworn before the Cortes to observe the Constitution of the State, I shall devote myself to secure the happiness of all Spaniards."

When the ceremony was over, the troops drawn up opposite the Palace filed by, shouting "Vivas" in honour of Queen ISABEL.

The Ministry was induced to adopt this important measure by several considerations. It had been stated by ESPARTERO's friends that he did not renounce all hope of recovering his lost authority, that he had positively declared that he would not abdicate, and that once in Lisbon, he would concert measures with his partisans in Estremadura and Gallicia, to revive the civil war. Although little importance was attached to these menaces, the Ministry deemed it expedient to divest ESPARTERO of all official character. On the other hand, the friends of the ex-Queen CHRISTINA were anxious to enable her to return immediately to Spain, and this could only be effected by the declaration of the majority of ISABEL. General NARVAEZ, on being asked by a distinguished foreigner if the ex-QUEEN intended to visit Marurid shortly, replied, "Certainly; it is but fair that her misfortunes should end with the minority of her daughter." Don FRANCISCO DE PAULA, or rather Donna CARLOTA, and their partisans were not idle; the latter loudly talked of investing the Prince with the Regency until the month of October, 1844. Several meetings had already been held for the purpose, under the presidency of Count PARSENT. The Ministry, however, was watching their proceedings, and to defeat their plans it resolved at once to proclaim the QUEEN of age.

The Gazette publishes several decrees, pronouncing the dissolution of the corps of operation, the staff, and battalions of volunteers organized during the insurrection.

The Central Juta of Gallicia had not yet recognized the Government.

According to El corresponsal, an Ayacucho faction, determined to follow the banner of ESPARTERO, had formed itself in the mountains of Toledo.

The Minister of Finance had realized a loan of 24,000,000 reals, which the bank of San Fernando and the capitalists of Mardrid had agreed to advance, in return for bills on the Havannah. It was thought that General O'DONNELL would shortly leave for Cuba.—The Times.

LAUNCH OF THE GREAT BRITAIN IRON STEAM-SHIP.

The Great Britain is the largest vessel which has been constructed since the days of Noah. The time occupied in her construction so far amounts to about three years and a half. After the Great Western had successfully demonstrated the practicability of navigating the Atlantic ocean by steam, it was resolved to prepare another ship of similar dimensions as quickly as possible—the experience derived from the Great Western induced the managers to determine upon making a vessel as much superior in size and tonage over the Great Western, as that well-known steamer was over every steam ship known. The objects attained in iron-built ships are the great diminution of cost, their safety, durability, speed, great capacity for stowage, strength combined with lightness, economy in repairs and draft of water. In addition to this novelty in the construction of the Great Britain is the absence of paddle-wheels and boxes. The Archimdean screw will be used. The burthen is 3,600 tons register; the Great Western is 1,600 tons. The Great Britain will carry double the quantity of the renowned Great Western, and be flying light afterwards. She will be propelled by engines of 1,000 horse power combined; the length from figure-head to taffrel is 322 feet; length of keel 289 feet, extreme width 50 feet six inches; she has four decks, the upper deck is flush, and is 308 feet long; the second deck consists of two promenade saloons, the aft or first 110 feet six inches by 22 feet, and the forward, or second class, 67 feet by 21 feet nine inches. The third deck consists of the dining saloons, the grand saloon measuring 96 feet six inches by 30 feet, and the second class 61 feet by 21 feet nine. The whole of the saloons are eight feet three inches high, and surrounded by sleeping berths, of which there are twenty-six, with single beds, and 113 containing two, giving 252 berths. This large number, is exclusive of the accommodation which could be prepared on the numerous sofas. The fourth deck is appropriated for the reception of cargo, of which 1,200 tons will be carried, in addition to 1,000 tons of coal. In the after part of the vessel there is a fresh water tank, placed underneath this deck, and in the fore part there is an air chamber from the boiler to the bulkhead. The forecastle is intended for the officers and sailors' mess-rooms and sleeping berths, with the sail-rooms underneath. The engines and boilers occupy a space of 80 feet, in the middle portion of the vessel. The engine-room and the cooking establishment are situated in this part of the ship. There are three boilers, these are heated by 24 fires, and will contain 200 tons of water. There are four engines, of 250 horse power each, the cylinders of which are seven feet four inches in diameter. The chimney is 39 feet high, and eight feet in diameter. She is fitted with six masts, the highest of which is 74 feet above deck. The quantity of canvass carried will be about 1,700 square yards, she will be fitted with the patent wire rigging, the hull is divided into four water-tight compartments, and the quantity of coal consumed will be about 60 tons per day; upwards of 1,500 tons of iron have been used in her construction and that of the engines and boilers; the draught of water when laden will be sixteen feet, and the displacement about 3,200 tons; the plates of the keel are from one inch to three quarters of an inch thick, and the other plates about half an inch thick; she is double rivetted throughout; the ribs are formed of angle iron six inches by three and a half inches by half an inch at the bottom of the vessel, and seven-sixteenths thick at top; the mean distance of the ribs is fourteen inches from centre to centre. All these ribs will be doubled; the distance is then in-

THE FLAG OF THE FREE.

'Tis Columbia's Banner—it floats o'er the brave—
'Tis the fairest unfurled over the land or the wave;
But though brightest in story and matchless in fight,
'Tis the herald of mercy as well as of might.
In the cause of the wrong'd may it ever be first—
When tyrants are humbled and fetters are burst:
Be "Justice" the war shout, and dastard is he
Who would scruple to die 'neath the flag of the free.

It may trail over the halyards, a bullet-torn rag
Or flutter in shreds from the battlement crag
Let the shot whistle through it as fast as it may,
Till it sweep the last glorious tatter away—
What matter! we'd hoist the blue jacket on high,
Or the soldier's red sash from the spear head should fly
Though it were but a ribband, the foeman should see
The proud signal, and own it—the flag of the free!

Have we ever look'd out from a far foreign shore
To mark the gay pennon each passing ship bore;
And watch'd every speck that arose on the foam,
In hope of glad tidings from country and home;—
Has our straining eye caught the fond colours at last.
And seen the dear bark bounding on to us fast?
Then, then have our hearts learnt how precious can be Columbia's fair banner—the flag of the free!

SOMETHING NEW.

Since man by sin has lost his God,
He seeks creation through,
And vainly strives for solid bliss
In trying something new.

Could I but call all Europe mine,
The Indies and Peru,
My soul would feel an aching void,
And still want something new.

But when we know a Saviour's love,
All good in him we view;
Our soul forsakes its vain delights,
In Christ finds something new.

The joy the dear Redeemer gives
Will guide us safely through,
Nor need we ever change again,
For Christ is always new.

From the Friend.

THE BULLOCK'S HEAD:

OR,

"A FRIEND IN NEED IS A FRIEND INDEED."

BY BEN BARLEYCORN.

Do not imagine, my worthy reader, that every little production of the writer is the work of his own imagination altogether, and intended only for the amusement of his agricultural friends, during a winter evening, or foul summer's day. Many of his communications have truth for their origin, and none more so than the following little story, which, it is hoped, may be instrumental in producing some good, although, compared with the famous contributions from Mattakees and Dancing Hill, it may be thought of no great import.

It was a cold, and chilly morning; I stood conversing with a friend near the old cradle of Liberty, when I was accosted by an apparently forlorn bystander with a request to contribute a few cents to buy his children some bread. It was an affecting appeal to my sensibility; but I was determined not to be deceived in the case, as sometimes I had been, and egregiously imposed upon; therefore the following dialogue took place between us.

"I must know to whom I give my money."

"My name, sir, is John Marlow; I am a cooper by trade. I had once a little property, bnt have been unfortunate, and lost it all by reason of sickness and ill usage. I have a wife and young family—four boys and one girl, and, sir, it is a truth, I find hard steerage and scanty rations. I am willing to work at any thing I can do, yet it is but now and then I can find a job, whereby to earn a trifle."

"Well, you talk sensibly; but I fear that you now and then take a little drop of the ardent."

That's no more than speaking truth. The poor, sir, as well as the rich, seek to 'drive dull care away;' it is trouble and bad companions that inclines me to drink; could I get wherewithal to sustain my little ones, I'd say with all my heart, away with all drinking."

"Very well; be resolved; I'll try you; go with me."

I was determined to make trial to save this unfortunate fellow and his family, if possibe. Accordingly I furnished him from a cook house with a kettle of chocolate and a plenty of bread, and I went with him, witout delay, to his humble abode, where poverty and wretchedness presented themselves in all their deformity. One small room answered for parlour, for kitchen, and for lodging. Here was the wife, sorrowful and suffering. She showed evidence of having seen better days, and of native spirit and smartness; but though there was a willingness on her part to exert herself, yet she was totally without the means. A broken pine table, a bottomless chair, a little broken crockery, an iron pot, a knife and fork or two, with a straw bed and scanty covering of various rags, &c. in one corner, seemed to compose the whole of their furniture. I thought to myself, "well, Ben, you have something to do now." The poor naked children became as merry as crickets, at the prospect of a plentiful meal, and I had the cheering satisfaction of administering both to the comfort and the joy of this most wretchedly needy family.

"I will go ahead in this business now," said I to myself, "and see what it will come to." I told Marlow and his wife that, if they had the disposition to help themselves, they should not lack the means. They both, with tears of gratitude, expressed their warmest thanks, and manifested the utmost desire to do all they could; but I made it a sine qua non that ardent spirits should be totally dispensed with. At this the wife expressed her most decided satisfaction, saying that rum had been their worst enemy. Marlow gave strong assusances that he would meddle no more with liquor. And now I took him to the market, telling him that I would give him a chance to help himself. With a ninepenny bit, which I gave him, he purchased an ox-head. This he took home, and his wife boiled the flesh from the bones, which with an additional supply of bread gave them several hearty meals. The fat or grease, she was careful to save by itself, which Marlow took to the soapboiler's to sell; but from his appearance he was suspected of being a thief, Such is one of the misfortunes to which the poor are sometimes liable. The article was taken from him; but I had the satisfaction of seeing it restored, and of recommending him as a customer to the soapboiler. Two ox-heads were his next purchase. with which he went through the same process as before; and thus following up the trade, he soon found himself with money in his pocket. He was careful to keep aloof from his old tippling associates. I took care to neglect nothing on my part, but watched him constantly. I soon found to my joy that I had effected a good purpose; that his habits and feelings and spirits, were entirely changed; what was needful in his family he was supplied with; his wife was happy, his children were clothed, and sent to school; and there was tidiness and comfort—cheerful looks and joyful hearts in the little habitation.

Marlow was faithful, and for a long time, till I excused his being thus particular, never failed weekly to render to me an account of his stewardship. By my advice he purchased a wood-saw and horse, and lost no opportunity to use them, as often as he could. He was found to be exact and honest, and therefore was much employed in several respectable and wealthy families. He also procured a handcart, with which he carned considerable; and finally as business increased, he found it to his advantage to own a horse and wagon, which he purchased, and so, as he said, he "drove ahead." Thus proceeding step by step, and with care and caution, he rose from the slough of misery, intemperance and poverty to a comfortable and respectable living. His family was well and suitably provided for, and the enjoyment of the present, with good prospect of future success, made all cheerful and happy. In this prosperous condition was the family of John Marlow many years ago, when I departed from the New England metropolis, and took up my abode in another state. I did not forget this, my protegee, but made enquiries after him whenever I had an opportunity, and had the pleasure of hearing that he still continued on in the "full tide of successful experiment;" till at length I was told that he had left Boston and moved into the country; but to what particular part I could not learn. I had long considered Marlow safe and sure, and that no special interference of mine on his behalf was any further necessary; and the satisfaction arising from the reflection of having lent him a helping hand in time of need was such, I feel assured, as none can know but those who may have experienced it. He had become a respectable, industrious citizen, and an honour to society, as the sequel will show.

Recently, while journeying in the interior of New York state, I put up for the night at an inn in a village of the Genesee territory. An arbitration of some importance had called together a large collection of people at the place. Having a yankee's curiosity, after taking some refreshment, I also made one of the spectators of the court room. The crowd was great, as is generally the case at one of these country trials, and it was difficult to get sight at their honours, as the gentlemen of the reference were frequently styled. Several times the name of Marlow struck my ear. "Marlow will do justice," said some one. "They have got the right man in the centre," another observed. "Yes, yes," replied a third, "Marlow is both wise and honest, and can see as far through a millstone as any one." I was at once impressed with the thought that this might be my old acquaintance, and made an effort to get a view of the court; and, to my astonishment and admiration, there to be sure, sat, chairman and chief arbitrator, my own John Marlow, once the needy and helpless son of charity. My curiosity now drew me from the court room to an interview with the landlord, from whom I learned that Marlow was one of his neighbours—a man of character and property, a magistrate, and held in high esteem for his good understanding and integrity; that he had lived in the place several years, and owned an excellent farm, which he well understood how to manage, &c.

The next morning after breakfast, I made haste to visit his family, and the reader will at once believe that it was a most interesting meeting. I found that Marlow had persevered in his good purposes far beyond my utmost expectation, and prosperity had been on his side in almost every thing. His family were now mostly adults: some of his children were abroad and some at home, but all doing well. His wife, notable, industrious and attentive, had, on her part, been a kind and careful mother. I saw nothing in doors or out, about any part of the premises, but what indicated a good husband and a good wife. In fact, peace and prosperity were inmates of the family, and contentment sat upon every brow. In agricultural pursuits Marlow was something more than a common farmer; he was an experimentalist, and corresponded more or less with the great cultivator of Albany—the far famed Judge Buel. Such I found John Marlow now, to my highest heartfelt joy and satisfaction. I tarried with him until the next morning, and had a most agreeable visit. When I was about to leave this happy family, I looked around upon his extensive and fertile possessions and expressed my admiration of them; "but you must remember, sir," said he, "that you first planted the seed of this great growth. It is the produce of a single bullock's head.

A SLIGHT DIFFERENCE.—A person in Dudley, a smoth-bottle-maker, having lived several years with a woman named Bradley, by whom he had children, deserted her, and was to have been married to a Miss Lane, but the bride on the wedding-day lent her dress and veil to Miss Bradley, and the faithless lover was actually married to her instead of his second choice.

THE DEATH OF POMPEY THE GREAT.

"Meantime, the boat approaching, Septimius spoke first, addressing Pompey, in Latin, by the title of Imperator. Then Achillas salyted him in Greek, and desired him to come into the boat, because the water was very shallow towards the shore, and a galley must strike upon the sands. At the same time they saw several of the king's ships getting ready, and the shore covered with troops, so that if they would have changed their minds, it was then too late; besides, their distrust would have furnished the assassins with a pretence for their injustice. He, therefore, embraced Cornelia, who lamented his sad exit before it happened, and ordered two centurions, one of his enfranchised slaves, named Philip, and a servant called Scenes, to get into the boat before him. When Achillas had hold of his hand, and he was going to step in himself, he turned to his wife and son, and repeated that verse of Sophocles:

Seek'st thou a tyrant's door; then farewell freedom!
Though free as air before————

These were the last words he spoke to them.

"As there was a considerable distance between the galley and the shore, and he observed that not a man in the boat showed him the least civility, or even spoke to him, he looked at Septimius, and said, 'Methinks, I remember you to have been my fellow soldier;' but he answered only with a nod, without testifying any regard or friendship. A profound silence again taking place, Pompey took out a paper, in which he had written a speech in Greek, that he designed to make to Ptolemy, and amused himself with reading it.

"When they approached the shore, Cornelia, with her friends in the galley, watched the event with great anxiety. She was a little encouraged, when she saw a number of the king's great officers coming down to the strand, in all appearance to receive her husband, and do him honour. But the moment Pompey was taking hold of Philip's hand, to raise himself with more ease, Septimius came behind, and ran him through the body; after which Salvius and Achillas also drew their swords. Pompey took his robe in both hands, and covered his face; and without saying or doing the least thing unworthy of him, submitted to his fate, only uttering a groan, while they despatched him with many blows. He was then just fifty-nine years old, for he was killed the day after his birthday.

"Cornelia, and her friends in the galley, upon seeing him murdered, gave a shriek that was heard to the shore, and weighed anchor immediately. Their flight was assisted by a brisk gale as they had got out more to sea: so that the Egyptians gave up their design of pursuing them.

"The murderers having cut off Pompey's head, threw the body out of the boat, naked, and left it exposed to all who were desirous of such a sight. Philip staid till their curiosity was satisfied, and then washed the body with sea-water, and wrapped it in one of his own garments, because he had nothing else at hand. The next thing was to look out for wood for the funeral pile; and casting his eyes over the shore, he spied the old remains of a fishing boat; which, though not large, would make a sufficient pile for a poor naked body that was not quite entire.

"While he was collecting the pieces of plank, and putting them together, an old Roman, who had made some of his first campaigns under Pompey, came up, and said to Philip, "Who are you that are preparing the funeral of Pompey the Great? Philip answered, 'I am his freeman.' 'But you shall not,' said the old Roman, 'have this honour entirely to yourself. As a work of piety offers itself, let me have a share in it; that I may not absolutely repent my having passed so many years in a foreign country, but, to compensate many misfortunes, may have the consolation of doing some of the last honours to the greatest general Rome ever produced.' In this manner was the funeral of Pompey conducted.

"Next day Lucius Lentulus, who knew nothing of what had passed, because he was upon his voyage from Cyprus, arrived upon the Egyptian shore, and as he was coasting along, saw the funeral pile, and Philip, whom he did not yet know, standing by it. Upon which he said to himself, 'Who has finished his days, and is going to leave his remains upon this shore?' adding, after a short pause, with a sigh, 'Ah Pompey the Great! perhaps you mayest be the man.' Lentulus soon after went on shore, and was taken and slain.

"Such was the end of Pompey the Great. As for Cæsar, he arrived not long after in Egypt, which he found in great disorder. When they came to present the head, he turned from it, and the person that brought it as a sight of horror. He received the seal, but it was with tears. The device was a lion holding a sword. The two assassins, Achillas and Photinus, he put to death: and the king, being defeated in battle, perished in the river. Theodotus, the rhetorican, escaped the vengence of Cæsar, by leaving Egypt; but he wandered about, a miserable fugitive, and was hated wherever he went. At last Marcus Brutus, who killed Cæsar, found the wretch in his province of Asia, and put him to death, after having made him suffer the most exquisitive tortures. The ashes of Pompey were carried to Cornelia, who burried them in his lands near Alba.'

The Story of a Villain and his Victim—Woman's Love.—A correspondent of the Boston Bee gives the following account of one of the inmates of the Vermont Lunatic Asylum at Brattleboro':—

Born of wealthy parents, idolized in youth, gratified in the indulgence of her fondest hopes, and perfected in every accomplishment of the day, she was the pride of her family and the belle of the social circle, whose destiny she controlled. One of those enthusiastic beings, who are never satisfied with divided affection, her mind was so exquisitely strung that the least discord afflicted it, and marred the music of the whole. Some three years since, she was introduced to a young naval officer, who soon wooed and won her, but villain like, having sported awhile with the choice flame which nothing but summer and sunshine should gladden, and after having by sedulous attentions appropriated the rare gem to himself, left it exposed to the rude blast of winter, until chilled and crushed, it has fallen to the ground, seared and blasted like the withered leaf of autumn.

The story of his perfidy reached her ears, but woman-like, she would not credit aught against the idol of her heart, till her own eyes perused in the papers of a neighboring city his marriage with another The news came like a thunderbolt upon her, withering and destroying her. In vain did her friends endeavour to cheer her desponding heart by travel and the kindest attention. Now a blighted and spirit-broken thing, she no more bounded on the green like the fawn, or carolled in the sunshine like the lark winging its flight to heaven's gate, a fearful change had come over her, and reason soon deserted its throne, leaving her a maniac. She takes no interest in the movements of the other patients, but sits apart, all day looking from a window, upon the boundless prospect before her. Every attempt to direct her mind, has been, as yet, unsuccessful, and though passionately found of music in her moments of reason, the least sound is now displeasing to her, and she retires to her apartment, closing the door after her, as if to seclude herself from the society of others. What has the man to answer for who has thus destroyed a virgin flower in the pride of its bloom and beauty!

A WOOD-SAWYER'S ADVICE TO HIS SON.—"Ven you arrives to the dignity of sawin' wood, Laffyette, if you is ever elewated to that ere profession, mind and saw the biggest stick fust, cause vy? you'll only have the little ones to saw when you gets tuckered out. Ven you eats pie, as I 'opes you lives to be a man, alwus eat the crust fust, 'cause the crust aint a good thing to top off with, 'specially if it's thugh and thick as sold leather. Ven you piles up wood, alwuz pile the big uns to the bottom, alwuz, Laffyette, 'cause its almighty hard exercise to lift' em to the top o' the pile. These are the r'sults of hobservation, Laffyette, an' may be depended on, an' its all for your good, that I say it."

"Vy, farden," respon led the young hopeful, "vot a 'normous 'sperlance you must a had!"

Affecting Suicides.—Two young Choctaws, recently returned from school in Kentucky, to their homes on Red River, committed suicide; one because he found his relatives in extreme poverty; and the other because he found the affection of his father estranged from him, his mother having died during his absence.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—The relation of the following incident, which was lately handed to us by a correspondent, may be found interesting to our readers. About eight or nine years ago, when the present Sir John Maxwell was M. P. for the town of Paisley, a worthy elector and keen politician of the burgh had occasion to visit London in the way of business. One day, being desirous to hear the debaters in the House of Commons, he went to the lobby in hopes of getting admission through the influence of Sir John, whom he expected to meet there, and with whom he was personally acquainted. He waited for a considerable time without being so fortunate as to meet the respected baronet, and at last, from anxiety, was induced to accost an elderly gentleman, dressed in a blue surtout, who was passing at the time—saying, "that he had come up to Lunnon frae the toon o' Paisley and was unco anxious to hear the debates in the hoos; and would be muckle obleeged if he could get into the inside." The stranger smiled, and said that he could more easily get him admitted into the House of Lords, which was quite at hand, and, desiring him to follow, on reaching the entrance, gave a nod to the doorkeeper, when the Paisley elector was at once admitted into the interior of the house; but not before he had learned, with equal surprise and gratification, that the individual to whom he was indebted for this act of courtesy was no less a personage than his Grace the Duke of Wellington. It may be unnecessary to add, that the delighted Paisleyan has ever since considered the duke as "one of the ceevilest men in a' the warld," and been in the habit of relating the incident over and over again to one and all of his friends and acquaintances.—Glasgow Courier.

THE BELIEVER'S JOY.

His preparation for a better world is a continual feast and affords him abundant matter for far greater joy and satisfaction, than all the accumulated blessings of this life. In comparison with his delights, what is the wealth of Tantalus, Licinius' hand, Cleopatra's jewels, Agathocles' golden vessels, the property of Cæsar, or the triumphs of Alexander? They are but the dust of the balance, the mote in the sunbeam!

BE YE MERCIFUL.

Christ chose those to preach mercy, who had received most mercy, as St. Peter and St. Paul, that they might be examples of what they taught.

THE BOOR HUNT.

"We accepted the invitation, and on our arrival at the chateau, found that the hunt had already commenced; but, as the park was enclosed by walls, we could easily join the party; we knew, too, that the horn would be sounded at intervals, and by riding in the direction, we could enjoy the pleasure of the chase without the risk of fatigue. M. de Lucienne had remained behind, to accompany his wife and daughter, and ourselves, but his son had gone to lead the hunt.

"At mid-day, the horn sounded nearer, and we heard the same note more frequently repeated. M. de Lucienne informed us, that this was what sportsmen call the view hallo; a signal that the boar was getting tired; and that if we wished to go, it was time to mount our horses. The next moment, one of the hunters came up at full speed, bringing us a message from Paul, that it could not be long before the boar would stand at bay, whereupon, M. de Lucienne hung a carbine at his saddle bow, and we mounted, and galloped off. The two elder ladies walked to a pavilion, round which the chase was led.

"We soon joined the hunt; and whatever might have been my repugnance, at first, to taking part in the sport; the winding of the horn, the rapid motion of the horses, the cry of the hounds, and the shouts of the hunters, soon proved contagious; and Lucy and I galloped on, half laughing and half afraid, and kept up with the best horsemen of them all. Two or three times we caught sight of the boar, crossing different alleys of the park, and each time the dogs were closer upon him. He at length stood still, planted himself against the trunk of a huge oak, and turned upon the back. It was on the edge of a glade, just beneath the windows of the pavilion, so that my mother and Madame de Lucienne, were just in the right place to lose nothing of the catastrophe.

"The hunters were ranged in a circle about forty or fifty paces from the place of combat. The dogs, excited by a long chase, had all thrown themselves upon the boar, which had almost disappeared beneath their motley and moving mass. Occasionally, was one of the assailants tossed eight or ten feet in the air, and sent, howling and bleeding to the ground; yet, wounded as he was, he would again throw himself into the midst of his fellows, and renew the attack. The combat had lasted scarcely a quarter of an hour, and already were ten or twelve of the dogs mortally wounded. This bloody and savage spectacle now became extreemly painful to me, and it seemed that the same effect had been produced on the other spectators; for I heard Madame de Lucienne's voice, crying, 'Enough, enough, I entreat you, Paul, no more of this!' The young man instantly sprang from his horse, with his carbine in his hand, advanced a few paces towards the boar, took aim in the midst of the dogs, and fired. At the same moment, for this passed with the rapidity of lightning, the pack opened, the wounded boar passed through the midst of it, and was upon Paul, before even Madame de Lucienne had time to utter a cry. The young man fell, and the furious animal, instead of pursuing his course, halted in his rage over the prostrate form of his new adversary.

"There was now a terrible silence Madame de Lucienne, as pale as death, with her arms extended toward her son, tried to speak, but could only murmur in an almost inarticulate voice, 'Save him'" Her husband, the only person present who was armed, snatched his carbine, and levelled it at the animal; but, as Paul lay, the slightest misdirection of the ball might have occasioned the death of the son by the father's own hand. M. de Lucienne trembled excessively, and feeling his utter inability, let fall his weapon, and rushing toward Paul, shouted for assistance, and was followed by the other huntsmen.

"Just at this moment a young man sprang from his horse, and seized the carbine. 'Make way there!' cried he, in that firm tone of command which is sure to be obeyed, and the hunters stepped back to let pass the messenger of death.

"All eyes were now turned on the marksman and his fearful aim. There he stood, as calm and collected as if he were firing at a common target. The peice was slowly raised, and when it had reached a certain elevation, both man and gun became as motionless as if carved out of stone: he fired, and the wild-boar, mortally wounded, fell, and rolled a few feet from Paul, who, being thus relieved of his adversary, raised himself on one knee, with his hunting knife ready in his hand. This was, however, needless; for the ball had been sent by a hand too unerring, to fail of being mortal. Madame de Lucienne shrieked and fainted; Lucy faltered on her horse, and would have fallen had not one of the prickers supported her. I dismounted, and hastened to Madame de Lucienne, and the sportsmen all gathered round Paul and the dead boar, with the exception of the marksman, who, having sped the ball, had quietly turned away, and rested the carbine against the trunk of a tree.

"Madame de Lucienne came to herself in the arms of her husband and son. Paul had only received a slight wound in the thigh, so rapidly had all passed that I have been relating: and her first emotions over, Madame de Lucienne looked round for her son's deliverer, to whom she had all a mother's gratitude to express. Her husband, guessing her wishes, led the young hunter forward; she seized his hand, and tried to thank him, but burst into tears, and could only articulate, 'Oh, M. de Beureval!'

"It was he, then?" exclaimed I.

"Yes, it was he;" continued my companion. "I saw him thus for the first time, surrounded by the gratitude of a whole family, and amid all the illusion of the exciting scene of which he had just been the hero. He was a young man, rather below than above the ordinary size, extremely pale, with dark eyes, and very light hair. At the first glance he appeared scarcely twenty, but on looking more attentively, some slight wrinkles were discernable at the corners of the eyes, widening toward the temples; and there was also a scarcely perceptible furrow across the brow, indicated the habitual presence of some sombre thought. Pale, thin lips, remarkably fine teeth, and womanish hands, completed his tout ensemble, which, at first, inspired me with repugnance rather than sympathy; so cold, amid the general excitement, appeared the countenance of the man who was in the very act of receiving the thanks of a mother for the safety of her son.

"The chase was over, and the party returned to the chateau. On entering the drawing-room, Count Horace de Beureval excused himself from remaining to dinner, alledging that he had an engagement in Paris. It was urged that he was forty miles off, and that he had hardly four hours to perform the journey; but he replied, with a smile, that his horse had become accustomed, in his service, to that sort of travelling, and ordered his servant to bring him to the door.

"This servant was a Malay, whom Count Horace had brought with him from India, (where he had once been to receive a considerable inheritance,) and who still wore the costume of his country. Though this man had been three years in France, he spoke only his native language, of which the count knew enough to make himself understood by him. He obeyed his master with wonderful promptness, and, from the windows of the drawing-room, we soon saw the two horses led up, bearing themselves most proudly. The gentlemen were unanimous in praise of their pedigree, and they were indeed, as well as I could judge, magnificent animals. The Prince of Conde had been desirous of purchasing them, but Count Horace, having offered double the price his royal highness had been willing to give, had succeeded in obtaining them.

"The whole party attended the count to the door. Madame de Lucienne seemed to feel that she had not been allowed time enough to express half her gratitude, and pressing his hands, she entreated the count to repeat his visit. He promised to do so, at the same time throwing around the company a rapid glance, which made me cast down my eyes; for it seemed to me, I know not why, that he addressed himself to me in particular. When I again looked up, the count was on horseback; he bowed once more to Madame de Lucienne, made a general salutation to the crowd on the steps, waved his hand to Paul, in sign of friendly adieu, and giving his horse the rein, set off at full speed, and was out of sight in a few seconds.

"Everybody remained on the spot looking after him in silence: there was something extraordinary about this man, which forcibly arrested the attention. He was endowed with one of those powerful organizations, which nature, as if through caprice, sometimes amuses herself by joining to a frame, seemingly too weak for it. To those who did not know him, he had the feeble, languid appearance of one laboring under some malady; but by his companions he was known to be a man of iron, capable of resisting fatigue, subduing emotion, and defying difficulty. Paul had known him, he said, to pass whole nigths at the wine-table or at cards, and the next day, while his comrades were asleep, to set out, without having taken an hour's rest, on a hunt or some other expedition, with fresh companions, whom he tired out like the first; and all this, without manifesting any symton of fatigue, further than greater paleness of complexion, and a dry cough, which was habitual with him, but which on these occasions becaame more frequent.

"I know not why, but to all these particulars I listened with extreme interest. Perhaps the scene I had first witnessed, the sang froid displayed by the count, and my own recent agitation, may account for the attention I paid to every circumstance related of him. Besides, the most artful calculation could have invented nothing better than this sudden departure, leaving the chateau, in a manner, deserted; so extraordinary an impression had the guest who had just taken his departure, produced upon those he left behind him.—New World.

MR. LEDBURY'S ADVENTURES AT EHRENBREITSTEIN.

They had been some time at dinner, so long, that the moon was beginning to give the sun a mild notice it was time for him to quit, by just showing her face above the mountains, when they heard the sound of music in the street, and directly afterwards a girl with a guitar made her appearance at the open window. She was very pretty, with a slighter figure, and darker hair and eyes than is common amongst the German women; and she gazed upon Mr. Ledbury with such a captivating expression of her full, lustrous pupil, rendered more bewitching by its dilation in the twilight, that he was almost in doubt whether one of the maidens he had been thinking about had not risen from the Rhine to meet him. Nor was the enchantment at all dispelled when she began to sing with a clear, melodious voice, some popular German air, accompaning herself on the guitar, and, what, was more extraordinary, with English words, in which, however, a foreign accent was perceptible. This was too much for Mr. Ledbury, who was always keenly alive to the power of female loveliness, and his spectacled eyes twinkled through the smoke of his pipe with the deepest sentiment, until, with the combined effects of the hock, the moon, and the music, he put it beyond all question that some baron's daughter upon the Rhine had fallen in love with him as she saw him pass in the steamer from her father's castle, and had taken this method of disclosing her attachment. With this impression, he was somewhat surprised when, upon the conclusion of the song, the girl came close up to the window, and said in a subdued mysterious tone,

"Does Monsieur wish to buy any fine eau de Cologne or cigars?"

"None, my love," replied Jack in a very off-hand manner, as he produced a full tobacco-blague, in size somewhat less than a carpet-bag.

"Any gloves, brooches, kirchwasser?" again asked the singer.

"No, no, you gipsey, none!" returned Jack. "There, run along," he continued, throwing her some small coin; go on to the Geant. They have no end of travellers there, and all English—think of that."

As the girl smiled at Johnson, and withdrew, Mr. Ledbury's face crimsoned with shame and confusion at the very unceremonious manner in which she imagined she had been treated by his friend. For he had imagined that her appeal to his commercial generosity was a delicate ruse to obtain an interview; and when he saw Jack answer her in such an unconcerned manner, and give her such a trifling amout of coin, he felt assured that her feelings were deeply hurt, and that she had felt in painful humility. So without saying a word, he started up from the table: and hurrying out of the room with a precipitation which at first gave the people of the hotel some slight reason for thinking that his ideas, of payment for what he had regaled upon were rather indistinct, he followed the fair minnesinger, whom he overtook just as she was entering the adjacent hotel, leaving Jack Johnson completely amazed at his excitement. But the spirit of chivalry held an equal sway over Mr. Ledbury's actions with the spirit of wine; and the combination of the two acting upon his natural bland and gentle idiosyncrasy, led him to the commission of most of those daring feats of benevolent gallantry, which it has been our happy lot to chronicle.

He returned in a minute or two, in a very volcanic state, with his head looking as if it only wanted a knock to make it go off with a bang like a detonating ball, and evidently upon the point of communicating some most important fact to his friend, as he exclaimed,

"I say Jack; what do you think?"

"Well, I can't say," replied Johnson, "what is it?"

"She has promised," said Mr. Ledbury, impressively, "to sell me——"

"I don't doubt it," interrupted Johnson.

"Now, Jack, you always make such fun of things! She has promised to sell me some real eau de Cologne at half-price, if I willgo for it after dark; and where to, do you suppose?"

"I don't know," said Jack; "perhaps where glory waits thee, or to Bath"

"No, no," replied Titus, half-vexed; "she will meet me—there!"

And with a very melodramatic expression, he pointed to the opposite side of the river, where the mighty batteries were snarling from the mountain, adding heroically,

"There! in the fortress of Ehrenbreiststem!"

"Why, you are cracked, Leddy," said Johnson; "what are you talking about? You are not going anywhere, surely?"

"Of course I am," returned Mr. Ledbury, somewhat offended. "Think of the romance of the adventure—an appointment on the Rhine, and at Ehrenbreitstem. It's beautiful! I shall go, and you shall accompany me."

Johnson replied: "If I do, I'm—"—and here he hesitated an instant—"I am only anxious to see that you get into no scrape. I think you had better not go."

"Excuse me, Jack," answered Titus. "I would not lose the adventure for the world, and you shall share it."

And Jack, in return, seeing that his friend was bent upon doing something foolish, from which nothing would turn him; consented to accompany him; then, having finished their wine, they strolled towards the Moselle bridge, and, hiring a small boat, amused themselves with rowing about the river, as well as they were able with the rude oars, until the time which Mr. Ledbury had fixed for his appointment.

At length the last glow of sunset, which had long lingered on the horrizon, faded away behind the purple hill, and darkness crept over the Rhine. Lights appeared in the windows of the town, as well as in some of the lazy craft that were lying against the quays, the reflection quivering in long vivid lines upon the tranquil river. Everything was hushed and silent, except the occasional roll of drums upon the opposite side, or the cry of warning from the boatman as he guided his apparrently endless raft of wood down the stream.

"I think we will go now," said Mr Ledbury; "it is about the time. We can pull across, and that will save us going round by the bridge of boats."

Resolved to humour him in whatever he wished, Jack followed all his directions, and in a few minutes their craft touch the foot of the mountain on the other side, immediately under the fortress. Possibly, at this minute, if Johnson had proposed to return, Mr. Ledbury would have offered no opposition; but, as it was, he stepped on shore with an air of great bravery.

"I know where to go," said Titus. "She told me I should see a light in one of the windows of the battlements."

"Now, don't be a fool, Leddy, and spend all your money in trash," courteously observed his friend.

"No, no, Jack." You had better wait here to mind the boat. Good-bye—I shan't be long"

And beginning to ascend the bank, which at this precise spot rose rather abruptly from the water, Mr. Ledbury contrived to whistle some random notes of an impromptu air, indicative of determination and the absence of fear, whilst Jack sat down quietly in the boat, wondering what Titus intended doing, to await his return.

There was very little light to enable him to see his way clearly, but Mr Ledbury, sustaining himself by the idea that he was a spirited young traveller carrying out an adventure of gallantry, scrambled up the mountain immediately unde:

the fortified walls, towards where he imagined the beacon was shining for his guidance Now and then, to be sure, he felt slightly nervous, in spite of all his romance, as he heard the passing tread of the sentinel upon the ramparts over his head, or found himself unexpectedly in the exact line of some mighty piece of ordnance that bristled from the battlements; but he soon got beyond these, going up higher, and higher, until he looked down upon the lamps of Coblentz and its opposite suburb, far beneath him, and glistening in the river.

At last he came to the window, or rather the glazed embrasure, at which, to all appearances, the fair contrabandist was to meet him. As he listened intently he could plainly hear the notes of a guitar in the interior of the building; which was small fort connecting two curtains of the works. But he would not trust himself to make any vocal signal, so he scraped together a handful of dust, and threw it against the window, which was a little higher than his head. There was no reply, nor did the music cease, and Mr. Ledbury, thinking his projectile was not forcible enough, collected a few small pebbles, and again cast them at the pane, one of somewhat larger dimensions than the rest being included by mistake in the handful, which immediately cracked the glass. But the attempt had succeeded, for the guitar was suddenly hushed, and a shadow passed quickly across the window.

"She comes!" thought Titus, approaching closer to the window by climbing up the steps slope of turf that led to it. And placing both his hands upon the sill, he raised his head to a level with the glass, when the casement opened, and he found himself face to face, not with the lady minstrel he had expected, but a gaunt Prussian soldier, of terrific aspect, and cast-iron visage, who savagely demanded in German, "who went there?"

It needed no effort of volition on the part of Mr. Ledbury to loose his hold of the sill, for he dropped down the instant his gaze encountered that of the terrible stranger, as if he had been shot; and coming upon the slanting bank, of course lost his footing as well, and bundled down into the pathway. The sentinel, who ought to have been upon guard outside the building, but had been attracted by the music of the guitar-girl—for she was there belonging in reality to the canteen,—in the supprise of the instant, and before anything could be explained, seized his firelock and discharged it out of the window to give the alarm, not knowing but that Mr. Ledbury might be the chief of some revolutionary party intending to attack the fortress Titus, who expected nothing of a milder character than the simultaneous explosion of fifty mines immediately beneath him, started up at the report; and, as it was answered from above, set off down the steep track as fast as his long legs would carry him. But, had a chain of wires connected everybody in the fortreas with a voltaic battery, the alarm could not have been more sudden and general; for before the echoes of the first gun had well died away, a roll of drums broke out apparently from every direction at once, beating an alarm: and a confusion of hoarse and awful challenges rang from every angle of the fortifications.

On went Mr Ledbury, like an avalanche, driving the gravel before him with his heels, until the big stones bounded down the hill, bringing fifty others along with them, which increased the general confusion. On he went, taking such strides that those remarkable boots of the fairy chronicles would have dwindled into ordinary highlows by comparison; and onward, to all appearance directly at his heels, came the tumult after him. In what direction he was flying he had not the least shade of an idea; he only knew that he was going down the mountain, and that the descent must eventually lead him to the river

Which it did most literally. The distance was nearly accomplished, and ten strides more would have brought him to the bottom of the hill, when a turf upon which he placed his foot gave away beneath him, and he was directly thrown off his legs But this did not arrest his progress, for the declivity was very rapid; and, after sliding a short distance upon his back, he began to roll head over heels down the slope, with a fearful velocity that no living clown could have contested, in the most bustling physical pantomime ever put upon the stage. Every effort to stop his course was in vain. He went on, turning all ways at once, like a roulette ball, until the last piece of ground was cleared, and, with a final wild clutch at nothing, he threw a concluding somersault, and plunged into the cold, dark waters of the Rhine, which roared in his ears with a deafening riot, as he sank directly to the very bottom of the river.—a matter of six or seven feet in debth.

He never knew precisely what followed; but, adapting a favourite passage from various novelists whose works he had read, he was heard to say, "that it was one of those moments when the sensations of years are concentrated into the intensity of a single second." Jack Johnson, upon the very first alarm, had pushed the boat just away from the shore to be ready for a start; and to one of the rakes used to propel it was Titus principally indebted for his preservation, being fished up thereby almost as soon as he touched the water; for he had luckily fallen in close to the spot he started from.—Liverpool Times.

GETTING A LIVING.

The numerous expedients and diverse means resorted to, to get a living in this city are matter of astonishment to the uninitiated who occasionally only make their entree among us, and also to many of our own citizens. These cannot conceive how so many people who throng our streets, and are seen by the stranger apparently unengaged in any visible employment, can possibly contrive to pick up crumbs enough to keep the machinery of life in motion. They little know of the devices that the difficulties of living drive thousands to adopt in a city like this, where so many secret springs of subsistence are opened, which the unpractised eye of the stranger is unable to trace to any satisfactory source of productiveness.—Living as many do, "by their wits," it is no wonder that those whose ample acres, or whose mercantile or mechanical pursuits furnish them, at all times, an adequate support—should become Malthusian in their opinions, and conclude, from evidences before them, that there are more mouths in our commercial metropolis than there are morsels to fill them; and that the growth of population among us, far outstrips the means of production for its present comfort or future support. This is, however, a natural error for strangers to fall into, from which we shall endeavour to extricate them, by proofs of a contrary fact.

Let us then examine the subject somewhat briefly in detail. Look, for instance, at that army almost of badly dressed and bronzed faced women and children, who rise with the dawn, and traverse the streets with coarse empty bags on their shoulders, or baskets on their arms; they are a coterie of either Swiss or Germans, answering in employment to the chiffoniers of Paris, and start at early day to gather the rags, papers, old shoes, pieces of glass, bones, or any other refuse substances they find in the streets or gutters, which they carry to their humble homes, and assort, and sell them to advantage to different manufactories, to be worked up into articles of value. And in this seemingly chance way they pick up and piece out the means for purchasing food and clothing, as well as laying up a small pittance each day besides. Look, again, at those females who also leave their homes at an early hour and wend their way to the docks and slips. These are hucksters or market women, who purchase from the sloops at the wharves the fruits and vegetables they daily vend, and from the profits of which they eke out, not only a living, but lay by something for a rainy day. Others, also who repair to the same wharves and vessels, are those who obtain a living by the vendition of vegetables and fruits, in small shops, in some comparatively unbusiness portions of the city. Many of these thrive by their vocations, and some become comparatively rich.

Look again at that stream of rough clad manhood, hastening with heavy tread to the docks and slips. These are called "along shore men," who traverse the water side for jobs of work, such as fishing wood or lumber, removing the discharged cargoes of vessels, rolling casks and bales and boxes, &c., by which labour they earn their bread.—There, also, are to be seen thousands of boatmen, fishermen, and those who live on or out of the water,—or vend the products of the deep. That morning congregation of young and smiling faces is composed of young females, hieing to their homes, who are daily employed in book binderies and printing offices, folding and stitching the sheets, or putting them on or taking them off the press. Others polish the new printing types, while thousands are employed in sewing, in tailoring, or in shirt, bosom and collar making establishments. Others again are employed at wool assorting and picking—in making umbrellas and gloves, lining or trimming hats and caps, and binding and closing shoes, and in furriers and in fancy hair working establishments. In these and other ways some thirty thousand females obtain a living—and it was computed that at the great revulsion in trade and business some five years ago, when failures were common, that 20,000 females who lived by the use of their needles were thrown out of employment. Most of these to stranger have no visible means of support, and yet they all earn a livelihood. But look also at the swarming thousands of day laborers, hod and stone carriers, earth diggers, carmen, porters—hack and cab drivers, fruit and refreshment venders,—street sweepers, watchmen, lamplighters, workers in stone and wood, and in the various metals, and minerals, and in the long catalogue of employments necessary for the comforts or promotive of the ease and luxuries of man and woman, and you have scores of thousands of both sexes, who get their living with their hand, or by honest industry.

To name all the various branches of business by which the honest get their liging, were almost an endless task. There are some thousands, however, who have invisible and dishonorable means of living, such as the swarms of genteel gamblers, in gay apparel, who like the wolves and jackalls, hunt their prey by night, and fleece of their money the unsuspecting strangers, or the "flats," as these "sharpers" term them.—Tens of thousands of dollars almost nightly are won by these human harpies, whom the vengeance of violated law seldom reaches.

To these may be added, the hundreds of well dressed thieves, burglars, pickpockets, utterers of counterfeit money, &c., who prowl by night and plunder where they can, until justice, slow but sure overtakes them. Thousands also of both sexes live by vice in its various forms, and appear in the streets well dressed and respectable, but yet are mere "whited sepulchres" replete "with all uncleanness." These are, however, generally migeitting in their character, and go where their base vocations are most profitable. If we except the comparatively small number of these, we find four-fifths of our 320,000 inhabitants, of both sexes, who are old enough to labor, industriously and honestly employed. We are litterally a working people, and the aggregate of labor constitutes our wealth. All, despite of difficulties, contrive to live in a state of comfort, compared, to which the population of other countries are destitute and wretched. Thanks to our happy destiny, starvation is a stranger here. The industry, enterprise, skill, and talent of our people will conquer difficulties and earn the means of living though fortune puts on her most forbidding frowns.

SECRECY.—For once that secrecy is formally impressed upon you, it is implied a hundred times by the concurrent circumstances. All that your friend says to you, as to his friend, is intrusted to you only. —Much of what a man tells you in the hours of affliction, in sudden anger, or in sympathy, he has spoken to you as to his own soul.

To repeat what you have heard in social intercourse, is sometimes a sad treachery; and when it is not treacherous, it is often foolish. For you commonly relate but a part of what has happened, and even if you are able to relate that part with fairness, it is still as likely to be misconstrued as a word of many meanings, in a foreign tongue without the context.

There are few conversations which do not imply some degree of mutual confidence, however slight. And in addition to that which is said in confidence, there is generally something which is peculiar, though not confidential, which is addressed to the present company alone, though not confined to their secrecy. It is meant for them, or persons like them, and they are expected to understand it rightly. So that when a man has no scruple in repeating all that he hears to any body that he meets, he pays but a poor compliment to himself; for he seems to take it for granted that what was said in his presence, would have been said, in the same words, at any time, aloud, and in the market place. In short, that he is the average man of mankind, which I doubt much whether any man would like to consider himself.

On the other hand, there is an habitual and unmeaning reverse in some men, which makes secrets without any occasion; and it is the least to say of such things that they are needless. Sometimes it proceeds from an innate shyness or timidity of disposition; sometimes from a temper naturally suspicious; or it may be the result of having been frequently betrayed or oppressed. From whatever cause it comes, it is a failing. As cunning is some men's strength, so this sort of reserve is some men's prudence. The man who does not know when, or how much or to whom to confide, will do well in maintaining a Pythagorian silence. It is his best course. I would not have him change it on any account; I only wish him not to mistake it for wisdom.

That happy union of frankness and reserve which is to be desired, comes not by studying rules, either for candor or caution. It results chiefly from an uprightness of purpose, enlightened by a profound and delicate care for the feelings of others This will go very far in teaching us what to confide, and what to conceal, in our own affairs; what to repeat, and what to suppress in those of other people. The stone in which nothing is seen, and the polished metal which reflects all things, are both alike hard and insensible.

When a matter is made public, to proclaim that it had ever been confided to your secrecy may be no trifling breach of confidence; and it is the only one which is then left for you to commit.

With respect to the kind of people to be trusted, it may be observed that grave proud men are very safe confidants; and that those persons, who have ever had to conduct any business in which secrecy was essential, are likely to acquire a habit of reserve for all occasions.

On the other hand, it is a question whether a secret will escape sooner by means of a vain man or a simpleton. There are some people who play with a secret, until at last it is suggested by their manner to some shrewd person who knows a little of the circumstances connected with it. There are others whom it is unsafe to trust; not that they are vain, and so wear the secret as an ornament; not that they are foolish and so let it drop by accident, not that they are treacherous, and sell it for their own advantage; but they are simple minded people, with whom the world has gone smoothly, who would not themselves make any mischief of the secret which they disclose, and therefore do not see what harm can come of letting it.

Before you make any confidence, you should consider whether the thing you wish to confide is of weight enough to be a secret. Your small secrets require the greatest care. Most persons suppose that they have kept them sufficiently when they have been silent about them for a certain time; and this is hardly to be wondered at, if there is nothing in their nature to remind a person that they were told to him as secrets.

There is sometimes a good reason for using concealment even with your dearest friends. It is that you may be less liable to be reminded of your anxieties when you have resolved to put them aside. Few persons have tact enough to perceive when to be silent, and when to offer you counsel or consolation.

You should be careful not to trust another unnecessarily with a secret which it may be a hard matter for him to keep, and which may expose him to somebody's displeasure, when it is hereafter discovered that he was the object of your confidence. Your desire for aid, or for sympathy, is not to be indulged by dragging other people into your misfortunes.

There is as much responsibility in imparting your own secrets, as in keeping those of your neighbor.—Essays written in the intervals of Business.

THE ATTROCITY OF AMERICAN SLAVERY.

The following revolting anecdote was related to Mr. G. Thompson, by that warm advocate of abolition, Mrs. Child, of the United States:

"A clever young physician, of the name of Wallis, went from Alexandria to a town in the state of Mississippi, and took up his abode in a boarding house. Here he fell in love with a very beautiful youg female who had the management of the establishment. She was slightly colored, but not having sufficient prejudice to prevent him from appreciating her worth, he made her an offer of his hand. The offer was accepted; they were married rather secretly, and he brought her as his wife into the district of Columbia. They had not been very long as man and wife, when one day, an individual dressed in the garb of a gentlemam called upon Dr. Wallis. After some little conversation, the man in a very gruff voice, said, 'Sir, did you not bring a woman from the south with you?' 'No, Sir,' replied Dr. Wallis, 'I am not aware that I did.' 'Why, retorted the other, 'did you not bring your wife from the south.' 'Yes,' replied Dr. Wallis, 'I believe my lady is from the south.' Your lady, as you call her, is my slave, and unless you give me 900 dollars for her at once, I will advertise her as a run-away slave. She is honestly worth 1000 dollars, but as you have married her, I will let you have her for 900. Struck with astonishment, Dr. Wallis said, 'Your slave sir, I don't believe it!' 'Believe it or not,' replied the other, 'you will find it correct; I shall leave the bill, and if you do not send the money to me before such a time to such a hotel (naming the time and place) I will advertise her in all the papers as a run-away slave.' As soon as the man was gone, Dr. Wallis went up stairs to his amiable, and lovely, and accomplished (for by this time he had given the finish to a previously imperfect education) wife, and said, 'My love when I married you, were you a slave?' She burst into tears, and faulteringly said 'I was.' And why did you not tell me this before we were married?' 'I did not dare to tell you,' she replied, 'I feared you would never think of forming an alliance with a slave.' 'Well,' said he, I have found you out; but I will give the 900 dollars, for I love you far too well ever to part with you.' During this time she was deeply agitated, and requested Dr. Wallis to describe to her the individual who had claimed her as his slave. He gave her as accurate a description of the man as he could, and then asked her if it corresponded with her former master. 'Yes,' said she, 'and more than my master; that man is my own father!!!' This is but one of thousands upon thousands of cases which are constantly coming into notice. The blackest features of this system must ever, in a mixed assembly like this, be thrown into the shade altogether."

"While the slave-trader only buys and sells, retaining possession no longer than till he can reach the market, the breeder is engaged in the protracted process of raising human stock! He selects his breeders,' he encourages licentiousness, he rewards, amalgamation, he punishes sterility, he coolly calculates upon the profits of fecundity, takes vengeance for miscarriages, and holds mothers accountable for the continued life and health of their offspring! On the head of the new-born child, he sets its future price. He trains it in premediated ignorance; he feeds it for the same purpose for which he feeds his swine.—for the shambles! From the day of its birth, he contemplates the hour when he shall separate it from the mother who bore it,—for that hour of yet keener pangs did its mother pass through the anguish of its birth. When that hour comes, the long-determined deed is done. The master proceeds about it deliberately; no entreaties or tears can surprise him into pity. The mother's phrenzied cry, the boys mute look of despair, move him not. He tears them asunder, handcuffs the victim, and consigns him to the soul driver! Who can doubt whether, in all this long and complicated process of villany there is not more to sear conscience, blunt sensibility, and transform man into a demon, far more than can be found in the slave-trade itself? While the trader deals with strangers, the master is perpetrating these outrages upon those whom he has reared from their birth; in some cases, upon the companions of his own boyhood; in others, on the children of the woman, or perchance the woman herself, who nursed his infancy; and often, worst of all, on his OWN OFFSPRING!!!"

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, DECEMBER 30th, 1843.

Commerce of the Colony. The trade of the colony is increasing at almost encouraging rate. The returns made by the Collector of the exports for the two last years, give two hundred and seventeen thousand dollars. This however is known to be far short of the business done. A large amount of business is done by the traders in factories, stationed along the coast. The Merchandize sold at these factories rarely pay duties; because they are not landed at the settlements. The contract is made with the foreign vessels to land the goods at the factory and receive their returns there.

Our commerce has recently received an impetus, and it will continue to increase at an annually increasing ratio. Perhaps the business of the last three months has not been equalled in the same space of time, in any former period of the colony. With the exception of provisions our supplies are mostly obtained from European trading vessels.

U. S. SHIP MACEDONIAN.

The United States Ship Macedonian, Captain I. Mayo, for which we have been so long in waiting, arrived at this port on the 19th ult. She bears the flag of Commodore Perry, Commander of the Squadron. On the following day, the Commodore honored the shore with a visit, accompanied by Capt. Mayo, of the Macedonian—Capt. Tattnall of the Saratoga, and Capt. Abbott of the Decatur, and a number of the officers from each vessel.

As it was propper on such an occasion, an appropriate salute was fired, which was returned by the flag ship.

The Commodore and his officers took a tour around our little village, called into several houses and professed themselves highly pleased with the indications of comfort and prosperity which they met with.

When we recollect that the present site of the colony is Commodore Perry's own selection;—that he first opened a treaty for it with the natives, we are led to hope much from his exertions in our behalf. And we are pleased to find that he takes a deep interest in our welfare.

LIST OF OFFICERS OF THE MACEDONIAN.

Matthew C. Perry Esq. Commander of the Squadron.

Isaac Mayo Esq. Captain.

Lieutenants, Thomas Tingey Craven, George Mason Hooe, James T. McDonough, George W. Harrison.

Purser, Henry Etting. Acting master,

Professor, Martin Roche.

Midshipmen, William T. Burwell, Dillaplaine R. Lambert, Lyman R. Law, Theodoric Lee, William H. Murdaugh, Wingate Pillsbury, Archibald H. Warring

Boatswain, Joshua Bryant. Gunner, John Clapham. Carpenter, Amos Chick. Sailmaker, William H. Brayton.

The Macedonian left on the 25th, ult. for the Leeward, Governor Roberts went in her on a tour, we suppose to the Leeward settlements. Officers and crew well.

U. STATES SHIP DECATUR.

This Ship Commanded by Captain Abbott arrived here on the 15th, ult. Although she forms one of the Squadron, we do not find her under the head of "African Squadron" in the Navy Register, we are therefore unable to give the list of her officers. She left in company with the Macedonian, for the Leeward. Officers and crew well.

The following interesting communication shows most plainly that the U. States squadron, under command of Commodore Perry, was not idle during its last cruise to the leeward. The natives at some points of the coast; especially at Berreby, had become so treacherous and piratical, that it was dangerous to anchor in their waters. Indeed, in their fancied security on shore, they ridiculed the idea of any force being landed to chastise them: Therefore they did not hesitate to avow their murders and robberies when questioned on the subject. We hope the severe lesson now taught them—the destruction of their towns, and the death of their King, will not be lost upon them—but have the effect to humble them, and bring them to their senses.

The Commodore himself was not all the time in the most enviable predicament. When "Krako," who was of gigantic stature and herculean strength, started to run, the Commodore seized him. This only more alarmed the King, and straining every nerve, he drew the Commodore along lying his whole length on the sand with perfect ease. The Commodore maintained his hold as much from a desire to prevent his being shot by the marines, who were ready and eager, as from a wish to detain him. When it is recollected that the beach on the whole of that coast is bad—and that the landing had to be effected by the slow process of canoes—by which only a small number could be put on shore at a time—and that a large force of armed savages were ready to oppose them, the small inconvenience sustained by the Americans is rather a matter of remark.

It will also be seen that our friends of Settra Kroo were not overlooked in the admonitory visitation. They had grown rather wayward of late, and in more than one instance had played off their vexatious pranks on helpless traders. The lesson we are sure, will not be lost on them. They, of all the the natives on the coast, know best the power of the man-of-war, when it is determined to be exerted.

The presence of these vesselvs will be of incalculable advantage to us. The present expedition, accompanied as it was by Governor Roberts—a circumstance identifying them with us in the minds of the natives, has presented the colony in an altogether new attitude in the estimation of the atlantic tribes.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD.

On Monday the eleventh of December, the United States Ship Macedonian: United States Ship Decatur and United States Ship Saratoga, disembarked an armed force of about 180 men, of which about 75 were marines, at Rock Boukah. The surf on the beach was very rough and most of the men were landed in canoes, two and three at a time, no accidents occurred, save several wettings from the capsizing of canoes in the surf, and no loss but a few cutlasses and two muskets.

The natives had mustered in large force upon the crest of the beach, perhaps in number of armed men three hundred, and in all directions about the town, and in the outskirts of the woods, were also seen detached parties supposed to amount to 700. In fact by far the most near approach to a show of courage or fight was here shown, that has been met with on the coast. Some of the evolutions of the natives were worthy of men, probably much better versed in military tactics than they can be supposed to be. For instance, soon after the first landing, finding themselves outflanked by a movement ordered by Capt. Mayo, who was in command of the expedition, they deployed instantly and again formed upon the right flank of our force. Having taken possession of the town which they had abandoned, Commodore Perry requested the interpreter to call the King for a palaver, which was refused unless a party of his men equal in number to the one, which had taken possession of his town, were permitted to enter and range themselves upon one side of the palaver house, while our party were upon the other. This having been agreed to, the King or rather his mouth piece, Ganah, then disclaimed any part in the murder of Capt. Farewell at half Berreby, and agreed at once to go on board the Macedonian and attend the palaver at Krako's town.

He accordingly came on board and on the morning of the 13th, fifteen boats were despatched from the squadron to land at Ben Krako's town, and a force of probably a hundred and eighty or ninty men landed. The King Krako, and his interpreter (who it was said had before declared that he was the man who had killed Capt. F.,) and some other kings and head men from the other villages came at once to the palaver. It was soon evident they were perfectly willing to lie themselves out of the affair; that in fact no one had killed Capt. Farewell, and that he (Capt. F.) was the only one to blame in the matter. Commodore Perry, soon discovered that such was the case, and remarked he would take Ben Krako and his interpreter at all events:—whether these words were heard or not, is uncertain, but one of the Kings, a second after, passed out of the palaver house and then some shots were fired from the town hitting two marines of the Macedonian's guard, but wounding neither. One having the hammer of his musket shot away and the barrel half cut through, and the other saved by his waist-belt through which the slug passed and thus lost its force. As soon as the first shot was fired, the King and his interpreter attempted to run from the palaver house. But Commodore Perry seized the King by his mantle and this being torn from him, the Commodore again grappled him by his breech cloth. During the struggle the Commodore was dragged for 15 or 20 yards, through the sand, and the King was during the time stabbed with a bayonet at least three times, and a fourth wound was afterwards found upon his body, but whether from a shot or bayonet is uncertain. The interpreter meanwhile in running for the town was shot through the back and spine dead by Capt. Tattnall.

King Krako was a most powerful man. Even after the severe wounds, which caused his death twelve hours after, he came near overpowering Capt Mayo, in a personal struggle, and 6 or 7 persons were required to secure him. During the whole of this time a scattering fire was kept up from both parties, but no natives came into view except near the boats, at which until after all were embarked, they continued firing scattering shots. The town was set on fire and all the huts and the stockade, burnt to the ground, and the whole force re-embarked without loss or wound except some slight scratches from the random slugs. It was reported afterwards that eight persons (natives) were killed and two or three more died from wounds.

We then ran down a few miles near the extremity of half Berreby country, and on the morning of the 15th landed our force amounting to perhaps 250 men in all under the general command of Capt. Mayo, with commanders Tattnall and Abbott commanding divisions. There were five villages to burn and these spread along the coast, (a dead sand beach with the bush within ten yards,) for perhaps 8 or ten miles At half past four in the afternoon, they were all in ashes, and the force re-embarked, without the loss of a man; one only having been wounded and he by straying away against orders. He was shot through the thigh near its junction with the body.

It is not known that any natives were killed. The Commodore in fact did not wish to take life but destroy the towns.

The result of the expedition is perhaps the best praise of the manner in which it was designed and conducted.

But a meed of praise is due most deservedly to the conduct and firmness of Gov. Roberts, throughout the whole of the negociations along the coast, and the affair at Ben Krako's town. From an intimate association with him by "flood and field," for near two months, I, am firmly of opinion that no man can be better fitted for the duties of the office he holds, nor more entitled to the confidence of the Society at home. Were it not that I know his modesty would be wounded by a more personal mention, I could say much more.

Settra Kroo,
Decr. 4th, 1843.

It is rumored that some disturbances have existed between the colony at Cape Palmas and the natives, and which is now happily settled. We have not heard the particulars.

Murder —The natives somewhere on the Junk, have committed a most daring murder on a colonist. The unfortunate man, Ricketa by name, came from Sierra Leone to this place about twelve years ago, and has been residing here ever since. He was a captured African. The affray was about a woman. The murderer has been taken.

TAKE NOTICE.

That Henrietta Carey having left my bed and board, and taken up her residence at another part of the coast, I intend to apply to the proper authorities of this commonwealth, for a divorce from the said Henrietta Carey. All persons feeling themselves interested, are hereby warned to appear.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

TRUE FRIENDSHIP,

ILLUSTRATED IN THE FAITHFULNESS OF BAXTER

Baxter owed his introduction to the ministry to Col. James Berry, one of his earliest friends, Baxter at first had great confidence in Berry's religious character. But political promotion had the effect on him, which it often has; and Baxter altered his opinion of him afterwards. While he stood in the high position of one of Cromwell's Council of State, Baxter wrote him a letter containing some forcible admonitions of the dangers of that worldy greatness, by which he feared his early friend had been injured. The following is an extract from his letter:

"Self is the strongest and most dangerous enemy that ever you fought against. It is a whole army united. The more dangerous because so near. Many who have fought as valiantly and successfully as you, have at last been conquered and undone by self. Conquer it you cannot without a conflict; and the conflict will endure as long as you live. Combatting is not pleasing to the enemy, and self-pleasing is natural to corrupted man, self-denial will prove a difficult task; and if somewhat in the advice that should engage you deeper in the conflict, should seem bitter or ungrateful I should not wonder; and let me freely tell you, that your prosperity and advancement will make the work so exceedingly difficult, that since you have been a Major-General, and a Lord, and now a Councillor of State, you have stood in a more slippery, perilous place, and have need of much more grace and vigilance than when you were but Baxter's friend.

"I sleep more sweetly, when I have travelled in the cold. Frost and snow are friends to seed, though they are enemies to the flower. Adversity indeed is contrary to glory, but it befriendeth grace. Plutrach tells us, that when Cæsar passed a smoky, nasty village, at the foot of the Alps, some of his commanders merely asked him whether there was such a stir for commands, and dignities, and honors, among these cottages, as there was at Rome? The answer is easy. Do you not think that an Anthony, a Mark, a Jerome, or such other of the ancient retired Christians were wiser and happier than a Nero or a Caligula, yea, or a Julius Cæsar? It is a desirable thing to be a Lord or a Ruler, before we turn to our common earth; and as Marius, that was made Emperor one day, resigned the next; and was slain by a soldier the next; so to be worshipped today, and laid in the dust, if not in hell, to-morrow? O value these things but as they deserve! Speak impartially; are not those that are striving to get up the ladder, foolish and ridiculous, when those that are at the top, have attained but danger, trouble and envy, and those that fall down are accounted miserable?"

It was by such admonitions, that the faithful man repaid his benefactor. Berry was instrumental in making Baxter a minister; and he became to him a minister of reproofs and admonitions, at a time when he stood in great need of them. In the conclusion of his letter he says—"I beseech you interpret not any of these words, as intended for accusation, or unjust suspicion of yourself. God forbid that you should ever fall from that integrity that I am persuaded you once had. But my eye is on the times with grief, and on my ancient, dearest friend, with love; and in an age of iniquity and temptation, my conscience and the world shall never say that I was unfaithful to my friend, and forbore to tell him of the common dangers."—Puritan.

I do not know the author of the following short article, which is cut out of a paper that I lately met with—but it is so good, that I shall be pleased to see it published for the benefit of your readers. TONY.

GUMPTION.

This is a fine old Scotch word, not generally to be found in the dictionaries, though it is worthy of place in the best. It has a great deal of meaning in it, and often expresses what nothing else can.

When I see a girl reject the addresses of a respectable young man, who owns a good farm, goes to meeting, and pays his debts, for one who wears a dickey, visits the theatre, and spends his money faster than he earns it, I think to myself she has not much gumption.

When I see a young mechanic, who wants a good wife, that can make a pudding and spit a turkey, dangling after a piece of affectation, because she has been to a dancing school and can play on a piano, I guess he has not much gumption.

When I see a farmer paying taxes for twenty acres of land half-fenced and half tilled, when he might raise more on six acres under cultivation, I conclude he is not overstocked with gumption.

When I see a man who has good business, sufficient to support his family respectably, neglecting his affaie, and running into debt, in order to obtain a political ofice, I fancy that, whatever may be his talents, he is not burdened with gumption.

When I see a man call his boys from school, and spending two hours every afternoon for a month, to tar his trees, that the canker-worm may not ascend them, when he might effect a remedy in a single day, by exchanging the earth for three feet around them, I conclude that he has more industry than gumption.

When I see a man purchasing three cords of wood for the winter, when by listing his doors, and mending a broken pane, he might save two of them, I think he has but little gumption.

When I see a young man, just set up in business, keeping a horse and chaise at an expense of two dollars a day, and failing in six months, when he might walk for nothing and continue his business with safety, I conclude he has not much gumption.

When I see a man attending dilligently to his own concerns, sending his children to school, paying his debts, and keeping clear of law suits, quarrels, and politics, I set him down as a man possessing a reasonable share of gumption.

When I see a woman mending her children's clothes, and receiving her husband with affection, I conclude she has no ordinary share of gumption.

When I see a man who deals justly, loves mercy, walks humbly, and pays for his newspaper, I conclude that of all others in this world, he possesses the greatest portion of gumption.—Christian Intelligencer,

POETRY.

"LAND A-HEAD!"

BY REV. GEORGE BRYAN, M. A.

Sweet music in the wave-worn ear!
It is the seaman's cry,
When the first speck of home-land near Breaks on the eager eye;
Then, loud as lip the news can spread,
The top-mast man shouts—"Land a-head!"

O, as those gladsome tidings speed
Down through the decks below,
All hearts begin to melt indeed,
And eyes to overflow:
And blithe ones to the topmast thread
The way, to see the "Land a-head."

Once—and 'tis still a happy day—
I heard those accents fall,
Where earth had but a shadowy sway,
And seas no swav at all;
The heavens seemed past, and light, instead,
Broke out and beamed from "Land a-head."

I sat me by a dying man—
A good old man was he—
Whose years had through life's little span
Been less on land than sea;
Where he had fought! and watched, and bled,
And shared bright hopes from "Land a-head."

Those scenes are now forever past;
His heart was on the shore
Where holy brethren meet at last,
And storms are heard no more;
And, rising from that lowly bed,
Would bound to see a "Land a-head."

I gently press'd his feeble hand,
So soon to turn to clay;
And wondered if his heart was mann'd
To meet that dreadful day;
When, as if in my looks he read
The thought, he cried out—"Land a-head!"

It was the olden, happy phrase;
But at that hour it came,
Not wrapt in light of elder days,
But in immortal flame
Poured out, and in abundance shed,
On man from heavenly "Land a-head."

O he could see beyond the skies—
Beyond the grave could see,
Where mansions of salvation rise
For such poor worms as he;
And nobly trod the path that led
Up straightway to that "Land a-head."

And thither he went up at length,
And walks the regions o'er,
Which arm'd those lingering hours with strength,
And cheer'd for years before;
If sweet to see, how sweet to tread
Celestial land—the Land a-head!"

SULPHUR MOUNTAINS.

The 25th was a delightful day, and having taken an early breakfast of biscuit, cheese, and milk, we set out towards the Sulphur Mountain, which is about three miles distant from Krisuvik. At the foot of the mountain was a small bank composed chiefly of white clay, and some sulphur, from all parts of which steam issued. Ascending it, we got upon a ridge immediately above a deep hollow, from which a profusion of vapour arose, and heard a confused noise of boiling and splashing, joined to the roaring of steam escaping from narrow crevices in the rock. This hollow, together with the whole side of the mountain opposite, as far up as we could see, was covered with sulphur and clay, chiefly of a white or yellowish colour. Walking over this soft and steaming surface we found to be very hazardous; and I was frequently very uneasy when the vapour concealed my friends from me. The day, however, being dry and warm, the surface was not so slippery as to occasion much risk of our falling. The chance of the crust of sulphur breaking, or the clay sinking with us, was great, and we were several times in danger of being much scalded. Mr. Bright ran at one time a great hazard, and suffered considerable pain, from accidentally plunging one of his legs into the hot clay. From whatever spot the sulphur is removed, steam instantly escapes; and in many places the sulphur was so hot, that we could scarcely handle it. From the smell, I perceived that the steam was mixed with a small quantity of sulphuretted hydrogen gass. When the thermometer was sunk within the clay, it rose generally to within a few degrees of the boiling point. By stepping cautiously, and avoiding every little hole from which steam issued, we soon discovered how far we might venture. Our good fortune, however, ought not to tempt any person to examine this wonderful place without being provided with two boards, with which any one may cross every part of the banks in perfect safety. At the bottom of this hollow we found a caldron of boiling mud, about fifteen feet in diameter, similar to that on the top of the mountain which we had seen the evening before; but this boiled with much more vehemence. We went within a few yards of it, the wind happening to be remarkably favourable for viewing every part of this singular scene. The mud was in a constant agitation and often thrown up to the height of six or eight feet. Near this spot was an irregular space filled with water, boiling briskly. At the foot of the hill, in a hollow formed by a bank of clay and sulphur, steam rushed with great force and noise from among the loose fragments of rock. Further up the mountain we met with a spring of cold water, a circumstance little expected in a place like this. Ascending still higher, we came to a ridge composed entirely of sulphur and clay, joining two summits of the mountain. Here we found a much greater quantity of sulphur than on any other part of the surface we had gone over. It formed a smooth crust from a quarter of an inch to several inches in thickness. The crust was beautifully crystallized. Immediately beneath it we found a quantity of loose granular sulphur, which appeared to be collecting and chrystallizing, as it was sublimed along with the steam. Sometimes we met with clay of different colours, white, red and blue, under the crust; but we could not examine this place to any depth, as the moment the crust was removed steam came forth, and proved extremely annoying. We found several pieces of wood, which were probably the remains of planks that had been formerly used in colleting the sulphur, small crystals of which partially covered them. There appears to be a constant sublimation of this substance, and were artificial chambers constructed for the reception and condensation of the vapours, much of it might probably be collected. As it is, there is a large quantity on the surface, and by searching, there is little doubt that great stores may be found. The inconvenience proceeding from the steam issuing on every side, and from the heat, is certainly considerable; but by proper precautions, neither would be felt so much as to render the collection of the sulphur a matter of any great difficulty. The chief obstacle to working these mines is, their distance from any port whence the produce could be shipped. But there are so many horses in the country, whose original price is trifling, and whose maintenance during summer costs nothing, that the conveyance of sulphur to Reikiavik presents no difficulties which might not probably be surmounted. Below the ridge, on the father side of this large bed of sulphur, we saw a great deal of vapour escaping with much noise. We crossed to the side of the mountain opposite, and found the surface sufficiently firm to admit of walking cautiously upon it. We had now to walk towards the principal spring, as it is called. This was a task of much apparent danger, as the side of the mountain, for the extent of about half a mile, is covered with loose clay, into which our feet sunk at every step. In many places there was a thin crust, below which the clay was wet, and extremely hot. Good fortune attended us, and we reached, without any serious inconvenience, the object we had in view. A dense column of stream, mixed with a little water, was forcing its way impetuously through a crevice in the rock, at the head of a narrow valley or break in the mountain. The violence with which it rushes out is so great, that the noises thus occasioned may often be heard at the distance of several miles; and during the night, while lying in our tent at Krisuvik, we more than once listened to them with mingled awe and astonishment. Behind the column of vapour was a dark-coloured rock, which gave it its full effect. It is quite beyond my power to offer such a description of this extraordinary place, as to convey adequate ideas of its wonders or its terrors. The sensations of a person, even of firm nerves, standing on a support which feebly sustains him, over an abyss where literally fire and brimstone are in dreadful and incessant action—having before his eyes tremendous proofs of what is going on beneath him—enveloped in thick vapours, his ears stunned with thundering noises:—these can hardly be expressed in words, and can only be well conceived by those who have experienced them.—Sir G. Mackenzie's Travels in Iceland.

WHIRLWINDS AND WATERSPOUTS.

Sir Richard Phillips gives us the following description of a water spout observed by him, and points out the connection between those phenomena, offering a very philosophical explanation of the formation of the latter.

"It happened to him," he observes, "on the 27th of June, 1718, about seven in the evening, to witness the formation, operation, and extinction of what is called a water spout. His attention was drawn to a sudden hurricane which nearly tore up the shrubs and vegetables in the western gardens, and and filled the air with leaves and small collections of the recently cut grass. Very dark clouds had collected over the adjoining country, accompanied by several strokes of lightning, followed this hurricane of wind. The violence lasted a few minutes, and the writer being drawn to an eastern balcony, it was evident that a whirlwind agitated the variety of substances which had been raised into the air. The storm proceeded from west to east, that is, from Hampstead over Kentish-Town towards Holloway. In about five minutes, in the direction of the latter place, a magnificent projection was visible in the clouds. It descended two-thirds of the distance from the clouds towards the earth, and evidently consisted of parts of clouds descending in a vortex, violently agitated like smoke from the chimney of a furnance recently supplied with fuel. It then shortened, and appeared to be drawn up towards the stratum of clouds.

It finally drew itself into the cloud; but a small cone, or projecting thread, of varying size and length, continued for ten minutes. At the time, and for an hour after, a severe storm of rain was visibly falling from the mass of clouds connected with it, the extent being exactly defined by the breadth of Holloway, Highgate, and Hornsey. About two hours after on walking from Kentish-Town towards Holloway, it was found that one of the heaviest torrents of rain remembered by the inhabitants had fallen around the foot of Highgate-hill; and some persons having seen the projecting cloud, an absolute belief existed that a water-spout had burst at the crossing of the new and old roads. On proceeding towards London, various accounts agreeing with the superstition or pre-conceived notion of the bye-standers, were given; but in the farm-yard at the three mile stone, it appeared that some hay-makers were stacking hay from a waggon which stood between two ricks, and that the same whirlwind which passed over Kentish-Town, had passed over the loaded waggon with an impetus sufficient to carry it above twenty yards from its station, and to put the men upon it and on the rick in fear of their lives. Passing the road, it carried with it a stream of hay, and, nearly unroofing a shed on the otherside, filled the air to great height with fragments of hay, leaves and boughs of trees, which resembled a vast flights of birds. The family of the writer beheld the descending cloud, or water-spout, pass over, and they saw its tram, which at the time, they took to be a flight of birds. They afterwards beheld the descending cloud draw itself upwards, and they and other witnesses, describe it as a vast mass of smoke working about in agitation; to them it was nearly vertical in a northern direction; and to persons a quarter of a mile north, it was nearly vertical in a southern direction; and all agree that it drew itself up without rain, and was followed near the earth by the train of light bodies. It appeared also, on various testimony, to let itself down in a gradual and hesitating manner, beginning with a sort of knob in the cloud, and then descending lower, and curling and twisting about, till it shortened, and gradually drew itself into the cloud.

The interfences which Sir Richard draws from what he saw and heard, are as follow: "That the phenomena called a water-spout is a mere collection of clouds, of the same rarity as the mass whence they are drawn. That the descent is a mechanical effect of whilwind, which creating a vacuum, or high degree of rarefaction, extending between the clouds and the earth, the clouds descend in it by their gravity, or by the pressure of the surrounding clouds or air.—That the convolutions of the descending mass, and the sensible wirlwind felt at the earth, as well as the appearance of the commencement, increase, of the mass, all demonstrate the whirl of the air to be the mechanical cause.—That the same vortex, whirl, or eddy, of the air, which occasions the clouds to descend, occasions the loose bodies on the earth to ascend.—That if in this case the lower surface had been water, the same mechanical power would have raised a body of foam, vapour, and water, towards the clouds.—That, as soon as the vortex or whirl exhausts or dissipates itself, the phenomena terminates by the fall to the lower surface of the light bodies or water and by the ascent of the cloud.—That when water constitutes the light body of the lower surface, it is probably that the aqueous vapour of the could, by coalescing with it, may occasion the clouds to condense, and fall at that point, as through a syphon.—That if the descending clouds be highly electrified, and the vortex pass over a conducting body, as a church steeple, it is probably it may be condensed by an electrical concussion, and fall at that spot—discharging whatever has been taken up from the lower surface, and producing the strange phenomena of showers of frogs, fish &c.—And, air on the mass of clouds, pressing towards the mouth of the vortex as to a funnel (which, in this case, it exactly represented,) occasioned such a condensation as to augment the simultaneous fall of rain to a prodigy."—Wonders of the World.

A TOUCHING ANECDOTE.

The following beautiful anecdote in relation to Christian Indians, is given in a note attached to the fine poem by Jude Conrad, in the last number of Graham's Magazine.

"It is alleged by high authority (see the article in the North American Review, ascribed to Cass,) that the Indians cannot be converted: the readiest answer to the impious and profane absurdity is that they have been converted. A large body of Indians had been converted by the Moravian missionaries, and settled in the west: where their simplicity, harmlessness and happiness seemed a renewal of the better days of Christianity. During the Revolutionary war these settlements named Lichteneau and Gnauddenhutten, being located in the seat of the frontier Indian contests, were exposed to outrage from both parties. Being, however, under the tuition and influence of the whites, and having adopted their religion and the virtuous portion of their habits, they naturally apprehended that the hostile Indians, sweeping down upon the American frontier, would take advantage of their helplessness and destroy them as allies of the whites. Subsequent events enable us to compare the red and white man and determine which is the savage. A party of two hundred hostile Hurons fiercely approached the Moravian Indian town.—The Christian Indians conducted themselves, in this trying extremity, with meekness and firmness. They sent a deputation with refreshments to their approaching foes; and told them that, by the word of God, they were taught to be at peace with all men, and entreated for themselves and their white teachers peace and protection. And what replied the savage, fresh from the wilds and panting for blood? Did he mock to scorn the meek and Christian appeal? Did he answer with his war whoop, and lead on his men to the easy slaughter of his foes? What else could be expected from an Indian? Yet such was not the response of the red warrior. He said he was on a war party, and his heart had been evil, and his aim had been blood; but the words of his brethren had opened his eyes. He would do them no harm. 'Obey your teachers, said he, 'worship your God, and be not afraid.—No creature shall harm you."

ARTIFICIAL ICE.

The "Glaciarium or Frozen Lake," now opened to the public at the Baker street Bazaar, Portman square, is one of the curiosities of the age. The visiter is suddenly introduced amongst regions of seeming frost and snow, and placed in the Alpine scenery. The London Skating Club hold their meetings at the Glaciarium; and from the ease they display in their graceful evolutions in waltzing, &c., it is evident the artificial ice is little inferior to natural ice. The inventor, Mr Henry Kirk, has lived to see what few inventors rarely accomplish, viz: his efforts carried into perfection; more especially as chemists and sentific men considered the idea as chimerical.

In appearance the artificial ice closely resembles the natural; it is a semi-transparent body of crystal, composed of chemical salts, which, when in a liquid state, is flooded on a prepared level floor, and immediately crystalizes into a beautiful sheet of ice. By this invention skaters have at once the never ending means of enjoyment, without the dangers and difficulties attending natural ice; but as few pleasures are relished without some anticipated fear, the word "dangerous" is written conspicuously over a part which appears so, but in reality it is only a little pool, ingeniously contrived to represent a part of the ice broken, to permit the Alpine cottager to dip for water with a small bucket which is also frozen.

The lovers of skating must hail the artificial ice as a great treat indeed for by this invention, whether it be in a warm or cold climate, windly or calm, rain or sunshine, day or night, all the pleasures of the icy sheet are secured, and it is not improbable that a "frozen lake" will become as general to the mansions of the affluent, as an orchard of a fishpond, Prince Albert, who has visited the Glaciarium, has, it is said, given orders for one. At the evening meetings the whole scene is beautifully lighted the moon rises, the stars glitter, and music enlivens the whole scene, which, as it so richly merits, is thronged by admiring visiters.

THE GENEROUS INDIAN.

At the first meeting of the Kentucky Historical Society, the following anecdote of Indian generosity and magnanimity was related by a gentleman distinguished in the annals of Kentucky.

About the year 1784 or 1785, Mr. Andrew Rowan* embarked in a barge at the Falls of the Ohio, where Louisville now stands, with a party, to descend the river. The boat having stopped at Yellow Banks, on the Indian side, some distance below, Mr. Rowan borrowed a rifle of one of the company, stepped on shore and strolled into a bottom, probably rather in pursuit of amusement than game; for, from always having been of a feeble constitution and averse to action, he knew not how to use a rifle, and besides had with him but the single charge of ammunition which was in the gun. He unconciously protracted his stay beyond what he intended and returned to the spot where he had landed, saw nothing of the boat nor the company he had left. It being a time of hostility with the Indians, and suspicions of their approach having alarmed the party, they had put off and made down the stream with all possible haste not daring to linger for their companion on shore.

Mr. Rowan now found himself alone on the banks of the Ohio, a vast and trackless forest stretching around him, with but one charge of powder, and himself too unskilled in the use of the riffle to profit even by that, and liable at any moment to fall into the hands of the savages. The nearest settlement of the whites was Vincennes, (now in Indiana) distant probably about one hundred miles. Shaping his course as nearly as he could calculate for this, he commenced his perilous and hopeless journey. Unaccustomed to travelling in the forests, he soon lost all reckoning of his way, and wandered about at venture. Impelled by the gnawings of hunger, he discharged his rifle at a deer that happened to pass near him but missed it. The third day found him still wandering, whether toward Vicennes or from it, he knew not—exhausted, famished and despairing. Several times had he laid down as he thought, to die. Roused by the sound of a gun not far distant, betokening, as he well knew, the presence of the Indians, he proceeded, towards the spot whence the report had proceeded, resolved as a last hope of life, to surrender himself to those whose tender mercies he knew to be cruel.

Advancing a short distance he saw an Indian approaching, who, on discovering him—as the first impulse was on any alarm, with the whites and the Indians on the frontiers, in time of hostilities—drew up his rifle to his shoulder, in readiness to fire. Mr. R. turned the butt of his, and the Indian, with French politeness turned the butt also.—They approached each other. The Indian, seeing his pale and emaciated appearance, and understanding the cause, took him to his wigwam, a few miles distant, where he cooked for him several days, and treated him with the greatest hospitality. Then learning from him by signs that he wished to go to Vincennes, the Indian immediately left his hunting, took his rifle and a small stock of provisions, and conducted him in safety to that settlement, a distance from his cabin of about eighty miles.

Having arrived there, and wishing to reward well the generous Indian to whom he owed his life, Mr. R. made arrangements with a merchant of the settlement, to whom he made himself known, to give him three hundred dollars. But the Indian would not receive a farthing. When made to understand by Mr. R., through an interpreter, that he could not be happy unless he would accept something, he replied, pointing to a new blanket near him, that he would take that; and added, wrapping his own blanket around his shoulders, "when I wrap myself in it I will think of you.

Where was there even a white man, that even in times of peace, would have so befriended an Indian!

ST. ISAAC'S CHURCH.

At St. Petersburg, is probably the largest building which modern Europe has seen arise, and will long continue an object or wonder to strangers. It is a mass of architecture 340 English feet in height entirely a marble and metal, decorated outside with 112 columns of red gramite, each consisting only of one piece. The marble dome, surrounded by a colonnade, is 109 feet in diameter, and around it rise four steeples intended for the reception of bells. The whole forms a monument to be compared only with the colossal works of India and Egypt. The church is to be finished in 1841. The 24 columns which support the dome are each 42 feet high, of a single piece, and from the same quarries in Finland which furnished the Alexander column; each weigh 200,000 lbs. The machinery by which they were raise to a height of 200 feet and fixed in their respective places, is in itself deserving of wonder and admiration.

WOMAN—HER SPHERE AND NEEDS

From the 'The Dial' for July.

The leading paper in 'The Dial,' entitled the 'The Great Lawsuit—Man versus Men: Woman versus Women,' is one combining remarkable justness of sentiment with brilliancy of thought and beauty of expression. There is but one woman in America who could have written it. We make room for the following extract:

Were thought and feeling once so far elevated that man should esteem himself the brother and friend, but nowise the lord and tutor, of woman, were he really bound with her in equal worship, arrangements as to function and employment would be of no consequence. What woman needs is not as a woman to act or rule, but as a nature to grow, as an intellect to discern, as a soul to live freely, and unimpeded to unfold such powers as were given her when we left our common home. If fewer talents were given her, yet, if allowed the free and full employment of these, so that she may render back to the giver his own with usury, she will not complain, nay, I dare say, she will rejoice in her earthly birth-place, her earthly lot.

Let us consider what obstructions impede this good era, and what signs give reason to hope that it draws near.

I was talking on this subject with Miranda, a woman who, if any in the world, might speak without heat or bitterness of the position of her sex. Her father was a man who cherished no sentimental reverence for woman, but a firm belief in the equality of the sexes. She was his eldest child, and came to him at an age when he needed a companion. From the time she could speak and go alone, he addressed her not as a plaything, but as a living mind. Among the few verses he ever wrote were a copy addressed to this child, when the first locks were cut from her head, and the reverence expressed on this occasion for that cherished head he never belied. It was to him the temple of immortal intellect. He respected his child, however, too much to be an indulgent parent. He called on her for clear judgment, for courage, for honor and fidelity—in short, for such virtues as he knew. In so far as he possessed the keys to the wonders of this universe, he allowed free use of them to her, and by the incentive of a high expectation, he forbade, as far as possible, that she should let the privilege lie idle.

Thus the child was early led to feel herself a child of the spirit. She took her place easily, not only in the world of organized beings, but in the world of mind. A dignified sense of self-dependence was given as all her portion, and she found it a sure anchor. Herself securely anchored, her relations with others were established with equal security. She was fortunate in a total absence of those charms which might have drawn to her bewildering flatteries, and of a strong electric nature, which repelled those who did not belong to her, and attracted those who did. With men and women her relations were noble; affectionate without passion, intellectual without coldness. The world was free to her, and she lived freely in it. Outward adversity came, and an inward conflict, but that faith and self-respect had early been awakened, which must always lead at last to an outward serenity, and an inward peace.

Of Miranda I had always thought as an example, that the restraints upon the sex were insuperable only to those who think them so, or who noisily strive to break them. She had taken a course of her own, and no man stood in her way. Many of her acts had been unusual, but excited no uproar. Few helped, but none checked her; and the many men who knew her mind and her life, showed to her confidence as to a brother, gentleness as to a sister. And not only refined, but very coarse men approved one in whow they saw resolution and clearness of design. Her mind was often the leading one always effective.

When I talked with her upon those matters, and had said very much what I have written, she smilingly replied, And yet we must admit that I have been unfortunate, and this should not be. My good father's early trust gave the first bias, and the rest followed of course. It is true that I have had less outward aid, in after years, than most women, but that is of little consequence.—Religion was early awakened in my soul, a sense that what the soul is capable to ask it must attain, and that, though I might be aided by others, I must depend on myself as the only constant friend. This self-dependence, which was honored in me, is deprecated as a fault in most women.—They are taught to learn their rule from without, not to unfold it from within.

This is the fault of man, who is still vain, and wishes to be more important to woman than by right he should be.

Men have not shown this disposition toward you, I said.

No, because the position I early was enabled to take, was one of self-reliance. And were all women as sure of their wants as I was, the result would be the same. The difficulty is to get them to the point where they shall naturally develop self-respect, the question how it is to be done.

Once I thought that men would help on this state of things more than I do now, I saw so many of them wretched in the connections they had formed in weakness and vanity. They seemed so glad to esteem women whenever they could!

But early I perceived that men never, in any extreme of despair, wish to be women. Where they admired any woman, they were inclined to speak of her as above her sex. Silently I observed this, and feared it argued a rooted skepticism, which for ages had been fastening on the heart, and which only an age of miracles could eradicate.

Ever I have been treated with sincerity; and I looked upon it as a most signal instance of this, that an intimate friend of the other sex said in a fervent moment, that I deserved in some star to be a man. Another used as highest praise, in speaking of a character in literature, the words "a manly woman."

It is well known that of every strong woman they say she has a masculine mind.

This by no means argues a willing want of generosity towards woman. Man is as generous toward her, as he knows how to be.

Wherever she has herself arisen in national or private history, and nobly shone forth in any ideal of excellence, men have received her, not only willingly, but with triumph. Their economiums indeed are always in some sense mortifying, they show too much surprise.

In every-day life the feelings of the many are stained with vanity. Each wishes to be lord in a little would, to be superior at least over one; and he does not feel strong enough to retain a life-long ascendant over a strong nature. Only a Brutus would rejoice in a Portia. Only Theseus could conquer before he wed the Amazonian Queen. Hercules wished rather to rest from his labors with Dejanira, and received the poisoned robe, as a fit guerdon. The tale should be interpreted to all those who seek repose with the weak.

But not only is man vain and fond of power, but the same want of development, which thus affects him morally in the intellect, prevents his discerning the destiny of woman. The boy wants no woman, but only a girl to play ball with him, and mark his pocket handkerchief.

Thus in Schiller's Dignity of Woman, beautiful as the poem is, there is no "grave and perfect man," but only a great boy to be softened and retained by the influence of girls. Poets, the elder prophets of their race, have usually seen farther; but what can you expect of every-day men, if Schiller was not more prophetic as to what women must be? Even with Richter one foremost thought about a wife was that she would "cook him something good."

The sexes should not only correspond to and appreciate one another, but prophecy to one another. In individual instances this happens.—Two persons love in one another the future good which they aid one another to unfold. This is very imperfectly done as yet in the general life. Man has gone but little way, now he is waiting to see whether woman can keep step with him, but instead of calling out like a good brother; You can do it if you only think so, or impersonally; Any one can do what he tries to do, he often discourages with school-boy brag; Girls can't do that, girls can't play ball. But let any one defy their taunts, break through, and be brave and secure, they rend the air with shouts.

No! man is not willingly ungenerous. He wants faith and love, because he is not yet himself in elevated being. He cries with sneering skepticism; Give us a sign. But if the sign appears' his eyes glisten, and he offers not merely approval, but homage. * * * * *

LIFE AT A WATERING-PLACE.

Correspondence of the United States Gazette.

CAPE MAY, July 12, 1843.

Indulge me:—an epistolary chat with you is the pleasantest employment I can find,

This should be a happy place; for there is not a mendicant on the Island. What a field for an enterprising beggar; he would get from every hand, his application would be so very public, and charity would be observed of all.

I see no grave-yard here, not an epitaphed slab of marble; they either never mark the resting-place of the dead, or else they never die—a very probable conclusion after a sight of these native existences. But, seriously speaking, the longevity of the Islanders is remarkable. From all I can learn, they wear the body completely thread-bare before they throw it off,—lean, lank and bony, buffeting disease as their shore does the surf, throwing it off without any perceptible exhaustion from the efforts. They are good hearty creatures, intelligent, pious and hospitable. Long life to them.

Alexander the Great jumped at first sight of the Ocean, so did I, so did the porpoises, so they do still,—who would not, viewing it at midnight? Even on the shore of the Atlantic—what can be more lovely! comparable only with the moonlight. The spirit could not die in so beautiful a scene, it would linger until hazy morn, it would feel it cruel to destroy sensations so delightful to its mortal companion. What a place and what a time for love! Whip me! if I would trust myself with a woman of four-score years; one loves all things, and must express it. A popping of the question would be inevitable. Dads who are considerate, mamas who are for settlement, as you love your gentle ones, come to Cape May.

Stir up the animals; we want excitement. We have full five hundred down here, yet it is dull and spiritless:—the gay and noisy are not here yet; but, while we miss them, I do not know but what the Island is more pleasant without them. We have quiet nights, uninterrupted prayers and daylight order; we are all of steady habits See us.

There moves public piety:—an unfashionably-cut black coat, unstrapped pants, broad heels, the white tie and smooth chin, his calm features show him pleased to see so little sin. He is a good man.

There sits old crusty, of rheumatic temper, swelling of pent-up oaths, afraid to swear in such good company, self-control personified Now he vents his spleen upon himself and every passing fly—and now he struggles to address 'boots' amiably.

And then a 'wine-bibber,' how he commends Temperance and eulogises Father Mathew; he dares not drink in such good company; he lacks moral courage to do wrong.

And here a city clerk—self satisfied wealth is spending little, vanity may ape it cheaply, he looks an economical season, and is not unhappy.

Yonder a noisy politician; he alone looks dejected. No one asks his news.

And in the far corner, a crimped-mouth woman, an old maid I would swear if I dare; she has no auditor or material for scandal; this week there goes little else to her account above than entertained intention.

The black-eyed beauty, she spares flirtation now; how religiously she droops her eye-lids; a reverned brother holds her fan; the little sacrilegious minx will give the Church the 'mitten'; no waltzing, plain 'forward twos,' and no twisting fingers.

We are truly the good consequence of good society.

Ye living crabs, tremble; we are going to make war against you in the morning.

Ye 'White Niggers,' (the Albinos,) put on your best expressions for the afternoon. We come all curiosity. Where else can we go? Higby, where are you? The Light-House, where is it? Shooting, where's the game? Fishing, where's the patience? Never mind, moon-light will come again. It makes up for all deficiencies.

The houses are all in excellent order, filling up fast. Send us down a Repealer to excite us. We have a band of Music.

Out of paper—fortunate for you—no telling where I should have stopped

GOING PLEASURING.—A correspondent of the New York Plebeian, writting from Saratoga Springs, gives the following description of the comforts of those who go to that place for pleasure:—Courier.

SARATOGA, August 16.

At United States Hotel, in a corner up three pair stairs.

Dear Plebeian.—Here I am, sweating, blowing, (You know I'm fat and troubled with short wind,) puffing, eating, smoking, drinking, (congress water of course,) dancing—by proxy, and watching the bright looks of the fair as they smile upon————somebody else. Alas, this same Saratoga is a sad place. Come here for health—for comfort? Rather go soak yourself in the Park fountain, and then get some benevolent creature to hang you up to dry in the vicinity of the gas-works.

There is nothing here but a kind of combination stew. You are roasted alive in the dog-kenels called "rooms at the United States"——or "rooms at Congress Hall," &c.—par boiled in the streets, seasoned with Congress water, stuffed with vile condiments, and finally made into a kind of pot-pie, for the benefit of the next-comer. Attempt to amuse yourself, you are all at fault Go to a bowling saloon, you will find the alleys covered with petticoats, and the balls tumbled about, and pins knocked into pi by the FEMALE WOMEN. Go to a billiard room, there stands a gay lady with a cue in her hand, endeavoring to pocket the ball. Seek for a solitary walk, and you are dogged about by forty pairs, all seeking the same solitary loveliness. Go to the springs to guzzel down nauseating waters, and there stands a small regiment some on one leg, some on three, and some on four, each with a phiz resembling my grandmother's puckered snuff-bag, all trying to take a dose. And so it is all over, and yet it is all called seeking comfort. Alas, how much we undergo, even suffer, in seeking comfort—in looking for happiness

TRAITS OF THE ARABS.

A miser of Kufa hearing that there was a celebrated miser at Bassora, to whom all other misers might go to school, resolved to go and take lessons of him. He went and told him wherefore he was come. "Thou art welcome," said he of Bassora; "we will now go to the market to make purchases." They went to the baker. "Hast thou good bread?" "At your service, gentlemen, fresh and white as butter." "Thou seest," said he of Bassora to him Kufa, "that butter is better than bread, which was compared to it, and we shall do better to get butter." They went to the butter seller and asked if he had good butter.—"At your service, butter fresh and sweet as the nicest oil of olives." "Thou hearest," said the host, "the best butter is compared with oil, which must be far preferable." They went to an oil merchant. "Hast thou good oil?" "The very best; bright and clear as water." "Ho! ho!" cried he of Bassora to him of Kufa, "then water is the best diet of all: I have a whole tubful of it at home, with which I will entertain thee nobly." And in fact he set but water before his guest, since water was better than oil, oil than butter, and butter than bread. "God be praised!" said the miser of Kufa, "I have not made my journey in vain, but have learned something of value."

A well known Arabian horse-stealer once related as follows, what had befallen him in the desert: "I once, as I was astray in the desert, came to a tribe of Bedouins. They received me with greatt hospitality, and killed a camel every day on my account. I prayed them not to put themselves to such inconvenience, but let me depart. Still they would not suffer me to go, and every day they killed a camel At length one day I got an opportunity, drove off a fleet camel, mounted it, and went away with all speed. The owner, who saw me going off with his camel, mounted and pursued me. When he had brought me back, he pointed to a snake that was lying in the sand. "Seest thou," said he "tail of that snake there? I will hit it with this arrow." He shot, and the arrow pierced the point of the tail. "And with this arrow," as he drew forth a second, "I will hit its head." He shot the snake's head in two. "Thou seest now," said he, "that with this third arrow I should not miss thy breast, and thou dost deserve it for rewarding our hospitality with flight and robbery—but, since thou art our guest, go hence in God's name, and choose twenty camels more to take with thee"

THE MYSTERIES OF SAUSAGE MAKING IN LONDON.

Every nation, it has been observed, possesses its peculiar faculties of eating. The Tartar quaffs his bowl of mare's milk, the Hindoo relishes assafœtida, a delicate young lady of Canton picks the ribs of a puppy, an Indian at the north pole turns up his nose at sugar, a Neapolitan delights in his yard of maccaroni, and a greenlander rejoices in his blubber and train oil; a dandy of Land's End plunges with serene courage into the bowells of a Cornwall pie, and nothing more delights your genuine cockney, than a dish of sassingers, or a surfeit of black pudding. As far remote as the days of Aristophanes, the sausage maker and the black pudding seller are introducted into the comedy of the knights. Our reporter furnishes a sample of a London sausage maker.

Jemmy Hoskins, a gentleman wearing a red cap, a remarkably greasy flannel jacket, and immensely thick overhaul stockings, appeared, to sustain a claim for £1 18s 6d, against Thomas Stubbs, a wholesale dealer in beef and pork and sausages, black puddings, saveloys and young Germans. It is impossible to say which was the dirtiest, the plaintiff or defendant; the whole of the auditory very readily and politely made way for the savoury venders.

Commissioner. What's this claim for?

Jemmy Hosking. For making o'sassingers, sir.

Defendant. You mean for spilen on 'em Jemmy.

Jemmy. [Knowingly,] I'll spile you afore you're done. [Laughter.]

Com. Do you mean to say this is for wages?

Jemmy. Yes sir, for one week, in vich I made a mattar o' three tons o'sassingers and young Germans. [Laughter.]

Com. Three tons of sausages and young Germans! Why, what do you mean? Explain yourself. How do you make them?

Jemmy. Does your honor mean what on? what did we make 'em on?—cos if I was to tell you that, why, perhaps———. [Laughter.]

Com. Sir, you are bound to answer any question I ask. From what did you manufacture so many sausages and young Germans, as you call them? of beef?

'Beef!' said Jemmy, reflectively; 'beef?' yes—why, there sartinly were some beef that week; and, let me see, we had two green 'uns, and no less than three luckies!'

Com. And pray sir, what is a green 'un?

Jemmy. Vy, a hunfortunate pig, to be sure; a pig as dont die a natural wiolem death—one as goes off without being stick'd. [Laughter.]

Com. Then how does he die?

Jemmy. Oh, warrious ways. Sometimes a pig gets the measles, and sometimes they gets smothered and dies in that way. [Great symptoms of nausea in court.]

Con. But surely you don't use such unwholesome stuff for food?

Jemmy. No, sir, we chops 'em up for sassingers—(roars of laughter)—and wot's werry bad, indeed, we makes 'em into saverlors and Germans. We seasons up all on 'em well, and dries 'em over burning sor dust.

Com. Upon my word you are a clever fellow. Pray what do you mean by lucky?—tell the court what it is.

Jemmy. A lucky, sir, is an ass as meets with a haccident in the street—sich as breaking a leg, getting a shaft run inter him, and sick likes.—[Laughter.] We're sure to buy him, cheap, cos he must be sold. Meat 's beautiful, sir—you would'nt know it from ox or beef. Why, we picks out the prime parts for the cheap souphouses and penny pie shops. [Roars of laughter.]

Com. Well, Mr. Thomas Stubbs, and what do you say to all this?

'Say, sir,' (said Mr. Stubbs,) 'I say as how this 'ere man 's a lying warmint. The werry last day as he left me he spied about three hundred weight of stuff.

Com. Stuff!—what stuff?

Mr. Stubbs. Why, the sassage meet, to be sure. Instead of running the propper licker inter the skins he run'd in cold water, and, in course, the sassingers had't got no taste nor flavor in 'em at all. Laughter.]

Com. You hear this, Mr. Jemmy Hoskins?

Year him, (said Jemmy, indignantly,) in course I years him. The mornin as he speaks on I was going to fill the skins, and he comes up to me, and taking a handful of sassage meat, he smells to it, and then a shakin his head, 'Jemmy,' ses he, 'this year's raythor too strong; you'd better give it a rince over with the licker in the bilers. 'Why, that's for making ketchup,' ses I, 'and that's my perquisites.'

Com. What, make catsup from water that horseflesh has been boiled in?

Jemmy. Yes, sir; the best mushroom ketchup in the world. (Roars of laughter.)

A fat sleek-headed juryman here turned very sickly. Mr. Jemmy Hoskins continued—'Fact is, sir, nobody don't know what he yeats in London. I wants my money, that's all, and if so he don't fork it up—worse for him, that's all. I aint said nothing about black puddings yet, nor young Germans, nor ———(Laughter.)

Com. For heaven's sake say no more. Will you pay this man his claim?

After some altercation, Jemmy Hoskins agreed to take £1 10s in liquidation of all demands.

Immediately the case was over, our reporter was telegraphed by Mr. Thomas Stubbs, and an overture made for the purpose of keeping the case out of the papers. The reporter referred the worthy sausage maker to his editor.

The Scotchman boasts of gobbets raw,
Of haggis paunch and cockie-le kie;
But sausage meats may bear the bell
From any filth in guide Auld Reekie.
As Samuel Veller said to Maude—
'Don't buy your wittles ready chor'd.'

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

COMMENTARY BY JOHN MORRISON, D. D.

A minister who has recently become president of a theological institution in Canada, having visited Germany before he departed from Europe had an interview at Halle with the celebrated Gesenius. In the course of conversation, the Englishman had occasion to explain the peculiarities of his Baptist countrymen; when the erudite Professor, on learning that they administer baptism by immersion, and only to such as personally desire it, exclaimed—"How very like the practice of the first Christians!"

Dr. Chalmers, who has just published the second volume of his Lectures on the Epistle to the Romans, commences one, on part of the sixth chapter, in the following words: "The original meaning of the word baptise is immersion; and though we regard it as a point of indifferency, whether the ordinance so named be performed in this way, or by sprinkling, yet we doubt not, that the prevalent style of the administration in the apostle's days, was by an actual submerging of the whole body under water.

We advert to this for the purpose of throwing light on the analogy that is instituted in the verses. Jesus Christ, by death, underwent this sort of baptism, even immersion under the surface of the ground, whence he soon emerged again by his resurrection. We, by being baptized into his death, are conceived to have made a similar translation. In the act of descending under the water of baptism, to have resigned an old life, and in the act of ascending to emerge into a second or a new life—along the course of which it is our part to maintain a strenuous avoidance of that sin, which as good as expunged the being we had formerly; and a strenuous prosecution of that holiness which should begin with the moment that we were ushed into our present being and be perpetuated and progress toward the perfection of full and ripened immortality.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, JANUARY 24th, 1844.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

It was expected that on Sabbath, the 14th instant, an address would be delivered at the Baptist Meeting House in this place, to the scholars, teachers, and friends of the Sunday School, attached to the Church, by Colonel B. P. Yates, the president of the school. Colonel Yates was unexpectedly called out of town, and Deacon F. S. James, one of the teachers, read an appropriate essay on the importance of the Sabbath School system—setting forth the great good it has conferred upon the world—urging the duties of the scholars and teachers—and of parents and guardains to lend their aid and influence in securing the attendance of the children, and by their occasional visits.

We have been pained in witnessing the apathy of Baptists in this place, in regard to the Sabbath School. It, as experience and observation appear to prove—the Sabbath School is the nursery of the Church, it would seem that no other agreement could be wanted to secure the prayers and services of every friend of the cause of Christ. It is not unnatural for christian parents to look upon their offspring as those destined to take their places in the church; or as recruits to fill up the spiritual ranks as the ancient veterans are successively removed by death. But it is time we should abandon the visionary hope of securing an end without employing the appropriate means of attaining it. While the Scripture refers every salutary change to the grace and power of God, it also admonishes us of our duty as instruments. How many parents have been found weeping over their vagarant children. They are found either walking in the council of the ungodly, or sitting in the seat of the scornful,—or they have forsaken the house where their fathers worshiped, and gone off into strange paths. The unhappy parents are ready to regard themselves cursed with ungrateful and perverse offspring. Such should seriously ask themselves whether they performed their duty to those whom God committed to their charge—whether they sought early to instil into their minds the principles of divine truth—to impress them with reverence for the divine character—to inculcate upon them the distinction between vice and virtue—whether they took them by the hand and led them to the house of God. If not, they should at once be silent and repent of their own remissness.

We are aware that some profess to be entirely indifferent where their children go on the Sabbath, so it be to a Sabbath School or a place of worship. From this indifference to the indifference whether they be in the places above, or strolling on the beach, or at home reading some principle poisoning novel, the step is but a small remove. Such recklessness of principle is unworthy of a christian. In this spirit-stiring day, every soldier of the cross is called to buckle on his armour and repair to the field. He is called to a real and arduous contest, not merely to beat the air, but "to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." This supposses clearly ascertained and firmly fixed principles on the part of the christian.—A proper conviction of their importance will incite to a vigilant use of all the means to diffuse them abroad, and implant them in the minds of others. No intelligent christian therefore can be indifferent to the doctrines and religious sentiments imbibed by his children; under the conviction of the correctness of his own opinions, he will be anxious they should be adopted by his offspring.

We would therefore most solemnly warn the members of our denomination against this practical infidelity. Either your religious sentiments are right or they are wrong. If wrong, abandon at once your position.—If right, put forth all your energies—allure, compel all within the reach of your influence to form in your ranks. But remember the most solemn of all obligations rests upon you, to train up your child in the way he should go, that when he is old he may not depart from it.

NATIVE CHILDREN.

Some idea may be formed of the influence which the Colony is exerting upon the minds of the natives, from the fact, that from all the adjacent tribes native children are poured in upon the settlers by their parents, until they are really becoming a burden. We have ourselves a whole yard full, and in the space of only a few days have felt compelled to refuse three or four others, sent, some of them quite from Boson's. The natives are beginning to "like" civilized manners and habits. I seen you my piccanninie, say they. I want you for keep him, larn him white man fash, pose he no larn, flog him. I no want him go country make fool fash all same me.

It is to hoped that those who take native children to rear, will feel the responsibility of the charge. Such have it in their power to confer a lasting blessing upon the country. One native mind imbued with the feelings and aspirations of civilized life—formed upon correct and christian principles, going out among the aborigines, will be more efficient in good than a dozen foreigners. The complaint that "those natives that have had the advantage of civilized instruction, have only proved the greater scoundrels," may be true to a certain extent. But wherefore. Simply, because those who had them in charge, felt no further interest in them than as they were serviceable or could be turned to account. It perhaps never entered into their head to impress upon them the lessons of morality and virtue, to inspire them with sentiments of self-respect and an abhorrence of vice. They labored probably to make them shrewd and sharp traders, and taught them diligently to turn every man and every thing to account. This the half tutored savage regarded as the chief end of man, and returning home acted upon the principle. This should not be. He who does not look at something beyond his own immediate personal interest, is unworthy to have a native child under his care The spirit of philanthropy and patriotism should direct the conduct of guardians. The elevation of the tribes around us—the future well-being of the soul and the advancement of our Colony, should be the governing motive. For it does not require the eye of prophecy to foresee that our population is to be swelled by the incorporation of these aborigines.

THE PROVIDENCE ASSOCIATION.

The Providence Association held its session at Marshall, Junk River, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th ult. Introductory sermon was preached by Elder Day, founded on 1st. Timothy, iv. chapter, and 16th, verse. The discourse was plain, practical and impressive. The preacher urged 1st, the necessity of deep personal piety: 2nd, of irreproachable eness of conduct. 3rd, of a single aim to glorify God: 4th, of purity and simplicity in doctrine: 5th, admonished against making the statements of divine truth to accord with preconcerted systems: 6th, urged the necessity of a ready and unreserved submission of the understanding to the word of God: 7th and lastly, noticed the rewards of such a course. The circular was prepared by Elder A: W Anderson. The subject was faith.—The subject is a good one, and it, clear definition is much demanded by our denomination in Liberia. But every thing prepared for us should be plain and easy of comprehension. Our brother has treated the subject in a manner rather too learned, and if we are allowed to indulge a criticism, we would add—that by descending into the misty regions of metaphysicks, he has occasionally obscured himself, and in some instances crossed his own path.

The delegation from the churches was full. The utmost harmony prevailed throughout the meeting, and there is reason to believe some good was effected. We shall not anticipate the publication of the minutes by giving the statistics.

"Wanderings in Africa, D. Francis Bacon."

This is the title of a petty periodical now in course of publication in America. The writer has not told us his object in publishing—or at least we have not seen it. No one, however, acquainted with him can be at a loss on this score. His object is doubtless (and an admirable expedient), to raise the wind—to replenish an empty exchequer. We may at some future period condescend to notice this wonderful production, to expose the base hypocrisy and fiendish malignity of the sniveling mercenary scribbler.—the gross, glaring falsities of his statements—his utter recklessness of all considerations of gratitude and his total destitution of every manly and generous feeling. This however, we promise hypothetically. Neither Bacon nor his work, nor both together is regarded of sufficient importance to attract us from ordinary affairs. Honest men can very well bear to be abused by the acknowledged abandoned. In conclusion, we will only add that nothing can be more appropriate or more accurately descriptive than the title both of the work and its author. "Wanderings in Africa by D. Francis Bacon." He was indeed a wanderer, a fugitive and vagabond in Africa—and in his feelings and habits as complete a swine, as any that ever grunted his satisfaction over the garbage of a gutter The man sat for his own picture.

TREATY WITH THE KROOS.

We take this opportunity to express our grateful acknowledgements to Commodore Perry for the copies of the treaties made with the natives at Berreby, which he politely permitted us to take, and which we inserted in our last number. To the kindness of Governor Roberts, our readers are indebted for the following treaty made by him with the kings and chiefs of Kroo Country. This step on the part of the Governor is highly commendable. In this day of general rage in foreigners to gain possessions on this coast, it behooves us to awake, before we are excluded from every eligible or desirable location. The Kroo Country presents a fair site for a settlement.—It is important for its trade in oil, camwood and cattle, and for its near propinquity to the grain region. By this treaty, we have secured the right of preemption, or at least the natives cannot unless, in violation of their solemn compact, convey away, unless to us, any portion of their territory. As Kroo Country is rather an indefinite term, there being Nanna Kroo, Settra Kroo—King Will's Town, &c. &c.——all included at one time under the generic term Kroo—at another, each asserting its own independence of the other and supporting this independence by force and arms—as the term at one time is applied to all the places above named, and at another, restricted to one or more according to existing circumstances, it is desirable that the region referred to in the agreement, be accurately defined so as to prevent suspicion or fraud hereafter. We will not undertake to say how serious their highness-ess were in stipulating to visit punishment upon the head of any of their subjects that may be found aiding and abetting the slave trade. Very long, we are of opinion, will it be before our courts will be troubled with one of these culprits turned over by his government for trial.

ARTICLES OF COMPACT, &c.

of the seond part.

Whereas the great blessings of peace, the interests of commerce, the advancement of the cause of missions, the protection of resident and transient foreigners, and the civilization of the native inhants of the country, have impelled to this compact. It is therefore agreed by and between the parties—

First That a firm and lasting friendship, a free intercourse for the purpose of gain and trade, and an interchange of friendly offices shall pe maintained between the parties.

Second. That the commerce of Liberia shall be admitted to the several parts of the Croo Country, on as favorable terms and receive the same protection as the commerce of any other nation or people in the same waters.

Third. That the party second to this compact, promises and agrees not to engage in any way, directly or indirectly, in the Slave Trade, and further agree that their subjects shall not serve on board or in any way assist slave vessels. And acts of that kind coming to the knowledge of either party to this, shall be communicated to the other, and the second party promises to themselves to publish or else they will deliver the offender up to the Governor of the Colony, to be punished as his offence shall merit, according to the laws of the Colony.

Fourth. The party of the second part agrees to foster and protect the American Missionaries and protect and encourage legitimate traffic with the Colony of Liberia.

Fifth That for effectually avoiding all causes of discord and distrust the party second to this compact, solemnly promise that no foreign officer, ogent, or subject except of the colony of Liberia or the American Colonization Society shall purchase, have or in any way, by sale, lease, or gift, obtain any right to, or claim upon, the Croo territory.

Sixth. That the Governor of Liberia for and in consideratoin of the last article will be the Friend and Ally of the King and Headmen of the Croo Country, and will act as impartial umpire in any serious dispute that may arise between them and their neighbors.

The following communication, will show that the Porpoise has not been idle since she sailed for the windward. She has visited as will be seen, most of the stations between this and Canaries, not excepting even the hitherto supposed dangerous and insalubrious Rio Grande.—We think the officers have improved by the cruise.—We never saw better specimens of health than most of them present. Both officers and crew are said to have enjoyed excellent health.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD.

Monrovia, Jan. 10th, 1844.

The United States Brig Porpoise, Lieut. Craven, Commanding arrived and anchored in our harbor this morning. She has been on a short cruise to the Canary Islands, to which place she was ordered for the purpose of giving her crew a run on shore so necessary to their health, after their long confinement on board during her cruise upon the coast.

The Porpoise touched at Port Praira in the Cape de Verd Islands, from whence she proceeded direct to the Canaries, making the celebrated peak of Teneriffe in eight days from taking her departure from the former islands; after remaining a few days at Santa Cruiz the capital of Teneriffe, she again visited Port Praira, and having filled up her water, provisions &c., started for the coast, touching and communicating with Goree, Bathurst in the Gambia, and Bissao, and anchoring in the mouth of the Nunez River which place she left on the third instant.

Her officers and crew are in fine health. We are happy to say that she brought a letter bag for the colony, from the American Brig Robert, of New York then in the Gambia. The officers represent every thing to be quiet in the neighborood of the above settlements, nothing having occurred to interrupt the commerce of the United States.

SLAVER.

A few weeks ago a schooner of about 80 tons burden, with American colors, and hailing from Baltimore, anchored in the harbor of Edina, Grand Bassa. The Captain landed, reported himself an American, bound to St. Thomas, and requested permission to land some of his crew, who he said were ill with the fever, and who he was desirous should have the benefit of medical aid. —His request was granted; he landed six men, all of whom went rapidly to the grave. He then pretended to be, or was really in want of more men, and decoyed away the crew of Benson's sloop, and one or two colonists from Edina. Before he sailed, however, one of the colonists went on board, and found he had some eighteen or twenty men besides those he had engaged, and a slave deck already laid. He boasted he had been three times chased, but every time eluded his pursuer. Now we think his going to St. Thomas is all a hoax. He would never be so reckless of danger as to put down a slave deck if he had to make a voyage to St. Thomas. The probability is that he has a load of slaves either at New Cesters or the Gallenas, which he knew would be ready by then he could get from Bassa.

THE DEYS.

These half starved Deys have again obstructed the trade, by shutting up "the path." Their pretext is, long bush man go Cape, he larn too much sense. Beach belong for we. Pose he bring he wood water side, he mus ge we—we care em Cape sell em, den we cant eat sum. Himself cant go. They wish to act as factors for the tribes of the interior, and not suffer them to come to the settlement, where as they say, they will larn all ting price, and they no longer be able to cheat them out of one half their returns. We have numerous treaties with the Deys, in which they engage to keep the paths open and permit a free and undisturbed communication with the interior. These agreements should be enforced, and if they will not be quiet, they should be removed from the beach.

AGENCY.

The Rev. George S. Brown in an Authorised Agent for the Liberia Herald. Persons wishing to become subscribers will hand in their names to him, who is authorised to receive subscriptions and give receipts. Our terms will be seen at the Head of the Paper. As we have reduced our terms from one dollar and fifty cents to one dollar a year, we hope our friends will lend us their aid in extending our list.

Brought Back.—The fellow that murdered Rickets, fancying that he had sufficiently atoned by a a few days incarceration, took it in his head a night or two ago to walk out of jail, and walk off in the bush. The sheriff who had a different notion on the subject, sent after him, and had him walked back again.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

DISTINGUISHED MEN.

LOUIS PHILIPPE.

The history of this distinguished man almost exceeds the wanderings of romance. In 1809 he went to Sicily, on a visit to the court. Leopold, the king's second son, had entertained the idea of being chosen head of the Spanish nation, in the absence of their king; and he sailed with the Duke for Gibraltar; but the governor, justly conceiving that a Sicilian prince was not the proper head for a free insurrection, refused to suffer the royal adventurer to land, and the design perished on the spot.

On his return to England he found his sister there, and they sailed together to meet their mother, who had escaped from Spain, and the French army, to Port Mahon. With them he returned to Sicily, where he married a daughter of the king, Ferdinand IV., 1809. He now remained four years in Sicily, in the midst of hazard and insurrection. In 1810, the Spaniards offered him a military command in Catalonia; but when he arrived there, he found that no command was provided; the English general probably thinking that the Duke's presence might be some impediment to more national objects. He was even refused admission at Cadiz, and again returned to Sicily.

On the Bourbon restoration he came to Paris, and was made colonel-general of hussars. On Napoleon's landing, in March, 1815, the Duke went to Lyons, to act with the Count d'Artois; but the troops revolted, and he returned to Paris. He was then sent to command in the north, but there, too, the troops revolted —he instantly made his decision, gave up the command to Mortier, and honorably followed the king on his way into Belgium. In 1816, he returned with his family from England, and resided in a state of cool distance with the court, but usefully employing his vast and accumulating revenue, and wisely and gracefully patronizing public works and literature.

The story of the celebrated days of July is not now to be detailed. On the 29th the tri-colored flag was replaced on the Tuilleries—on the 31st the king abdicated, and on the 17th of August he arrived in England. On the 7th of August, the Duke of Orleans had been declared monarch, by the Chamber of Deputies, by the style of "Louis Phillippe the First, king of the French." To this splendid elevation has reached one of the most perilous, deversified, and manly courses of life that history records. Every man who loves personal honor, filial duty, and patriotic wisdom, will be in favor of this elevation; and all will indulge the hope that this amiable and able individual has come to the close of his vicissitudes, and that no cloud may darken the brightness of his proud and fortunate day."

HIBERNIAN HUMOR.—I remember an anecdote which Governor Clinton and General Morton used to tell with great gout. On some occasion they took a boat at whitehall to cross over to one of the islands in the Bay. It so happened that the boatman was from the Emerald Isle.

"Bear away, my lad," said General Morton; "we 're in a hurry."

"Yis, Gineral!" replied Pat, pulling away lustily at the oar.

"You call me General. How do you know who I am?" asked Morton.

"Know you!" exclaimed Pat. "What a blockhead your honor must take me to be, not to know the great Gineral Marton, the pride of the Batthery, and the great little god of war."

"Ha! ha! ha!" cried out the Governor; "there you're caught, General. But pray, my friend, do you know who I am?"

"Why, to be shure I do," says Pat: "the renowned Governor Clinton, the Irishman's raal frind.. Not know ye? Don't I pray for ye both every night? and was n't the last boy we had christened by the name of De Witt Clinton Gineral Morton O'neil? and isn't it happy his mother would be this night if she had a pair of shoes and stockings to put on the crathur?"

Double fare, and a good supply of shoes and stockings, sent the humble namesake of the great O'Neill to his home a happy fellow that same day.

CHICKEN CHARCOALISM.—Patterson, of the Concordia Intelligencer, has discovered a new science. He says that if a waving line, resembling the sinuous appearance of a snake, is drawn with charcoal upon the floor, and a half grown chicken is placed near one end of it, in such a position that its eyes are fixed upon the sham snake, it will stand incapable of motion, gazing intently upon the end of the line for an hour or more. To what giant end the future development of this newly broached science may attain, it is altogether impossible just now to say.

FOWL SHOOTING.

"Look here, neighbor Jones, if you don't keep your hens out of my garden, I will shoot them." "Very well, Smith, shoot away; only if you kill any of my hens, throw them over into my yard." Crack, went the old fowling piece, morning after morning, and the large fat hens were pitched into neighbor Jones' yard like rain. After a fortnight or more, Smith discovered that neighbor Jones never had any hens, and that he had been shooting his own, they having broken out of his own hen-coop.

TURKISH JUSTICE.

A Turkish writer relates the story of a sanctified dervise who was detected in a theft. When brought before the judge, he pleaded the privileges of his order, appealing to the law which forbade any true Moslem to lay hand on one who had performed so many pilgrimages; the judge assented to the law, but he ordered the delinquent to be severely scourged by Christian slaves, while all the Mahomedans present kneeled before the sufferer, and humbly supplicated the benefit of his prayers.

THE DIRECTION OF A LETTER.

There was a letter received at the Pittsburg post-office, a few days ago, directed as follows:

"Swift as the mail, pursue your route,
Nor stop to stay for any,
Until you reach Miss Catherine Trout,
In Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.'

The witty clerk in the post-office added this P. S.

Miss Catherine Trout
Soon came about,
And fished this funny letter out.

And we will fin-ish the story;

Thus pretty Trout, as we opine,
Is caught by him who dropped that line.

HEREDITARY NOBILITY.

A gentleman expatiated on the justice and propriety of an hereditary nobility. "Is it not right," said he, "in order to hand down to posterity the virtues of those men who have been eminent for their services to the country that their posterity should enjoy the honors conferred on them, as a reward for such services."

"By the same rule," said a lady, "if a man is hanged for his misdeeds, all his posterity should be hanged too!"

A VEHICLE.

An ignorant upstart in Louisiana, says the Picayune, lately wrote to a carriage builder in this city to send him on a barouche. In about a week he received a letter stating that the vehicle he had ordered would be ready in a very little while. "There," said the old man, crushing the letter in his hand, "I never could get anything done as I wished. I wrote to this fellow for a barouche, and here he writes me that he is going to send me a vehicle!"

COOLNESS.

Nothing is more distinctive of the gentleman than coolness under awkward circumstances at table. A fair hostess the other day, by some accident, dropped a plate of boiled venison she was handling, so that it fell against the new cashmere vest of one of her guests. The gentleman quietly restored the crockery to the table, and repeated the first two lines of the song—

"Come rest in this bosom,
My own stricken deer."

adding that he was happy to acknowledge the present from a lady of a breast plate!

A LOVE DISPUTE.

A young fellow by the name of Wisely, residing somewhere "out West," in a fit of jealousy, recently attempted to stab another by the name of Toulwell. It seems the young lady who caused the dispute was

"One who loved not Wisely but Too-well."

PRIOR'S EPITAPH.

Prior, the eminent English poet, wrote the following epitaph for himself:

"Nobles and heralds, by your leave,
Here lie the bones of Matthew Prior,
The son of Adam and of Eve,
Let Bourbon and Nassau go higher."

A GENTLEMAN.

There have been various definitions of "a gentleman," but the prettiest and most poetic is that given by a fair girl in New York, the other day. "A gentleman," said she, "is a human being, combining a woman's tenderness with a man's courage."

THE PHILOSOPHER AND HIS SERVANT.

Zeno, the philosopher, believed in an inevitable destiny. His servant availed himself of this doctrine one day while being beaten for a theft, by exclaiming, "Was I not destined to be so?" "Yes," replied Zeno, "and to be corrected also."

A YOUNG VICTOR.

"Is it possible, sir," said a gentleman addressing a young victor, "that you whipped an old man like that?" "Whipped him!" exclaimed the young fellow; "I'm only nineteen, and can whip a man as old again as him at any time.

A SNOWDROP.

"Talking of Millerism," said Grandgent, the other day, "what's the meaning of such a snow storm as this so late in the season?"

"Look out of the window," said Yates, quietly, "and you'll see its drift."

Thinking—It is said, and supposed to be true that fishes never think. We think they do think—for one stopped to think once, after approaching our bait with the evident intention of biting; but he came to the conclusion that he might just as well let it alone. So we thought too. Now, if that fish didn't think, there is no doubt he thought he did.

Here's a Chance.—The following advertisement under the head of Wife Wanted, is in the Batesville (Ark.) News:

"Any gal what's got a bed, callico dress, coffee-pot and skillet, knows how to make a hunting shirt and know how to take care of children, can have my services till death parts both on us."

☞The real rum principle is still alive. Men are influenced into those respectable resorts, rum-shops, and after being made drunk, and becoming troublesome, they are thurst out with a treat to a "punch" of the toe of a boot. This is the true rum-principle. A case of this kind is said to have occurred in this town quite lately.

Fitchburg Sentinel.

Repentance too late.—It is said that Thomas Moore regrets the licentious poems he wrote in early life. To a friend, who asked him when he began to repent writing them, he replied.—"When I had a daughter old enough to read them."

☞'This here feller,' said a witness in court, the other day, 'broke our winder with a tater, and hit Isabeller on the olber, as she was playing on the pianer.'

The magistrate said:—"The conduct of the prisna' and his general characta' render it propa' that he should no longa' be a memba' of society.'

A COLORED D. D.—The Hartford Times says: The Surry University in England, has conferred the degree of "Doctor of divinity" upon Rev. James W. C. Pennington, the colored Congregational preacher in Hartford. He has been in London, attending the World's Convention, with Lewis Tappan and other Americans.

A Beautiful Toast.—The following, one of the finest toasts we have ever read was delivered at the celebration of the 4th of July by the Nashville Literary Institute of Pittsburg. It is as follows:—

By John Fitzsimons, Washington—Providence left him childless, that the Nation might call him Father.

Startling.—At the late dinner given by the Duke of Wellington, on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, it is stated in the papers that the Duke sat at the head of his table with His Royal Hishness Prince Albert on his right hand, and GENERAL WASHINGTON on his left! By a curious coincidence this is the name and title of an old Prussian officer then on a visit to London.

☞An amiable old lady, on reading a recommendation in a newspaper that 'Sal Soda' should be used in washing paint, and that by following this advice the work could be done better and more speedily, remarked that her daughter Julia could do more at washing paint in one hour than Sal Soda could in three, notwithstanding the printer puffed up her smartness so much.'

☞We learn that the President has ordered the sloop of war, building at Norfolk, Va., to be called the "Jamestown"—that at Boston to be called the "Plymouth"—that at the Washington Navy Yard the "St. Mary's," in commemoration of the first places of permanent settlement in America.—[Madisonian.

AN INDUSTRIOUS MAN.—Judge Colquitt, of Columbus, Geo., recently spoke for several hours before the Supreme Court, at Pensacola, on an important law case, and in the evening he preached to a crowded audience in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

☞Judge Colquitt is the late M. C. from Georgia and the newly elected Calhoun U. S. Senator. He is a man of decided ability and efficiency.

OBITUARY.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD.

Bassa Cove, January 12th, 1844.

MR. EDITOR:—Sir, I beg leave to inform you of the triumphant death of our valuable and much beloved friend, Samuel Cabon, who was a member of the Baptist Church in this place.

Brother S. Cabon one of the fathers of the Church, was born in South Carolina, in the year 1772, and about the year 1788, he became a member of the Baptist Church (Black Swamp) in South Carolina; and since the day of his attaching himself to the church, he has continued above 50 years both an honor and a safeguard to the christian religion: undaunted in the midst of very tempestuous times, and unmoved with the prospects of sufferings, he taught men to think little of the present life—to value and love the good things to come, and never to be deterred from a course of piety and virtue, by the fear of any temporal evils whatever; to oppose only meekness to anger, humility to boasting, and prayers to curses and reproaches.

Brother S. Cabon arrived in this country in the year 1835, and after properly locating himself, he joined the Baptist Church in this place, he appears to have been unwearied in his endeavors to preserve the peace of the church, and to promote piety and virtue amongst men. He was made a Deacon, and this important station he filled with honor and integrity, serving with a full purpose of heart.

Brother Cabon departed this life on the 31st, day of December, 1843, with an assurance of an inheritance at God's right hand. He as a christian, triumphed amidst the agonies of dissolving nature, in a well grounded hope of future felicity. His exit evinces, in an impressive manner, the uncertainty of life; for in the 71st, year of his pilgrimage, he felt his sun had attained its meredian, when the clouds of diseases veiled its brightness, and "as a garden that hath no water," he withered away and fell asleep in the arms of his Redeemer.

Reader experience tells us, that no period of life is secured from the attacks of diseases and death; yet experience teaches us to turn every thing else to our own advantge, "Be ye also ready," that when death come it may find us on our watch-post, ready at any moment like brother Cabon, to go from works unto reward.

Yours, respectfully,
DAVID MADISON.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD.

MR. EDITOR:—While listening the other evening to D. Francis Bacon's rabid effusions, which were read for the amusement of a company, one passage particuly struck me, although the most correct of all his ravings.—He states that he bargained for his washing at one dollar a dozen. Now this may be true. For if the washing of successive weeks comprised only twelve pieces, still it would be a dozen, and the veritable doctor would have to pay a dollar. But the expression put down in the careless manner it is, might lead some to suppose that the doctor's washing was something like what gentlemen's washing usually is. It is not so. An intimate acquaintance with the docter and a frequent inmate of his house enables me to vouch that the Doctor's whole wardrobe, boots and cap inclusive did not comprise twelve pieces.

MARRIED,

In this town, on the 4th, inst. by Rev. A. W. Anderson, Mr. William J. Stokes, to Miss Hanah Simmons: both of this place.—Com.

DIED

In this town, on Thursday 18th inst. James Cotton, after a short but severe illness, aged 11 years.

POETRY.

LABOR.

Heart of the People! Working men!
Marrow and nerve of human powers;
Who on your sturdy backs sustain,
Through streaming time, this world of ours;
Hold by that little which proclaims
That ye are undismayed and strong;
Accomplishing whatever aims
May to the sons of earth belong.

Yet not on ye alone depend
These offices, or burthens full;
Labor for some or other end,
Is lord and master of us all
The high-born youth from downy bed
Must meet the morn with horse and hound,
While Industry, for daily bread,
Pursues afresh his wonted round.

With all his pomp and pleasure, he
Is but your working comrade now,
And shouts and winds his horn, as ye
Might whistle by the loom or plough.
In vain for him has wealth the use
Of warm repose and careless joy—
When, as ye labor to produce,
He strives, as active to destroy.

But who is this with wasted frame?
Sad sign of vigour overwrought;
What toil can this new victim claim?
Pleasure for pleasure's sake besought.
How men would mock her flaunting shows,
Her golden promise, if they knew
What weary work she is to those
Who have no better work to do!

And he who still and silent sits
In closed room or shady nook,
And seems to nurse his idle wits
With folded arms or open book;
To things now working in that mind,
Your children's children well may owe,
Blessings that hope has ne'r defined.
Till from his busy thought they flow.

Thus all must work; with head or hand,
For self or others, good or ill;
Life is ordained to bear, like land,
Some fruit, be fallow as it will;
Evil has force itself to sow,
Where we deny the healthy seed—
And all our choice is this—to grow
Pasture and grain or noisome weed.

Thus in content possess your heart,
Unenvious of each other's lot,—
For those which seem the easiest parts,
Have travail which ye reckon not;
And he is bravest, happiest, best,
Who from the task within his span,
Earns for himself his evening rest,
And an increase of good for man.

A Firm Resolve.

BY MRS. LYDIA BAXTER.

Tune.—"I would not live always."

I will not drink alway; no, ere I depart,
I'll dash the vile cup that has madden'd my heart:
O'er the Past, may oblivion throw her dark pall,
And Hope cheer me onward from Alcohol's thrall.

I will not drink alway; the craving within,
Which fetter'd me closely to sorrow and sin,
No more shall enslave me, from bondage I'll flee,
And drain with thanksgiving the cup of the free.

I will not drink alway; my children no more
Shall eat the cold morsel they crave from each door;
Their heart-broken mother no more shall despair,
But breathe with more fervor to Heaven her prayer.

Oh, who would drink alway; the brain mad'ning bowl,
Destruction, and mis'ry, and death, to the soul;
Who then will not pledge from this monster to flee,
And drink from the Fountain that sparkles so free.

SCENERY ON THE WESTERN LAKES.

Correspondence of The Tribune.

Steamer GREAT WESTERN, Lake ERIE, June 24. 1843.

Messrs Editors: Once more upon the wild, free waters; and in a floating palace that may vie in all respects with any steamers anywhere. I have had an opportunity of visiting all the crack steamers that sail from this port, and having also voyaged in most of the prime craft from Lake Champlain to the lower Mississippi, I must in all candor admit that these Lakers will compare with any of their cotemporaries "the country through." The Great Western, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri and Buffalo, it would be "hard to beat." Indeed I know of but one luxury that could be added to them, and that is one which could easily be secured, to wit: a comfortable bathing-room. Water, warm and cold, is cheap on steamers, and a good, quiet bath after leaving the dust and bustle of the city would prove a great comfort, and one which could not fail to "tell" in favor of those boats which might be able to furnish it. I cannot but notice, in all the crack Lakers, the taste and skill exhibited in their painting. Many of the pannels of the stateroom doors are perfect gems in their way. Stained glass too, in all its beautiful varities is as rife here as upon the Sound or the Hudson. To their praise be it spoken the proprietors tolerate but little gilding. I am informed that from three to four thousand dollars are frequently expended upon the painting only of one of their boats.

But how shall I describe the scene preparatory to leaving port? Water and Front-streets, Whitehall and the Battery afford nothing richer. Having been set down, by the carriage from the Western, as near as possible to the boat which was just within sight of her pipes—I took to the pave, and literally worked my passage on board, when, after seeing my baggage safely deposited, I took a station forward, on the upper deck to hear the music and watch the fun. Music we had in fact, and pretty fair music too, from a "brass band" which "picks up a considerable of a living" by playing an hour or two for each of the steamers just before they leave port. The wharf was covered with all manner of things which man can use or abuse for his comfort or convenience, which can relieve his necessities or contribute to his pleasures. Hogsheads, pipes, barrels, casks, and kegs; boxes, bales, bundles and parcels of all sorts and sizes; all manner of vehicles and farming utensils; all sorts of tools, all kinds of machinery and all descriptions of furuiture from the unpainted deal-table and the unvarnished bedstead of humble poverty, up to the gorgeous bedeckments and conveniences of the most fastidious boudoirs and the most magnificent parlors: birds and beasts: fish, flesh and fowl; amunition, guns and drums; herbs, plants and flowers; in short it almost seems as if a new ark was to be freighted, not only with every inanimate thing which the ingenuity of man has invented either to assist prolong, or torment and shorten life.

On and in, around and beyond this heterogeneous mass—this distributing office of all things, was the ever busy, bustling throng of humanity. Rich and rare too, were some of the specimens which it presented. Hosiers, and Suckers, Pukes and Wolverines, Corn-crackers and Buckeyes, Yankees and New-Yorkers, all had their representatives here; other characters there were too, indigenous to this place, and all others where men most do congregate. Among these last was a short, fat man with a rubicund body and a rosy face, who was perched upon an empty barrel that stood on the top of an empty box; one of those individuals, whose element seems to be a crowd, a fuss; who live, no one knows how or where, who compress whole days of life and enjoyment into the short hour that precedes the departure of a steamboat or railroad train, while they sleep or vegetate during the remainder of their time. A busy, noisy, bustling throng is their intoxicating delight, their stimulating narcotic, and when this is dispersed their life and vocation are gone together. Who that has once seen that beaming face can ever forget it? he has withal a shrewd, observant eye and sees every thing that is going on, and, apparently, knows every body about him. He is almost constantly, though leisurely masticating fruits and nuts to which he helps himself in a quiet way of his own, from the back end of the long market basket which the peddling-boys use here, while they are selling a pint to some customer in front. He is also on good terms, evidently, with the newsboys, for he always has a newspaper in his left hand, albeit he is never seen to be reading it.

But the hour is approaching for the boat to "put off;" most of the miscellanies that had long lumbered the wharf having been transferred to the spacious hold, decks and cabins of the steamer. Mid-ships on the lower deck is presented a scene of the most superlatively confounded confusion that the genius of destruction could wish to look upon; for here is there that baggage, overcoats and umbrellas are piled from floor to roof, and each passenger is looking for his own. Here is a gouty gentleman, whose poor feet stands about as good a chance for comfort as a kitten in a panther's nest, searching with the help of the halfdistracted porter, for the "Russia leather and brass riviteted trunks;" there is a tall, resolute-looking widow, without any escort, looking for the "small black trunk" belonging to her daughter; on this end of the pile comes up a broad-shouldered, heavy-fisted Buckeye who turns the whole over at once to see if this "big chest is safe;" no sooner is he satisfied than a tall Corn-cracker approaches the other end turns the pile bodily all back again to see if his alligator-covered trunk is "thar;" then comes a long sallow-looking Hoosier who upsets the pile sternward to be sure that his "large hair trunk" is secure; next a huge brawny Sucker rolls the mass forward again to get sight of his buffalo-covered box; standing a little back upon a box of goods is a shrewd Yankee patiently watching while the others work, and on the appearance of a plain, substantial leather truk, he reaches through the front rank, seizes it by the handle, draws it out, and quietly deposits it in the baggage-room; here is an *im*patient, red-faced, fidgety woman, trying to pacify an *im*patient, fidgety crying child; there is a tidy, good humored nurse playing with a good-humored, laughing baby; here is a group of happy, frolicksome children, with kind hearts and intelligent minds, "cottoning" to each other at once, and frolicking together as happily as if they were in the door-yard at home; here and there seated upon boxes, barrels and stools are other children, some stupid and staring, some demure and bashful, and some weak and sickly. The poor chamber-maid is as busy as a dog with a nest of humble-bees after him, running hither and thither to find this old lady's traveling bag and that young lady's parasol; to get a glass of water for this one and a little camphor for another; to procure a cup of milk for this baby, a cookey for that, and and so on to the end.

Nor is the scene less animating on the forward decks. The staid and sturdy German emigrants—the woman in their knit spencers and linsey petticoats—and the men in their thick woolen stuff socks and heavy shoes, moving about slowly but systematically; the keen Yankees, not less systematic but more active, are arranging their "notions," while the jolly Irish, with no system at all, and no apparent object but hilarious fun, are busy every where doing any thing or nothing just as it happens. The sailors are quietly arranging the preliminaries for being off; the band is playing for the last time previous to going ashore, what happens to be the "Emigrant's Farewell." Near me sit an intelligent-looking young man, and an equally intelligent handsome-featured young woman, whom I take to be his wife, both evidently New-Englanders, whose education, I conclude, is better than their present condition. Perhaps they have been unfortune in the land of their fathers and are going to retrieve their fortunes in the teeming West. A tear has started to her eye while listening to the plaintive notes of the "Farewell," and she hastily brushes it away lest her husband should see it and his heart should be pained. A little while after when the last notes had been finished and the musicians had stepped on shore I looked again. The trial had been too much for her;—she was leaning her head upon her husband's shoulder and weeping outright. Oh! who shall attempt to describe the pangs it costs to woman, the effort to sever the ties and associations of her youthful years—to tear herself from the friends and the worship of "life's early day," and encounter the trials, toils and perils of emigration! Man may find in the constant excitement of the effort something to occupy and divert his mind; he may be prompted by pride, stimulated by ambition and cheered by hope. But woman, sensitive, imaginative woman, cherishes, lives upon the by-gones; her idolatry is the past. The scenes and recollections connected with her childhood's joys, her youthful pleasures, her maiden love and her bridal home—these are the things more firmly, fondly and faithfully enshrined in her heart of hearts than any thing else save her trust in God and her hopes of heaven.

But return we from this digression to the bustling life before us. And bustling enough it is. Every animate thing seems to have been seized with a sudden desire to do something. Men, women and children are in motion. The horses and dogs tied in the bow, are constantly changing their position; the hens are inoculated with the spirit of industry and are unconciously scratching for worm on the floor of their coop; the pigs too are infected with the same spirit and are incontinently rooting for grub in the same unpromising kind of soil. The last bell has rung, the ponderous wheels of the thronged vessel are making their preliminary revolutions, slowly and impatiently, as though they were eager to "give way;" the friends of the departing ones have "spoken their said farewell," their earnest "God bless you," and have retired to the upper deck of the noble Indiana—which lies just before us—to watch our passage out the harbor. The Newsboys have all gone ashore, and the confectionary boys too, all save one rogue who while on his way to the gang plank with a basket of cakes offers a verdant countryman "six for four pence;" the verdant gentleman thinks the offer too tempting to be resisted and proffers a shilling; the boy fumbles in his pocket, says he has no change but will "step and get it:" so off he goes, the countryman following to the plank, but not daring to leave the boat. The boy is just congratulating himself upon the renewed success of a trick he has so often tried before, when a shrewd Yankee steps beside him, picks up half a dozen cakes inquiring "how much!" "Six pence," answers the boy. The Yankee, too, fumbles for the change while making rapid strides for the boat; the men have just got hold of the plank to "haul in;" he touches it once, and landing on the deck, whither the plank instantly follows him, turns to inquire with a look of honest concern, "how much did you say, boy?" "Sixpence," shouted the lad. "Well I swow," says the Yankee, hauling from one of his trouser's pockets, "a handful of penknives, keys, halves, and quarters, "I swow I thought I had sixpence, but I haven't" "Never mind Spooney," continued he to the guilt-stricken lad, "Charge it to the Town-pump and wait till I come again."—"Sarv'd him right," said the fat gentleman on the barrel, "k, k, kouldn't kome it kompleter!"

"——and his little round belly
Shook, as he laughed, like a bowl of jelly."

"Hans, hans," said a fat woman to a stout man, "there be the junk basket ashore." "Mein Got!" said the man, "so there be. Captun, Captun, stop de boat!" The call was vain; the "Captun" was on the deck above. About the same instant a tidy little woman exclaimed, "Zekiel there's Bub's rocking cheer left behind." The man to whom this was addressed at once mounted the guard, reached the wharf at a single bound, and seized the chair; the stern line was not yet cast off; touching it with one foot near the boat and laying one hand on the guard he leaped aboard again. The plethoric Dutchman lost his luncheon and basket together; the active Yankee saved his "cheer." Now the confusion reached its climax. The wheels are rolling heavily, the stern lines still fast, while by a forward one fastened to the bowsprit of a vessell on the opposite side of the creek, the sailors are pulling the bow into the stream with a steady and musical "yo, heave;" the little babies are crying, the large ones are squalling, the children are shouting, the women are scolding, the men are swearing, the fowls are cackling, the pigs are squealing, the dogs are howling, the horses are pawing and whinnying, and the steam is hissing and whizzling! What a din! The confusion of Babel was a desert solitude compared with it!—Anon! ten minutes after, and we are upon the bosom of the Lake; the noble steamer, like a steed let loose, leaps exultingly on her way. Her motion is, to all living things on board, like a mother's rocking to a tired child. All discord has ceased, and every sound is hushed save the muffled plashing of the wheels in the dark green waters. An opiate could not produce a more soothing effect. Men drop on to the sofas or into their berths and sink at once into calm repose. In this category was your humble servant, who, on waking, indites this over-long epistle for the Tribune. But what shall he omit, or where stop—except here! Yours, &c.

ROBERT RAMBLE.

REBELLIONS IN ILLINOIS.—The St. Louis Era, of the evening of the 5th, says:

"Two hundred citizens of Coles county, Illinois, have resolved in public meeting that no heed should be paid to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, setting aside the appraisement law of Illinois; that all officers be advised not to carry out such decision in the sale of property; that they be asked to resign their offices if they cannot comply with such recommendation; that they (the people) will oppose them by all fair and mild means, and iff that will not do, they will oppose them by force of arms and all other means in their power; that committees be appointed to ascertain from such officers whether they will persist in such sales or will resign their places; that the meeting appoint officers to carry out the resolutions; that the decision of the Supreme Court is regarded as unjust, and not binding on the people of Illinois; and that they pledge their lives, fortunes, and sacred honors to sustain their resolutions."

THE LATE DR CHANNING.

DEAR SIR,—In reading over the Cornwall Gazette of Friday the 18th Instant, I met with the following paragraphs in reference to the late Dr. Channing. The extract from one of his letters is of high interest; and the reflections accompanying it are, to a consideradle extent, painfully just. Your insertion of them, in whole or in part, will oblige,

Dear Sir, youss, &c.,

W. F. BURCHELL.

Rochdale, Nov. 25,

EXTRACT.

"This eloquent preacher and powerful writer, who in a private station, by the force of only talent and character, could win the admiration and influence the opinions of a nation; who had the courage and the virtue to denounce the sins of his countrymen,—the foul blot of slavery, and the nefarious invasions of the Texas; died early in last month, and his death is regarded throughout the United States as a public loss. The opinions of such a man, especially towards the close of life, are always interesting; and, after having held the cold and presumptuous heresy of those who 'deny the Lord that bought them,' we desire to know how he thought and felt when infirmity compelled him to retire from active duties, and warned him of an approaching change.

"We are happy to be enabled to lay before our readers the following extract of a letter which he wrote from Boston to Mr. W. Trebilcock of Carharrack in Gwennap, in this county, and which is dated so lately as August in last year.

"'As I grow older, I grieve more and more at the impositions on the human mind, at the machinery by which the few keep down the many. I distrust sectarian influences more and more. I am more detached from a denomination, and strive to feel more my connexion with the universal church, with all good and holy men. I am little of a Unitarian, have little sympathy with the system of Priestly and Belsham, and stand aloof from all but those who strive and pray for clearer light, who look for a purer and more effectual manifestation of Christian truth.'

"This, from Dr. Channing, is an important, a painful confession It is melancholy to find such a man, in the last stage of life, compelled to distrust the tenets he had held and taught, without knowing what to take in their stead; seeking every where to attach himself to personal goodness, in despair of attaching to divine truth; and while the multitude regarded him as the light and glory of their land, to see him by his own confession, 'waiting for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but walking in darkness; groping for the wall like the blind, and stumbling at noon day as in the night;' distrusting the fallacies which had led him astray, but unable to apprehend those great and saving truths which alone could guide his feet into the way of peace,—those truths which even little children can receive in the full assurance of faith, to their great and endless comfort But thus it hath ever been. The world by wisdom knew not God, who 'out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hath perfected praise."

From the Baptist Advocate.

When Christians see the "plague" of their own hearts, and when they feel their weakness and inefficiency, then they will appreciate the worth of the graces of the Spirit and the love of Christ in their hearts, and they will pray to the Great Head of the Church for these blessings. When the conference and prayer meeting (which has hitherto been thinly attended) begins to fill up, and those who have heretofore been negligent in their religious duties become active, and appear to be engaged in the cause of Zion, then we may with strong faith look forward for a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

When union and brotherly love, one towards the other, abounds in the church, and its members universally are engaged in prayer for the pastor, and the blessing of God on the word of truth; then we may expect the outpouring of his Spirit.

When the church possess a missionary spirit, and feel to sympathize with the impenitent, and realize the worth of, and the destiny of the soul of the sinner, then the Lord will pour out his spirit upon his children.

When there is a general spirit of confession among those who have hitherto been lukewarm and cold in the cause of Christ, without any special excitement to create it; when there is a spirit of anxiety for the salvation of the souls of parents, children, relatives, friends, and neighbors; and when special prayer in their behalf is being offered to the throne of grace; we may then look for and expect a revival of religion in the Church. And if Christians would only believe in the promises and declarations of the Word of God, "which are all yea and amen to the believer," and take him at his word, we would see greater displays of his power than we have ever seen before.

RATTLESNAKES.

A physician, one of my intimate friends, passed a night in a state of great perplexity, of which the following account may give the reader some idea. He had, like me, entertained the desire of observing the particular ways of these terrible reptiles, kept in a cage, and succeeded in furnishing himself with four of them, of various sizes. For fear of some accident on account of the negligence of his negroes, he had placed the cage which enclosed them in a spacious room, which he made his bed- hamber. A negro was selected to feed and attend to them. It was my friend's custom, on his return home, to take a glance at his animals, to assure himself of their being properly fed, and their cage door being well shut.—One night, having come home very late and tired, he neglected this precaution and went to bed.—The weather was very hot, and, notwithstanding his state of fatigue, several hours glided away without his obtaining any sleep. He suddenly heard a light, sliding noise on the floor along the wall of the apartment, which left off very soon, and he ceased to give any more attention to the circumstance. After some moments, the same noise revived, and he then cautiously looked out of bed to ascertain what might be the cause of it. The moonlight shining full into the room, he observed the largest of the snakes [he had 18 rattles] roaming free along the floor. I leave the reader to imagine what were his impressions at this unexpected sight! What was he to do in this case? A loaded gun was hanging at the extremity of the room. How to reach it was the question. Farther: was this animal the only one out of the cage, or were all the others, too, at liberty? The whole of the servants were asleep. He resolved to wait for the morning; but first took the precaution of slowly and carefully drawing up his musquito curtains around the bed; afterwards he sat down and patiently watched the issue. The animal continued to make some undulatory movements through the room; after which the Doctor heard him approach the bed, and at last all became silent

At daylight, he heard the steps of a servant who was coming according to his custom to perform his morning duty. The Doctor cried out to him not to open the door, but to go for an old African negro, named Isaac, who was known to approach these reptiles without fear. The latter arrived, entered confidently, and saw the snake rolled up under the bed. The three others had remained in the cage, although the door was open—his first care was to shut it. My friend insisted on his shooting the snake. Isaac refused, and declared himself able to seize the animal, without the least fear of being bitten by him. In effect, he advanced to the bed, whistling softly with his lips, pronouncing some words in English in a caressing tone, and then, after some minutes, he ventured to pass his hand over the back of the snake, all the time trying to sooth him. Afterwards; lifting him gently by the head, while he continued to whistle, talk and soothe him, he induced the animal to place himself on his arm and body. The snake let the negro carry him thus through the chamber, without betraying either fright, or any offensive emotion. The Doctor asked Isaac to replace the reptile in his cage—"oh master, this is impossible," says he; if I attempt it, the snake would be angry and bite me—look." Indeed, scarcely did Isaac stop and lean towards the cage, before the animal began to move briskly and sound the rattle.

Isaac immediately got up, began again his soothing caresses, and the animal fell calm. He then asked for a strong sheet; by degrees accustomed the snake to the view of this object, and then passed one end of the edges out between his arm and the animal's body, continuing his wheedling and walking about all the time. As soon as he was certain that he could in a moment, envelop the animal in the sheet, he rapidly threw it around him, and thus was the snake mastered. All that remained now to be done was to reinstate him in a cage; of which the door was very small comparatively with the mass which formed the animal so wrapped up. Isaac displayed the same dexterity in unrolling the sheet that he had done before in all his interesting manœuvres. He succeeded, by a series of quick and skilful movements, in getting him back to his old quarters, without receiving the slightest injury, shut the cage, and thus my friend's unpleasant affair terminated. The negro, however, said, if a similar affair happened again with the same snake, he could never venture to approach him for fear of being bitten, because he had in this manner deceived him.

These facts are of undoubted authenticity, since I had them from the mouth of my friend. But I confess that I do not know how to comprehend the perfect security of the old African and still less perhaps the sagacity which he attributed to the snake. To be able to establish the fact necessary to found any serious discussion on this subject, it would be necessary to try the same manœuvres imployed by the negro, to observe their effects, afterwards attempt an explanation of them. This is a hazard which I certainly do not choose to risk.

There is an attribute peculiar to the hog, in relation to the rattlesnake, the mention of which will not, I trust, prove entirely uninteresting to the reader. On his approach, the latter seems terrified and tries to escape. But the grunter pursues, seizes and devours him with the most absolute indifference of his rattle and his fangs. If it be a sow, accompanied by a litter of young ones, she even divides the prey amongst the little squeakers. It is also usual in certain localities where those reptiles abound, to drive forward a hog fastened to a leash to remove them from the places to be visited. The doctor questioned the negro if he had something about him belonging to this animal, or other substance equally efficacious in intimidating or appeasing the snake. Isaac directly replied that he did not employ any other means than the caresses which he had witnessed.

I will close these remarks with the relation of another adventure, which threatened in its effects, perhaps, to be still more terrible. A hunter of my acquaintance, used to amuse himself whenever he met some fine specimen of the rattlesnake with endeavoring to catch him. This he was enabled to do by means of a long stick cleft at the end, with which he was accustomed to seize him by the back of the head

One day, as he was posted at some distance from his friends, watching for his game, (deer) he perceived one of these reptiles; he seized him in the above-mentioned manner, and then, after having firmly placed his fingers behind its head, he diverted himself by opening his mouth, in order to examine his teeth and fangs. In the mean time the snake, quite unobserved by my friend, who was entirely absorbed in his inspection of the creature's head, had twisted his body in numerous foulds round his arm. Little by little he was conscious of a slight pressure, accompanied by an alarming numbness in this member. He immediately endeavored to disengage his arm, but at the same time the pressure and numbness kept augmenting—he by degrees felt with horror that his fingers were losing all power of retaining their hold. At last the head of the animal began to slip away, gradually drawing near the palm of his hand, and the thoughtless hunter had just made up his mind to the horrible consequence of his imprudence when his companion at the next post, alarmed by his cries for help, most opportunely arrived, hastily pulling out a little bottle of ammoniac, and, uncocking it, poured its contents into the rattlesnake's mouth. Suddenly this frightful scene was completely changed; the animal unrolled himself, fell to the ground and was killed.

I will just mention, en passant, for the information of the unimitated, that some hunters in these regions are accustomed to carry with them a bottle of this alkali, to provide against the chance of their dogs being bitten by the snakes.

THE BARNEGAT WRECKERS.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia American Sentinel, writing from Barnegat, N. J. gives the following illustrations of the "fair business transactions" of that renowned neighborhood:

When a vessel was wrecked at night and any portion of her cargo floated ashore, it was instantly seized upon by persons who were constantly on the watch for plunder, and carried off into the interior or buried in the sand. So except in their cursed trade did these fellows become at last, that five minutes after a box or bale would land, no traces of it could be found. Sometimes when kegs of butter or lard were cast upon or carried to the shore, a parcel of men would surround one, and while pretending to be earnestly engaged in conversation, a confederate would creep in, and either bury the keg in the sand or knock off the head, scrape out the contents to the depth of three or four inches, and fill up the vacancy with sand. This done, the party would quietly dispense, and at night the keg of sand would be removed.

A vessel came ashore one day, heavily laden with an assorted cargo, A deputation of wreckers immediately boarded the unfortunate craft, and having first politely informed the captain that his ship would go to pieces before the next morning, stated that for the three-eights of the cargo, and no less, they would remove all the goods to the shore in safety. This looked extremely like a dead-shave, but the master seeing no alternative, was obliged to embrace the offer. —Instanter every boat in the neighborhood was put into requisition, and before night the whole of the cargo was anded on the beach, and divided into two lots, three-eights, the wreckers' share of the spoil being placed in one spot, and the captains portion close by. After all this had been done, word was sent to the master, that the wreckers had put a watch upon their portion of the property, and recommending him to do the same with his. This suggestion was acted upon: the mate of the vessel, a prudent, sensible man and withal a singer of the temperance pledge, though not a tee-totaler, being deputed to perform that duty. Now among the cargo were several barrels of prime ale, and these the wreckers determined should serve them in their purpose. Accordingly a barrel was tapped and its contents freely partaken of by all hands, but, before the mug containing the beverage was handed to the mate, it was deeply drugged with laudanum. The result may be anticipated. The second officer fell asleep at his post, and when the morning broke, no part of the captain's portion of the cargo, was visible, while the wreckers' portion, hardly twenty feet distance from where the other had lain, was untouched.

A New-York vessel outward bound, and with a valuable cargo on board, was a few years ago, by an unfortunate accident, stranded on the Barnegat Shoals. The wreckers boarded her, and speedily conveyed her cargo to the shore, where, at the request of the wreckers, a watch was placed upon it by the master. Upon this arrangement being made, the captain was waited upon by one of the most active of those who had aided in removing the cargo, who stated that there were many persons in this part of the country, who led loose and lawless lives, and were addicted to stealing any and every thing that they could lay their hands upon, and that no doubt, among those then on the beach, were many, who, as night came on, would avail themselves of its aid, and purloin considerable from the merchandize piled up on the shore. This communication was accompanied with an offer to loan "for a consideration" a fine fowling piece which he held in his hands. "Take it," said he, "and if any of the d——d scoundrels come ner shoot them down like dogs. It is time a stop was put to it, and if a few of the ringleaders were only shot, we'd hear no more of this rascally business." This had the desired effect, the captain taking the piece and agreeing to pay $2, and if it got lost to pay 30 dollars. During that night the wreckers mustered in great numbers (with the owner of the gun as leader,) rushed in upon, overpowered, and beat down the guard, and carried off and secreted before morning every thing of least possible value, including the gun, a half inch of the barrel of which, had been neatly filled up with sand by our indignant friend, previous to his handing it to the master. This you would call a "cute trick," worthy of the genius of a Yankee, but the sequel is still "cuter." The wrecker sued the captain for the $30 which was to be paid if the gun was lost, (actually having the article in his possession at the time) recovered the amount with costs, and obtained the money!—New-York Tribune.

THE SILVER BULLET.

The readers of American history will recollect that in the plan of the campaign of Burgoyne, it was intended that Sir Henry Clinton should ascend the Hudson from New York, and join Burgoyne at Albany. Fortunately, however, neither of the parties succeeded in reaching the point of junction, Clinton, it will be remembered, commenced his voyage up the Hudson, taking Fort Montgomery, defended by Governor, George, and General James Clinton, in the Highlands, proceeding thence North of Æsopus, which was captured and burnt. Immediately after the capture of Fort Montgomery, Sir Henry Clinton dispatched a spy as a messenger to Burgoyne, announcing his movement, and thus far its success. The spy was furnished with a letter enclosed in a silver bullet—the silver being coated with lead, and the bullet mixed with others of real lead, which he carried with affected carelessness in his pocket.

The spy, however, was taken in Dutchess county, near Red Hook, and searched. On handling the bullets, it was discovered that one was much lighter than the others. "Why, this can never be a bullet," exclaimed one of the captors; "it is too light" The spy thereupon snatched the bullet from the hand of the other, and instantly swallowed it. The circumstance was reported to Governor Clinton, who directed a surgeon to take him in hand, for the purpose of bringing the missive to light. An emetic proving inadequate to the subject, a powerful cathartic effected the purpose, and on opening the bullet, the following letter was extracted therefrom:—

"Fort Montgomery, Oct. 8, 1777.

"Nous voici, and nothing between us but Gates. I sincerely hope this little success of his may facilitate your operations. In answer to your letter of 28th September, by C. C., I shall only say that I cannot presume to order, or even advise, for reasons obvious. I heartily wish success. Faithfully yours, H. CLINTON.

"To General Burgoyne."

The man upon whom the bullet was found, was hanged as a spy, upon a tree, in a little place called Hurley, about three miles from Æsopus—now Kingston. We have revived this scrap of history from the circumstance that General James Tallmadge, one of the heirs of Governor Clinton, (George,) exhibited the bullet and the original letter, at the meeting of the Historical Society on Thusday evening.—New York Com. Advertiser.

SOME AFTER SCENES OF BATTLE

On the field of Borodino—Fifty days after the battle of Borodino, no less than 20,000 of the slain were found lying where they had fallen; and the whole plain was strewed with half bleached bodies of men and horses, in mingled with garments dyed in blood, and with bones gnawed by dogs and vultures. "As we were marching over the scene of the battle," says Labaume, "we heard a piteous sound at a distance; and, on reaching the spot, we found a French soldier stretched on the ground, with both his legs taken. 'I was wounded,' said he, 'on the day of the great battle; and finding myself in a lonely place, where I could gain no assistance, I dragged myself with my hands to the brink of a rivulet, and have lived nearly two months on grass and roots, and a few pieces of bread which I found among the dead bodies. At night I have lain on the carcasses of dead horses; and with the flesh of these animals, I have dressed my wounds.'"

Hospital Scenes—An eminent surgeon, present in the hospitals after the battle of Waterloo, says: "The wounded French continued to be brought in for several successive days, and the British soldiers, who had in the morning been moved by piteous cries of those they carried, I saw in the evening so hardened by the repetition of the scene, and by fatigue, as to become indifferent to the sufferings they occasioned!"

"It was now the thirteenth day after the battle. It is impossible to conceive the sufferings of men rudely carried at such a period of their wounds. When I first entered the hospital, these Frenchmem had been roused and excited in an extraordinary degree; and in the glance of their eyes there was a character of fierceness which I never expected to witness in the human countenance. On the second day, the temporary excitement had subsisted, and turn which way I would, I encountered every form of entreaty from those whose condition left no need of words to stir compassion: Surgeon Major, oh! how I suffer! Dress my wounds! Do dress my wounds!—Doctor, I commend myself to you. Cut off my leg! Oh! I suffer too much! And when these entreaties were unavailing, you might hear, in a weak inward tone of despair, I shall die! I am a dead man!"

In the hospitals of Wilna there were left more than 17,000 dead and dying, frozen and freezing. The bodies of the former were taken up to stop the cavities in the windows, floors, and walls; and in one corridor of the Great Convent, above 1500 were piled up transversely like pigs of lead or iron!—The Presbyterian.

The Famished Hand.

The writor of the following tale of slavery, is a lady of great respectability, who has removed from the south to a free State; and whose statements are entitled to implicit belief.

In the year 1834 or 5, I left Norfolk, Va., in a large schooner bound for New York. One of the cabin passengers had a sick child, and no attendant. The second day after we left Norfolk, the child asked for food; and I offered to prepare a toast for it. For this purpose, I went to the cook's room, which was below the deck, and in going to which, it was necessary to pass a quantity of freight, which had been put on board at Norfolk. The steward kindly assisted me in making the toast, and added a cracker and a cup of tea. With these, on a small waiter, I was returning to the cabin, when in passing the freight, which consisted of boxes, bags, &c., a little tawney, famished-looking hand was held out from between the packages. The skeleton fingers, agitated by a convulsive movement, were evidently reached forth with a view to the food in my possesion. Shocked, but not alarmed, by the apparation, I laid the cracker on the hand, which was immediately withdrawn. No one observed the transaction, I went swiftly to the cabin. The sick child was gratified with its meal; and when, in the afternoon, it wanted more, I again offered my services. I apologized to the steward for the liberty I was taking, in visiting his premises so often, but pleaded the necessity of attending to the little invalid. I found he was a father, and inquired the names of his children. I brought him presents for them; and so ingratiated myself into his favor, that I soon had free access to the larder, and often found nice things prepared for myself, as well as for the little one in the cabin. But whatever I could procure, was divided with the famished hand, which, to me, had become a precious charge. There must have been an eye to watch my motions. In fancy, I could see that eye gleaming at my approach, but at other times closed in dim despair.

As all was tranquil on board, it was evident that I alone was aware of the presence of the unseen fugitive; and I humbly returned thanks to God for allowing me the priviledge of ministering to the wants of this, his outcast, despised, and persecuted image. That the unfortunate being was a slave, I doubted not; but how could I serve him, or her, or whoever it might be, effectually! I knew the laws and usages in such cases. I knew the poor being had nothing to hope from the captain and crew of the vessel, and repeatedly asked myself the agonizing question, Will there be any way of escape? I had hoped that we might land in the night, and so under favor of darkness, the fugitive be enabled to go on shore unseen by those on board. I determined to watch for, and assist the creature, who had been thus providentially consigned to my care.

On the sixth day (we having a long passage) I found that the goods below, were being moved, in order to come at something which was wanted; and so filled up was the passage, that I could not go below. My heart seemed to die within me, for the safety of the sufferer had become dear to me. We sat down to dinner, but the dishes swam before my eyes. I felt that a discovery must take place. The tumbling of the freight below had not ceased. Each moment I expected an alarm. At length I heard a sudden "hollo!"—and all was quiet.—Presently the steward came into the cabin; looking significantly at the company, and whispered to the captain. The captain was carving, but immediately laid down his knife and fork, and went on deck. One of the passengers followed him, but soon retured; and in a laughing manner informed us that a strange passenger had been found among the freight. "It is," added he, "a small mulatto boy, who says he belongs to Mr.——, of Norfolk. That he had been concealed among the lumber, on the wharves, for two weeks, and secreted himself in the schooner, the night before we sailed. He is going to New-York to find his father, who escaped two years since. And," continued he, "he is starved to a skeleton, hardly worth carrying back." Many jokes were passed, as to the manner of his being renovated, when he should again fall into the hands of his master. Some thought the vessel must put immediately back. Others were of opinion that, as we were within eight or ten hours sail of New York, the trip would be made, and the boy carried back on her return.

The unfortunate child had been brought on deck, and we all left the cabin to look at him. I followed behind, almost unwilling to see him; and stood some time by the companionway, in order to gain strength for the interview. I then proceeded forward. As soon as he discovered me, a bright gleam passed over his countenance, and he instantly held out to me the same Famished hand! My feelings were no longer to be controlled. There stood a child before me, not more than eleven or twelve years of age, of yellow complexion, and sad countenance, nearly naked, his back seared with scars, and his flesh wasted to the bone. I burst into tears—into lamentations; and the jeers of others were for a moment turned into sympathy.

It, however, began to be suspected that I had brought the boy away; and in that case, the vessel must put back, in order to give me up, also. But I related the circumstances, as they occurred, and all appeared satisfied with the truth of my statement.

I requested that I might be allowed to feed the boy, which request was granted; and I carried him some dinner on a plate. He ate voraciously; and as I stood beside him, he looked into my face at every mouthful. There was something confiding in his look. When he had finished his meal, as I took the plate, he rubbed his fingers softly on my hand, and leaned his head toward me, like a weary child. Oh that I could have offered him a place of rest; that I could have comforted him, and protected him;—a helpless child, a feeble emaciated, suffering, innocent lad, reserved for bondage, and the torture.

Towards evening he was taken below, and I was no more allowed to see him, but I learned that he was put in the steerage, strongly bound, and that the "proper authorities" of New York would be consulted as to the disposal of him. We came to anchor during the night, at some distance below the city, the captain informing us, in the morning, that the vessel had been forbidden to enter the port with a fugitive slave on board. That she must discharge her cargo, where she lay, and return with all possible dispatch to Norfolk. A boat was provided to carry us up; and I remarked to the captain, that there was "great ado, about the helpless child." He replied, "The laws must be obeyed."

As I approached the city, I could not help exclaiming, "Is this the region, this the soil of boasted freedom?" Here, were the child is treated like a felon, manacled, anchored from the shore, to be sent back to slavery and the lash, deprived of fostering care, which even the brute is allowed to exercise towards its young? Here the slender boy seeks the protection of a father—name, dear to helplessness! Does humanity aid him in the search? No humanity is circumscribed in her operations by laws which consign one portion of freedom's sons and daughters to the service, the controll, and the brutality, of the other. Humanity, looks on them and weeps.—Further she cannot do: "the laws must be obeyed."

And now, since years have passed, where is that body? Does he still live in hopeless bondage?—Are other scars added to those imprinted on his infant skin? When I saw him, he appeared innocent as a child of freedom. He felt, and suffered, as a child of free parents would feel and suffer. His sorrows were touching, as the sorrows of a white child would have been. Alas! poor youth, from me thy fate is hidden. If living, thou art still young: but were thy days turned into pages,—what a volume to meet the humble eye!—

To Day:—A Hint for a Sermon.

Marvellous are the statements put forth by calculators as to what four farthings would by this time have accomplished, had they been placed out at compound interest at the birth of Christ. Were such a penny-turning penny in existence, and able to tell its own tale, it would

> Make his chronicle as rich as prize,
> As is the oozy bottom of the sea,
> With sunken wreck and sumless treasuries.

A rolling stone, we are told, gathers no moss and in case of Sisyphus, we know the assertion to be true; but this ever-turning penny, if Cocker be trustworthy, would at this our present Anno Domini, almost suffice to purchase our habitable globe, even were it composed "of one entire and perfect chrysolite"—a fact of which I have no more doubt, than had Pitt of the efficacy of his sinking fund to annihilate the national debt in a few years! But although we have no metallic evidence of the miracles that may be accomplished by the accumulation of money, we have present and tangible proof of the wonders that may be wrought by the aggregation of Time; for that most marvellous of all prodigies To-day—is the astounding result of the one single day of Creation, with its compound interest for six thousand years.

This most imperial To-day therefore, is seated on the throne built up by two million one hundred-and-ninety thousand days, and make its footstool for twenty-four times as many hours! Acting as the faithful subjects and indefatigable subjects of To-day, the countless myriads of the past generations have exterminated monsters, diminished the races of wild beasts and savages, have advanced civilization, improved the fertility of the earth, conquered the elements, and ministered in ten thousands different ways to the physical security, comfort, and happiness of their living successors.

And yet all that God has done for man, and man for himself in a material sense, during these six thousand years, fades into insignificance compared with the inappreciable moral legacies which the past has bequeathed to the present. All the wisdom, experience, investigations, improvements of sixty centuries, each adding by compound interest to the treasures it had inherited, are the free, absolute, inalienable property of To-day—not entailed to any individual heir—not restricted to any favored class, but scattering their precious benefits by diffusion of intelligence in all directions, upon the poor as well as the rich, the peasant as well as the prince. Truly, all those who by living To-day have become the heirs of the past, have succeeded to a splendid patrimony! Let their gratitude be proportioned to their good fortune, especially when they reflect that they pay no Legacy-duty nor income-tax on this magnificent bequest.

And yet their destiny and position are much less majestical as children of the past, than as the parents of the future, for they have only six thousand years behind, but an eternity before them. And if riches have their duties as well as privileges, what an awful responsibility is entailed upon the generation inheriting all the moral wealth that has been accumulating since the creation! "The child's the father of the man," and the comparatively young world of To-day, will transmit its character to the adult world of another day. Can there be a more cogent motive for improving the moral estate we have inherited, so that our legacy to posterity may exceed that which was bequeathed to us by antiquity, and that the incalculable numbers who are to come after us, may not have reason to reproach their ancestors! Let no living man finally pass away, without having endeavoured to deposit upon the altar of human advancement, and offspring suitable to his means and opportunities. As his efforts towards this great and glorious consummation will best embalm his memory among his fellow mortals, so may he humbly hope that they will from his surest passport to a blissful immortality.

Morality in the Practice of the Law.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Observer.

In an interesting article lately published in your paper A Practical Lawyer laid before his brethren in the profession, certain rules, that in his judgment, seem a fit guide to a professing Christian in the Practice of the Law. Other Practicing Lawyers entertain somewhat different sentiments, and perhaps a comparison of Briefs, on these points of difference, may have a tendency to bring out and establish the true Rule.

A good many years ago, the writer of these lines, before the middle time of life, and in a pretty large practice, was brought to consider of his ways, and eventually profess himself a disciple and follower of Christ. The question then came up before the mind and conscience, "Can a man Practice Law and live a life of Holiness." After a careful and strict enquiry into the matter, certain results were reached, and they were put down on paper, at the time, as follows:

I. If God spares my life, it is my duty, for some years to come, to make the Law my main secular business.

II. In every case that is undertaken, the first thing is, humbly to ask God to help me in it, and that I may do what is exactly right in His sight.

III. Always prepare a case well, and try to have at least one or two good authorities plain on the point.

IV. If a point is started suddenly, try and get time to examine it.

V. If possible, never try a case till it is well considered and understood.

VI. Be punctual at Court.

VII. Try to keep cool and moderate in all circumstances.

VIII. Try, in every way, in my intercourse with the brethren, and others, to exhibit the true spirit of the gospel.

These resolutions take for granted the following propositions.

That, as a general rule, Lawyer ought always to examine beforehand into the very right and justice of the case. And this mainly for two reasons: First. Because one ought not to begin a piece of business, either for himself or for another, till he is reasonably satisfied he can go through it without doing violence to his conscience: and second, Because when a lawyer receives a fee, and actually commits himself, he is apt to think, and honestly too, that he and his client are in the right, when oftentimes every body else sees and knows they are both in the wrong. Whichever a lawyer gets up in a Court House, and tries to make the wrong side appear the right one, however honest he may be in it, the tendency always is to let down the standard of vital piety, and to injure himself among the bystanders.

But if a lawyer must engage in a case instanter, as sometimes happens, he must do it with the distinct understanding that he is to go no farther in it, than he sees it to be right and honest.

That a lawyer ought never to defeat an honest claim by raising a technical objection. The reason is obvious. The debt is an honest one, and the Lawyer knows it. Suppose the Lawyer himself to be the debtor, Who will undertake to say it is right for him to avoid the payment of his own honest debt by a technical objection! And where is the precept in the Bible that allows a man to do that for another which he cannot honestly do for himself!

That a lawyer ought never to set up the Statute of limitation to defeat a just claim. It is found by long experience in many ages and countries, to be for the common good, that after the lapse of a certain number of years, the right of one man to sue another ought to be barred. The law presumes, that after so long a time the debt has been paid, and that the evidence of payment has been lost by time and accident. That is the reason of the Law. But suppose the debt is really not paid, and the client and his Lawyer both know it. Can it be possible that the religion of the Bible will allow either the client, in his own person, or the Lawyer in his behalf, to interpose such a bar, and defraud the man of his honest debt! What else can such a thing be than moral prostitution!

That a Christian Lawyer cannot aid in procuring a divorce for any other cause than that specified by our Saviour. The reason is obvious.—With a Christian the law of Christ is paramount to all other laws. An able judge, a professor of religion, was once asked, "How do you get along in granting these divorces!" "It is a forced matter," said he, "every time I take up the Bible, it opens to that very spot." It was a saying of Lord Holt, that though Parliament can do no wrong, yet it can do several things that look pretty odd. But where the Statutes of the Lord, and the Statutes of man, really come into collision, how can a Christian hesitate to do his duty! If it be objected that these rules are too strict, and that a Lawyer, if he follows them, will lose his business; the answer is at hand—you must count the cost. If the Lord be God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him. It is necessary that a man should be a Christian. It is not necessary for him to be a Lawyer. But such objections are really without foundation. Let a Lawyer steadfastly adhere to the strictest rules of integrity and uprightness and he will soon find himself in the path of safety. Dishonest cases may pass by his door, but honest ones will come in their places; and the further he progresses in the way of duty, the brighter will be his prospects. He has the promise of One who will never disappoint him.—Seek first the knigdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.

Bells.

Bells are made of mixture of about three parts of copper to one of tin, and sometimes a portion of silver, according to the shape and size the bell is to be. They are cast in moulds of sand—the melted metal being poured into them.

The parts of a bell are—its body, or barrel; the clapper, within side; and the links, which suspends it from the top of the bell.

The thickness of the edge of the bell is usually one fifteenth of its diameter, and its height twelve times its thickness.

The sound of a bell arises from a vibratory motion of its parts, like that of a musical string. The stroke of the clapper drives the parts struck away from the centre, and the metal of the bell being elastic, they not only recover themselves, but even spring back a little nearer to the centre than they were before struck by the clapper. Thus the circumference of the bell undergoes alternate changes of figure, and gives that tremulous motion to the air, in which sound consists,

The sound which the metal thus gives, arises not so much from the metal itself, as from the form in which it is made. A lump of bell-metal gives little or no sound; but, cast into a bell, it is strickly musical. A piece of lead, which is not at all a sonorous body, if moulded into proper shape, will give sound, which therefore, arises from the form of the object.

The origin of bells is not known; those of a small size are very ancient. Among the Jews it was ordered by Moses, that the lower part of the blue robe, which was worn by the high priest, should be adorned with pomegranates and gold bells, intermixed at equal distances.

Among Christians bells were first employed to call together religious congregations, for which purpose runners had been employed before. Afterwards the people were assembled together by little pieces of board struck together, hence called sacred boards; and, lastly, by bells.

Paulinus, bishop of Nola, in Campania, is said to have first introduced church bells, in the fourth century. In the sixth century they were used in convents, and were suspended on the roof of the church, in a frame. In the eight century an absurd custom of baptizing and naming bells began; after this they were supposed to clear the air from the influence of evil spirits.

Church bells were, probably, introduced into England soon after their invention. They are mentioned by Bede, about the close of the seventh century. In the East they came into use in the ninth century.

In the former times it was the custom for people to build immense monasterus, and to apply their wealth in ornamenting their places of worship. The same spirit made them vie with each other in the size of their bells. The great bell of Moscow, cast in 1653, in the reign of the Empress Anne, is computed to weigh 443, 772 lbs.

Bells are of great service at sea during a very dark night, or thick fog; they are kept, in such cases, constantly ringing. Near the bell Rock light-house, in England, as a warning to the mariner in fogs or dark weather, two large bells, each weighing 1200 lbs. are tolled day and night, by the same machinery which moves the lights, by which means ships keep off these dangerous rocks.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, FEBRUARY 29th, 1844.

The Colonial Council.

The Colonial Council assembles on the first Monday in the ensuing month. It has been said there is little to be done; and already it has been determined by some how long the session should continue. While we think no time should be needlessly consumed—as time in this case is truly money—we are fixed in the opinion that hasty legislation, will nine times in ten be found useless if not pernicious legislation. Hitherto we have drifted along in the wake of some of the American legislatures.—Each succeeding session going might and main into a repealing of all the preceeding one had done, with as much zeal and eagerness as if the existence of the country depended on a clearing of the statute book: when perhaps only a cursory thought had been given as to what was to be substituted in the place. Human laws in the nature of things will ever be found imperfect. Human sagacity can never contrive to meet critically all the various shades and the endlessly varying complexity of cases that will arise. The most that can be done is to lie down general rules upon the broad basis of equity. The incapability of human laws to apply to specific cases was long ago discerned and gave rise to the maxim summum jus summa injuria.

Unmindful of this fact, men finding the imperfection of existing provisions, have, as though a positive benefit necessarily results from change, hastened with a greater eagerness to repeal, than with a solicitude to remedy the defective regulation. Although we (the colonial legislature from its first institution will be understood)—have just commenced our apprenticeship in the art of making laws, we have advanced rapidly—at least in that branch of the business that wind up with "shall be and the same is hereby repealed."

We would not however, in these admonitary hints be understood as expressing an opinion that no change can be advantageouly made in the laws of the colony. That were indulging too much complacency. The growing condition of the colony—our rapidly extending commerce—the enlargement of our territorial borders will soon imperiously demand provisions and regulations to the want of which we are only just now begining to awake.

One subject however demands the immediate attention of the colonial legislature. And that is the wretchedly contrived judiciary system.

The Colonial Council assembled on the 4th March, in the neat and commodious room prepared as a permanent place of meeting of the Legislature, over the court room in the new Court House. From the spirit manifested by some, and the known ability of others of the members we augur something beneficial.

Governor Roberts delivered the Annual Message. It is an able and interesting document, and does great credit to its author. It is to be published. It will manifest what every Liberian must be proud of: that our trade, our strength and our population are all on the advance.

Missionary Exploration. On the 23d instant Rev. Mr. Seys Superintendant of the M. E. Mission—accompanied by Rev. Messrs E. Johnsen—Russel and Stevens, left this place for a tower in the Gorah Country. A large concourse of citizens assembled with them in the store of J. B. Mc Gill Esq. where prayers were to be offered up for the success of the expedition. Rev. Mr. Herring led the exercise. The scene was truly solemn and affecting. Directly afterward the gentlemen stepped into the boat and she moved off from the wharf. The party was joined at White Plains by Rev. Mr. Wilson. It is the intention to proceed through the Gorah as far as Bosons—We wish them success.

ANOTHER TRESSPASS.

A foreigner is said to have landed a considerable amount of goods at Little Bassa for the purpose as alleged of trading with the natives. Shall this be allowed? The pretext of trading with the natives is entirely too frivolous. First because the act of landing goods there is a direct infringement of our laws, in our own territory: and secondly because under this cover any amount of every description of goods may be introduced into the settlements.

BUILDINGS.

The number of buildings at present going in the colony as well as those undergoing repairs added to the number in contemplation of being built or repaired is truly cheering. But one thing we would say to those who wish a domicil. If you would spare yourself vexation and your pocket loss, be ware of building with wood unless you can as government house is, fix it on a rock. These Bug-a-Bug Termates domorum will only eat down as fast as you can put up. Indeed it has become a matter of speculation, whether rock or mortar is proof against them!!! The theives will work away under cover of an outside shell, and as soon as discovered, down they skulk into the cells they have formed under the foundation.

As our paper was not issued on the day appointed, we have in our notice of the meeting of the council ventured to trench a little upon the month of March.

DEATH OF THE REV. W. G. CROCKER.

The subject of this notice has for many years laboured in this field of missionary enterprise, as a devoted and persevering minister. A residence of six years in this climate employed in the sedentary work of acquiring the language, and writing, and translating books for the school so impaired his general health and weakened his constitution, that a voyage to his native country America was regarded indispensably necessary. He embarked in 1841.—On his arrival home he was so far prostrated and continued in so low a state that a return to Africa was pronounced by all highly imprudent. For months he lay in a perfectly hopeless state. Suddenly after years of illness, his powers rallied and seemed to revive.—With the return of health came also a desire to return to his labours. He embarked for this place—landed here the 25th inst., preached on the afternoon of that day and the next evening died about 7 o'clock.

Mr. Crocker was accompanied by his wife to whom he was married only a few days before he left home. Most heartily do we sympathise with her in her sudden and severe bereavement.

OBITUARY.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD

DIED at Monrovia, on Thursday the 4th day of January 1844, Mrs Diana James, consort of Mr. Moore James; aged 23 years and 24 days.

While reviewing the melancholy catalogue of those, who though slumbering in the grave have left speaking records of their worth, we rarely observe a name so peculiarly calculated to excite the tenderest sympathies of the heart, and to awaken the reflections of the living, as the subject of these few remarks.

When blooming youth perishes before our eyes, and decrepit age gently slides into the grave, the poignancy of grief yields in a measure to the reflection, that the loss of the former can be estimated only by a few acts of usefulness while that of the latter proclaims the inevitable lot of nature. But when the vigour of life is torn from the full exercise of Benevolence, when the tongue that spake only to delight and to console, and the hand that was want to scatter peace and blessing, and smooth the rugged paths of life, are stiffened by death, we can find no consolation, but what flows from a recollection of virtues, and a conviction that they now enjoy their reward. Mrs. James inherited great powers from nature, and her mind was enriched by judicious cultivation. In the various spheres in which she was called to move, she exhibited strength of understanding, and suavity of heart. As a teacher of the Sabbath School, connected with the Providence Baptist Church, her labours were uniform and abundant. Elevated by feelings above those cold maxims, that chill the warmth of friendship by the affectation of dignity, the softness of her manners and easy conversation gained her many friends. To unspotted practical morality, she united the purity of vital religion. With a deep sense of truths of christianity, she explained its precepts by practice and inculcated the duties of life by one uninterupted display of religious sincerity, and a constant flow of charitable affections. She was a christian, not merely in the correctness of understanding and truth of speculation; but in activity to obey the mandates of our Saviour and to exemplify, in a pure and moral life, the high and solemn duties he enpoints.

By such an example, all around her were instructed.—With such an assemblage of virtues, it is needless to add, she died leaving few able to appreciate her virtues, but all deeply and sincerely lamenting her departure.

Yes She's gone to that sad boune,
From which no travellers return,
Where tears are wiped away—
The grave—where joys and sorrows cease,
And noisey tumults sink to peace,
Where "Sol" witholds his ray.

Where she nor sees the falling tears,
Nor plaints of lov'd relations hears,
Of husband, children, sire;
But wafted through the realms of light,
On airy wings she takes her flight,
Where breaths the trembling lyre.

Mid Angel spirits of the blest,
She there enjoys eternal rest,
Warm'd in her Maker's ray,
There lost in bliss she feels that heaven,
To virtuous souls forever given
Amid perpetual day.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

A TEXAS JOKER.—Some three years ago we copied the following sterling bit of fun from the "Texas Morning Star," published at Houston. It lately fell in our way again, and we were so tickled upon reading it once more, that we determined to start it for a second heat. We will take no small odds that in three months time it will have been re-published in half the newspapers in the country:

AQUATIC SCENERY—During the hardest of the storm the day before yesterday, we took a lounge down to the steamboat landing; while standing on the brink of a deep gully that emptied its torrent of water into the bayou, our attention was attracted to the bottom of the gully, where a drunken loafer was stemming the torrent, holding on to a root-fast anchored in the bank. The poor fellow, not knowing any one was near him, was combatting his fate manfully, and in calculating his chances of escape, gave utterance to the following:

"Haynt this a orful situvation to be placed in, nohow! If I wos a steamboat, a rail, or a wood-pile, I'd be better worth fifty cents on the dollar than I'll ever be again. Unless I'm a gone case now, there haynt no truth in frenology. I've weighed all the chances now like a gineral, and find only two that bears in my favor; the first is a skunk hole to crawl into, and the second a special interpersition of Providence; and the best chance of the two is so slim, if I only had the change, I'd give a premium, for the skunk hole—them's my sentiments. If I could be a mink, a muskrat, or a water snake, for about two months, perhaps I wouldn't moun' the first stump t'other side of the Bio, and flap my wings and crow over everlastin' life, skientifically preservated. But what's the use holdin' on this root! there haynt no skunk hole in these ere diggins; the water is gitting taller about a foot, and if my nose was as long as kingdom come, it wouldn't stick out much LONGER.

"Oh, Jerry! Jerry! you're a gone sucker, and I guess your marm don't know you're out; poor woman! won't she cry the glasses out of her spectacles when she hears her darlin' Jerry has got the whole of Bufferlo Bio for his coffin! What a pity 'tis some philanthropis, or member of the humane society, never had foresight enough to build a house over this gutter, with a steam engine to keep out the water! If they'd done it in time, they might have had the honor and gratification of saving the life of a feller being; but it's all day with you, Jerry, and a big harbor to cast anchor in. It's too bad to go off in this orful manner, when they knows I ollers hated water ever since I was big enough to know 'twant whiskey. I feel the root givin' way, and since I don't know a prayer, here's a bit of Watt's Doxologer, to prove I died a christian:

"'On the bank where drooped the willer.
Long time ago.'"

Before Jerry got to the conclusion he was washed into the bayou, within a few feet of a large flat that had just started for the steamboat; his eye caught the prospect of deliverance, and he changed the burden of his dirge into a thrilling cry of "Heave to! passenger overboard and sinking, with a belt full of specie! the man what saves me makes his fortune!" Jerry was fished ashore by a darkey; and to show his gratitude, invited Quashey "to go up to the groggery and liquor."

DIALOUGE BETWEEN TWO STREET LOUNGERS.—"'When a feller's any sort of a feller,' said Nicholas, "to be ketched at home, is like bein a mouse in a wire trap. They poke sticks in your eyes, squirt cold water on our nose, and show you to the cat. Common people, Billy—low, onery, common people, can't make it out when natur's raised a gentleman in the family—a gentleman all complete, only the money's been forgot. If a man won't work all the time, day in and day out—if he smokes by the fire, or whistles out of the winder, the very gals bump agin him, and say—Get out of the way, loaf! Now what I say is this—if people has'nt had genteel fotchin' up, you can no more expect 'em to behave as is they had been fotch up genteel, than you kin make good segars out of a broom handle."

"'That are a fact,' ejaculated Billy Hunkers, with emphasis, for Billy had experienced in his time treatment at home somewhat similar to that complained of by Nicholas Nollikins.

"'But Billy, my son, never mind, and keep not a letting' on,' continued Nollikins, and a beam of hope irradicated his otherwise saturnine countenance: 'the world's a railroad, and the cars is comin,—all we'll have to do is to jump in, chalked tree. There will be time—something must happen. Rich widders, are about yet though they are snapped up so fast. Rich widows Billy, are special providences, as my old boss used to say when he broke his nose in the entry, set here like rafts to pick up deservin' chaps when they cant swim no longer. When you've bin down twyst, Billy, and are just off agin, then comes the widder a floatin' along. Why, spatter-docks is nothin' to it, and a widder is the best of life preservers, when a man is most a case, like you and me.'

"'Well, I'm not particular, not I, nor never was. I,ll take a widder, for my part, if she's got the mint drops, and never ask no questions. I'm not proud—never was harrystocratic—I drinks with any body, and smokes all the cigars they gave me. What's he use of bein' struck up stiffy! It's my principle that other folks are nearly as good as me, if they're not constables or oldermen. I can't stand them sort.'

"'No, Billy,' said Nollikins, with an encouraging smile, 'no, Billy, such indiwidooals as them don't know human nature'—but, as I was goin' to say, if there happens to be a short crop of widders, why can't somebody leave us a fortune!' That will be as well, if not better. Now look here—what's easier than this! I'm standin' on the wharf—the rich man tries to get aboard of the steamboat—the niggers push him off the plank—in I goes, ca-plash.

"The old gentleman isn't drownded, but he might have been drownded but for me, if he had a bin, where's the use of his money then? So he gives me as much as I want now, and a great deal more when he defuncts riggler, accordin' to law and the practice of civilized nations. You see—that's the way the thing works. I'm at the wharf every day—can't afford to lose the chance, and I begin to wish the old chap would hurra about comin' along. What can keep him?"

"'If it 'ud come to the same thing in the end, remarked Billy Hunkers, 'I'd rather the niggers would push the old man's little boy in the water, if it's all the same to him. Them fat old fellers are so heavy when they're skeered, and hang on so, why I might be drownded before I had time to go to bank with the cheer! But what's the use of waitin? Couldn't we shove 'em in some warm afternoon ourselves! Who'd know in a crowd!'"

From The North American.

SHORT RIDES IN AN AUTHOR'S OMNIBUS.

"It is worthy of remark," says Vico (in the "Scienza Nuova,") "that in all languages, the greater part of the expressions relative to inanimate things are either derived by metaphor from different parts of the human body, or from human sentiments and passions.—Hence the word head for summit or commencement—mouth for any opening—the teeth of a plough, of a rake, of a saw, of a comb—a tongue of land—the gorge of a mountain—a handful for a small number—the arm of a river—the heart for the centre—the reins of a mine—the bowels of the earth—the flesh of a fruit—the whistling of the wind—the murmur of the waves—the groaning of any object beneath a great weight."

The Romans used the phrases "sitire agros, laborare fructus, luxuriari segetes:" and the Italians say, "andar in amorele piante, andar in pazzia le viti—lagrimare gli orna;" while they apply to inanimate objects the words, "fronte, spalle, occhi, barbe, collo, gamba, piede, pianta."

We have already said that ignorant man takes himself for the rule of the universe: in the above examples, he makes an entire world of himself. Man, in fact, transforms himself into all objects both by intelligence, and by the want of intelligence, and perhaps the second axiom is more true than the first, since in the exercise of his understanding he stretches his mind to reach and embrace objects; whereas, in the privation of intelligence, he makes all these objects out of himself.

Hence the received notion that man is a microcosm or little world, and that the body natural may be compared to the body politic. Nor have we been content with fashioning an outward world from our inward one; but as God made man in his own image, so have certain fanatical men presumed to create a Deity after their own form and fashion, which is generally the worst they could have selected. Every one is more or less a little world to himself; and in this fusion, or confusion of the outward and visible with the inward and spiritual, most people are apt to indentify themselves with external objects, especially if they bear reference to their own immediate habits, callings, or productions; a natural tendency which receives illustration from the beggar, recorded by Matthews, who hobbled about the streets, exclaiming,

"Please to buy a penn'orth of matches of a poor old man all made of dry wood."

FLEAS.

A chatterbox ran about the town of Bath, warning his friends against ever sleeping at the Golden Lion, where he had been most grievously bitten by fleas.

"You remind me," said one of the parties thus addressed, "of the punishment threatened by Horace to the man who should attack him.

"Fle-bit, et insignis tota cantabitur urbe."

When the late Lord Erskine, then going the circuit, was asked by his landlord how he had slept, he replied,

"Union is strength, a fact of which some of your inmates seem to be unaware; for had the fleas been unanimous last night, they might have pushed me out of bed."

"Fleas!" exclaimed Boniface, affecting great astonishment, "I was not aware that I had a single one in the house."

"I don't believe you have," retorted his lordship, "they are all married, and have uncommonly large families!"

STATE PYRAMIDS.

"It may be taken as a governing principle in all civil relations, that the strong and the rich will continue to grow stronger and richer, and the feeble and the poor more weak and impoverished, until the first become unfit to rule or the last unable any longer to endure. This is the secret of the downfall of all states that have crumbled beneath their own abuses, and hence the necessity of widening the foundations of society, according to the increased weight that they are required to support. A pyramid, surmounted with a statue, whether crowned or not, should be the emblem of a commonwealth."

Despotic states resemble a pyramid reversed, which the weakest assaults may topple down: and few things are more weak, notwithstanding its apparent strength, than absolute power. It has no supporters, no defence—for the tyrant is ever without friends—and he who has no law for others, cannot expect any for himself. Hence the tyrannicide among the ancients was always honoured as a patriot.

The modern civilized world is perhaps less governed by constitutions and ministers than by public opinion, which a free press where it exists, soon elevates into a species of omnipotence. If, therefore, there be any truth in the dictum that the vox populi is the vox Dei, the enlightened European states, so far as they are self-governed, are religiously governed, and approximate to the condition of the Jewish theocracy before the time of Saul.

HOPE.

Hope is like a poplar beside a river—undermined by that which feeds it—or like a butterfly, crushed by being caught—or like a fox-chase, of which the pleasure is in the pursuit—or like revenge, which is generally converted into disappointment or remorse as soon as it is accomplished—or like a will-o'-the-wisp, in running after which, through poo's and and puddles, you are not likely to catch any thing—but a cold,

TIB-BITS AND DAINTIES.

Snail soup was once regarded in Europe as a delicate dish. In some parts of the West Indies and South America, the guana, a species of lizard, is devoured with much gusto, and we can testify that it is indeed a well flavoured viand. The hunters of North America rejoice when they can feast on a buffalo's hump, a moose's mufler, a bear's paw, or a beaver's tail. Birds' nests are considered edible luxuries, and command enormous prices in China; where also dogs and cats are ordinary food, and it is affirmed by Dr Solander and Sir Joseph Banks, that dog's flesh is remarkably sweet and delicious. At Rome, camels' heels were the choicest tidbits for an epicure's tooth Whales', tongues ranked among the delicacies feasted on in the middle century by Europeans. The Caffre eats his lion for food, and the traveller Bruce among them, ate his lion steak with great relish. At Rio Janeiro, an ordinary dish is a monkey pie; and the head of the ape is left to appear above the crust for ornament, in the style of the feet in our pigeon pie.—Boston Journal.

POETRY.

ODE TO PEACE.

Come, peace of mind, delightful guest!
Return and make thy downy nest,
Once more in this sad heart:
Nor riches I nor power pursue,
Nor hold forbidden joys in view;
We therefore need not part.

Where wilt thou dwell, if not with me,
From avarice and ambition free,
And pleasure's fatal wiles?
From whom, alas! dost thou prepare
The sweets that I was wont to share,
The banquet of thy smiles?

The great, the gay, shall they partake
The heaven that thou alone can'st make?
And wilt thou quit the stream
That murmurs through the dewy mead,
The grove and the sequestered shed,
To be a guest with them?

For thee I panted, thee I prized
For thee I gladly sacrificed
Whate'er I loved before,
And shall I see thee start away,
And helpless, hopeless, hear thee say—
Farewell, we meet no more? [Couper.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dilemma—Logical—a verbal check-mate.—Aristotle wishing to refute the opinion of Protagoras, who maintained that there was nothing true in the world, argued thus:—"Your proposition is either true or false; if it is false we are not of course, bound to believe it: if it is true, there is such a thing as truth in the world, and consequently your proposition is false." Those clinches were once in great favour with the sophists and logicians, but they were never worth the pains bestowed upon them, and have deservedly fallen into oblivion. The puzzling instance given in Johnson's Dictionary under the word Dilemma, is recorded by Apuleius, as well as by Aulus Gallius in his Attic Nights. Our special pleading is the last remnant of these verbal quibbles, and the sooner it is exploded the better. The age of words is passing away, as well as the impostures and delusions to which they gave species of sanction. Injustice, delay, and robbery will no longer be called law; tithes and bishoprics, Christianity; rotten boroughs, representation; negro slavery, a mild and happy servitude; or public wrongs, private rights. In exploding these verbal frauds it should be well understood that they may be still practised, if we can reduce the great enemy of mankind to a non plus, in imitation of the wily friar, who sold his sould to him upon condition that all his debts should be paid. Money was supplied in abundance, until he was extricated from his difficulties; but when Satan came to claim the soul that was due to him, the friar answered, "Begone' thou swindler! If I owe the anything, I am not yet out of debt, and if I do not owe thee anything, why dost thou trouble me?"

Shrewed and quickwitted was the reply of the miser, who on being requested by a dervish to grant him a favour, said, "On one condition I will do whatever you require."—"What is that?"—"Never to ask me for any thing."

Dinner—A meal taken at supper time; formerly considered a means of enjoying society, and therefore moderate in expense, and frequent in occurrence; now given to display yourself, not to gratify your friends; and inhospitably rare, because it is foolishly extravagant.

John Bulwer, a quaint writer of the seventeenth century, especially recommends the following three dinner rules:—Stridor dentium—Altum silemtium—Rumor gentium; which has been humourously translated, "Work for the jaws—A silent pause—Frequent Ha—has!"

Discipline—Military.—That subordination which is maintained upon the continent by the hope of distinction, in England by the fear of the cat-o'-nine-tails. Nothing is so reluctantly abandoned by despots, whether kings, pedagogues, officers, or magistrates, as any oppressive cruelty, which they imagine to be connected with the maintenance of their authority. A tyrant not only gratifies his malignity, but saves all trouble of argument or proper management, by the use of the whip, which may account for the disgraceful floggings still so prevalent in our schools, army and navy. This remnant of a barbarous age must soon pass away, and if our floggings disciplinarians would pass away at the same time, we should all be gainers by their loss. The cat-o'-nine-tails must have as many lives as tails, or it never could have lasted so long.

Government—According to Milton, it should be the first object in a representative commonwealth, "To make the people fittest to choose, and those chosen fittest to govern." According to the Conservatives, the people should be defrauded, as much as possible, of the elective franchise, in order that an oligarchy may the more easily defraud them of everything else. A despotic government is an inverted cone, resting upon a point, and liable to be toppled down by the smallest movement. A popular government is a pyramid, the firmest and most enduring of all forms.

Government, as a science, has by no means kept pace with the advancement of other arts. It might be expected, that legislatures, like individuals, although headstrong, violent, and passionate, in the outset of their career, would become mild, moderate, and wise in their old age; but experience does not justify this inference. In human nature, there are two leading principles, or motives of conduct,—the hope of reward, and the fear of punishment; but most governments either address themselves exclusively to the latter, or if they bring the former into operation, they begin at the wrong end, showering titles, ribands, emoluments, honours, and distinctions upon the upper classes, who should be taught to consider virtue as its own reward, while the lower orders are only attempted to be influenced by pains, penalties, and terror.

Were the art of government left to its official functionaries, it would probably be stationary, even in England; but it is fortunately pushed forward on the road of improvement by public opinion, the power of which, developing itself through a free press, is becoming every day more manifest and irresistible. If there be truth in the vox populi vox Dei, this must be the best, the most legitimate, the most hallowed of all authority. Every man has a voice in the formation of that public opinion, which confers the privileges, without incurring the dangers, of universal suffrage. Some, it is true, have more weight than others, but it is the superior influence of talent and information, a much better element of representation than property, upon which the elective franchise is usually based. Government will have attained its perfection when the people, being universally educated and competent to judge, and the press being untaxed and unfettered, so as to give power and certainty to their voice, the rulers of the State, obeying while they govern, and following while they seem to lead, shall be merely the official mouthpieces of the national will.

These, however, will be deemed the notions of a visionary; a beau iodeal, for the realization of which good men may sigh, while practical ones will smile compassionately, and refer the experiment to the millennium.

Happiness—A blessing often missed by those who run after pleasure, and generally found by those who suffer pleasure to run after them. Like a Will-o'-the-whip, it is sometimes farthest off when we imagine we can grasp it, and nearest to us when it appears to be at a distance. The most effectual way to secure it to ourselves, is to confer it upon others.

None are either so miserable or so happy as they are thought, for the mind soon habituates itself to its moral atmosphere, whether rough or gentle. If there be no difference between possessing a thing, and not wishing for it, happiness may be best attained by indifference; at all events there is a greater approximation than is generally supposed, between those whose have lost, and those who retain their happiness; since the former are always hoping to recover, what the latter are always fearing to be deprived of.

Pyrrhus, denying the reality of any beatitude, maintained that life and death were equal, and when asked why he did not seek the grave since existence was so little attractive, replied, "Because both are indifferent to me."

In the progress of time and general improvement, the aggregate of human enjoyment may be incalculably increased, without diminishing the stock of comparative discontent; for as we measure our portion in life not by our superiority to our predecessors, but by our inferiority to our contemporaries, we forget abstract benefits in relative disadvantages. Notwithstanding this drawback, human happiness must be constantly augmenting. As civilization advances, every peasant enjoys luxuries and securities from which nobles and monarchs were formerly debarred. That there is much less misery and suffering in the world than formerly, is incontestably proved by the remarkable increase in the mean duration of life, while the years thus added to our span, derive a double value from the almost universal diffusion of the means of enjoying them.

As important disappointments do but rarely occur, and yet many men are unhappy during the greater part of their lives, it is evident that they must fret their spirit about trifles. The great secret of cheerfulness and content is not to be annoyed by petty thwartings, and not to aspire to unattainable objects. Children are always happy, because they are always pursuing trifles of easy acquisition.

Exaggerating the misery of mankind is a species of impiety, because it is an oblique reflection on the benevolence of the Deity. If man had been made involuntarily happy, he would have been without motives to exertion, and would have lost that noblest species of felicity which arrises from the virtuous and successful developement of his faculties. If virtue, moreover, always ensured happiness, while vice entailed inevitable misery, we should lose one of the strongest arguments for a future state of retribution.

Jokes—The cayenne of conversation, and the salt of life. "A joke's prosperity," says Shakspeare, "lies in the ear of the hearer;" and indeed it is sometimes exceedingly difficult to pronounce whether it be a good one or a bad one, risibly speaking, for a bon mot may be too witty to be pleasant, or at least to elicit laughter; while a poor pleasantry, by the help of some ludicrous turn, or expression, or association of ideas, may provoke cahinnation, a gorge deployee. Nay, there are cases, in which a joke becomes positively good from its being so intolerably bad, and is applauded, in the inverse ratio of its merit, as the greatest honours are sometimes showered upon men who have the least honour. The admiration excited by the highest order of wit is generally serious, because it sets us thinking. It was said of a crafty Israelite, who deserted the Hebrew faith, without embracing that of the Christians, and yet endeavoured to make both parties subservient to his selfish views, that he resembled the blank leaf between the Old and New Testament, belonging to neither, and making a cover of both. No one would laugh at this; it is exactly that description of wit which has been defined "an unexpected association of apparrently dissimilar ideas, exciting pleasure and surprise." Lord Byron was once asked by a friend, in the green room of Drury Lane Theatre, whether he did not think Miss Kelly's acting in the "Maid and the Maypie" exceedingly natural?—"I really cannot say," replied his lordship; "I was never innocent of stealing a silver spoon." This is drollery rather than wit, and excites our laughter, without claiming any portion of our admiration.

One of our poets, a remarkably cadaverous-looking man, recited a poem, descriptive of a country walk, in which the following couplet occurred:—

"The redbreast, with his furtive glance,' Comes and looks at me askance;

upon which a wag exclaimed—"Gad! if it had been a carrion-crow, he would have stared you full in the face; a remark so humourous and unexpected, that it was received with a unanimous shout of laughter. Here the absurdity of the idea, if it did not amount to wit, was something better, or, at all events, more stimulative of the risible faculties.

The Difference between a Subscription and a Note of Hand.

The following question was proposed by one of our correspondents a week or two since:—"What difference is there between a subscription to any benevolent object and a note of hand? Is there a difference in the obligation to pay, or is one a debt as much as the other?"

The answer to this question, considered as one of morals, must be in the mind of every Christian quite obvious. He feels himself bound to fulfil every promise, in whatever form it is made whether in the form of a regular written obligation, or of a subscription to a benevolent object, or only verbally It is to be supposed, therefore, that the author of the question proposes it as one of law. We accordingly gave it to a gentleman of our congregation, a lawyer, who has furnished us with an answer as follows:—

"The question propounded, is so very general, that only a general answer can be given, and one which it might not be safe to apply to any particular case, without careful consideration of the facts in that case.

It may be answered generally, that a subscription is equally valid with a note of hand; but then it must be understood that it is not every note of hand that can be collected, by any means. Both may be equally valid, while payment of neither can be enforced by law.

The most material point to be attended to is, whether there is a sufficient consideration for the promise or subscription—for without a consideration, there can be no contract. And what is sufficient consideration, can only be determined, exactly, upon particular facts.—Generally, if the party subscribing or promising, is to gain something, and the other party is to lose or forego something by the promise, the gain or loss is a good consideration, and the promise, is binding.

Subscriptions are frequently made for the promotion of public objects, such as the erection or maintenance of charitable or literary institutions. Some of these are binding, and some are not. A more exact statement cannot be made. They are more likely to be binding, if made to incorporated bodies, than if made to mere voluntary associations, or, at any rate, the difficulty of enforcing them in the latter case, would be likely to be greater.

A material difference, in many cases, between a note of hand, and a subscription, is this—that a promissory note generally runs to some particular person or persons designated—whereas subscriptions, in many cases, even where there appears to be a good consideration, are not so expressed as to be available to any body in particular, and great doubts are likely to arise, as to who should have the benefit of them, or who may be entitled to enforce them, even if they be otherwise valid.

Judicious persons will not venture upon very material outlays or risks on the strength of subscriptions, without previously ascertaining that the subscriptions can be legally relied on."—Zions Advocate.

THE FIRST PRAYER IN CONGRESS.

The subjoining extract of a characteristic letter from John Adams, describing a scene in the first Congress in Philadelphia, in September, 1775, shows very clearly on What power the mighty men of old rested their cause. Mr. A, thus writes to a friend at the time:

"When the Congress met, Mr. Cushing made a motion that it should be opened with prayer. It was opposed by Mr. Jay of New York, and Mr. Rutledge of South Carolina, because we were so divided in religious sentiments—some Episcopalians, some Quakers, some Anabaptists, some Presbyterians, and some Congregationalists—that we could not join in the same act of worship. Mr. Samuel Adams arose and said, 'that he was no bigot, and could hear a prayer from any gentleman of piety and virtue who was at the same time a friend to this country. He was a stranger in Philadelphia, but had heard that Mr. Duche, (Dushay they pronounced it,) deserved that character, and therefore he moved that Mr. Duche, an Episcopal clergyman, might be desired to read prayers to the Congress to-morrow morning.' The motion was seconded, and passed in the affirmative. Mr. Randolph, our President, waited on Mr. Duche, and received for answer that if his health would permit he certainly would. Accordingly, next morning he appeared with his clerk, and in his pontificals, and read several prayers in the established form, and then read the collect for the seventh day of September, which was the 35th Psalm. You must remember this was the next morning after we had heard the rumor of the horrible cannonade at Boston. It seemed as if Heaven had ordained that Psalm to be read on that morning.

"After this, Mr. Duche, unexpectedly to every body, struck out in an extemporary prayer which filled the bosom of every man present. I must confess I never heard a better prayer, or one so well pronounced. Episcopalian as he is, Dr. Cooper himself never prayed with such fervor, such ardor, such correctness, and pathos, and in language so elegant and sublime, for America, for Congress, for the province of the Massachusetts Bay, especially the town of Boston. It had an excellent effect upon every body here. I must get you to read that psalm. If there is any faith in the sortes Virgilianæ, or sortes Homericæ, or especially the sortes Biblicæ, it would be thought providential."

The thirty-fifth Psalm was indeed appropriate to the news received and the exigencies of the times It commences:

"Plead my cause, O Lord, with them that strive with me: fight against them that fight against me.

"Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for my help.

'Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me; say unto my soul I am thy salvation."

What a subject for contemplation does the above picture present. The forty-four members of the First Congress, in their Hall, all bent before the mercy seat and asking Him that their enemies "might be as chaff before the wind." Washington was kneeling there, and Henry, and Randolph, and Rutledge, and Lee, and Jay, and by their side there stood, bowed in reverence, the Puritan patriots of New England, who at that moment had reason to believe that an armed soldiery was wasting their humble households. It was believed that Boston had been bombarded and destroyed. They prayed fervently "for America, for the Congress, for the province of Massachusetts Bay, and especially for the town of Boston;" and who can realize the emotions with which they turned imploringly to Heaven for divine interposition and aid? "It was enough;" says Mr. Adams, "to melt a heart of stone. I saw the tears gush into the eyes of the old, grave, pacific Quakers of Philadelphia."

NEW REVELATION OF SHAKERS.

One of the most satisfactory books I have lately seen is a pamphlet published within the few days last past by an inspired Shaker. It is "dedicated to the various religious sects, more especially to the Jews and Roman Catholics," and is entitled "A Return of Departed Spirits of the highest distinction, as well as the Indiscriminate of all nations, into the body of Shakers." The process of reincarnation commences, the author declares, with a rapid whirling and violent twitching of the body, which the newly occupied cannot repress. "They whirl around the meeting room at an almost incredible rate, discoursing in unknown languages and holding converse with angels and other heavenly spirits," &c It is very lately, however, and at New Lebanon, that the more renowned apparitions have arrived. At this place, "disembodied spirits began to take possession of the brethren and sisters, and thus, by using them as instruments, made themselves known by speaking through the individuals they had got into." George Washington was the earliest arrival. He had been some time about the village before he gave his name through the young man he subsequently occupied. The author says, "George gave some particulars concerning the discharge of his earthly duties while sojourning upon this terrestial globe." He also informed them that he was commissioned by Heaven with the duty of leading the nations of the earth to Zion, and (the author announces) the Shaker Elders "have ratified the appointment of General Washington."

William Penn has appeared, "and when some new tribe of the red men arrive and are inclined to be noisy, they are always obedient to every request or command of Father Penn."

Stephen Girard "gave a very interesting account of himself. He stated that after he departed this life he found himself on the banks of the Deleware river, at some distance below Philadelphia, where he had been wandering to and fro for some time until he heard the sound of a trumpet which attracted him to this place. He related some incidents illustrative of his rapid increase in wordly wealth, and gave an account of his wife, wherein he spoke of the circumstance related in this biography concerning the affair between her and the American officer."—Cor. of National Int.

COLORED CHURCH IN RICHMOND.

This church has become very large, and occupies the Brick Chapel formerly belonging to the first church. The Editor of the Baptist Record, who was present at the recent anniversaries in Richmond, gives the following interesting account of them in that paper:

"We had the pleasure of listening to a sermon in this church, by Rev. Dr. Pattison. When the first church, erected their present beautiful house of worship, they transferred the old house, which is very large, to the colored members. They number two thousand communicants, under the pastoral charge of Rev. Robert Ryland. It is, if we mistake not, the largest body of communicants in any one congregation, in the country. It is with emotions not frequently experienced that we gazed upon that vast assemblage of black faces. They listened with devout attention to the discourse. In external appearance they were as respectable as any ordinary congregation, dressed with neatness and care, and in very many instances, in costly and fashionable attire. And when the sermon was over, and the vast multitude united in singing one of their lively songs of praise, unrestrained by the fetters of factitious rules, warmply clasping each other's hands, and giving themselves up to the warm impulses of the heart, the sea of heads swaying to and fro, making the time of the tune, and tears of joy gushing from many an eye, we felt that that body of disciples were nearer to heaven, than Christians ordinarily get while they remain upon earth."—New York Observer.

WHAT IS DEATH.

Is it not the interruption of all our former appetites? Do the dead hunger or thirst any more? Will beauty move their love? Will the tabret or the harp, the richest wines or the most luxurious viands entice them beyond the bounds of temperance? Load the coffin with gold! clothe the skeleton with scarlet and ermine! Will this awaken his avarice, or will these elevate his pride? Surely, if the soul perceives at all the objects which surround the ruins of her recent dwelling, she perceives them but to recognize their utter vanity, and to feel that these are not the things which can any longer contribute to her happiness

MY FIRST DUEL.

M. M. Noah, for many years one of the most distinguished of the New York editors, gives the following Serio-comic account of the first affair of honor in which he was a principal party. Noah had become a leader of the Democratic party in Charleston, South Carolina, in times of high political excitement. After having received one challenge which was settled by the interference of friends, and the affair, as Noah says, being honorably arranged, the narrative continues as follows:

I was entirely satisfied with the issue, having no desire to kill my antagonist, who, by the way, was a very worthy person, by the name of Toomer, since dead; nor had I any wish to be killed myself; but the dear public, it seems, was not so well satisfied with the result—there was to be no fight after all. Pompey had harnessed the bays in the buggy—whips, spurs, and trot—see two promising young fellows shoot each other, and so the affair is settled—the pistols are returned to the case—and the doctor was not called upon to prepare lint, probe stick, and plaster.

This humane disappointment, however, was coupled with strong suspicions, pretty loudly expressed, that I, like all vaporing democrats, would rather eat than fight. This unworthy insinuation, which aroused my indignation, did not allay the political fever, and in a few days afterwards I got into a newspaper controversy with a gentleman, I believe by the name of Crafts, and I received another little billetdoux to meet him at the Race Course. To use a familiar phrase of a knight of a Race Course and Thimble Rig, I really did not know how to head off this invitation, when my antagonist fell sick, and the affair, like the other, was honorably adjusted. Let it be distinctly understood, gentle reader, that in these challenges to bloody conflicts, there was really, in truth and in fact, not the least cause or ground for a hostile meeting. It was the fashion of that day to adjust all such disputes at the muzzle of the pistol. Public opinion, since that time, together with the provisions of the law, has frowned upon these sanguinary exhibitions, and now reason, good sense and good principles, have erected barriers against duelling, which, excepting on extraordinary occasions, are sufficiently powerful against such outbreaks.—Still, there was a lurking suspicion in the public mind that I would not fight. That I had not the least inclination to shoot or be shot, was an undoubted fact, but that under any circumstances I would not fight at all was not true. Without being what was constitutionally called brave, and never willingly rushing into danger, without, in the most distant manner, being either a bully or a braggadocio, I, nevertheless, felt that I had moral courage enough to resent a positive insult, and was ready, in a good cause, to submit to what society considered an honorable mode of redressing an injury—still I labored under suspicion until at length a person who was not a politician, was determined to ascertain whether there was good and sufficient grounds for this opinion, and picking a small quarrel with me, upon some trifling cause, he sent me a challenge to meet him, coupled with the very cheering intelligence that he would neither accept explanation or apology. So, here was a challenge of the most positive character—there was no evading it under existing circumstances—the challenger was a person of no political consequence, still he was of a good family and possessed a good character. All those who wanted a fight, assured me he was a gentleman, although I wished from the bottom of my heart that nature and habit had made him a loafer of the first water; neither the cause nor the man were sufficient importance for the risk, no political eclat could possibly arise from such a meeting, still there was no getting rid of it, and I accepted the invitation.

The dear public was all agog;—there was to be a fight after all. My friends, who had hitherto stood sponsors for my bravery, surrounded me with unabated confidence. My opponents sneered and prognosticated that I should yet creep out of it. I felt cool and determined; I would submit to no insinuations of such character, and made all the necessary preparations. I was rather indifferent as to the result. I had no property to leave no will to make, no family to provide for—I might be cut off, it is true; at an early period, and full of promise, but it was not of my seeking. Come what come may, this meeting was to take place. My friend, Gov. Geddes, lent me his carriage and horses, and a case of fine hair triggers. My surgeon was engaged, and the whole city was on the qui vive for the duel. I slept that night at the house of a friend, and several acquaintances had assembled there to sit up with me, talk over the matter, and make arrangements for the morning. Sitting up with a person about to fight a duel is something like sitting up with a dead man; all was serious, solemn and grave; no witticisms, no attempt to keep up fictitious spirits. They all talked as if some important event was on the tapis. I threw myself on the bed to take a short repose, an fell into a perturbed sleep. I was restless and uneasy; tossed to and fro; hideous dreams and spectators floated in my imagination; I was awaked by hearing the servant below grinding coffee. My friends were whispering together in the alcove. I felt wretched—my lips were parched, and my head feverished and confused—I rose at dawn, took a cup of strong coffee, and all things being ready, we got into the carriage and set off for the field of honor; It was a beautiful morning—the air was pure and balmic—the eastern sky was streaked with orange [illegible]—the birds were singing, and the tall pines were waving gently in the morning breeze—the world never looked more beautiful—

"The morn in russet mantle clad, Walked o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill."

And I was probably about to quit this world so fresh and gay and beauteous, in the season of youth, with every bright and encouraging prospect before me, not by fell disease or decay of nature, or sudden visitation of Providence, but a victim to what was called honor. I was either to kill a man who had never wronged me, or meet my death at his hands without having ever wronged him.—What madness, folly and infatuation! yet tyrant custom had stamped the impress of chivalry upon such appeals, and they could not be evaded. I puffed from me several heavy sighs as these and similar thoughts passed through my mind. I felt no fear—I felt the same regret that I should have felt for another person in my situation. The carriage drove on rapidly, and my friends regarded me with an interest that was quite painful, and I wished the affair was over. At length we reached the appointed spot; it was a beautiful valley on a fine level piece of ground, in the neighborhood of two or three cottages—every thing looked green, fresh, and beautiful. On alighting from the carriage I found a large party of gentlemen present; some had arrived in gigs, and some on horseback, and some predestrians, together with a few colored gentlemen and many miscellaneous persons, drawn from the neighboring cottages, having understood that something of importance, was going on. In a few minutes my antagonist and his friends made their appearance, and the necessary preparations commenced. As I was the challenged person I had the choice of weapons, distance, and position. I chose ten paces—the parties to stand back to back at that distance, and wheel and fire at the word. I chose this mode for several reasons—it was in consonance with the rules of honor, which did not necessarily claim a victim by a direct and deadly aim; it also gave a chance for both or either to escape; besides, I did not wish to incur the stern gaze of my antagonist—a deadly scowl, tossing of the hat, and some melodramatic action for effect; to throw me off my guard, or shake my nerves, as Marshall tried in the case of Webb. Not seeing my man until brought face to face by the word fire, and the sudden wheeling gave no advantage to either, and was deemed by all, considering the slight cause of offence, proper and expedient. One of my seconds stepped over the ground—he had short legs, and I imagined that ten paces had actually dwindled to six. We took our stand back to back. I looked round and found that my man was not on a direct line with me, and I moved a step to the right to bring him on a level. All things were ready—the spectators looked on silently and anxiously—the question was asked "Gentlemen, are you ready?" We both answered with a clear strong voice, ready. "Wheel and fire." At the word, I wheeled with an action and position which would have done no discredit to Hamlet on seeing his father's ghost; both pistols went off simultaneously. In wheeling, I had a broad front view of my man, before touching the hair trigger; I looked at him—saw him reel and fall. I was transfixed to the spot—I lost all sense of my own danger—I had killed him! The blood of the first Cain was on my head. I awoke to a sense of my own condition, my knees smote together, and I shuddered with horror. There was considerable running among the spectators, who had crowded around the fallen man. I walked towards him; he lay on his back, with his eyes open; and to my great joy and satisfaction I heard him say, "I'll have another shot." He was only wounded; the ball had entered below the knee, and penetrated through the calf of the left leg, which was bleeding copiously. I breathed freely; I was not only uninjured myself, but I had not killed my antagonist. As he could not stand to take another shot, the affair was considered as honorably ended. My surgeon extracted the ball, and bound up the wound; I loaned my carriage to the injured man; and my conduct was pronounced superfine throughout. All doubts of my courage had vanished; friends and foes shook hands with me; the police officers who came to see, not prevent the fight, mounted their nags; the carriages, chaises, gigs, and buggies, began to move from the field; and thus ended the whole humbug, as it really was, and with it my first duel. I had no more challenges after that affair; and I presume no one will challenge my friend Webb, in order to test his courage after his late encounter with the apostle of Temperance. Had Marshall killed Webb, I have no doubt he would have taken to the bottle again, in order to drown his grief for "one sacrificed for a sacrifice."

"Thus conscience makes cowards of us all."

As to duelling, I am satisfied that while it really settles no principle, very seldom redresses a wrong or preserves the injured that it rarely or never involves personal courage. Nine out of ten who behave well in the field, are sustained by moral courage—the apprehension of the world's opinion—the sneers of the vicious—the doubts of the unwelcome—the distrusts and suspicion of your enemies.—The practice, were it not for folly, rashness and hot blood in Congress, would fall into general disrepute, as it should fall, a monument of folly and false honor.

It is extracted from Almon's American Remembrancer, (a work purporting to be an authentic collection of facts, published in London during the Revolutionary War,) for the year 1782, Vol. 14, page 185. It was long supposed to be authentic, but has since been ascertained to be a publication from the pen of Doctor Frankin, written for political purposes.]

Extract of a letter from Captain Gerrish, of the New-England militia, dated Albany, March 7th, 1782.

The poltry taken in the expedition will, as you see, amount to a good deal of money. The possession of this booty at first gave us pleasure but we were struck with horror to find amongst the packages eight large ones, containing scalps of our unhappy folks taken in the three last years by the Seneca Indians, from the inhabitants of the frontiers of New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, and sent by them as a present to Col. Haldiman, Governor of Canada, in order to be by him transmitted to England. They were accompanied by the following curious letter to that gentleman:—

"Tioga January 3d, 1782.

"May it please your Excellency,

At the request of the Seneca chiefs, I send herewith to your Excellency, under the care of James Boyd, eight packs of scalps, cured, dried, hooped, and painted with all the Indian triumphal marks, of which the following is invoice an explanation.

No. 1 Containing 43 scalps of Congress soldiers, killed in different skirmishes; these are stretched on black hoops, four inch diameter; the inside of the skin painted red, with a small black spot to note their being killed with bullets. Also 92 of farmers, killed in their houses; the hoops red; the skin painted brown, and marked with a hoe; a black circle all round to denote their being surprised in the night; and a black hatchet in the middle, signifying their being killed with that weapon.

No. 2. Containing 98 of farmers, killed in their houses; hoops red; figure of a hoe, to mark their profession; great white circle and sun, to show they were surprised in the daytime: a little red foot, to show they stood upon their defence, and died fighting for their lives and families.

No. 3. Containing 97 of farmers; hoops green, to show they were killed in their fields; a large white circle with a little round mark on it for the sun, to show that it was in the daytime, black bullet mark on some—hatchet on others.

No. 4 Containing 102 of farmers, mixed of the several marks above; only 18 marked with a little yellow flame, to denote their being of prisoners burnt alive, after being scalped, their nails pulled out by the roots, and other torments; one of these latter supposed to be of a rebel clergyman, his hand being fixed to the hoop of his scalp. Most of the farmers appear by the hair to have been young or middle aged men; their being but 97 very gray heads among then all; which makes the service more essential

No. 5. Containing 88 scalps of women; hair long, braided in the Indian fashion, to show they were mothers; hoops blue; skin yellow ground, with little red tadpoles, to present, by way of triumph, the tears of grief occasioned to their relations; a black scalping-knife or hatchet at the bottom, to mark their being killed with those instruments; 17 others, hair very gray; black hoops; plain brown colour, no mark but the short club or cassetete, to show they were knocked down dead, or had their brains beat out.

No. 6. Containing 193 boys' scalps, of various ages; small green hoops; whitish ground on the skin, with red tears in the middle, and black bullet marks, knife, hatchet, or club, as their deaths happened.

No. 7. 211 girls scalped, big and little; small yellow hoops, white ground; tears, hatchet, club, scalping-knife, &c.

No 8. This package is a mixture of all the varieties above-mentioned, to the number of 122; with a box of birch bark, containing 29 little infants' scalps of various sizes, small white hoops; white ground.

With these packs the Chiefs send to your Excellency the following speech, delivered by Conetogatchie, in council, interpreted by the elder Moore, the trader, and taken down by me in writing.

"Father!—We send you herewith many scalps, that you may see that we are not idle friends. A blue belt.

"Father!—We wish you to send these scalps over the water to the Great King, that he may regard them and be refreshed; and that he may see our faithfulness in destroying his enemies, and be convicted that his presents have not been made to ungrateful people. A blue and white belt with red tassels.

"Father!—Attend to what I am now going to say; it is a matter of much weight. The great King's enemies are many, and they grow fast in number. They were formerly like young panthers; they could neither bite nor scratch; we could play with them safely; we feared nothing they could do to us. But now their bodies are become big as the elk, and strong as the buffalo, they have also got great and sharp claws. They have driven us out of our country by taking part in your quarrel. We expect the great King will give us another country, that our children may live after us, and be his friends and children as we are.—Say this for us to the great King. To enforce it, we give this belt. A great white belt with blue tassels.

"Father!—We have only to say further, that your traders exact more than ever for their goods; and our hunting is lessened by the war, so that we have fewer skins to give for them. This ruins us. Think of some remedy. We are poor, and you have plenty of every thing. We know you will send us powder and guns, and knives, and hatchets; but we also want shirts and blankets. A little white belt."

I do not doubt but that your Excellency will think it proper to give some further encouragement to those honest people. The high prices they complain of, are the necessary effect of the war. Whatever presents may be sent for them through my hands shall be distributed with prudence and fidelity. I have the honoor of being

Your Excellency's most obedient,
And most humble servant,
JAMES CRAUFURD.

"If it is not love that I feel, pray what is it?" said a fop to his partner at a ball. "Perhaps," said the lady addressed, "something bites you."

The following savours strongly of the desire to be rid of the institution of slavery.—ED. Herald.

I now proceed to examine the fourth proposition, viz: That "the institution of slavery is full of mercy." On this subject our author observes that he will say "but few words," and well he might say but few words, for a more preposterous sentiment never was penned. He tells us "authentic history warrants the conclusion, that for a long period of time, it was this institution alone which furnished a motive for sparing the prisoner's life." Does he not know that it was this institution which, in ancient times, often induced the strong to make war on the weak, in order to obtain slaves? that at this day wars are continually kept up in Africa, in order to supply the demand for slaves on the coast? This demand instead of being diminished, has actually increased with fearful rapidity, and there is no probability of it ever being broken up, until the market for slaves shall be destroyed by the abolition of slavery. It is said that John C. Calhoun, several years ago in the Senate of the U. States, expressed his regret that the laws of the United States had branded the foreign slave-trade as piracy. The ground on which he did so may be shewn by the following extracts from a New Orleans paper: "It is now well known to those who have taken the trouble to inquire into the matter, that the slave-trade from Africa, is more extensive than ever it was. If such have been the results produced by the injudicious efforts of the English philanthropists, we may well doubt the policy of the law of congress, which has prohibited the importation of slaves from Africa—a policy that from all we can learn, has no other effect than to cause the planter of Louisiana to pay to the Virginia Slaver, one thousand dollars for a negro, which now in Cuba, and by-and-by in Texas, may be bought for half the money. It is known to those acquainted with the African that he is more patient and less unruly than either the Virginia or Maryland negroe. His very ignorance of many things makes him less dangerous in a community like ours, and his constitution is better suited to our climate. In transporting him from his own country, his position too, in civilization, is bettered, not worsted." "The more we examine and reflect on the policy the Texians are likely to pursue in this matter, openly or covertly, the more we are convinced that Texas should be annexed to the Union, or else Congress should repeal the law prohibiting the importation of slaves from Africa; otherwise the culture of sugar and cotton in Louisiana, will suffer greatly by the cheaper labor which planters of Cuba and Texas can and will supply." This paragraph from a southern paper, may serve to shew some of the "tender mercies" connected with the institution of slavery, and the horrid perversions of moral sentiment that sometimes spring from it!—Baltimrre Saturaay Visitor.

The question will probably come up at some time or other in Congress, how far the Government of the United States intends to recognize these colonies on the Coast of Africa which have grown up through American benevolence and means, and which are now peopled by free colored persons who have emigrated from our shores. It is not in accordance with the general principles of our policy to maintain a colonial system; nor has the Government had any thing to do directly with the establishment of Africo-American colonies. Indirectly its countenance has been given to the enterprise.

It would be worthy of inquiry to know whether, without a formal recognition of these Colonies as dependencies of the United States, our Government ought not to take them so far under its protection as to guarantee to them their independence against any foreign power. The relations already existing between Liberia and the Colonization Boards in this country are of the most intimate kind; and it is altogether natural that such relations should exist. The colonists are bound by a thousand associations to the country from which they went, and in which their friends and relatives dwell; they are deeply sensible, too, of the kindness which has given them a home where they can be free and happy. Our own Colony is called "Maryland in Liberia," and to that name they cling with affectionate interest.

The advantages of trade which may be secured to this country, by the gradual extension of our Colonies along the African coast will be great and valuable beyond a doubt. Those settlements already form the best and most permanent opening to the continent, an immense region of which so little is known. It will be through these doubtless that future explorations will be successfully made.

These considerations have not escaped the notice of the British Government. The continent of Africa is watched by England with a restless vigilance; it is regarded as a great prize yet unappropriated. Yet her efforts to gain access to the interior have signally failed. Her Niger expedition turned out disastrously. Sierra Leone, which she has held a long time, is not an available position. Cape Palmas or Monrovia would suit her purposes much better; and in possessing those places she would have for her use a population adapted by color and constitution to the country and the climate, and endowed also with many elements of American enterprize and energy. These places, if once in her hands, would become the footholds of British power in Africa, and the points whence British influence and trade would work their way into the interior of the continent. It has not been long since we had intimations of a British claim upon the Liberian territory. We have reason to believe, moreover, that the question has been put by the Colonial Secretary of Great Britain to the Government of the United States, to what extent the Liberian Colonies were regarded as American dependencies. The answer to this question we have not heard; perhaps no answer has been given. It is of importance, great importance, to some of the most weighty concerns of our country that a definite understanding should be had on this subject, and that such a position should be taken by the Republic as would bar any encroachment from foreign powers in matters which should be under our own control.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, MARCH 30th, 1844.

African Belief.—Those who suppose that there is not in heathen minds, any idea of a connexion between virtue and happiness and vice and punishment, manifest an ignorance of their customs—or if acquainted with their customs—that they have taken but a superficial view of the subject. This will hold good at least of all the African tribes with which we have been conversant. It is true that the idea of virtue differs in different countries. The ancient scandinavian regarded it highly virtuous and acceptable to Thor when he fell upon and butchered scores of helpless and unoffending victims. With the ancient Greek sensuality or war and revelry was a virtue, accordingly as he worshipped the imaginary deities Venus, or Mars, or Bacchus, their presiding patrons. We have not to conjecture what the Mahommedan or the Papist or the Protestant christian would reply, was the question, what is virtue, put to him. Savages have their virtues: and although they may exclude other nations from the benefit of their operations, still as it regards themselves they connect happiness with the practice of these virtues.

These reflections were forced upon our mind by a conversation recently had with an intelligent Vey man who was once under the patronage of the celebrated King Peter Softly of Big town. The conversation related to Jenkens, of whom we gave some account in a former number of our paper. He said:—

"King Peter was a great man—and Jenkins was his boy.—The King made Jenkins head man to land the cargoes from vessels coming for slaves and Ivory. Jenkins became rich, and the King was very fond of him. At length King Peter died and was buried, and a great quantity of silver in cups, spoons and basons was put in the grave with him. Soon after the King died, Jenkins went off and built a town for himself and became a great man. Afterwards a dispute arose between Jenkins and Jarah Fingee, the son and successor of King P—, the parties appealed to arms. After years of combat Jenkins' arms succeeded. He took Big town, Jarah Fingee's capital, where the late King was buried. The conqueror made an indiscriminate butchery of all the captives and prepared to level the town to the earth. Before, however, he burned the place, he sacrliegeously exhumed the mouldered remains of the King—consumed the body under the smouldering ruins of the town, and bore away the head, and the silver of which he robbed the grave as the trophies of his arms. The whole country was smitten with consternation by his act of impiety. Jarah Fingee retired sickened in heart to invoke the aid of that power, which, ignorant as he is, he believes will punish vice and impiety."

"Jarah Fingee took a mug of water and poured forth before it the following lamentation—'Jenkins was my Father's boy. My father gave him water to drink—rice to eat and cloth to wear. He became man. My father died—we buried him and put money in the grave with him. Jenkins and I quarrelled, my father did not quarrel with him—we fought—my father did not fight him. He took my town.—That was nothing.—If he beat me, that was no palaver. But why did he trouble my father? Why did he dig him up and burn him? Why did he carry away the silver we put in the ground."

Then follows the imprecation—thus: After breathing violently on the mug he exclaimed:

"'Whatever he attempts let him not be successful in—if he plant let it not grow—if he make war let him be killed—if he remain at home let him die soon.'"

The ceremony seems simple to us—but it is their ceremony; fixed in their minds as an acceptable recognition of an almighty power not inattentive to the concerns of mortals. We have ventured to put it down.

Twelve months afterwards Jenkins died. I asked my informant who was one of Jarah Fingee's subjects if he supposed that the gregres killed Jenkens—he replied at once "no, but that thing Jenkins do, God no like em."

It has been supposed here that Jenkins was carried off by poison.

THE WEEKLY ELEVATOR.

This is the title of a hebdomadal published in Philadelphia, the first number of which has been sent us by some one, requesting us to use our influence. Its object is, as its name imports—the elevation of the colored people to that position, and to secure for them those rights to which the common parent of mankind hath given them a title. We are not able to determine to what object specially the Elevator desires to direct our attention—whether to the extension of the subscription list, or to the great object it has in view: most cherfully will we attend to both so far as it is in the power of our hands. To the latter object—namely to evince that colored people are human beings—that with proper opportunities of acquiring information, they can, after a while learn when they are, and when they are not treated with justice, our whole residence of 23 years in Africa has been devoted. We have therefore seen with pain the opprobious epithets which have been unsparingly measured out to us—and the contempt with which our labor has been regarded by our colored "companions in tribulation," in the northern section of the United States. Knowing that we are doomed by the same damning law of proscription, and that we profess to aim at the same object, we have thought we might charitably accord to each other the virtue of sincerity, though differing as to the modus operandi, and cordially hail each other as co-laborers in different compartments of one structure.

Every emotion of our soul—the last vestige of every principle—the shade of every idea within us, is opposed to slavery. We regard it with unmitigated and increasing hatred; we therefore hail the signs of its approaching downfall with an almost rapturous delight. The accursed system is tottering to its fall.—All its aiders, abettors and apologists—all its protecting powers in the New World—intellectual and brutal cannot long sustain it against the advance of liberal and religious principles. The day of darkness has passed. The hosts are mustering to battle. God himself is in the midst. Whatever nation longer resists, however it may indulge in dreams of security and of power to oppress, will be found to be warring against the God of battles. It remains then that the colored people be true to themselves—shew themselves worthy of the boon: that they be orderly, industrious, pious: that while they pertinaciously demand the concession of their rights, they cautiously and conscientiously avoid the use of the unhallowed and irritative weapons of vituperation and scurrility: that they shut out forever, the idea of violence in either word or deed. Theirs is the cause of life, liberty, religion and God. They may safely therefore trust the cause with Him who, although "He tarry will surely come."

THANKSGIVING.

The present month has been one of no little bustle and stir in Our town. We have had a General Parade—a monthly parade, and a day of Thanksgiving. It affords us no little pleasure to record the readiness and promptitude with which all classes of citizens responded to the call of the Governor, to suspend their ordinary operations and unite in a national acknowledgement of the Supreme Ruler and disposer of events. And what more befitting helpless and dependent creatures what more becoming those who have all their lives been recipients, than occasionally to pause in their career, and lift up their hearts in devout gratitude to Him, from whom comoth down "every good gift and every perfect gift?" Insensibility is a great sin. The Ancient Jews were stigmatized that they did not know, did not consider. They paused not in their thoughtless career of sensuality to reflect upon him whose hand fed, whose power defended, and whose blessings rested every where around them.

Eminently disastrous must such a course be to every people that pursues it. It proved the ruin of the Jews, seventy years captivity was the only antidote.

If any people on earth should be moved by sentiments of gratitude, we are that people. Glancing in the retrospect at the difficulties encountered and overcome, we should with thankful hearts raise our ebenezer, and exclaim "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us:" and trusting to that Divine Being that hath done so much for us we should take courage and go on.

CONTEMPLATED ESTABLISHMENTS.

There is great reason to believe that it is contemplated by British merchants to establish a line of factories from Trade Town to River Sesters: not temporary concerns to be used only as depots during a voyage, but permanent establishments. Substantial, durable houses of wood and stone are to be erected and business is to be conducted on a large scale. Materials in part, for some of these houses are now on the way from England. There is no doubt that a monopoly is aimed at. They claim to be beyond the jurisdiction of the colony, and irresponsible to any but their own government. How far the rights and just claims of this colony may be hereafter atteded to by foreign governments, cannot be conconjectured. But is a question of no little moment to us. We look with anxiety to our friends—the colonizationists in America and England, and through them to their respective governments, for that protection and recognition of rights which our past and present peculiar circumstances entitle us to solicit. If we solicit in vain, a greater curse than that of cain will have fallen upon us. When our circumstances are made known, as they assuredly should at once be, we cannot believe that any nation, especially the chivalrous French and magnanimous English for the paltry trade of this vicinity will invade this last refuge for existence. But at the present we have our fears.

To day, 19th, we stepped in the court house, and beheld scenes truly exciting. Below in the court room the Regimental Court Martial was in session. The board had before it a poor hopless wight, to whom there was an evident desire to "put screws"—for non-parading at the ordinary time. The poor fellow obviously regarded his position, any thing but enviable—and his countenance indicated a torturing of the intellect for a satisfactory excuse. While we were listening at his rapid succession of apologies, and as rapid a "that'll not do!" by the court, the sonorous voice of a speaker over head fell powerfully upon our ear, and up stairs we hastened to listen to the speeches and witness the doings of the Legislators. Honorable Mr.——had the tapis, and appeared determined that all inside and all outside too, should know that he had it. Judging from his warmth and energy his subject was inspiriting; and away he went cutting right and left—first on one side and then on the other manibus pedibusque, pro et con, as though determined to beat it to a lump, so that no one but a simpleton like ourself could have failed to know what he aimed at. We however learned when we came out, what our obtuseness would not let us learn whilst we were in, by inquiring of those of superior acumen than ourself; and we were thankful for the information, as without it the whole time would have been lost.

GOING A HEAD.

The Colonial Council has voted the sum of two hundred dollars to be laid out by the Governor in decorations for the walls and interior of the council chamber. Query—Will not the dank vapour that insinuates through the unplastered walls prejudice the adornments? The interior has a good coat of plaster—the exterior is bare. 200$ would plaster it. What the adornments will be we do not know. As beautification (our own word) is the go, we trust the court room will not be slighted. And here if we are allowed to suggest we would propose something emblematical.—Say Justice with her even scale—or drawn sword.—Integrity throwing a keen but thoughtful glance between contending parties. Ceres with her horn of plenty: or to be more strictly national—a graceful palm tree throwing wide its umbrageous branches over a full blooded African, bursting the chains that some foreign robber had contrived to weave around him—or a ship landing a cargo of immigrants stooping, cringing, bowing to the earth.—but as they ascend the hill—look around upon the prospects and breathe the air of liberty, rising into the erect attitude and proud bearing of freemen.

LAUNCH.

Better late than never. Through inadvertence we omitted to herald a launch which went off not long since from Navy Island. Messrs D. B Warner and F. S. James associated in business, took it into their heads that they would like to own a vessel. They said they could not afford to purchase one, nor to pay much money for building one. But fortunately they recollected that there is very much good timber in our bush, and that each of them has two hands. They determined to have a vessel. The result of this combined recollection and determination is the fine coppered and copper fastened sloop Economy, of 15 tons burthen. She is pronounced by captains who saw her on the stocks to be of "Artificial model," and the workmanship comparatively good. She has proved to be a good sea boat and sails remarkably swift. Great credit is due to the young men who built her. To others we say go and do likewise.

DULL! DULL!! DULL!!!

There is no business doing at present. Fine times for shopmen, eat, sleep, and draw on their employers. The country people "all live for cut farm." They say, "turrer time he no cut em plenty, he hongry too much, close die, dis time he go cut em plenty." We advise our friends to prepare their guns for shooting fish. One load of powder and shot will secure a breakfast any morning, when the fishes come in shallow water to feed. It would not be a bad plan for one to serve out to each of his retainers, instead of rice, meat &c., a charge of powder and shot (which costs nothing); each one could then consult his own taste whether he would have mullet, trout, perch or Bummies. If the latter should be preferred, we would advise one and all against the vanity of seeking them on Bushrod Island, as friend Brown waged an exterminating war on them, by turning out there a whole tribe of blue spear-nosed hogs. By the way can one tell what has become of those hogs?

H. B. M. STEAMSHIP PENELOPE.

H. B. M. Steamship Penelope, 44 Guns, Captain W. Jones, arrived in our harbor on the morning of the 25th. Captain Jones commands the British Naval forces on the coast. He left the Gallenas the day preceding, where there was an American vessel landing a slave cargo. The Decatur, Captain Abbott, being here at the time, they both left in evening for the Gallenas, the Penelope having the Decatur in tow. Should the Decatur return before our paper goes to press, we hope to report a capture. The British has now on the coast 9 steam vessels, 4 other vessels, and one store ship. This is a respectable force, especially when it is recollected the Penelope's Guns are 64 and 44 pounders.

Since the above was written the Decatur has returned. The suspicious vessel alluded to above is the "Lama" Captain Brown. She belongs to Kennebunk, in Maine. The Captain reports that when he signed the charter for a voyage to the Gallenas, he supposed he was going to a large city, and had great difficulty in finding his port. Whether he is violating the laws of his country in carrying a slave cargo and delivering it at a slave factory is not for us to determine.

The Penelope towed the Decatur against wind and current at the rate of 7 miles an hour.

We omitted to mention in our last that Captain Canot's boat, the Black Joke, which disappeared so unaccountably with two kroomen in her has been picked up at sea, after having been missing some two or three months. She was found by the fishmen, adrift below Blue Barrah. When picked up there was the skeleton of one man in her—She had neither sails nor masts—which she had when the kroomen left for the vessel. What became of the other man can only be conjectured. Perhaps he first sunk under the pressure of hunger and thirst, and the survivor sick of contemplating a ghostly corpse threw it overboard—Perhaps, and more probably, he threw himself overboard in a fit of despair.—It is hard to conjecture what became of the masts and sails.

FROM REV. MR. FREEMAN'S journal in the Sierra Leone Watchman, we learn that the recaptured Africans, who, two or three years ago heroically determined to return to their country with their acquirements in property and civilization, met a most barbarous reception from the people of Lagos, through whose country they had to pass. They were robbed by those wretches of all their property, and sent naked to their friends, at least with only the clothes they had on. Mr. De Sousa, pledged to Mr. Freeman his friendship and aid in forwarding the missionary's object!!

REV. E. JONES, of Sierra Leone, has undertaken a mission to Teemboh, to bring back the son of Mr. Thompson, who accompanied his father on a mission to the same place in 1841. Mr. Thomson sen: is dead.

ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSION.

We have learned from a source entitled to credit, that the Catholic Missiom at Cape Palmas have authority to control the movements of one of the French armed vessel on this coast. Indeed one vessel is constantly hovering about Cape Palmas for their protection. This is mysterious and ominous, especially when we recollect that other missionaries have resided there for years without apprehension. It is equally mysterious whether this anticipation refers to the colonists or to the natives. We are loth to believe it is to the latter, seeing the Catholic missionaries were on the best terms with the natives, when the American colonists and the white protestant missionaries hourly expected an attack by the combined forces of the country. When we recollect the affair at Tahita, we are not ashamed to confess our apprehensions.

ON THE 19TH, H. MOST CHRISTIAN MAJESTY'S BRIG Zebra, Capt. Monleon, made our port the honor of a visit. The Commander landed and remained ashore nearly the whole day. We had the pleasure of being in his company, but as he could not speak english and unfortunately we can't hear French, we could neither impart nor receive much information. This is the more to be regretted by us, as the recent movements of the French on this part of the coast has awakened no little interest in the minds of all who look ahead. He appeared [illegible] for both Africa's Luminary and the Herald, and gave particular directions for them to be sent regularly to the minister of marine in France.

HOW HE DID IT.

Not long since, an English cruiser, overhauled a Spanish vessel. The boarding officer espying large casks in the hold, at once counted upon having a prize. Very large casks said he. "Yes replied the Spaniard" coolly. The officer at once jumped below, and putting the pump in them found they contained Rum! The Spaniard secure in his stratagem, looked on with the utmost composure. There is no treaty forbidding them to carry large casks with rum.

A DIFFERENCE.

Not long since, we heard a good brother "deacon-ing out a hymn thus:——

A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify,
A ever dying soul to save, &c., &c.

Another one wishing the congregation to sing Watt's 103 hymn, 2nd book, invited them thus:——

Come happy souls come proach your God,
And you may lude your songs, &c., &c.

We this day 21st, received a letter from B. Coates Esq. of Philadelphia, dated Nov. 6th, 1843, enclosing numerous letters for the officers of the U. S. Brig Porpoise, all of which were delivered to an Officer of the Saratoga. Mr. C. mentions some half dozen letters lately sent us, not one of which has been received We thank him for the bundle of papers.

Look Out. The rains are coming on. The hoarse muttering thunder and broad glare of lightning, the last few evenings proclaim their approach. Regarding the signs of the times, there will be a great scarcity of rice in the approaching season. It behooves us therefore to be making provision in time.

RICHLAND PRESBYTERY.

We find that the Richland Presbytery has been lately in a long and elaborate report seeking to justify slavery from the bible!! We suppose they have reflected upon all the horrid consequences that evermore result from the system.

BRING IT BACK!!

Some one has borrowed without the grant of a loan, from our library, the third volume of Hall's works. If it is not speedily returned, the person in whose possession it may be found, will be put down in the category of filchers.

We regret to state that the ship Crawford, late an American vessel, succeeded a few days ago in taking off from the Gallenas One Thousand slaves!! She was chased by the Ferret, but escaped.

The following sick list was handed us a few days ago by Captain Abbott. It contradicts the widely published rumours of the comparative insalubrity of this region. Captain Tattnall informed us a few days ago that he has had fewer cases of sickness while cruising in this region than on any other part of the coast.

Daily Sick Report on board U. S. Ship Decatur. Joel Abbott Esq. Commander. At Sea, March 23, 1844.

No Sick

To
Joel Abbott Esq. Commander.

Very Respectfully &c.
Lewis Wolfley
Surgeon.

DIED

In this town on the 15th inst., Mrs. Amelia Roberts, aged about 64 years. Mrs. R was a member of the M. E. Church. She enjoyed the distinguished and enviable privilege—a privilege many have desired, but few possessed—to see all her surviving children attain to years of maturity and moving in respectabile circles of society. To prepare them to become useful members of society, all the energies of the deceased were for many years directed, nor did she labor in vain. She enjoyed during her last moments a full assurance of faith.

A CARD

Monrovia, 19th March 1844.

To the Governor of the Commonwealth of Liberia.

Sir, it is with pleasure we the members of the Colonial Legislature for 1844, express the sentiments they entertain of your conduct in a situation the most delicate, and upon an occasion the most interesting and important, which has convened us together for a space of more than 12 days.

We feel the most cordial satisfaction in expressing to you our conviction of the uniform manner in which you have conducted yourself during your administration, which to us, is an evincing and striking proof of the candour and justice practised and carried out by you in your official character.

Such being our sentiments, we submit them freely and in confidence, that as they have not been hastily formed, so they will not be less deserving of consideration.

We subscribe ourselves your obedient servants.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

Correspondence of the Journal of Commeace

Washington Oct. 5th, 1843.

It is a remarkable fact that the loss of the steam frigate Missouri, surprises no one here. The Secretary of the Navy, it is said, participated in the general presentiment that the vessel would meet with some fatal disaster. I had heard many declare, that she would never reach the place of her destination, (Alexandria.)

Mr. Cushing the Commissioner to China went on, in the "Oriental," to Alexandria. The Governor of Gibralter, Sir Robert Wilson, was extremly active and courteous on the occasion. Many British officers rendered personal services in endeavoring to save the ship and her men, &c.

Mr. Cushing lost all his personal effects. But he lays no stress on this, in his official dispatches. He saved the papers relative to the mission,—else he would have been obliged to return home.

Mr. Cushing states in a dispatch to the Secretary of State, published in Friday's Madisonian, that Sir George Sartorious, of the Birtish line-of-battle ship Malabar, freely offered Captain Newton to furnish him slops, supplies, or any thing else of use to him, from the British government store. He adds that among the acts of hospitality and sympathy on the part of the officers of the British Government there, the offer was made to him of providing for him a passage to Alexandria at once in a public ship, which, of course, he respectfully declined.

Mr. Cushing subsequently made Sir Robert Wilson and to Sir George Sartorious, an official acknowledgement for acts performed by them of succour, not to individuals merely as such, but, also, as officers and servants of the Government of the United States.

Mr. Cushing lauds, in the highest terms of commendation, the deportment on this occasion of Mr. Sprague, Consul of the United States at Gibralter.

Cooking a Husband.—Many of our married lady readers are not aware how a good husband ought to be cooked so as to make a good dish of him. We have lately seen a receipt in an English paper, contributed by one "Mary," which points out the modus opperandi of preparing and cooking a husband. Mary states that many good husbands are spoiled in cooking. Some women go about it as if their lords were bladders, and "blow them up." Others keep them constantly in hot water, while others again freeze them by conjugal coldness. Some smother them in the hottest beds of contention and variance, and some keep them in pickle all their lives. These women always serve them up in sauce. Now it cannot be supposed that husbands will be tender and good, managed in this way, but they are, on the contrary, quite delicious when preserved. Mary points out the manner thus. "Get a jar, called the jar of cheerfuness (which, by the by, all good wives have at hand.) Being placed in it, set him near the fire of conjugal love, let the fire be pretty hot, and the heat constant and regular. Cover him over with quantities of affection, kindness and subjection. Keep plenty of those things by you, and be very attentive to supply the place of any that may waste by evaporation, or any other cause. Garnish with modest, becoming familiarity, and innocent pleasantry, and if you add kisses or other confectionaries, accompany them with a sufficient secresy; and it would not be amiss to add a little prudence, and moderation.—Chishire Republican.

A CAPITAL STORY.—The Cumberland Herald tells a capital story about Judge Tappan, at present United States senator from Ohio, and who is unfortunately cross-eyed:—

"A number of years ago he was judge of a newly-organized county court, in the eastern part of this state. In those days of primitive simplicity, or perhaps poverty, the bar room of a tavern was used as a court room, and the stable as a jail. One day during the session of the court the Judge had occasion to severely reprimand two of the lawyers, who were wrangling. An old farmer and customer, who sat in one corner listening apparently with great satisfaction to the reproof, and presuming on an old acquaintance and the Judge's well-known good humor, sung out, 'Give it to 'em, old gimlet eyes!' 'Who was that?' inquired the Judge. 'It was that 'ere old hoss,' said the chap, raising himself up. 'Sheriff,' observed the Judge, with great gravity, 'take the old hoss and put him in the stable.'" Onieda Whig.

THE APOSTLE'S CREED IN 1151. The following rare and curious morsel is copied from an English paper. Among other uses it will serve to give us an idea of our language in the days of Henry II, in the middle of the twelfth century.

"THE APOSTLE'S CREED" Published in 1151 by order of King Henry 11 to be subscribed by the Irish.

The following is an extract of a letter from a "heavy merchant" to the Editors of the Tribune. Verily its a cold-blooded [illegible] and blood. Ed. Herald.

Nor have the South so much reason to complain of the present state of things. No section of the country is recovering more rapidly from the terrible revulsion of 1836 and 7 than the States at the south and south-west. Cotton at the present price, pays the planter better than the agricultural products of the northern and western States remunerate the farmer of those States.

In Alabama and Mississippi, it is estimated that a good negro will grow six bags of Cotton. At five cents per pound, this would amount to 110 to 150 dollars. To feed and clothe the negro, costs from 60 to 65 dollars, leaving a clear profit from his labor of about 80 dollars.

The present value of the negro is from 350 to 450 dollars, and cotton lands which in 1836 brought 20 to 30 dollars per acre, now sell from 8 to 12. The natural increase of stock, (I mean human flesh and bood.) it is always estimated will pay the interest on the investment.

The consumption of cotton in this country the present year, will not probably vary much from four hundred thousand bales, and thus far it has been taken by our manufacturers at prices that have paid the planter 10 or 15 per cent. more than that shipped to Liverpool or Havre.

The following dialogue, upon the plan of that in Hudibras, between the bear-leader and echo, is very well executed:

UNE BAGATELLE

FROM THE MSS. OF THE LATE DR. HARNEY.

ECHO AND THE LOVER.

LOVER.
Of what you're made and what you are,
Echo! mysterious nymph, declare!
ECHO. Air!
LOVER.
'Mid airy cliffs and places high,
Sweet echo! listening, love, you lie,
ECHO You lie!
LOVER.
Thou dost resuscitate dead sounds,
Hark, how my voice revives, resounds!
ECHO. Zounds!
LOVER.
I'll question thee before I go,
Come, answer me more apropos.
ECHO. Poh! Poh!
LOVER.
Tell me, fair nymph, if e'er you saw
So sweet a girl as Phœbe Shaw?
ECHO. Phaw!
LOVER.
Say, what will turn that frisking coney
Into the toils of matrimony?
ECHO. Money!
LOVER.
Has Phœbe not a heavenly brow?
Is it not white as pearl, as snow?
ECHO. Ass! no!
LOVER.
Her eyes! was ever such a pair?
Are the stars brighter than they are?
ECHO. They are!
LOVER.
Echo, thou liest, but can't deceive me,
Her eyes eclipse the stars, believe me.
ECHO Leave me!
LOVER.
But come, thou saucy, pert romancer,
Who is as fair as Phœbe? answer.
ECHO Ann, sir!

Geographical Discovery.—Some time since a very important memoir was forwarded by Captain Harris (then on a mission to Shwa, Abyssinia) to the Bombay government, relative to a magnificent river, said to disembogue itself about two degrees north of the line, on the east coast of Africa. Lately, an intelligent young officer of the India navy (—— Christopher) was despatched by Captain Harris, from Aden, for the purpose of surveying that part of the coast. He has discovered a river to the northward of the river Jud, which he entered and traced 130 miles from the mouth; as he advanced, he found it increased in width and depth, which, from the report of the natives, whom he found to be civil and obliging, it continued to do for 400 miles higher up. The breadth was from 200 to 300 feet; a clear meandering steam with the banks in a high state of cultivation, and grain of all kinds plentiful and very cheap. It was named, by —— Christopher, the Haines river, after the able superintendent of Aden. Col. Gazette

GEORGE III.

It is said the King, after the close of the American revolutionary war, ordered a thanksgiving to be kept throughout his united kingdom. A noble Scotch divine in the presence of his majesty enquired "for what are we to give thanks, that your majesty has lost thirteen of his best provinces?" The King answered "No!" "Is it the divine added that your majesty has lost 100,000 of your subjects in the contest?" "No: no!" said the King. "Is it then that the we have expended and lost a hundred million of money, and for the defeat and tarnishing of your majesty's arms! "No such thing," said the King pleasantly. "What then is the object of the thanksgiving?" Oh give thanks that it is no worse.—AMERICAN PAPER.

NOBLE.

The King of Sweden has ordered to be laid before next assembly of the estates, a plan for the emmancipation of the slaves in the island of St. Bartholomew. The number of slaves in the island is 595, and it is estimated that about $100,000 will indemnify their owners if they are freed.—American Paper.

POETRY.

LOVE.

BY SHAKSPEARE.

"Let me not to the marriage of true minds,
Admit impediments. Love is not love
That alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove.
Oh! no! it is an ever-fixed mark,
That looks on tempest and is never shaken:
It is the star of every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown although its height be taken.
Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out e'en to the edge of doom."

A FAREWELL.

BY BURNS.

"Had we never lov'd sae blindly,
Had we never lov'd sae kindly,
Never met or never parted,
We had ne'er been broken-hearted.

"Fare thee weel, thou first and fairest!
Fare thee weel, thou blest and dearest!
Thine be ilka joy and treasure,
Peace, enjoyment, love and pleasure.

Ae fond kiss, and then we sever;
Ae farewell, alas for ever!
Deep in heart-wrung tears I'll pledge thee,
Warring sighs and groans I'll wage thee."

THE LOVED ONE AWAY.

BY MOORE.

'A boat sent forth to sail alone,
At midnight, on the moonless sea,
A harp whose master-chord is gone,
A wounded bird that has but one
Unbroken wing to soar upon,
Are like what I am without thee.

ROSALIE.

BY WASHINGTON ALLSTON.

"Oh, pour upon my soul again
That soul unearthly strain,
That seems from other worlds to 'plain;
Thus pleading, falling from star,
As if some melancholy star
Had mingled with its light her sighs,
And dropped them from the skies.
No—never came from aught below
This melody of wo,
That makes my heart to overflow,
As from a thousand gushing springs
Unknown before; that with it brings
This nameless light—if light it be—
That veils the world I see.

For all I see around me wears
The hue of other spheres;
And something blent of sighs and tears
Comes from the very air I breathe.
Oh! nothing, sure, the stars beneath,
Can mould a sadness like to this—
So like angelic bliss."

So at that dreamy hour of day,
When the last lingering ray,
Stops at the highest cloud to play—
So thought the gentle Rosalie,
As on her maiden revery
First fell the strain of him who stole
In music to her soul.

RUMSELLER'S DIARY.

The following is extracted from Professor Edgar's speech before the London Temperance Society:—

"December 26.—Up early this morning to give morning drams to thirsty soakers who had been powerfully refreshed last night, being Christmas; my son told me that, in three hours, he heard two hundred blasphemies in our shop; strange that people keep all their newly-coined oaths to swear them off in my shop.

"December 30.—Lost two of my customers to day, one by delirium tremens, the other by a drunken fall; a coroner's inquest was held on the first, and a verdict returned, 'Died by the visitation of God;' the god Bacchus, I suppose.

December 31.—on this last day of the year led to make a few reflections; very odd that so many of my customers desert me for the work-house, and some for the madhouse; wonder what will become of poor fellow who went from my counter, and set him to his neighbor's corn-sick; hope he won't go the same road as my old customers, poor creatures, who cut the lodger's throat to sell his body for drink, for I never lose his custom.

"N. B. Attended to day the funerals of two good customers, who complained of a pain in the side; some say they died of a liver complaint; cannot understand how my eldest son, only eighteen, has become a drunkard, though I gave him good advice, not to drink spirits at all; except the least drop in the world, very awkward that no medicine cures my eyes; so that I wear goggles; Joshua Mum, the Quaker, had the impudence to tell me, 'If thee would wear goggles on the mouth instead of thee eyes, thee eyes would get better.' While so many old customers are dying off, happy to see their places filled by sons and daughters, imitating their parents nobly in supporting a trade countenanced by the best in the land, and licensed as honest and honorable by the wise laws of my country."

RUM'S DOINGS. COLD-BLOODED MURDER.

Listening to the remarks of Mr. Carlile, at the temperance meeting at the City Hall, last Sunday evening, in which he made occasional allusions to rum's doings—the consequences and effects of drinking, &c.,—I could not help wishing the speaker had been in possession of the history of a most cold blooded and appalling murder that was committed at, noon-day, on Tuesday of last week, in my native town of Rochester, New Hampshire.

The facts are briefly these: A Miss Phebe Hanson, upwards of sixty years of age, resided with a bachelor brother, some three or four miles from Rochester village. There were no other inmates of the house, and the old lady was supposed to have a considerable amount of money hoarded away. Early in the afternoon of the day referred to, she was found lying dead in the entry of her house, having been shot in the neck with a charge of powder and shot. Suspicion finally rested on a young man named Andrew Howard, of a somewhat notorious family of Howards, who formely resided in the neighborhood. Andrew, however, at this time lived some ten miles distant and within one mile of Great Falls. Circumstances seemed to warrant this suspicion, and a warrant was issued for his arrest. He was taken to Rochester for examination, when he made a full confession of the horrid crime. By his own confession, he could not nerve himself to the awful task without the aid of RUM! He stated, (and I have it verbally from a friend who was present at the examination,) that he left home on Tuesday morning with a gun and two charges of powder and shot, for the sole purpose of committing the murder and obtaining the money. He arrived at the house, and found Phebe alone, (her brother absent to mill,) entered into conversation with her, and called for a drink of cider, which she gave him. But he could not 'bring his courage up' to shoot her then. He retired a short distance—halted for a short time—took a drink of RUM from a flask which he carried with him for the purpose, and then returned, and deliberately shot the woman dead in her own house. He then proceeded to search the house—took a large chest out through a window, carried it a short distance from the house, broke it open and found only $29,00. This, with some trifles besides, he took and departed. During all this time, some dozen or fifteen persons were at work within sight of the house.

These are the facts, and this the confession of the wretch—which add another page to the black and bloody record of Rum's doings.

EXCERPTS.

THE CONTRADICTORY COUPLE.

"I do believe," he says, taking the spoon out of his glass, and tossing it on the table, "that of all the obstinate' positive, wrong-headed creatures that ever were born, you are the most so, Charlotte."

"Certainly, certainly, have your own way, pray. You see how much I contradict you," rejoins the lady.

"Of course, you did'nt contradict me at dinner time—oh no, not you!" says the gentleman.

"Yes, I did," says the lady.

"Oh, you did!" cries the gentleman, "you admit that!"

"If you call that contradiction, I do," the lady answers; "and I say again, Edward, that when I know you are wrong, I will contradict you. I am not your slave."

"Not my slave!" repeats the gentleman, bitterly; "and you still mean to say that in the Blackburns' new house there are not more than fourteen doors, including the wine-cellar!"

"I mean to say," retorts the lady, beating time with her hair-brush on the palm of her hand, "that in that house there are fourteen doors and no more."

"Well, then," cries the gentleman, rising in despair, and pacing the room with rapid strides, "this is enough to destroy a man's intellect and drive him mad!"

By and by the gentleman comes to a little, and passing his hand gloomily across his forehead, reseats himself in his former chair. There is a long silence, and this time the lady begins.

"I appeal to Mr. Jenkins, who sat next to me on the sofa, in the drawing room, during tea."

"Morgan, you surely mean," interrupts the gentleman.

"I do not mean any thing of the kind," answered the lady.

"Now, by all that's aggravating and impossible to bear," cries the gentleman, clenching his hands and looking upwards in agony, "she is going to insist upon it that Morgan is Jenkins!"

"Do you take me for a perfect fool?" exclaims the lady. "Do you suppose I don't know the one from the other?" Do you suppose I don't know that man in the blue coat was Mr. Jenkins!"

"Jenkins in a blue coat!" cries the gentleman, with a groan. "Jenkins in a blue coat!—a man who would suffer death rather than wear any thing but brown."

"Do you dare to charge me with telling an untruth?" demands the lady, bursting into tears.

"I charge you, ma'am," retorts the gentleman, starting, "with being a monster of contradiction—a monster of aggravation—a—a—a—Jenkins in a blue coat!—what have I done that I should be doomed to hear such statements?"

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

At a public meeting in England, the weather was warm, and there stood near me a little fat gentleman, who seemed much incommoded by the crowd. There came pressing behind him a tall, raw-boned man holding a memorandum in his hand.

"What do you mean, sir," said the fat gentleman, "by crowding and jostling in this manner? Who are you sir?"

"Sir, I'm one of the gentlemen connected with the press."

"I thought so, by Jove!" was the ready reply. "for you have nearly squeezed my ribs in!"

RAISING THE WIND.

A German musician was hired by a certain number of youngsters to play a certain number of tunes, at so much a tune. He had scarcely commenced the job, blowing away under the usual blast, when his mischievous employers began to cry "blow harder," "blow harder." The musician kept puffing away, harder and harder, anxious to please them, drawing upon his resources at each call to "blow harder," until he finally had developed all his strength, and was obliged to desist from pure exhaustion, and laid down his instrument in despair. But blow harder," was still the cry from all sides, and nothing else would suit his relentless persecutors. At last, goaded to desperation, he exclaimed, "It's easy enough to say 'blow har-r-r-der,' BLOW HAR-R-DER,' BLOW HAR-R-R-DER,'—but were the duce is de vind to come from?"

ANECDOTE.

A gentleman of this city, says the Lowell Courier, recently hired an Irishman to work for him a few weeks. Patrick was not particularly early at his work, and he liked to leave off somewhat before sundown. One day, when he was about to close up for the night, his employer said to him—

"You need'nt be in a hurry about leaving off work, you know you did'nt get here in very good season."

"Oh, your honor," said Patrick. "would'nt it be a disgrace to me to be late twice in the same day?"

HAVING THE FLOOR.

When Judge Peters, many years ago, was Speaker of the House, one of the members, in crossing the room, tripped on the carpet, and fell down. The House burst into laughter, while the Judge, with the utmost gravity, cried, "Order, order, gentlemen, a member is on the floor."

SAMBO'S ASTRONOMY.

One ob de stars is Jupiter, and one ob dem is Venus, and one ob dem is Satan. Dis is de star dat go wandering to and fro in the airth, seeking who he may devour somebody. I hear him roar in de night in de winter like a lion, and I gets de bible and put him under my head, so dat he cant do no harm to me.

PHILOSOPHER'S STONE.

The true possessor of the philosopher's stone is the miner, whose iron and copper are always convertible into the more precious metals. Agriculture is the noblest of all alchemy—for it turns earth, and even manure, into gold, conferring upon its cultivator the additional reward of health.

A HINT.

Girls, remember that the man who bows, smiles, and says many soft things to you, has no genuine love; while he who loves most sincerely, struggles to hide the weakness of his heart, and frequently appears decidedly awkward.

BORER BORED.

"Do you know Judge Blythe?" said a Custom House borer to a perfect stranger the other day, on Sanderson's steps.

"Yes," was the reply.

"I wish you would introduce me, then."

"I will," said the gentleman, "on one condition."

"What is it?"

"Get some one to introduce you to me!"

RELIGIOUS.

From the Christian Watchman.

ARE YOU A RICH MAN?

If so, how came you by your riches? Who gave you the ability of acquiring the riches you have heaped up to yourself? Did you ever think that the wealth you have rose early and sit up late to acquire, was not yours?—that it is only loaned you for certain purposes? Are they to give you an opportunity to spend your time in luxurious ease? to spend it in pursuit of the fleeting pleasures of this world? No, God has given you this wealth to do good in the world—to assist in seeking out and aiding the distressed and destitute; to "lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees!"—and the Saviour says, "The poor ye have always with you." This was the case when he was on the earth. It is so now.—God has ordained that it should be so, without regard to location, fertility of the soil, or natural advantages of amassing riches. Is it not your duty to see that none of these poor suffer? Remember the time is coming when you will be called to a strict account for all the wealth God has loaned you? Will it be well with you in this matter when that day shall come?

Are you a rich man? God never does a thing without a motive. He has not placed wealth in your hands without some design. Oh think, then, of the responsibility that rests upon you! Have you a family to provide for? Do it—but not grudgingly. Provide liberally for their daily wants, but not extravagantly. Feed, clothe and educate them. Do not lead them to suppose that the getting of money is the chief end in educating them, nor fill their minds with the grovelling idea that riches alone constitue happiness! or, that they are any better for being rich, without a corresponding disposition to do good with their money. Educate them for Heaven, and then they will possess the only true riches—riches that will be their support in all circumstances. Teach them not to set their heart upon the wealth of this world, but to lay up treasures in heaven—and we would warn you of the same thing, remembering that "Riches take to themselves wings and fly away!" If you have a surplus, after supplying your natural wants, and the wants of those who are dependent on you, give it to the poor. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

Are you a rich man? Are you not aware that there is danger of your mind becoming so absorbed in getting your riches as to neglect the concerns of your soul? What says the Saviour concerning the worth of the soul? Does he not put the direct interrogatory,—"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and loose his own soul?" As much as to say, What are perishing riches in comparison to the worth of the soul? A soul that is immortal! that never dies! A soul, the worth of which, is beyond the power of poor, feeble worms of the dust to compute! Beware, then, O man, not to set your heart upon riches! for if you do, remember, they will be a canker that will fix upon your vitals in this world, and sink your soul in everlasting perdition in the world to come! Besides, Christ has said.—and he never spoke without meaning,—that "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter heaven!"

Are you a rich man? Do you not know that the love of riches contract the mind? Did you never feel that as you have added field to field, and house to house, and you become more and more engrossed in the accumulation of wealth, that you thought less and less of the wants of the poor? There is danger—and we now warn you of it—of your becoming insensible to every thing that is soothing, tender, refined, noble and generous. Let us give you an example. We know of an individual, unmarried, whose income is not much less than $2,000 per year, who resides in the country, in the cheapest manner, hardly allowing himself the common necessaries of life—apparently wholly buried in self, and constantly trembling lest by some unforeseen accident he should lose his treasure which was not gained by his own industry. If that man understood the true secret of being happy, he would,—instead of adding annually his surplus dividends to his principal—saving it for he knows not whom—seek out the worthy poor and needy in his own native village—providing for the orphan, and making the widow's heart leap for joy. What an amount of happiness, both in this world and another would accrue to him, of which he has no conception! Besides, what an expansion it would give to his mind. He would soon soar above the grovelling propensity of only spending his time in eating, drinking, sleeping and casting the interest on his principal. Again, what an influence it would give him. Instead of being generally spoken of for his niggardly and miserly disposition, he would every where be hailed as the good Samaritan, ready to administer to the wants of the poor and forlorn. To divide among them oil and wine and money if need be—and while doing good to others, get good to himself.

Are you a rich man? Is it not your duty to make a good use of your money? What has God placed it at your disposal for? Did I intend that after supplying your natural wants, you should hoard it up? and thus starve out every generous emotion that may have a place in your bosom? God will demand of you, in the day of reckoning a strict account of your stewardship! whether you have expended it in the service of your Master, by relieving the wants of your fellow creatures or whether the gangrene of covetousness has so cankered and blinded your mind that you have made money your god. If this is your state are you not an idolater? It is not necessary to go to a heathen country, to witness idol worship. No, we fear that there are many individuals, professed followers of Christ, even in enlightened New England, who are idol worshippers. Beware then, Christian, how you set your affections on your money. Remember, too, that it has been indelibly written by the finger of God, and become a law which cannot be repealed, that "Thou shalt have no other gods before me!"

Are you a rich man? You cannot take your riches to heaven, even if you are prepared by the grace of God to enter yourself! Then why are you holding on upon them with a death grasp till the grim messenger shall stare you in the face! Take our advice and dispense your charity while in the vigor of health and strength, that your heart may be cheered by witnessing the good you may have done when you come to die, by giving freely in your life time. What virtue is there in giving when you cannot help it? There is no merit in such a gift. The meanest man that ever existed will do that. Besides, did you ever reflect how hard it was for a rich man to enter heaven? Christ says, "Woe unto you that are rich!" He also says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, where thieves break through and steal." Seek, therefore, heavenly treasures—treasures that moth and rust cannot tarnish—a kind of riches that a thief would abhor getting possession of if he could! and adopt the advice of your Saviour by laying up treasures in his kingdom!

ELOQUENCE.—The following is an extract from an an oration of a gentleman in Missouri' delivered in the meeting-house on the glorious Fourth of July

Fellow Citizens;---Shouts of victory comes up from the neighoring marshes.---The cry of freedom deafens the voice of nature, and all nature sings for joy. On this glorious occasion I have not words to express the sentiments of my mind---when I think of the great doings of our posteriors how they licked the British, and my father was in the army and was not born, and my mother wasn't courted yet, and the country was freed from British slavery by the glorious arms of Thomas Jefferson and general Jackson. On this day I call upon you to gird on your swords and beat your spears into plows and cry aloud and spare not. On this day let the cannon roar aloud, let the flags be wafted high---let the gleaming of your swords flash in the rays of the sun---let the shouts of freedom fill the air---let the trumpet send forth its blasting strains---and let the gentleman who borrowed my umbrella, bring it back again as soon as possible!

LIBERIA HERALD.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

To the Honorable,

The Legislative Council:

GENTLEMEN,—In meeting you again, at the commencement of another Session of the Legislature, it affords me great pleasure to congratulate you, that the affairs of the Commonwealth are, in all important respects, in a prosperous condition, and the most devout acknowledgements are due to our Divine Benefactor, for the bounties of Providence, and the general health and tranquility which at present prevail throughout the Commonwealth. It is also a subject for grateful remark, that through the interposition of this government, the cruel and inhuman wars that have existed for the last five years, and furnished so many cargoes of human beings, to be transported across the atalantic into perpetual slavery, and which have almost annihilated the trade of these colonies with the north east section of the interior,—have happily been brought to a close, and we are permitted to rejoice in the prospect of returning intercouse with the tribes of that section of country.

Whilst we have abundant reason to rejoice and return thanks to the great Governor of the Universe, for the general prosperity that seems to pervade every department of the government, we have cause to regret that our position as a people, struggling to establish for ourselves and our children, on this secluded and sickly coast, an asylum that is denied us elsewhere,—cannot be properly defined or understood. The time has arrived for the people of these colonies to give this subject their serious consideration, it should be no longer a matter of indifference: questions are daily arising that should cause us to reflect, and if possible understand our present, and what is likely to be our future position.

It is no doubt fresh in your memory, gentlemen, that the seizure of certain property, alledged to be owned by Captain Dring, of the British brig "Ranger," landed in Grand Bassa County, contrary to the maritime regulations of these colonies, gave rise to a correspondence between the Colonial Authorities, and British Naval Officers on this coast;—involving questions of considerable importance, relative to the right of jurisdiction over certain territory in the County of Grand Bassa, commonly known as Grand Bassa Point. Captain Denman in a correspondence on the subject, in 1841, controverts the right of the Colony to extend its jurisdiction and laws over the country on which the seizure was made, and assumes two positions, as the basis of opposition to the validity of the law of the Commonwealth under which the seizure was justifiable. The first is that, "Factories have been maintained by British subjects at various periods; and for along series of years, British vessels have been in the constant habit of prosecuting a free and uninterrupted commerce with the natives of Bassa Cove, subject only to the customary presents to the native chiefs."—Secondly, "That more recently a purchase of the country for the purposes of trade and of forming factories, was effected by a British subject."—Captain Oake of Her M. Sloop "Ferrit," in July 1842, in reply to a communication, in which the Colonial Authorities endeavored to establish, in the clearest possible manner, the right of this Government to exercise jurisdiction over the territory of Grand Bassa, remarks, "I beg to state, that as the matter will have to be submitted to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, it is desirable that the most satisfactory proof of the territorial right acquired by the Liberia settlers over the country of Bassa Cove should be shown, and as it appears to me by your Excellency's letter of the 7th inst., that it was not until 1839, that the Kings and chiefs of the Grand Bassa terrritory, including Black Will and Grando, Fishmen, resident at the Cove, concluded a treaty with the settlers, ceeding to them the right to exercise political power and control over the persons and property within the territorial limits of Grand Bassa, for of course the transactions of Prince John and Yellow Will in 1826, reliquishing their right and title to the country of Bassa Cove, could give the settlers no claims over the country of the Prince of Grand Bassa."—I would remark here, that Captain Oake, does not appear to be aware, that Prince John mentioned above, is the indentical Prince of Grand Bassa, spoken of above: "where our merchants had for a long time been in the habit of trading with the natives, and it appears that they had been doing so for some time prior to the natives formally granting to the late Captain Spence, on the 18th September, 1836, permission to establish a Palm-Oil Factory at Grand Bassa Point."—More recently, September 9th 1844, Commodore Jones, of H. Majesty's Ship "Penelope," in a communication addressed to the Governor of Liberia on the same subject, assmues a position more complicated, involving questions of the greatest importance, in respect to the future hope and welfare of the people of these colonies.

Captain Jones says, "The complaints of certain British subjects, who had under agreements, and according to the customs on the coast, formed settlements and acquired property, have brought to the knowledge of the British Government, the unpleasant fact, that the Liberia settlers have asserted rights over the British subjects alluded to, which appear to be unjust, as relating to prior rights of others, and inadmissible on the grounds on which the Liberia settlers endeavor to found them.—For the rights in question, those of imposing custom duties, and limiting the trade of foreigners by restrictions, are sovereign rights, which can only be lawfully exercised by sovereign and independant states, within their own recognized borders and dominions. I need not remind your Excellency that this description does not yet apply to "Liberia" which is not recognized as a subsisting state, even by the Government of the country from which its settlers have emigrated: still less is it necessary to remind you that no associations of private individuals, however respectable, in any country, can delegate an authority which they do not possess themselves, or depute their agents to exercise power effecting the rights of persons not their subjects, and established in prior possession of property to which they can have no claim. The rights of property on this coast, as they may appear to be acquired by purchase, will be fully recognized by us, but we cannot admit that property so acquired, can confer sovereign rights upon private associations, or justify the imposition of state duties, or the exclusion of British commerce from its accustomed resorts.—These observations have a particular reference to the dispute at Grand Bassa, which your Excellency will now be pleased to receive as well considered and final."

I propose gentlemen, to examine one or two of the most prominent points connected with this subject, and feel that I shall be able to establish, in the clearest light, the right of this Government to exercise jurisdiction over the territory of Grand Bassa, and that the position assumed by British Officers, in regard to this question, is untenable. Before I proceed, I wish it distinctly understood that the position assumed, "That British subjects have for a long series of years been in the habit of prosecuting a trade with the natives of Bassa Cove," is not questioned, but that Captain Dring or any other British subjects has at any time, purchased the territory, or any part of it, in the Bassa Country, we do question, having repeatedly asked for documents to establish the fact, which have not been furnished, and according to the testimony of the natives, cannot be produced.

But conceeding all that has been asserted, can the length of time, during which British traders may have prosecuted a free and uninterrupted commerce with the natives of Bassa Cove, "subject only to the customary presents to the native chiefs," by any construction, operate in behalf of Captain Dring, or any other British subject landing goods in the territory of Bassa Cove, after its cession to this Government, in violation of its laws?—It is known that the natives along this coast, have long tolerated the subjects of civilized nations, to carry on a free trade with them. But I presume it cannot be maintained, that they can never alter the existing state of things without the consent of those with whom they have carried on, "for a long series of years," a free trade and uninterrupted intercourse.—It is admitted that the trade has been carried by making the "customary presents to the native chiefs." If those chiefs had a right to exact such presents, as a condition upon which trade was allowed, why may they not transfer their power, over trade to us, and allow this Government to commute presents into a well regulated system of import duties. This to my mind is as clear as a demonstration; and secondly, all that is asserted, in regard to the purchase made by an individual British subject, would not justify the introduction of goods into the territory of Bassa Cove, in violation of the express laws of this Commonwealth; all that can be infered from the statements, in relation to the individual purchase, is, that a personal privilege was granted by the natives for the purposes of trade and forming factories; nor does it appear, that the personal privilege was perpetual, or that it was to extend to all British subjects in common: a joint, or common privilege is altogether inconsistent with the notions of gain, which must have influenced the purchase. It cannot be supposed that an individual would have purchased, when such a course by inviting competition would have greatly lessened the profits of the trade, he had in view, in entering into the contract. But admit that the purchase was of the fee simple in the land, or any portion of it—the title vested may yet abide in the purchaser, notwithstanding the transfer of the civil and political jurisdiction to this Government.—No principle, I believe, is better understood or more pertinaciously adhered to than this. The right to the soil which may have been acquired by an individual is a distinct thing from the right to prescribe laws for the good government of a country. And I presume it will not be insisted upon, that any British subject has purchased from the natives of the Bassa Country the right to legislate and govern the country.—The purchase made by this Government, in August 1836, prior even to any contract with Captain Spence,—of Prince John and Yellow Will, heirs and successors to old King Ben, the rightful sovereign of the Bassa Cove territory, and confirmed by a treaty, concluded in April 1839, between the Kings and chiefs of the entire Grand Bassa Country, including Black Will and Grando, Fishmen, residents at the Cove, is of supreme jurisdiction over the country, in a civil and political respect, without reservation. And I am informed by person, who where present at the convention, that no mention was made of any contract existing between them and British subjects.

Commodore Jones assumes the gronnd that the Colony of Liberia is nothing more than a private enterprize, not possessing sovereign and independant rights, consequently not entitled to the privilege of a political community—that of imposing duties and limiting the trade of foreigners by restrictions, even within the purchased territory of the colony. To some extent this may be true. The peculiar circumstances, that surrounded the enterprise of African Colonization, at the time this colony was formed, made it imperative on the society to assume the management of the political affairs of the colony,—promising, as is well understood, that just so soon as the colonists feel themselves able to assume the responsibilities of the government, to withdraw their control, leaving them a sovereign and independent people.

This change has been gradually going on as the colony have increased in population and intelligence. In the same ratio, the society have granted to the people independant rights. Among the most prominent, "to make treaties with the several African tribes, and to prescribe rules for regulating the commerce between the Commonwealth of Liberia and such tribes." I think gentlemen, I need not detain you longer. For when it is remembered that the Colony of Liberia has been established upon principles recognized by the whole civized world;—viz: The suppression of the African Slave Trade,—the civilizaation and christianization of Africa, and the establishment of a sovereign and independant government, composed of people of color from the United States, and elsewhere. And when it is remembered, that in view of this, thousands, of our brethren, now fellow citizens, bade a dieu to all that was dear to them in America, left their native land, determined to brave the dangers of an African climate,—endure the hardships consequent upon settling any new and unbroken country,—to build up a government here that will some day bring them into respectable connection with the nations of the earth. And now that we have overcome most of the difficulties and dangers that have arisen in our way, and beginning to realize fully, the practability of the plan of colonization, is the door of our hope to be close? God fordid.—I feel gentlemen, that the position assumed by British Officers, denying the right of this Government to exercise political power, and to maintain jurisdiction over the territory of Bassa Cove, will not be sanctioned by the British Government. In the meantime, I would advise, a statement, setting forth the facts, in relation to the misunderstanding that have arisen between the Colonial Authorities and British subjects, trading at Bassa Cove, be furnished the British Government by the people of Liberia. That we have been misrepresented in this whole affair, by British traders, there can be no question. For, I am persuaded, no one acquainted with this colony, and the facts connected with the dispute at Bassa Cove, would accuse this Government, as does Mr. Fox, British Minister at Washington, United States—of, "Assuming, to all appearances, quite unjustifiably the right of monopolizing the trade with the native inhabitants along a considerable line of coast, where the trade had hitherto been free; and thus injuriously interfering with the commerce interests and pursuits of British subjects in that quarter." To us, this is certainly unjust, and had Mr. Fox been familiar with the facts in the case, I am persuaded, he would not have used such language, in respect to the people of these colonies.—For no people under the sun, have suffered more from the improper interference of foreign traders, than we have. They have defied the authority of the Colony,—offered insult to our citizens, when found trading along the coast,—destroyed their property,—threatening their persons with violence, if they attempted to trade at certain points along the coast: and those very men are loudest in their complaints against the Liberia settlers; and I defy them to name a single instance, in which this Government has in any way whatever, directly or indirectly, interfered with British Commerce along this coast, except requiring British, on equal footing with the traders of all other nations, to conform to the maritime regulations, of ports within the purchased territory of the colony.

I would call your attention, gentlemen, to another subject that is entitled to your consideration: the citizens of Grand Bassa, particularly of the village of Edina, have suffered much for some time past, by the frequent robberies committed by natives living in towns adjacent to our settlements in that county: in some instances they have been guilty of depredations of the most aggravated character,—entering the houses of defenceless widows, robbing them of every article of value, leaving whole families in a miserable state of destitution and want; more than once they have entered the settlement of Edina, and killed or driven off numbers of cattle and other live stock, belonging to the colonist, depriving them, almost of their entire stock. For some time those midnight incursions were arranged and conducted with so much artifice and cunning as to elude detection. After long watching it was ascertained that the marauders belonged to the towns of Bob Gray and his son Young Bob. Application for redress was promptly made to those chiefs, who expressed great concern and sympathy for the sufferers, promising to deliver over to the Colonial Authorities the offenders, and make immediate reparation for the wrong committed. These promises, though made again and again, have never been complied with. The colonists however continued to suffer until Bob Gray was himself, actually detected in a certain robberry, and in the examination of it, was proven to a demonstration, that Bob, and his son Young Bob, had from the commencement given their sanction to many, if not all the robberries that had been committed by the country people. Upon this proof, before the Grand Jury in Bassa County, Bob Gray was indicted for grand larceny. But in consideration of important services rendered the early inhabitants of these settlements, particularly those of Grand Bassa, by giving timely information,—at the risk of the peace of his own tribe,—of the movements of hostile tribes; and on two occasions, at the head of a considerable force, joined the Americans in arms, to repel the attacks of an invading tribe, and to punish King Joe Harris for the cold-blooded massacre of our defenceless countrymen at Bassa Cove,—the Government felt considerable reluctance, too, in bringing Bob Gray to a public trial, and the consequent result, imprisonment in the public jail, thus degrading him before his people, which in all probability, might have led to consequences of a more serious nature, but hoped by the adoption of other measures to obtain reparation for the wrong, and at the same time maintain the majesty of the laws. I say, for these considerations, Bob Gray was not brought to a public trial before the courts of this Commonwealth. For this clemency Bob appeared very grateful, expressing many thanks, promising never to be guilty of such outrages again. I fear, however, that this clemency has had the effect in some degree, to weaken the influence of the colony upon the natives, and perhaps have emboldened them to commit other and more dangerous acts of violence and insubordination. They have mistaken the leniency for weakness, and the desire to secure Bob Gray from public disgrace, the want of ability to maintain the laws of this Commonwealth.

In September last a band of desperadoes, entered the school house in Factory Island, and shamefully beat and otherwise ill used the man, a reputable colonist, left in charge of the premises, robbing him of his entire stock of clothing, and making off with many articles of value belonging to the school. The particulars of this outrage was communicated to judge Day, superintendant in that county, who with his accustomed zeal traced the aggressors to Young Bob's Town, but no sooner was it known that the authorities intended to demand them at the hands of their chiefs, than the whole tribe was in arms, and a number of armed men actually appeared before the settlement of Boxley, and threatened the inhabitants with immediate war, if any further attempts were made to apprehend the persons engaged in the robbery on Factory Island. It is generally believed that Young Bob was himself engaged in this outrage. Judge Day, however was prepared for this emergency, and with great firmness, persisted in his demand.

Bob finally became intimidated, particularly after the tender of assistance to the Americans, should it be required, by King Soldier, Peak, and Faw,—and yielded, begging to be allowed a few days to deliver up the offenders, this of course was granted—but up to the present time he has neither given up the offenders, nor made any other reparation for the wrong committed, but, as I am informed, defies any attempt on the part of the colonial authorities, to bring him or any of his people to justice.—Nor is he disposed to remain quiet, content with the depredations he has already committed upon the persons and property of colonists, but continues his predatory incursions about the settlements.

Only a few weeks ago, near the village of Edina, he seized two men belonging to New Cess, and, so far as have come to the knowledge of this government, without any just provocation, murdered one of them on the spot, and still detains the other in custody.

On the grounds of Bob's connection with the colony, having, as you are aware, several years ago, by treaty, identified himself and people with this commonwealth,—the New Cess Chiefs have made application to this government for redress.

Barguay, Chief of the Little Bassa country, and with whom we have treaties of alliance, amity, and trade, also complains; that Bob Grey in November last seized one of his men, and still detains him without giving any just reason, for so doing. Immediately on these facts coming to my knowledge, I endeavored to procure the release of these persons, and used every means in my power to effect it, but without success. It therefore remains, for you gentlemen, now to determine what course is to be pursued in regard to those difficulties.—That those chiefs should be punished for the crimes they have been guilty of, and compelled to make reparation for the wrong they have committed, I presume, no one will question, and that prompt and decisive measures should be taken to teach them obedience to the constituted authorities, and submission to the laws of the commonwealth, is equally evident.

The chiefs of New Cess and Little Bassa, are now, anxiously awaiting the result of your deliberations on this subject. I have, up to this time, and not without some difficulty, too, restrained them from making reprisals, and commencing hostilities against Bob Grey and his son Young Bob; the correspondence of Judge Day, detailing many of the particulars, respecting the conduct of these chiefs, will be laid before you.

A few weeks ago, I received information that the slaver at New Cess, through the agency of kroomen,—employed for the purpose, had established factories at Digbey, and were there purchasing slaves. This being an open violation of certain treaty stipulations, between this government and the Dey tribe by which the Deys, in consideration of certain privileges granted to them by this government, solemnly pledged themselves, to abolish, for ever, from their territory the abominable slave trade—I despatched A. W. Anderson Esp., Marshall, with a suitable force to apprehend said kroomen, and others, if any there should be, engaged in the slave trade; with instructions to liberate such slaves as he might find, and to seize all merchandize &c., employed in the slave trade, and landed contrary to the laws and regulations of this colony. The kroomen, it appears, having received intelligence of the intention of this government, to break up their establishment were on the alert, and assisted by some of the country people, their accomplices of course, managed to evade the vigilance of the officer and get beyond his reach. The Marshall on his return succeeded in capturing a large canoe, belonging to the fugitives, fitted for the purpose of transporting slaves from one part of the coast to another,—there being no question as to the ownership of this canoe, and her confiscation, I, to avoid additional expense to the commonwealth, which to have brought her formally before the admiralty court for adjudication, would have cost the commonwealth, an amount about equal to the value of the canoe,—directed the Marshall to have her sold for the benefit of all concerned in the mean time, to avoid any difficulty that might subsequently arise in consequence of this summary course, notices were isued by the officer, and sufficient time given, requiring any person or persons claiming said canoe, to make a demand before the day of sale, no claimants appearing the Marshall closed the sale as directed.

Receiving information that agents from New Cess, were still in the Dey country purchasing slaves, and were actually receiving the protection of one of the chiefs,—contrary, however, to the wishes of the king and other chiefs, justice and humanity demanded, that this government should interpose, and exact a fulfilment of the contract existing between us, and the chiefs of the Dey tribe, and at once put a stop to that nefarious traffic in that quarter. It was, therefore, thought advisible, that a formal demand should be made by this government on the king and chiefs, for the delivery of the slaves, and persons and property of all kroomen or others in their territory engaged in the slave trade, contrary to certain treaty stipulations, which make the offenders amenable to the laws of this commonwealth. Consequently on the 11th December, I dispatched Messrs. Barbour, Bratcher, and Howard, with a letter addressed to the king and chiefs of the country, reminding them of the solemn obligations they were under to this government to abolish forever from their territory the slave trade, stipulating to deliver over to the colonial authorities, any person or persons in their territory engaged either directly or indirectly in the trade; and that unless the slaves and slaver, in question, were delivered to the commissioners authorized to receive them, they would be held responsible to this government for the violation of their contract; the king and chiefs, very readily acknowledged the engagements they were under to this government, and made many apologies for permitting slaves to be bought and sold in their dominions, disclaiming, however, any father participation than merely permitting persons to reside among them, to purchase slaves when brought from the interior by individuals of other tribes. The slaver, finding, how matters were going, managed to escape into the Cape Mount Country, leaving behind him four slaves, which were promptly delivered over to our messengers, with a present from the king and chiefs, and a promise never again to allow the slave trade to be revived in their territory, either directly or indirectly, by their own people or by foreigners.

I am happy to be able to inform you, gentlemen, that, during the past year, we have succeeded in establishing, a primary school, in each of the settlements of Marshall, Edina, and Bassa Cove. These schools according to reports of committees, are well attended, and in a prosperous condition; they are nevertheless, far from being adequate to the wants of the people;—the limited means of the government will not allow, notwithstanding the legislature have done all in their power to meet the wants and wishes of the people, in this respect, to employ such teachers as the advancement, of many of the children require; of this embarrassment, however, the people of Grand Bassa will no doubt, soon be relieved. During my late visit to the United States, I had the pleasure of meeting the Ladies Liberia School Association, in Philadelphia, and of conversing personally with many of its members, particularly the Directress, Mrs. Blanding, and were happy to find, that notwithstanding, so little had been effected by Dr. Johnson during his residence at Factory Island—owing, of course, to his feeble health; for no man is better adapted than was Dr. Johnson, to take charge of a school in Liberia, and the difficulty they find in procuring a suitable teacher that will come to the coast;—I say notwithstanding, these discouragements, they are not willing to abandon the cause of education in the colony; they are making renewed and vigorous efforts to sustain the High School on Factory Island. This they will do,—and very soon we shall have a suitable person to take charge of that establishment,—and may we not hope gentlemen, that, other benevolent individuals in the United States will assist, the people of Montserrado County, to put in operation for the education of their youth, such an institution, as the Ladies Liberia Society Association have in Factory Island. I am truly happy to find, gentlemen, that the subject of education is claiming the attention of the citizens, in general, they are becoming more and more awake to its importance, and beginning to feel, that on the right education of our children, depend the future happiness and prosperity of these colonies.

I have at the commencement of former sessions, recommended to your serious consideration, the revisal and amendment of the Militia law, and the law relative to the maintainance of prisoners—which I believe, experience has taught us, is defective in many important respects. The propriety of erecting in some suitable place, in each county, an arsenal or magazine, where merchants shall be required to deposit powder, when imported in large quantities, and of erecting in the Town of Monrovia a Market House for the convenience of farmers, and others, from the frontier settlements, and the interior. These gentlemen are still objects worthy of your attention. There are other matters, which might be proposed for the public service, but I am fully persuaded that your own zeal for the interests of the community will suggest to you, such improvements as may be more immediately necessary.

Whilst I recommend to your consideration, gentlemen, the propriety of making certain public improvements, I am not insensible to the embaresments that surround you, particularly the want of funds to accomplish, what in your judgement you believe almost absolutely necessary for the public value. Nothing but the want of funds, has delayed the opening of the contemplated canal, near the base of the cape, to connect the Mesurrado river, with the sea. The commissioners have surveyed the ground, and consider the plan perfectly feasable, their reports will be laid before you.

The revenue for the past year, though it exceeds that of any former year, is found to be barely adequate to the indispensible expenses of the government. The following is a statement, as collected from the reports of public officers, of the fiscal concerns of the commonwealth the past year. Viz Receipts: Duties, on imports 6383,—Anchorage and Light duty 519,—Court and Military fines 110,—Auction fees 18,—Sale of public lands 96,—Amt. from Luckey's estate 144,—Licenses 919,—Duty on colonial vessels 46,—Making a total of 8175.—Disbursments,—Public buildings 2940,—Judiciary 690,—Legislature 578,—Support of prisoners 640,—Pensions 54,—Printing 41,—Election 60,—Public defence 250,—Light House 269,—Collectors, Wharfingers, and Treasurers 925,—Schools &c. 500,—Making 6947, and leaving a balance in hands of the Treasurers of 1228. From which, deduct the following amounts due this day. Estates of Johnstone and Savage 614,—Balance colonial warehouse 163,—Sheriff Brown 250,—will leave a balance in favour of the commonwealth of 201. I would remind you here gentlemen, that the Court House and Jail, for Montserado county, and which required the largest amount of funds the past year, are completed. Distinguished, as you are gentlemen, for integrity and ability, I have every reason to expect, that your deliberations will be conducted with zeal for the public service, and with that temper and unanimity which genuine patriotism inspires, and that you will exhibit to your constituents the brightest examples of a disinterested love for the public value. Let us by precept and practice encourage a spirit of economy, industry and patriotism, and that public integrity which cannot fail to exalt a nation.

May that benignant Being who rules the destinies of men and nations, preside over your deliberations and preserve to us and over chidren the inestimable blessings of liberty.

J. J. ROBERTS.

Govt. House Monrovia, January 6th, 1845.

A COURT IN IOWA.

The following laughable account of a Court in Iowa is given in a letter from the Upper Mississippi.

Iowa is now the finest frontier country in the West, and is settling up very fast. Judge Williams related to me some amusing scenes that he witnessed, when he first started on his circuit, for the purpose of organizing and holding his first courts among the rude frontier people.

In many counties they had not had time even to erect any kind of shelter for a court house. The best provision which could be made, was to form seats of logs beneath the shade of a large tree, with a raised seat near its body for the Judge. The Sheriff would open court by mounting a stump, or mound, near by, and crying 'O*h yes, oh yes,*' announcing to the whole universe that the court was then opened, and inviting all who had business, to attend. The Clerk sat on a block of wood, and used a shingle on his knee for a desk. After the Grand Jury were empannelled, and charged by the Judge, they were sent in care of the Sheriff to a large hollow or ravine, in which they could sit in conclave beyond the view of the Court, or spectators. A small hollow was appropriated for the use of the Petit Jury.

The grass grew very tall in the neighborhood, and if the Jurymen lay down in a ring in the grass, they could still more exclude themselves from observation. The Judge said that one day after having charged the Grand Jury, and dismissed them to their quarters in the large hollow, a tall, raw-boned, live Yankee looking man, with hat in hand, addressed him as follows:

'May it please your honor, I wish to speak to you.'

'Order, sir, what is it?'

'Judge,' continued he, with the utmost gravity, 'is it right for fellows to snake it in the grass?'

'How, what is it sir?'

'Why you see,' said the Yankee, 'there's some fellows who's tarnal fraid the Grand Jury will find something again 'em, which they deserve, and they are snaking up to the Grand Jury, on their bellies in the grass, kind of trying to hear what the Jury are talking about.'

'No,' responded the Judge, with as much gravity as he could command, 'I do not allow of 'Snaking.' Here, Mr. Sheriff, go station a guard around each Jury's hollow, and if a man is found 'Snaking,' have him brought before me, and will I cause him to be punished. Indeed, if this 'Snaking' is persisted in, I shall recommend a special Act to be passed, making it a misdemeanor.'

The fact was, the Judge said, there were present at the time, some barefooted vagarant rascals, who were probably justly suspected of horse stealing, and had 'snaked it' on the Grand Jury, in order to find out whether the Jury intended to present them; and if so, to gain time by this clandestine warning, and flee the jurisdiction of the Court by escaping into Missouri.

FROM ABROAD.

COUNTERFIT COIN.

A letter has been communicated to the Department of State, at Washington, from an intelligent gentleman of London, from which the following extract is published for the information of the public:

LONDON, Sept. 17, 1844.

On Saturday last, the officers of the Mint, brought me a false sovereign to examine and report its specific gravity; we found it to be 13 58, (with reference to distilled water as unity at 62 degs. Farenheit,) which is about half the value of standard gold. The imitation of the coin is so perfect as to have deceived the die sinker himself, and its execution altogether is of such a quality as to excite the most intense interest and anxiety in all who have seen it. The impression of the sovereign imitated is that of Queen Victoria, and is so exquisitely done as to defy detection by comparision, except in two or three very minute instances, the most obvious of which is the difference of the dotting of the ground or field, or, in that quarter of the shield containing the single lion; with the aid of a magnifying glase. the dots on the ground of the false coin will be found to be more distinct, being coarser, or further asunder than in the real coin. The specimen we have seen was gilt, of course the color of fine gold; but on being cut, it showed the redness arising from the alloy of copper.

It is supposed that this false coin must be principally intended for circulation on the Continent, or rather in the United States, (on account of the large quantity of sovereigns known to be in circulation with you,) because, although the state of the coin indicates some degree of wear, there has not yet been any passed through the hands of the Bank of England, the issuers being without doubt aware of the rigid scrutiny now exercised there.

A CONVENT IN LONDON.—For the first time since the Reformation, the order of the Sisters of Charity has been established in London. Eight nuns and one novice, from the nunnery of Bagnor street, Dublin, have arrived, under the patronege of the Right Rev. Dr. Griffiths, Catholic Archbishop of London and the Catholic nobility

THE BLIND BOY AND HIS SISTER.

BY MARY HOWITT.

"Oh, brother, said the fair Annie,
To the blind boy at her side,
"Would thou could'st see the sunshine lie
On hill and valley, and the sky
Hung like a glorious canopy
Over all things far and wide!

"Would thou could'st see the waters
In many a distant glen;
The mountain flocks that graze around,
Nay, even this patch of stony ground,
These crags with silver lichen crowned,
I would that thou could'st ken!

"Would thou could'st see my face, brother,
As well as I see thine;
For always what I cannot see
It is but half a joy to me,
Brother, I often weep for thee,
Yet thou dost ne'er repine!"

"And why should I repine, Annie?"
Said the blind boy, with a smile;
"I ken the blue sky and the gray;
The sunny and the misty day;
The moorland valley stretched away
For many and many a mile!

"I ken the night and day, Annie,
For all ye may believe;
And often in my spirit lies
A clear light as mid-day skies;
And splendors in my vision rise,
Like gorgeous hues of eve.

"I sit upon the stone, Annie,
Beside our cottage door,
And people say, 'that boy is blind,'
And pity me, although I find
A world of beauty in my mind,
A never ceasing store.

"I hear you talk of mountains;
The beautiful, the grand;
Of splintered peaks so gray and tall;
Of lake and glen and waterfall;
Of flowers and trees; I ken them all,
Their difference understand.

"The harbell and the gowan
Are not alike to me,
Are different as the herd and flock,
The blasted pine-tree or the rock,
The waving birch, the broad, green oak,
The river, and the sea.

"And oh, the heavenly music,
That, as I sit alone,
Comes to mine inward sense as clear
As if the angel voices were
Singing to harp and dulcimer
Before the mighty throne!

"It is not as of outward sound,
Of breeze, or singing bird;
But wondrous melody refined;
A gift of Heaven unto the blind;
An inward harmony of mind,
By inward senses heard:

* * * * * * *

"But better far than this, Annie,
Is when thou read'st to me
Of the dear Saviour meek and kind,
And how he healed the lame and blind.
Am I not healed?—for in my mind
His blessed form I see.

"Oh, love is not of sight, Annie,
Is not of outward things;
For in my inmost soul I know
His pity for all mortal woe;
His words of love spoke long ago,
Unseal its deepest springs!

"Then do not mourn for me Annie,
Because that I am blind;—
The beauty of all outward sight;
The wondrous shows of day and night;
All love, all faith, and all delight,
Are strong in heart and mind!"

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, JANUARY 25th, 1845

COLONIAL LEGISLATURE.

The Legislature of the colony commenced its session on Monday the sixth instant, and closed on Saturday the eighteenth. As usual the Governor's Message was presented. It is an exceedingly interesting document making known as it does the position which the British have taken in reference to us. The subject involving as it does our dearest interest, and our last hopes received the cool and deliberate attention of the Legislature, and although some diversity of opinion existed as to the proper course to be pursued, the opinion was almost unanimous that the time for a decided action has arrived.

We hope to be indebted to our accomplished Colonial Secretary for the minutes of the council, as we conceive the daily doings of the body will be more acceptable to our foreign readers than a mere synopsis, such at least as we are able to give.

The Governor's Message will be found in this paper.

The Barque Californias Captain Goldsmith, 33 days from Salem, arrived on the 12th. Rev Messrs. Appleby and Perkins and their wives, of the Episcopal Mission at Cape Palmas, are passengers by this vessel. We received by this vessel provisions for the Baptist Mission at Edina. A favourable chance presenting directly after the arrival of the vessel, we immediately forwarded them to Rev. Mr. Clark at Edina.

A STRANGE FATALITY ATTENDS OUR LETTERS.—About a year gone we wrote to the corresponding Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, for a number of books which we wished for our own use, and a few dozen hymn books for the use of their members of the Baptist Churches in the colony. We also requested Brother Clarke to back our request. Our plan was to have the amount charged to the baptist mission at Edina, which we would refund on the arrival of the books here. Bro. Clarke wrote us he had referred to the subject in one of his communications. We have heard nothing of the matter since. Subsequently we wrote to the editor of the Christian Watchman, but as yet have heard nothing from him. Four or five dozen Watts and Rippon's hymn books would meet with ready sale here. There is a great call for them. If any baptist friend would send a few—say a dozen of the large and about four dozen of the small edition of Watts and Rippon he would confer a singular favour on baptists out in these ends of the world; and we will one and all, pledge ourselves to make fair returns. We are not careful to whom the books are entrusted so we get them. Though far away, we delight on the Sabbath and other stated occasions of worship to swell with the same melody and with the sentiment with our brethren in other lands, the burst of praise which ascend to our common Redeemer.

VERY BUSY THIS MONTH.—Rice is uncommonly scarce. Our readers we know will excuse the want of editorial under these circumstances. For who can write when he is hungry?

Africa's Luminary.—This periodical whose rising on the 1st. instant, was announced to be its last, we are happy to hear, is destined still to rise and shine upon our religious and literary horizon. It is assigned to the editorial conduct of the Rev. Mr. Burns, than whom, we know of no one among us better able to raise it to a creditable place. We lay no claim to the power of emiting light nor of radiating the heavens with corruscations of literary grandeur and glory. We lay claim to what, and only to what our name "Herald" imports. Our province is to announce things sometimes pleasant, and sometimes unpleasant things—seldom pausing to ask whether they will suit or not suit, those to whom they are offered. Our position, or rather circumstance are doubly favorable to our views, and equally suiuted to our taste. We occupy the enviable niche of deep poverty, a position of all, the most advantageous to independence—Under no obligations for favors received—and under no influence of hope of favors to be received, we can have no motive but a sense of propriery. Therefore we have been occasionally found saying somethings which others would not dare have uttered. Hence forth our editorial course will be of a piece with our past. Many may out bow us in gracefulness; Chesfield himself could not out outdo us in earnestness.

DIED—In Millsburg on the 1st, inst, Mrs. Minta Smart, wife of Mr. Daniel Smart, of that place. Mrs Smart was a cesciple of Jesus, of the old stamp. He, delight was the company of pious and experienced christians, and her mind was so occupied by the things that pertain to religion, that she was ever found ready to give every one that asked a reason of the hope that was in her. She was a woman of eminent piety, blending no common degree of experimental knowledge with true and unaffected humility. Her life was an eloquent appeal in favor of religion, and her death was answerable to her life and conversation. She was a member of the Baptist Church in Millsburg.

In New Georgia, on the 7th, inst., Mr. Thomas Davis Mr. Davis was an Iboo—one of those sent out here by the United States Government. He was a member of the Baptist Church in that place.

[From the London Punch.]

Letter from a Gentleman to his Friend, Entreating him to Renounce the Bottle.

My dear Peter:—May I, by friendship of thirty years' growth, be permitted to address you on your faults—or, rather your fault; for it is so capacious that it swallows every other error; in the same way that boa constrictors gulp toads and other unsightly creautures of smaller dimentions May I venture to remonstrate with you on—well, it must be said—your habitual drunkeness? Alas! my friend, to what a condition has this folly, this wickedness reduced you! This morning only, I saw a fullgrown cucumber in a bottle; there is nothing in the object, it is a common-place, to be seen in the windows of every pickle-merchant; and yet did that imprisoned cucumber touch my heart, and bring pathetic moisture into my eyes; for by the tyranny of association, it made me think of my forlorn friend. Yes; looking at that cucumber, trained to grow in its glass prison, did I behold in it the hopeless condition of Peter Rubygill! There he is—thought I—there is Peter, and who shall deliver him?—And now, alas! does that plethoric gourd fully declare the story of my friend! How, like him, was it instiuted in its green youth—a very sucker—into the bottle's throat; and how, when there was it made to swell, until far too large to be withdrawn, it possessed the whole of the bottle, and was then cut off forever from the vine that had cherished it! And is t not thus, Peter with a doomed drunkard?—Does he not enter the bottle in the greeness of his days, and though he may again and again escape from the thing that threatens to enclose him, at length is it not impossible for him to get away? Habit makes him swell, and there is no hope for him; cut off from the general world, he has no other dwelling place than a bottle. Verily, Peter Rubygill, Bachus—like a pickle merchant—has his bottled cucumbers, and you are of them.

And yet, Peter, I would fain hope for you In the name of all that is great and beautiful in the world, why seal your eyes to its grandeur and loveliness, why walk with your drowsy brain in a fog, when, touched by the light of beauty, it might answer the touch with most delicious music? What, in truth, can you know of the bounty and magnificence showered about you? No more than a silly fly, that finding itself in the palace of a king, sips and sips, and tumbles headlong into the first syrup it may light upon. Have I not seen your leaden-eye—clay-pated—almost dumb with pain hammering at your temples—degraded by nausea tugging at your stomach—your hand shaking like a leaf—your mouth like the mouth of an oven—and your tongue, I am sure of it, like burnt shoe leather? And for what, Peter Rubygill! For some six hours' madness the night before?

You were left a comfortable competence—Where is it now? Gone. The bottle is the devil's crucible, and melts all! You were tolerably good looking. And now is your countenance but as a tavern sign; where numberless little imps—liberated by drawn corks continue to give a daily torch of red, proud of their work, as portrait painters to the devil himself

There was a time when your word was true as gold. And now, upon whom can you pass it? From the mouth of a drunkard, the most solemn promise is no better than the best-made bad money: it may pass for a time, but is certain to be nailed to the world's counter at last.

You had friends. But there is a moral fever in the reputation of a drunkard, and sober men wisely avoid it.

You have a wife. Has she a husband? No. She vowed to love a man, and you are a liquor cask. Can you expect her affection? You might as reasonably expect her wedding-ring to hoop a wine-barrel.

You have children. Poor things! They see a satyr sprawl and reel before them; and, in their innocence, blush not as yet to call the creature father!

But, my dear Peter, there is yet hope. Learn to love home. Avoid the tavern. It is in the tavern cellar that the devil draws up his army array against the brains and good resolves of men. It is there he views his legions of bottles and prepares them for the attack upon weak humanity. But, arm yourself, Peter; meet the assailants with cold water; and, in the fight, you shall have the earnest prayers of your old friend.

CORYDON RIVERS.

WHAT LONDON IS.

It is the point of inter-communication between colonies which stretch almost from the North Pole—from Canada to the Cape of Good Hope—and which bring the indigo of India, and the wood of Australia from the antipodes, to enrich the manufactures of Leeds. It is the seat of commerce that would seem fabulous to the merchants of Venice, Tyre, and Carthage in the olden times! You have a population which has doubled since 1801; it was then 888,000 souls—it is now, by the census of 1841, 1-832,000. You have a town which is five miles and a half long, take it where you will, but if you measure it from Blackwell to Chelsea, it is seven and a half miles. It reaches, from north to south, three & a half miles; it is a perfect German principality—a Coburg if you please, or a Hesse Hamburg in brick You have spent five millions sterling on your bridges alone You have docks to hold all the ships of the world. The London Docks alone cover 100 acres of ground, and the vaults holds 65,000 pipes of wine. The West India Docks cover 290 acres and can hold 500 large merchanmen with ease. The Commercial Dock covers 49 acres, and is, I believe exclusively confined to the Baltic trade. There are 2950 ships of the port of London alone, of 581,000 tons total burden, and manned by 32,000 seamen. The vessels engaged in the colonial, Irish, and coasting trades, including the colliers, and also 360 British vessels, were 2335. The tonnage of the the foreign vessels which entered this port in 1840, from Russia, Sweeden, Germany, France, the Mediterranean, China, and the United States, amounted to 4,165,164 tons. Upon an average of the last ten years, London alone has paid £11,000,000 in custom duties, out of the £23,500,000 which the whole revenue of that department amounts to. There are 2000 merchants and brokers within half a mile of the Exchange. You have 100,000 houses of business, probably half of which have shops attached to them. All the details connected with London are upon the same gigantic scale. The water companies supply 237,000,000 hogsheads every year; and the gass companies furnish 10,000,000 cubic feet of gass every twenty-four hours. In Smithfield market there were 180,780 head of cattle, and 1,500,000 of sheep, in round numbers, sold in the yerr 1839. Your very paving & sewer rates amounts to £631,000 a year. The London newspapers consume 10,000'000 of stamps annually. The steam-boats carry 10,000 passengers every day. There are 1000 miles of railway stretching from London into every part of the kingdom, and bringing its population into contact with all the great cities of the country, completed at an expense of nearly £500, 000 sterling. There are 59 canals, which cost £45, 000,000. The monthly business conducted by the London bankers alone averages £75,080,000, and has amounted to £87,000,000 in one month.—G. H. Ward, M. P.

(It was said that the Queen was to have a billiard table made out of the timbers of the Royal George—on which Punch presents the following petition.)

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY:

Although of a humble stock, and although my wife, Madam Judy has not been presented at your Majesty's court, yet we humbly declare that the whole court doth not contain two more loyal and dutiful subjects.

May it please your Majesty, we are very old; we have been in the custom of mixing for centuries past with every class of the people of this kingdom, and we are enemies to no manner of sport wherewith they amuse themselves.

Billiards, among others, is a good sport. It has the privilege of uniting many honorable gentlemen daily together of the army, of the universities, and of the swell mob, at the watering-places. It has the eminent merit of leading to the detection of many rogues and swindlers; it keeps many ingenious markers, brandy-merchants, and soda water venders in honorable maintenance, and is a great aid and patron of the tobacco trade, thereby vastly increasing the revenues of your Majesty's government.

With that sport then we are far from quarrelling. But there is for this and for all other games a time and place. Thus to the late Mr. Hogarth's facetious print (I mean the gentleman very well) the Beadle is represented as calling "one Jack Approach" for playing at marbles, no, not for playing at marbles but playing on a gravestone during Sunday service. In like manner, were I to set up my show outside St. James's Church during service hours, or under Mr. Majesty's triumphal arch at Pimlico, or in my master London's drawing-room—it is likely, not that the Beadle would cane me, for that I would resist, but the parson in blue habiliments, oil-skin hatted, waterproofed, and pewter-buttoned—policeman in a word, would carry me before one of your Majesty's justices of the peace. My crime would be not the performance of my tragedy of "Punch"—but the performance at improper season and time.

Ah, Madame! Take this apologetic letter your royal consideration, and reconect that as in Punch and marbles so are BILLIARDS.

They too may be played at a wrong place. If it is wrong to play at marbles on a tombstone, is it just to play at billiards on a coffin—an indifferent coffin—anybody's coffin? Is such a sport quite just, seemly, decorous, and inoffensive?

Perhaps your Majesty is not aware, what the wreck of the Royal George really is. Sixty years ago last June made no small sensation. Eight hundred gallant men, your royal grandfather's subjects, went down to death in that great ship. The whole realm of England was stirred and terrified by their awful fate—the clergy spoke of it from their pulpits—the greatest poet then alive wrote one of the noblest ballads in our language, which as long as the language will endure shall perpetuate the melancholy story. Would your Majesty wish Mr. Thomas Cambell to continue the work of Mr. William Cowper, and tell what has now become of the wreck? Lo! it is a billiard-table, over which his Royal Highness the Prince de Joinville may be knocking about red balls and yellow—or his Serenity the Prince of Hohenzollern Sigmaringen may be caramboling with his coat off. Ah, Madame! may your royal fingers never touch a cue; it is a losing hazard that you will play at that board.—Living Age.

CARRIAGE FOR TOM THUMB.—The foreign correspondent of the Boston Atlas, gives the annexed description of a costly carriage constructed at Birmingnam, England, for that infinitesimal dot of creation, Tom Thumb. The little creature was about to visit that great city of manufactures, where the equipage was to meet him. The letter writer states, that in point of size and magnificence the elegant coach is unequalled.

"The body of this chariot is only twenty inches in width. The top of the carriage is but three feet and a half from the ground. It is lined with beautiful silk tabret and drab and crimson silk lace. There are plate glass winnows, besides neat outer blinds and inner silk curtains, with tassels, moved at pleasure by patent spring rollers. The cushions and backs are stuffed in the most luxurious manner, and the little General can truly take his ease, with no one to disturb him, for certainly nothing but a tiny pet spaniel could possibly ride inside with the General, and this pet dog is, I believe, to have the exclusive priviledge. The handle of the door is of solid silver, elaborately chased. There are folding steps, covered neatly with carpet, and two lamps of exquisite workmanship. The driver's box is wide, in the old-English style, and is covered with rich crimson hammer cloth, magnificently embroidered with various colored silks, and trimmed with heavy silver lace. The body of the chariot is of a deep blue color.

The General's coat-of-arms upon the hammer cloth is of solid silver—the coat of arms also appears on the body of the chariot. It is Liberty and Britannia, supported on either side by the American eagle and British lion surmounted by the rising sun, & American & British flags, crossed—on a scroll, under the whole is inscribed the truly American motto—"Go ahead!" The whole appearance of this superb chariot is certainly magnificent, and does the artist credit. The harness is in the same rich style, being thickly covered with solid silver ornaments. The ponies, which are to draw the chariot, were obtained with great trouble and expense. They are only twenty-eight inches in height, and were trained by Mr. Batty, of Astley's Royal Amphitheatre. I saw them at the Indian encampment, at Lord's Cricket Grounds, on Friday last, harnessed to the chariot, and driven by the General's own coachman, and they were a great curiosity of themselves, and attracted much attention. They are not much larger than a Newfoundland dog, yet they are very strong, full-blooded, and of fine proportions. The Court of Oberon has furnished the coachman and footman, for they are very diminutive in size. They are smart lads, dressed in a superb livery of blue cloth, decorated with silver lace, having bag wigs, cocked hats, white top boots, etc., in the neatest and richest style. Altogether, the whole affair is the most splendid show of itself, that has ever been got up in the metropolis. The total cost of the chariot, harness and ponies, is not less than two thousand dollars."

GUILTY LOVE.—If there be one part of life on which the curse spoken at eden rests in double darkness: if there be one part of life on which is heaped the gathered wretchedness of years, it is the time when guilty love has burnt itself out and the heart sees crowd around those vain regrets, that deep remorse, whose voices are never heard but in the silence of indifference. Who ever repented or regretted during the reign of that sweet madness which one beloved object was more, aye a thousand times more, than the world forgotten for its sake? But when the silver cord of affection is loosened, and the golden bowl of intoxicating passion broken—when that change which passes over all the earth's loveliest has passed, too, over the heart; when that step which was once our sweetest music falls on the ear of fear, not a hope; when we know that we love no more as once we loved; when memory broods on the past, which yields but a terrible repentance and hope turns sickening from a future, which is her grave, if there be a part of life where misery and weariness contend together, till the agony is greater than we can bear, this is the time.

TRANSMISSION OF TYPES, INSTINCTS AND HABITUDES. Take the mastiff, the Newfoundland dog, and the greyhound, and keep their families severally pure from any intercourse with each other, and under similar circumstances and conditions they will preserve their respective physical characteristics, unaltered as if the races had each of them, so to express it, a canine Adam and Eve of their own. But this is not the whole of the case. It is also found that not only certain organic peculiarities, but certain habitudes, certain artificial instincts, may be acquired; and that when once acquired, these, too, are transmissable from sire to son. A careless observer might easily be tempted to conclude that these acquired properties were primitive and aboriginal, and distinctive of peculiar and separate races. But a due and unprejudiced attention to the above class of phenomena would soon satisfy him that his conclusion was erroneous. We must confine ourselves to a few instances of these curious divergencies from the right of original stocks. The wild dog, then, most certainly, has no great instinctive propensity for the office of guardian and master-minder to a large flock of sheep. He is vastly more disposed to dine upon the muton himself than to aid in preserving a supply of it for a race of carnivorous biped. And yet we have among us a breed of dogs whose aptitude for that employment is as unvarying and hereditary as if in keeping of sheep had been the final cause of their creation.

A terrier, whose parents had been in the habit of fighting with polecats will instantly show every mark of anger and pugnacity on perceiving the scent of that animal; and this although the animal itself be wholly hid from sight. A young spaniel, brought up with the terrier, will endure the odor of the polecat without the slightest sympton of emotion, but will pursue the first woodcock it has ever seen with clamor and impatience. A well bred young pointer, which has never yet set eyes on a partridge, will stand trembling with agitation, its eyes fixed, its muscles rigid, when introduced for the first time into the middle of a cover. Again, the natural paces of a horse are the walk, the trot and the gallop. But the horses bred on the table land of the Cordilleras are carefully taught a peculiar and artificial pace, a sort of running amble; and the horses so trained become the sires of a race to which the amble is natural and requirers no teaching. The fact is so well known that such colts are described by the peculiar name of equilillas. Now this class of phenomena seems to be at mortal strife with the philosophy which insists upon the necessity of multiplying species in order to account for the almost endless variety of breeds. It is abundantly sufficient to show, that many animals, perhaps all animals, are endowed with the capacity of acquiring and transmitting a sort of second nature; and that this capacity forms just as much a law of their existence as the more general law, which separates the race of the lion from the race of the ox, and all animal races whatever, from the race of man.—English Quarterly.

Only the power that makes a world can make a Christian.—Wesley

In religious concerns, every thing which we do of ourselves, independantly of Divine aid, has a tendency to stop us short of the object we are aiming at; and whatever be the substitute we rely on, whether outward or mental, it is an idol at the time.—Dillwyn.

What a mercy it is that no one ever sincerely desires to know the state of own soul in vain! In the pursuit of all other knowledge, our motives may be too arrogant and selfish to be gratified; but in this, the deeper the research, the more we are humbled, and consequently the better prepared to receive the desired instruction.—Ibid.

The graces which the blessed Spirt implants in our hearts, resemble a sun-dial; which is of little service, except when the sun shines upon it. The Holy Spirit must shine upon the graces he has given, or they will leave us at a loss, in point of spiritual comfort, and unable to tell whereabouts we are.....Toplady.

THE MARKETS.—Generosity.—Small stock on hand—ready sale. Bets. Some of a very inferior order on hand, and many of the betters would feel much better, if they had never bet! Decency. Great demand for it; but the market poorly supplied. Vulgarity. Plenty on hand, and the supply is still increasing, and will continue to do so until after the next Presidential election.

CAPITAL IDEA.—'Our life is but a bubble,' said Mrs. Simpkins, in a spirit of resignation, to her spouse, who was rating her about her slovenly habits. 'I wish your life was a soap bubble, then,' was the rejoinder.

THE GIRLS. Never look at the girls. Oh, no, they can't bear to be looked at. They regard it as an insult. They wear their fine feathers and bustles merely to gratify their mammas—that is all!

ALIVE. When you sell a duck to a doctor, be sure to muzzle it, or it might cry quack. That would be regarded as a personal insinuation!

A Smart woman. 'Did you ever see any of the popular novels?' said a city dame to a country cousin. 'No, ma'am, but I have seen poplar trees.'

GOOD ADVICE. If on any occasion your wife should exclaim to you, 'Now tumble over the cradle and break your neck, do! don't you do it!

UNPLEASANT. Uncle Sam thus characterises the man who turns his coat to get an office, and fails in the endeavors.

OPERA a place where ladies go to show their fine dresses!

☞ Always be as witty as you can with your parting bow, your last speech is the one remembered.

☞ "Are you a pew-holder in this church, sir?" "No, sir, the pew holds me."

☞ Why are goods sold at auction like nine pins?
Ans: Because they are knocken down.

☞ "I am transported to see you," as the convict at New Holland said to the kangaroo.

☞ "You're a windy fellow," as the tongs said to the bellows.

☞ Actors fighting a duel might be denominated, shooting stars.

☞ Clouds are very appropriately denominated, the raining powers.

WHAT IS BEAUTIFUL.

BY REV. G. A. RAYBOLD.

Say, what is beautiful on earth;
By moonlight seen, or midday splendour,
Are all the scenes that time gives birth
Good gifts which God to man doth render?

Nay, nought is beautiful to man,
If his own heart is sad, and sore;
All the bright things his eye doth scan,
Give to the grief worn, joy no more.

But all things are beautiful when seen,
By joy's clear eye, and the happy heart;
The passions of the breast serene,
To all things doth their bliss impart.

Then, to behold a world of joy,
Unmarked by misery's iron hand,
To feel a bliss without alloy,
The heart, that power must command.

What mortal can this power attain,
Where, is the talisman of bliss,
Who can the priceless secret gain,
And tell the world, what that gem is;

'Tis this, 'tis this, a heart by grace,
Made free from sin, where love doth reign;
This sheds a light, o'er every place,
And beautifies the world again.

HYMN.

My God, my Father, while I stray
Far from my home, on life's rough way,
O teach me from my heart to say,
Thy will, O God, be done,

If thou should'st call me to resign,
What most I prize—it ne'er was mine;
I only yield thee what was thine,
Thy will, O God, be done.

E'en if again I ne'er should see
The friend more dear than life to me;
Ere long we both shall be with thee;
Thy will, O God, be done.

Should pining sickness waste away
My life in premature decay,
My father, still I strive to say,
Thy will, O God be done.

If but my fainting heart be blest
With thy sweet spirit for its guest;
My God to thee I'll leave the rest;
Thy will, O God, be done.

Renew my will from day to day,
Blend it with thine and take away
All that now makes it hard to say
Thy will, O God, be done.

And when on earth I breathe no more
The prayer oft mixed with tears before;
I'll sing upon a happier shore
Thy will, O God, be done.

THE EX-DEY OF ALGIERS.

The Ex-Dey of Algiers, on being dispossessed of his dominions by the French, took refuge at Naples, and established himself under M. Zill's hospitable roof. The third floor was entirely occupied by his suite and attendants, the fourth was for himself and his treasures, the fifth, or the garret, he converted into his harem. The curious arms, costumes, and jewels which Hassien Pacha had brought with him were a godsend to the virtuoso tavern keeper, who was never weary of examining and admiring them; and before the African had been a week in the house, he and his host were sworn friends. Unfortnately this harmony was not destined to last long.

One morning Hassien Pacha's cook (a Nubian, as black as ink, and as shining as if he had been polished with a shoe brush) entered the kitchen of the hotel, and asked for the largest knife they had. The head cook gave him a sort of carving knife, some eighteen inches long, sharp as a razor, and pliant as a foil. The negro looked at it, shook his head as if in doubt whether it would do, but nevertheless took it up stairs with him.

Presently he brought it down again, and asked for a larger one. The cook opened all his drawers, and at last found a sort of cutlass, which he hardly ever used on account of its enormous size. With this the Nubian appeared more satisfied, and again went up stairs. Five minutes afterwards he came down for a third time, and returned the knife asking for a bigger one still. The cook's curiosity was excited, and he inquired who wanted the knife, and for what purpose.

The African told him very coolly that the Dey, having left his dominions rather in a hurry, had forgotten to bring an executioner with him, and had consequently ordered his cook to get a large knife and cut off the head of Osmin, chief of the eunuchs, who was convicted of having kept such negligent watch over his highness' seraglio, that some presumptuous Giaour had made a hole in the wall, and established a communication with Zaida, the Dey's favorite odalisque. Accordingly Osmin was to decapidated; and as to the offending lady, the next time the Dey took an airing in the bay of Naples, she would be put into the boat in a sack, and consigned to the keeping of the kelpies.

Thunderstruck at such summary proceedings, the cook desired his Nubian brother to wait while he went for a large knife; then hastening to M. Martin Zill, he told him what he had just heard.

M. Martin Zill ran to the minister of police, and laid the matter before him. His Excellency got into his carriage and went to call upon the dey

He found his highness reclining upon a divap, his back supported by cushions, smoking latakia in a chiboque, while an icogian scratched the soles of his feet, and two slaves fanned him. The minister made his three salaams; the dey nodded his head.

"Your highness," said his excellency, "I am the minister of the police."

"I know you are," answered the dey.

"Then your highness probably conjectures the motive of my visit."

"No. But you are welcome all the same."

"I come to prevent your highness from committing a crime."

"A crime! and what crime? said the dey, taking the pipe from his mouth, and gazing at his interlocutor in the most profound astonishment.

"I wonder that your highness should ask the question," replied the minister. "Is it not your intention to cut off Osmin's head?"

"That is no crime,"

"Does not your highness propose throwing Zadia into the sea?"

"That is no crime," repeated the dey, "I bought Osmin for five hundred piatres, and Zaida for a thousand sequims, just as I bought this pipe for a hundred ducats."

"Well, what does your higeness deduce from that?"

"That as this pipe belongs to me, as I have bought it and paid for it, I may break it to atoms if I choose, and no nobody has a right to object." So saying, the Pacha broke his pipe and threw the fragments into the middle of the room.

"All very well as far as the pipe goes, said the minister, but Osmin, but Zaida?"

"Less than a pipe," said the dey gravely.

"How! less than a pipe! A man less than a pipe! A woman less than a pipe!"

"Osmin is not a man, and Zaida is not a woman; they are my slaves. I will cut off Osmin's head and throw Zaida into the sea."

"No," said the magistrate. "Not at Naples, at least."

"Dog of a Christian!" shouted the dey, "do you know who I am?"

"You are the ex-dey of Algiers, and I am the Neapolitan minister of police; and, if your deyship is impertinent, I shall send you to prison"' added the minister, very coolly.

"To prison," repeated the dey, falling back upon his divan.

"To prison," replied the minister.

"Very well," said Hussien. "I leave Naples to-night."

"Your highness is as free as air to go and to come. Nevertheless, I must make one condition. Before your departure, you will swear by the prophet, that no harm shall be done to Osmin and Zaida."

"Osmin and Zaida belong to me, and I shall do what I please with them."

"Then your highness will be pleased to deliver them over to me, to be punished according to the laws of the country, and until you do so, you will not be allowed to leave Naples."

"Who will present me?"

"I will."

The pacha laid his hand on his dagger.—The minister stepped to the window and made a sign. The next moment the tramp of heavy boots and jingle of spurs were heard upon the stairs; the door opened, and a gigantic corporal of gendarms made his appearance, his right hand raised to his cocked hat, his left upon the seam of his trowers.

"Gennaro," said the minister of police, "if I gave you an order to arrest this gentleman, would you see any difficulty in executing it?"

"None, your excellency."

"You are aware that this gentlemen's name is Hussein Pacha."

"I was not, your excellency."

"And that he is Dey of Algiers?"

"May it please your excellency; I don't know what that is."

"You see," said the minister, turning to the dey

"The devil," exclaimed the Hussein.

"Shall I?" said Gennaro, taking a pair of hand-cuffs from his pocket, and advancing a pace towards the dey, who, on his part, took a step backward.

"No," replied the minister, "it will not be necessary. His highness will do as he is bid. Go and search the hotel for a man named Osmin, and a woman named Zaida, and take them both to the profecture."

"What!" cried the dey, 'is this man to enter my haram?"

"He is not a man," replied the minister, "he is the corporal of gendarms. But if you do not wish him to go, send for Osmin and Zaida yourself."

"Will you promise to have them punished?" inquired the dey.

"Certainly; according to the utmost rigor of the law."

"Hussein Pacha clapped his hand. A door concealed behind the tapestry was opened, and a slave entered the room.

"Bring down Osmin and Zaida," said the dey.

The slave crossed his hands on his breast, bowed his head and disappeared, without uttering a word. The next instant he came back with the two culprits.

The eunuch was a litte round fat fellow, with beardless face, and small hands and feet. Zaida was a beautiful circassian, her eyelids painted with kool, her teeth blackened with betel, her nails with henna. On perceiving Hussien Pacha, the eunuch fell upon his knees; Zaida raised her head. The dey's eyes flashed and he clutched the hilt of his kangier. Osmin grew pale; Zaida smiled.—The minister of police made a sign to the gendarme, who stepped up to the two captives, handcuffed them, and led them out of the room. As the door closed behind them, the dey uttered a sound between a sigh and roar.

The magistrate looked out of the window, till he saw the prisoners and their escort disappear at the corner of the Strada Chitamone. Then turning to the dey—

"Your highness is now at liberty to leave Naples, if he wishes to do so," said the impertu rable functionary, with a low bow

"This very instant!" cried Hussein "I will not remain another moment in such a barborous country as yours."

"A pleasant journey to your highness," said the minister.

"Go to the devil!" retorted Hussein.

Before an hour had elapsed, the dey had chartered a small vessel, on board of which he embarked the same evening with his suite, his wives and his treasures; and at midnight he set sail, cursing the tyranny that prevented a man from drowning his wife and cutting off the heads of his slaves. The next day the minister of the police had the prisoners bro't before him and examined. Osmin was found guilty of having slept when he ought to have watched, and Zaida of having watched when she ought to have slept. But, by some strange omission, the Neapolitan code allots no punishment to such offences; and, consequently, Osmin and Zaida, to their infinite astonishment, were immediately set at liberty. Osmin took to selling pastilles for a livelihood, and the lady got employment as dame de comptoir in a coffee house. As to the dey, he had left Naples with the intention of going to England, in which country, as he had been informed, a man is at liberty to sell his wife, if he may not drown her. He was taken ill, however, on the road, and obliged to stop at Leghorn, where he died.

LAKE ERIE BUSINESS.—1844

On the last up trip of a certain Steamer, eight passengers came on board at Cleveland, and engaged a passage to Malden, in Canada. They were hale, hearty looking young fellows, and that they had journeyed from the far South, only improved their condition, and increased their spirits. True, their skins were black! True, they had left the land of their nativity! True, they had severed the ties; to them precarious; of kith and kin; of wife and child!—But, what of that! They sought liberty; they fled from those who had robbed them of their earnings, and converted God's gift of soul and intellect into merchandize. And here they were, at last, after days and nights of toil, on Erie's clear waters, with nought but its waves between them and freedom. It was evening when they embarked, and they chatted gaily o'er dangers past; they sympathized with the bereaved slaveholder, and anticipated freedom's unknown joys. With light hearts they pressed their pillow, and at last, slept secure from pursuit. But, alas, for human foresight! During the night, the boat stopped at sandusky, and took on beard the ruthless pursuers of these eight men. Both parties woke up in the morning ignorant of the presence of the other, and both were equally astounded, though with emotions far different, when they stood face to face. The slaveholders rojoiced that their long and expensive journey was thus happily rewarded; they anticipated their returning triumphant, and the appalling example their eight victims would afford. How fortunate, exclaimed they! just at the nick of time! on the threshhold of Canada! a single day; nay, a single boat, before or after, and we had missed these runaways! On the other hand the poor fugitives were sunk in the abyss of despair; they knew too well the horrid fate that awaited their return to slavery's lawless domain. A hint, however, was given them not to fear. The boat stood on her way; she neared the detroit river; she entered it; soon Malden was in sight; it was reached; the boat made a rapid turn and stood in for it. The Slaveholders were aghast; they rushed to the Captain; was he going to land? "Yes!" "What to do?" "To land his passengers!" "Didn't he know these persons were their slaves?" "No; he knew nothing of the kind!" Well, they wished the Captain to know that such was the fact; the persons were their property; they would loose it by his act; would hold him responsible. "Go take care of your property, then," replied the Captain. "who, hinders you? Pretty fellows, forsooth, can't take care of their own property; are not fit to have any!"

By this time the boat was along side the Malden wharf. The "eight properties" very quietly walked ashore with their goods and chattels, making their very best bows to half a dozen despair struck individuals on the hurricane deck, and politely hoping that their trip to the north would benefit their health. They also sent many kind remembrances to Southern friends, and desired speedily to see them in Canada, assuring them how pleasant a journey it was, and that it was, very kind in the white friends to come so far to bid them good bye.—Signal of Liberty.

THE STORY OF A LEG.

The following funny story of a broken leg may be found in Horrace Walpole's letters to S. H. Mann:

I must add a curious story, which I believe will surprise your Italian surgeons as much as it amazed the faculty here. A sailor who had broken his leg, was advised to communicate his case to the Royal Society. The account he gave was, that having fallen from the top of the mast, and fractured his leg, he had dressed it with nothing but tar and oakum, and yet in three days was able to walk as well as before the accident. The story at first appeared incroditable, as no such efficacious qualities were known, to be credited on his own bare assertion of wonderful cure. The society very reasonably demanded a relation, and I suppose a corroboration of evidence. Many doubted whether the leg had been really broken. That part of the story had been amply verified. Still it was difficult to believe that the man had made use of no other application than tar and oakum; and how they should cure a broken leg in three days, even if they could cure it at all, was a matter of the utmost wonder. Several letters passed between the society and the patient, who persevered in the assertions of having used no other remedies, and it does appear beyond a doubt that the man speaks the truth. It is a little uncharitable, but I fear that there are surgeons who might not like the abbreviation of attendance and expense. But on the other hand, you will be charmed with the plain, honest simplicity of the sailor; in a postscript to his last letter he added these words —'I forgot to tell your honors that the leg was a wooden one.' What would one have given to have been present, and seen the foolish faces of the wise assembly?

SWALLOWING THE EVIDENCE.

Sailors are proverbially grumblers, and even when well treated are very apt to find fault. Their provisions, good or bad, and sometimes they are bad enough in all conscience, furnish an everlasting subject of complaint; they are never so good as they were 'last voyge." We lately met with an anecdote of Judge Peters, of Philadelphia, having a hearing on this subject, which is too good to be lost.

Complaint was made to the Judge in behalf of the crew of a vessel who had made a voyage to some port in Russia, that they had been furnished with bad provisions. While the counsel for the seamen was arguing the cause, one of them stepped forward, and drawing from his pocket a piece of bread, the color of brown soap, presented it to his honor as a specimen of their fare. To persons accustomed to fine wheaten loaves, it appeared disgusting indeed, and the bystanders, one and all, cried 'shame' to fill men's stomachs with such unwholesome aliment. The Judge applied the bread to his nose, and finding nothing in it offensive to his olfactory nerves, was tempted to taste it; he nibbled a little piece, it tasted well, and he took a large bite. The counsel proceeded at much length, though the dinner was fast approaching, and, as he rounded the periods, the Judge nibble around the black biscuit until no more remained.

At this moment the sailor stepped up, and with a countenance in which was depicted real distress, said, 'why you have eaten my best witness."

'Yes,' said the lawyer, 'I have been remarking that the Judge was swallowing the evidence as well as the law.'

'Never mind,' roared his honor, as if awakened from a dream, 'I am the better able to digest the cause.'

So saying he rose, and ordering the bell to be missed, went home to his dinner.—Boston Journal

Rassing Turkeys.—Heretofore I have had so much difficulty in raising turkeys as to be almost discouraged, but of late I have been very successful, in consequence of pursuing the following mode recommended to me by a female, who said that she had no trouble with them

When first hatched, give no feed for twenty-four hours, then give a little curd, made from buttermilk, increasing the quantity as they grow older, at the same time feeding the hen with whole corn. They should be secured from the wet and by no means have Indian meal; but with the curd they may have in moderate quantities, wheat bread soaked in buttermilk, or crumbs of the same. I believe Indian meal is fatal to the greater part of the young turkeys which die in the attempt to raise them. To allow them to wander too much, is attended usually with considerable loss. I have found it a very good plan to make an enclosure of boards six feet square or so, and twelve to eighteen inches high and set this in a grass field during fine weather, in which to confine the young turkeys. This is removed occasinally from place to place; the chickens thus get all the fresh green food they may need besides an abundace of insects.

Fashion a Tyrant.—"She makes people sit up at nigt when they ought to be in bed and keeps them in bed in the morning when they ought to be up and doing.

"She makes her votaries visit when they would rather stay at home, eat when they are not hungry and drink when they are not thirsty.

"She invades their pleasures and interrupt their business

"She compels them to dress gaily, either upon their own property or that of others."

She makes them through life seek rest on a couch of anxiety, and leaves them in the hour of dissolutin on a bed of thorns.

JACK-O'-LANTERN:

A NEW LIGHT STORY. BY EYES-IN-GLASS.

It is scarcely the best policy to begin the word of confession on one's first entry into the world, where, now-a-days, if men confess any sins at all, it is only such as are sufficiently equivocal to pass for virtues; but as my aim is a moral one and my hope the reformation of this very infirmity among mankind, I know no better mode of beginning, than to put myself right in court, by a frank avowal of the matter which has brought me into it. Start not, therefore, ye devoutly pious—frown not, ye saints of the tabernacle,—and wring not your hands, ye godly dames, who form societies to help unto grace and gravity, the infinite number of wise young men, who are possessed of the spirit, and lack all other possessions,—when I boldly declare unto ye, that, like Saul of old, and the Witch of Endor, John Faustus, Michael Scott, and, possibly, the Reverend Edward Irving, I have a familiar—in plain language, a devil; one of those active and intelligent spirits, who from sympathy, animal magnetism, or some other equally unintelligible cause, attach themselves to the fortunes of that grub-worm, man, for his special comfort and edification; conveying him the news—canvassing morals, (and, par parenthese, the devil has a particular interest in his department of human economy,) and, altogether, affording him a mass of information not yet attainable even by the most adroit practitioner in clair-voyancing. How I became familiar, with this familiar, is, gentlest of all possible readers—without becoming too familiar—none of your business. He came to me, suffice it to know, not as visiters from the unsubstantial world usually come, reeking with smoke and stinking of antimony; there was not even a flourish of trumpets—not a breeze or breath of music—to intimate his approach. Never was coming more innocent and unimposing. I made use of no sort of incantation; none of your scalls and circles—grim, grinning jowls, skinned bats and withered frogs, encircled me; and, except the proverbial devil of the printing office, I do not remember to have ever had before the slightest communication, from or with, any of the hotly-quartered gentry. Nor did I solicit, the honor of a visit, (rhyme is a devilish propensity,) but uninvited, uncommanded—I will not say, undesired—he stood before me; nay, there I am wrong, he stood behind me, such as was the unobtrusive modesty of his approach at first; and a stand was the first notice which I had of his near neighborhood. My devil first made my acquaintance in the shape of a sound. But that, gentle reader, was no vulgar sound, though not an unfrequent one since the discovery of Maccoboy. My snuff-box lay beside me, on the table, and from its capacious treasury, I had just withdrawn, betwixt my forefinger and thumb, a generous pinch of the titillating dust. Applied to my nostril, it had promptly done its office in provoking a most relieving and liberal sneeze. What was my consternation to behold, in the next moment, another sneeze behind me—a sneezo, as it were, the very fac-simile and echo of my own. Such, at first, I was almost persuaded to believe it, but a repetition of the explosion soon convinced me that it was not the sneeze of humanity, and I clearly comprehended the operation of my Maccoboy upon the sternutatory organs of an infernal. "Ha!—tshe—tshe—tshe—ha!—ha!"—was the melodious acknowledgement which my visiter gave to the potency and general excellence of my tobacconists; and the sympathy which his nostril thus seemed to exhibit with my own, half removed the feeling of disquiet and apprehension which his first annunciation had occasioned me. In an instant I to confront him, and a moment's glance sufficed to set my heart at ease and silence all my annoyances. On looking at him, I felt, of a sudden, all the freedom and familiarity of a long acquaintance; and this feeling, the moment I had discovered his quality, forced upon me the unpleasant conviction that I had been no better than I should be. His face was by no means remarkable. Such a face I have often seen. It was rather Gallician in its contour and general expression. A disposition to laugh at all things seemed its predominating feature, but there was a slight sinking at the corners of the mouth, which denoted a habitual sneer, and a fondness for sarcasm, which was strongly opposed to the general benevolence of his other features. The cheeks were full, fat and rosy, but the eyes were rather small, and the chin degenerated spitkly. His figure was good enough—his person, though diminutive, was perfect. I cast my eyes with some curiosity towards his feet, but they were perfect also; and in a fashionable squaretoed boot seemed even handsomely formed. There was nothing like club or hoof to offend my sensibilities or alarm my fears, and I wondered at our grandams who could tell, and really believe, such discreditable stories. My devil, on the whole, was really a comely fellow. I have seen the editor of a ladies' gazettee, a far worse looking man, and infinitely less of a gentleman

With that divine instinct which we has never denied to the devil, while denying him all other virtues, he readily discerned my annoyances and saw that his coming had put me out; but with that felicity of manner which it would be equal folly in us to deny to a person so proverbially persuasive, he took special care in what he said, not to suffer me to see that he ascribed my discomposure to any other cause than the natural irritability of an author at being disturbed in his daily scribblings. I was at this time busily engaged upon a new work, calling for all my taste and research, no other than a collection of the most fashionable negro melodies, such as Jim Crow, Coal Black Rose, Clare De Kitchen, and other pieces of like national and moral interest, with a copious appendix of illustrative notes, such as might well become a work of so much magnitude and interest.

"I see that you are busy, Mr. Silex, and I would not willingly disturb you at this moment."

"Pray, proceed, sir—I have time enough to spare, and will wait upon you."

He drew a chair as he said these words, and with the air of a man resolved, under all circumstances, to be as good as his word, he prepared to take a quiet seat in a corner, and give himself up to meditation.

"Beg pardon, sir." said I, "but you will find it tedious—may I be honored at once with the purpose of your visit,"

"That is soon told," said he in reply; "I see that you know me."

Here I expressed a little reluctance, and prayed for more direct information.

"I cannot deny," was my response, "that I have a shrewd guess, but——" There I paused.

"Which is perfectly correct, sir; your instinct is not less good than mine in matters of this sort, and there needs no formality between those already acquainted. Besides, there is something less than civil—certainly less than social—in calling folks continually by their titles of dignity. I freely confess to you a willingness to dispense with mine. It operates against me, and sits heavily upon me at certain seasons. I am, like many of the princes of old, and some of the officers of penal justice in modern times, infinitely more fond of a snug disguise, and a good humored nom de guerre, than of the solemn ceremonial which follows upon and announces the presence of superior attributes. At present, sir, as I see you still somewhat at a loss, you will do me the favor to recognize me under one of my many names—the most innocent and least imposing, pehaps, among them—and whenever you may deem it necessary to call me by a name at all, which I trust will not be often the case, to know me as Jack-O'-Lantern. I shall certainly be willing to give you all the light I carry, should you require it. Jack-O'-Lantern is a common acquaintance, and nobody should be seriously alarmed or annoyed at his presence. You, I know, who are a poet and philosopher, will readily show yourself above all idle superstitious fancies; and you will soon find, upon doing so, that if I have few virtues, I have many vices; and my more imposing claims of sovereignty thrown out of the account, there can be no objection to the employment of my services."

"Your services, Mr. John O'-Lantern?" I exclaimed with some wonder, in the sudden commotion of my thoughts, not exactly knowing what to make of this sort of introduction—"Your services."

"Ay, my services," he reubied; "I propose to serve you, because I see that you need my help, and because I have somehow taken a liking to you. You smile, but I am above jest in this. I am serious. In my friendship for you I have sought you out, and I am resolved to become your friend, companion, assistant, anything, whether you will or no! You want an amanuensis, and considering the color of the work on which I see you busy, perhaps I am the very person of all the world whom you should soonest choose. But I insist not on this. Take me in what capacity you please. I am an actor of all work, as the comedians call themselves. I can be a boon companion, a grave counsellor, a curious penman, and a dapper valet. Make me what you please, with a will, and rely on me to be the thing which you most desire. I will take no refusal you must employ me."

So liberal an offer, so graciously volunteered, was not to be rejected idly. He saw me hesitate, and threw in certain additional seggestions.

"My library is large and various; I see that you are busy, and sometimes at a loss, in your search after authorities. Your correspondence is extensive, let me give you a taste of my skill in assisting you to answer some of these letters."

He turned over a pile, seated himself at the table and with a pen that seemed rather to stream over the paper than to rest upon it, he wrote almost in a breath the most admirable and fitting replies to the greater number of them. To a politician wanting a vote, and giving a dinner accordingly, wrote a brief but comprehensive eulogium upon the arts of the cruisine, and concluded with an acceptance to his invitation, premising only that my wine for the current month was Lachrymæ Christi. To a lady of fashion whose billet for the next stires was rather a summons than a solicitation, he pleaded a rule to reject all invitations for Friday, but complimented her at the same time upon the recherche fold of her missive. To the editor of a weekly magazine who begged for contributions, for which he promised to pay in praises, he wrote an essay on independent criticism. To a tailor soliciting custom and proffering extensive credits, he penned an order for a claret colored coat, such as the man wore who seized on the New York arsenal, and kept it for the whigs against General Arculârius and his man Friday. There was one letter which he was about to open, but as if he knew the contents already, or saw from the glance of my eye that he was now on forbidden ground, he paused in his progress, and I availed myself of the interval to acknowledge his powers, and relieve him for the present from their farther exercise.

"Enough, Mr. O'-Lantern I am quite obliged to you. You are indeed a valuable acquisition, and really I know not how I shall requite you."

"Requite me—I ask no requital, Mr. Silex—none. The pleasure of serving you is enough for me."

"'Indeed! Truly you are becoming disinterested in your old age. 'You have not always toiled thus unprofitably, and with so little regard to self. If report speaks truly, you have usually been a severe expectant—a rigid exacter of your dues. You have done nothing for nothing."

"Report has done me wrong," he said coolly. "I have always been a much scandalized person among men, I assure you."

Never did injured mortal look more in need of sympathy. I felt myself getting lachrymose.

"What!" I proceeded, "and is your love in my case so great that you are willing to do for me those things for which you have exacted the eternal and unmitigated toils of other men, not to speak of their sufferings?"

"I do not understand you, really," was his reply, and he certainly looked at a loss when he spoke these words.

"'Pon my soul," I continued, "either you are exceedingly dull, Mr. O-Lantern, or I have been grievously imposed upon in the histories I have heard of you. Is it really possible that you intend to serve me for nothing? Do you really want no compensation! Do you ask nothing of me in return?"

"Nothing?"

"What! shall there be no bond between us?"

"Bond! for what? speak out my dear master that is to be, and tell me your real difficulty."

"Well, in plain terms then, Mr. O'-Lantern, do you not want to bind me, body and soul, in return for these services? Do you not want a mortgage of my soul?"

"Your soul, indeed what do I want with it? Bless your stars, my dear Mr. Silex, that thing is entirely out of fashion now. I have more souls than I know what to do with—they are positively rotting on my hands. I wouldn't be burdened or bothered with an increase on any terms; and next to the mistake which you have been led into by your grandmother on the subject of my character, is that monstrous error which you men seem to entertain as to the value of the article you think I trade in. Souls, indeed! The very idea is absurd. No, sir, If I wished for anything at your hands, it should be the breeches, you have worn. Now I think of it, sir, I will have pay for my services. You shall pay me in old breeches; you shall contract to give me all your breeches after a month's wearing them, and I will trust to your generosity, should you ever get married, to throw in occasionally a petticoat of your wife's. These shall be my terms. I ask for no other. Keep your soul, and do what you please with it; I would'nt have it as a gift. But your breeches, sir—your breeches; and in the event of your marriage an occasional petticoat of your wife's; these you shall give me, if anything, in return for my services. What say you to these terms?"

"A bargain," I exclaimed, delighted with the humor of the fellow. not less than his generosity. "Breeches and petticoats! you shall have them all! Why, Mr. O'Lantern, you are the very pink of liberality, and I rejoice at your coming. Pray resume your seat, and let us talk over this matter, that it may be the better understood between us. There may be something covert and equivoral in it, after all. You gentlemen of the lantern are apt to hang out false lights for the temptation of the unwary, and I am resolved to see that you have no occult signification in what you say, before I sign this agreement. It may be my soul, after all, that you're driving at, in aiming at my breeches. I know many men whose souls never go beyond their breeches, and though I trust that mine is not of this sort, yet I would take every precaution against involvements. I will have legal advice first in this business."

"You are right, my dear sir," he replied promptly, "take what precaution you please, and be satisfied before you proceed a single step in this matter. I have no disposition to deceive you—indeed, I am not a proficient in the arts of falsehood. I know many a lawyer who would put me to the blush for incompetence, and might, if lying were a prime requisite in my dominions usurp their sovereignity. Even if your soul were in your breeches, there would be little danger of its lose; all you have need to do is to shake them well before giving them to me, and unless it be a very sleepy or a very adhersive soul, it is physically impossible that it should stick there long after the shaking."

"But the instrument, itself! how would you have it drawn up? possibly you may desire that it should be written with my blood; if you do, I must tell you——."

His immoderate laughter silenced me.

"Another pinch of your Maccoboy," he said, helping himself. "I see you have been among the Germans. These are diabolical fancies I confess, and to my mind, rather dirty ones. I pray you, my dear master, look on me as one having a tolerable taste, and rather delicate stomach. These blood-pudding imaginings are my abomination. I deal differently with my friends. Leave the drawing up of the instrument to me, and keep your soul and blood to yourself. I would not rob you of a particle of either. The breeches will content me,—the breeches; and, mark me! an occasional petticoat, whenever you may think it necessary to bring home Mrs Silex."

"You shall have them—that you shall," was my answer.

The deed was drawn out in the twinkling of an eye, and the contract signed and delivered. Nothing could exceed the delight of Jack upon his installation into office as my servant of all work. His joy broke out into tumultuous expressions the moment the papers were completed.

"I congratulate myself, my dear master, as well as you, on our mutual acquisitions. There is nothing so distressing as being out of place; I have been trying for sometime to employ a master after my own heart, and my rapture is now excessive at having found him."

"A double-edged compliment," I muttered to myself, with a slight shiver. He beheld and divined the sensation.

"Ay, I see," he cried playfully, "you are still unassured. You do not conjecture my value yet. But let me convince you. Say, what shall I do for you! It is proper that I commence my duties forthwith. Let me know them. I am ready now. I have no trunks to remove. My wardrobe is already here. As for my bedding, I want none. A chink in the chimney will yield me a sufficient sleeping place, and your saving in candles alone, will be no small item. You have only to set me above the chimney-peice when you want a light, and I will burn at both ends to please you. In food I am moderate. A fricasseed frog is the utmost that my stomach will bear, and in wine I am a single bottle man. In supplies I am a prime commissariat, and you would find me valuable for this quality, even if my consumption were greater than it is. To speak with due modesty, you will find me a wondrous acquisition; and will soon wonder how you ever did without me before."

"I nothing doubt it, Mr. John O'-Lantern."

"Plain Jack, if you please, Mr. Silex. John O'-Lantern will do for visiters and state occasions, when we go into company. Between us, and at our own fireside, a little more familiarity is best, and plain Jack more agreeable to my ear than any other epithet. And now, sir, shall I bring in coffee! Your usual supper hour is at hand."

"If you please, Jack," was my answer; and yet, I had some qualms of stomach, not to say conscience, as I thought of the proverb which denounced all liquor, however pleasant, of the devil's brewing. While I thought thus, the coffee urn was hissing on the table, and to do my new retainer lean justice, I assure you, I never drank a better cup of the purple beverage in my life. As a cook alone, he deserved new breeches daily; we shall see, as we get on that he displayed other qualities which entitled him to far higher rewards; but of these---anon,

THE ART OF COMPOSITION.

In almost every age, when a people have become readers, there are two schools of composition;—the one closely resembling the language commonly spoken; the other constructed upon the principle, that what is written should be something nobler or lovlier than what is spoken;—that fine writing ought not so much literally to resemble, as spiritually to idealize good talking;—that the art of composition, like every other art, when carried to its highest degree, is not the representation, but, as Browne expresses it, 'the perfection of Nature:—and that as music to sound, so is composition to language. A great writer of either school reaches the same shore, and must pass over the same stream; but the one is contented with the ferry, the other builds up a bridge,—one goes along the stream,—the other above it. Of these two schools of composition, the Eloquent and the Familiar, the last, often lightly esteemed in its time, and rather commanding a wide than a reverent audience pursues with little charge and little diminution of popularity, from generation to generation. But the first stands aloof,—the edifice of its age,—copied not for ordinary use, however well formed by scholars in exact and harmonious symmetry. Royal, but unprolific, it is a monarch without a dynasty. It commands, is obeyed, adored,—dies, and leaves no heir.—Gibbon and Junius are imitated but by school-boys, and correspondents to provincial newspapers; but the homely Locke, the natural Defoe, the familiar Swift, the robust, if boorish manliness of Cobbett, leave their successors; and find, (perhaps unconciously,) their imitators; as long as the language lasts. This is no detraction from the immortality, of greater and more imaginative minds. It is the characteristic of their immortality that though they inspire, they are not copied,—mediately or immediately: the spirit of Milton has had its influence on almost every great poet that has succeeded him,—but poetasters alone have mimicked the machinery of his verse. He who has really caught the mantle of the prophet, is the last man to imitate his walk. As with poets, so with those prose writers who have built up a splendid and unfamiliar style;—after the first rage of contemporary imitation, no one of sound taste or original talent dreams of imitating them. —They are not, however, the less certain of duration. Their spirits live apart in the sumptuous palaces they have erected; men, it is true, do not fashion after palaces their streets and thoroughfares. But Windsor Castle is not less likely to last, because Windsor Castle was not the model for Regent Street.—Edinburgh Review.

OLIVER CROMWELL'S LETTERS TO HIS FAMILY.

The first letter I will quote is one to his cousin, Mrs. St Johns, dated from Ely, October 13 1638:

DEAR COUSIN—I thankfully acknowlede your love in your kind remembrance of me upon this opportunity. Alas! you do too highly prize my lines and my company. I may be ashamed to own your expressions, considering how unprofitable I am, and the mean improvement of my talent. Yet, to honor my God by declaring what he hath done for my soul, in this I am confident, and I will be so. Truly then, this I find, that he giveth springs in a dry and barren wilderness, where no water is. I live (you know where) in Meseck, which they say signifies prolonging; in Kedar, which signifies blackness; yet the Lord forsaketh me not. Though He do prolong, yet He will (I trust) bring me to his tabernacle, to his resting-place. My soul is with the congregation of the first-born; my body rest in hope; and, if here I may honor my God, either by doing or suffering; I shall be most glad. Truly no poor creature hath more cause to put forth himself in the cause of his God than I. I have had plentiful wages beforehand; and I am sure I shall never earn the least mite. The Lord accepts me in his Son, and give me to walk in the light; and gives us to walk in the light, as He is in the light: He it is that enlighteneth our blackness, our darkness. I dare not say He hideth His face from me, He giveth me to see light in His light. One beam in a dark place hath exceeding much refreshment in it; blessed be His name for shining upon so dark a heart as mine. You know what manner of life mine hath been. Oh! I lived in and loved darkness, and hated the light. I was a chief, the chief, of sinners. This is true: I hated Godliness, yet God had mercy on me. O the riches of His mercy! praise Him for me, pray for me, that He who hath begun a good work, would perfect it to the day of Christ. Salute all my good friends in that family whereof you are yet a member. I am much bound unto them for their love; I bless the Lord for them, and that my son, by their procurement, is so well. Let him have your prayers, your counsel: let me have them.

Salute your husband and sister from me: he is not a man of his word; he promised to write about Mr Wrath, of Epping, but as yet I received no letters: put him in mind to do what with conveniency may be done for the poor cousin I did solicit him about. Once more farewell; the Lord be with you; so prayeth

Your truly loving cousin,
OLIVER CROMWELL.

My wife's service and love presented to all her friends.

The following letter to his wife is from the original in the Harleiam collection in the British Museum. It is dated Edingburgh, May 3, 1651:

MY DEAREST—I could not satisfy myself to omit this post, although I have not much to write; yet indeed I love to write to my dear, who is very much in my heart. It joys me to hear thy soul prospereth; the Lord increase his favors to thee more and more. The great good thy soul can wish is, that the Lord lift upon thee the light of His countenance, which is better than life. The Lord bless all thy good counsel and example to those about thee, and hear all thy prayers, and accept thee always. I am glad to hear thy son and daughter are with thee. I hope thou wilt have some good opportunity of good advice to him. Present my duty to my mother; my love to all the family. Still pray for thine.

O. CROMWELL.

The following is addressed to Mr. Major, whose daughter had married Cromwell's son. It is taken from a copy in the possession of the Cromwell family. The date is Newbury, July 27, 1649:

I hear my son hath exceeded his allowance, and is in debt: truly I cannot commend him therein; wisdom requiring his living within compass, and calling for it at his hands; and in my judgment the reputation arising from thence would have been more real honor than what is attained the other way. I believe vain men will speak well of him that does ill. I desire to be understood, that I grudge him not laudable recreations, nor an honorable carriage of himself in them; nor is any matter of charge likely to fall to my share, or stick with me. Truly, I can find in my heart to allow him, not only a sufficiency, but more, for his good; but if pleasure and self-satisfaction be made the business of a man's life, so much cost laid out upon it, so much time spent in it, as rather answers appetite than the will of God, or is comely before his saints, I scruple to feed this humor; and God forbid that his being my son should be his allowance to live not pleasingly to our Heavenly Father, who hath raised me out of the dust to what I am. I desire your faithfulness (he being also your concernment as well as mine) to advise him to approve himself to the Lord in his course of life, and to search his statutes for a rule to conscience, and to seek grace from Christ to enable him to walk therein. This hath lie in it, and will come to somewhat; what is a poor creature without this? This will not abridge of lawful pleasures, but teach such a use of them as will have the peace of a good conscience going along with it. Sir, I write what is in my heart; I pray you communicate my mind herein to my son, and be his remembrancer in these things. Truly, I love him; he is dear to me, so is his wife; and for their sakes do I thus write. They shall not want comfort nor encouragement from me, so far as I may afford it; but indeed I cannot think I do well to feed a voluptuous humor in my son, if he should make pleasures the business of his life, in a time when some precious saints are bleeding and breathing out their last for the good and safety of the rest. Memorable is the speech of Urijah to David, 2 Chron. xi.

Sir, I beseech you believe I here say not this to save my purse, for I shall willingly do what is convenient to satisfy his occasions, as I have opportunity; but as I pray he may not walk in a course not pleasing to the Lord, so think it lieth upon me to give him (in love) the best council I may; and know not how better to convey it to him than by so good a hand as yours.

Sir, I pray you acquaint him with these thoughts of mine; and remember my love to my daughter, for whose sake I shall be induced to do any reasonable thing. I pray for her happy deliverance, frequently and earnestly.

The next letter is one from Cromwell to his daughter Ireton, from the original in the British Museum. The date is London, October 25, 1646:

DEAR DAUGHTER,—I write not to thy husband, partly to avoid trouble, for one line of mine begets many of his, which I doubt not makes him sit up too late; partly because I am myself indisposed at this time, having some other considerations. Your friends at Ely are well; your sister Claypole is (I trust in mercy) exercised with some perplexed thoughts: she sees her own vanity and carnal mind, bewailing it; she seeks after (as I hope also) that which will satisfy, and thus to be a seeker is to be of the best sect next a finder; and such a one shall very faithful humble seeker be at the end. Happy seeker, happy finder. Who ever tasted that graciousness of His and could go less in desire, and less than pressing after full enjoyment? Dear heart, press on; let not husband, let not any thing, cool thy affections after Christ. I hope he will be an occasion to inflame them. That which is best worthy of love in thy husband, is that of the image of Christ he bears: look on that and love it best, and all the rest for that. I pray for thee and him; do so for me. My service and dear affections to the General and Generaless. I hear she is very kind to thee, it adds to all other obligations. My love to all. I am thy dear father,

OLIVER CROMWELL.

The following is a copy of another original letter in the possession of the family, dated August 13, 1649, and addressed, "For my beloved daughter Dorothy Cromwell (Richard Cromwell's wife,) at Horslye, these:"

MY DEAR DAUGHTER,—Your letter was very welcome to me; I like to see any thing from your hand, because indeed I stick not to say I do entirely love you, and therefore I hope a word of advice will not be unwelcome or unacceptable to thee. I desire you both to make it above all things your business to seek the Lord: to be frequently calling upon him that he would manifest himself to you in his Son, and be listening what returns he makes to you; for he will be speaking in your ear and in your heart if you attend thereunto. I desire you to provoke your husband likewise thereunto. As for the pleasures of this life and outward business, let that be upon the by: be above all these things by faith in Christ, and then you shall have the true use and comfort of them, and not otherwise. I have much satisfaction in hope your spirit is this way set; and I desire you may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and that I may hear thereof. The Lord is very near, which we see by his wonderful works; and therefore he looks that we of his generation draw near him. This late great mercy in Ireland is a great manifestation thereof. Your husband will acquaint you with it. We should be much stirred up in our spirits to thankfulness. We need much the Spirit of Christ to enable us to praise God for so admirable a mercy. The Lord bless thee, my dear daughter. I rest, thy loving father,

O. CROMWELL.

The following letter also is transcribed from the original among the family papers. It is to his son Richard, under the date of Carrick, 2d of April, 1650.

DICK CROMWELL,—I take your letters kindly. I like expressions when they come plainly from the heart, and are not strained nor affected. I am persuaded it is the Lord's mercy to place you where you are: I wish you may own it, and be thankful, fulfilling all relations to the glory of God. Seek the Lord and his face continually; let this be the business of your life and strength, and let all things be subservient and in order to this. You cannot find, nor behold, the face of God but in Christ; therefore labor to know God in Christ, which the Scripture makes to be the sum of all, even life eternal. Because the true knowledge is not literal or speculative, but inwards, transforming the mind to it, it is uniting to, and participating of, the Divine nature (2 Peter i. 4.) It is such a knowledge as Paul speaks of, Philip. iii. 8, 9, 10. How little of this knowledge of Christ is there among us. My weak prayers shall be for you. Take heed of an unactive vain spirit. Recreate yourself with Sir Walter Raleigh's History; it is a body of history, and will add more to your understanding than fragments of story. Intend to understand the estate I have settled; it is your concernment to know it all, and how it stands. I have heretofore suffered much by too much trusting others. I know my brother Major will be helpful to you in all this. You will, perhaps, think I need not advise you to love your wife. The Lord teach you now to do it, or else it will be done ill-favoredly. Though marriage be no instituted sacrament, yet this union aptly resembles Christ and his Church. If you can truly love your wife, what doth Christ bear to his Church, and every poor soul therein, who gave himself for it and to it? Commend me to your wife: tell her I entirely love her, and rejoice in the goodness of the Lord to her. I wish her every way fruitful. I thank her for her loving letter. I have presented my love to my sister and cousin Anne; excuse in my letter to my brother Major. I would not have him alter his affairs because of my debt [his debt to me]. My purse is as his. My present thoughts are but to lodge such a sum for my two little girls. It is in his hand as well as any where. I shall not be wanting to accommodate him to his mind. I would not have him solicitous. Dick, the Lord bless you every way.

I rest, your loving father, O. CROMWELL.

I cannot believe that these Christian and tenderly affectionate letters to his own family could have been a tissue of falsehood and hypocrisy. Assuredly Cromwell understood Scriptural truth, and inculcated it upon his children; and such letters as these would seem to indicate that he himself often felt much of its power; but the greater his guilt that he did not act according to his professions.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, MARCH 15th, 1845

OUR AFFAIRS.

Our last letters from America present us with encouraging prospect in regard to African Colonization. Colonization appears to be attracting somewhat more of attention than was given to it the three or four years last past; and the attention now paid to it is of a more favourable character. Connected with this however is a fact of which the people of these colonies should never lose sight: and that fact is, that cautiousness should ever be observed in placing reliance upon a cause which depends for its onward movement upon a foreign popular favour. Such are the fickleness and versatility of the multitude,—such their anxiety and burning for something new and striking that many regard them unworthy and unsafe arbiters of even their own destinies. The object of ardent pursuit to-day will likely be among the forgotten of the morrow. Colonization should not take these irregular and spasmodic impulses as the prelusive movements of a regular and abiding force, but should regard them as indicating for the time the direction of the public mind, whose most striking characteristic is ceaseless change. Whilst we should ever close our minds against the entrance of the conceit which would affect to disdain the sympathy and aid of others, let us remember that to expect to be made "a people" solely by the efforts of others, or even to desire it would prove defacto that we are unworthy of the boon we desire. A name and a place are among heaven's brightest gifts, and heaven rarely bestown its benisons upon the enervate and irresolute. While therefore we should never be insensible to the efforts of our friends abroad, nor to any indication of a favourable public regard of our cause and condition, but receive with grateful hearts every emotion of sympathy, let us yet recollect the heat and burden of the day are to be borne by us.

The lesson fraught with the greatest blessing to us we have yet to learn. The bone and sinew are ours—others can only advise the direction of their movement. The eager anxiety and the numerous enquiries on the arrival of letters from America to know what the society is doing indicates too truly, we fear, an unworthy and unmanning reliance on the efforts of others; while the great objects to which our friends abroad direct our attention as the certain highway to independence, because they involve in their accomplishment difficulty and labour are too systematically neglected.

That we have recently made some improvements and that there have been some development of capacity among us there can be no doubt; but these have not been commensurate with our opportunities. The present position of the colony is one exceedingly perplexing and anomalous; and as it past annoyances to which the colored man has been every where subjected are not sufficient, foreigners are now wielding this anomaly greatly to our disadvantage. We have long seen the probability of this difficulty but would not allow ourselves to believe we should be soon plunged into it. Professing as the English do, so much philanthropy and so extended and high-toned benevolence we hoped every thing from them: but Commodore Jones' last letter to the Governor has dispelled the illusion, and warns us that we have most to fear where once we had indulged the most pleasing expectations. His diplomatic communication contains one sentence which we presume would find a place in a correspondence with no people on earth except Liberians. It is a kind of genteel braggardism—of diplomatic gasconade over a prostrate victim from whom nothing is to be apprehended. We have compared the style and spirit of this communication with the commodore's correspondence with American commanders on this station, and we can find no escape from the conviction, that when penning this letter he kept distinctly before his eye the resources of the people he was addressing

It is clear we cannot exist if the British maintain the position assumed by the commodore, as we shall be exposed to incursion by every British trader that comes to the coast—to which if we dare oppose resistance, we shall feel the full vengeance of all powerful England.

But until it be denied that we are men, it will not be denied that we have certain rights—among these the right to breathe God's free air—to purchase land from its rightful owners, to dig that land and eat its fruits—to govern ourselves on that land, and to adjust the conditions on which others shall come among us. These are altogether distinct, in our opinion at least, from international rights. The former are founded on the unavoidable wants of our common nature—that is they are the gift of God and therefore cannot be conferred by any people on another; the latter is founded on conventional agreement—the former is necessary to our existence, the latter not.

It behooves us therefore to prove ourselves worthy of these rights, by our industry, perseverance, good order and virtue. By clearing away these primitive forests and developing the rich resources of the unreclaimed country—by recovering these semi-savage tribes around us from their barbarism and tutoring them in the arts and manners of civilized and christian life, we will exhibit a claim to be let alone which no people who have any respect for justice will dare to disregard.

We are aware that we are exposing ourself by attempting to awaken the people to a perception of their condition, and by calling on them to prepare against a premature end. Our well meant endeavours in this as in other things have been traduced and our sincerest motives impugned. We heed it not. We fell strong in the rectitude of purpose. Already we are stigmatized in America as having attempted a revolution in the colony and to get a recognition of the independence of the colony by England without consulting the society. The charge is too ridiculous for vindication—but if it needs any we leave it to be made by the people of Liberia. When the proper time arrives to speak out we trust we shall not be wanting in courage to do so.

Since the above article has been in type we have received an article on the above subject from the pen, not of a Liberian. The name of the gentleman would ensure the article a candid consideration; but it speaks for itself. We are gratified to perceive the striking accordance between the writer's views and our own on the subject. It will appear in our next, having been received too late for publication this month.

A VISIT TO THE LEEWARD.

His Excellency the Governor returned on the 7th, inst. from a visit to the leeward settlements. While at Sinoe he completed the purchase of the whole Sinoe Country.

The commissioners appointed by the Governor to settle a dispute between the chiefs of Little Bassa, and to complete the purchase of the whole country succeeded fully in carrying out their instructions. The whole Bassa Country is now the bona fide property of the colony. The chiefs also agreed to have no more devil palaver.

Our publication has been delayed by the illness of the Printer. He took into his head to have the measles. A most queer notion.

We regret to hear that the "Prebble" has been most unfortunate in the health of her crew. The last intelligence gives seventeen as her loss by death, and seventy on the sick list.

Having been joined with friend James Brown in a commission to settle some matters with the kings and chiefs of Little Bassa, from which place we returned on the 17th ult. we give below an extract from our journal.

"Wednesday 13th, made arrangements with Mr James Carey for his canoe and six boy's to accompany us to Bah Gay's, and having furnished ourselves with supplies as far as Messrs. Jones and Carey's stores would enable us to do, so we left at 8 A. M. for the king's residence. Our route was along a beautiful river studded near the coast by numerous islets mantled in the deepest green. The river here is exceedingly beautiful, and expands itself almost into a bay. Bah Gay lives about seven miles from the embouchure. Reached there about 10 o'clock. "He appeared much pleased to see us, and granted us a gracious reception with eh, how doo my friend! and a loud and sonorous snap of the finger. After mutual enquirings about old friends his majesty retired, rather unceremoniously we thought. He returned soon after, and we discovered why he had gone. He went to adjust his wardrobe. We found him in his undress—that is with only a part of his haunches covered. He now had his whole person wrapped in blue cotton from his shoulders to his heels.

"We announced to him at once the object of our visit, and enquired where we should hold the palaver. He said the chiefs would not come to his town and he would not go to theirs. We must (continued he) have de palaver for beach at you (Teage's) factory. We saw at once there was jealousy and suspicion among them. In fact Bah Gay showed symptoms of apprehension unworthy of a personage of so high standing. He has for two or three years suffered with some mesenteric disorder which no gregree has been able to correct, and as usual in such cases the doctor has concealed his ignorance by assuring his majesty that he is witched. This important fact having transpired it was sustained by evidence in the Harem. Two of his majesty's wives voluntarily came forward and assured their lord that they had witched him by putting the gregree into his chop; and moreover that they had been induced to do so by one Bey a chief in the country. Bey's name having been mentioned in connection with the king's sickness he avoided his majesty' vengeance by flight. The chiefs of the county who have been long jealous of Bah Gay, and desirious of an opportunity to reduce him, took up the fugitive Bey as a convenient tool for their purpose and persuaded him to call a devil palaver. His satanic majesty always to be found of those who seek him granted a ready audience and took up the case. The time for the ghostly consistory was fixed and the intended victim summoned to attend. Bah Gay saw at once the snare spread for him and knew that once in the toils his fate would be inevitable. He therefore returned for answer—I no go. Again the women of his town were made to tremble by a ghostly voice sounding in the bushy suberbs the fatal summons. Again Bah Gay refused, and knowing the next notification would be the ring of the musket and the whoop of savage war, he despatched with all speed a letter to Governor Roberts imploring his interposition. We arrived just in time to arrest the blow.

"Dwah Will one of the chiefs is the head devil of the country. We have not seen his excellency but if he be more of a devil than some we have seen in that country then he is truly all sorts of a devil. This devil palaver seems to be a politico-religious institution, and is the highest tribunal known amongst them. When any one under accusation desires the decision of the devil he goes to Dwa-will, the "devil's mate." He then confers with his superior and fixes the time and place of the audience. They usually select for the purpose a dark and gloomy forest suited to the genius of the infernal arbiter. When preliminaries are arranged a messenger is despatched to notify the appellee to attend. The messenger disguised by a hideous visor rudely carved and painted to caricature the, human face divine, wends his way through the woods avoiding roads lest he should be seen, and so regulates his speed as to reach the residence of his victim at night. Then when sleep has hurried all the inhabitants in soft oblivion he raises his awful voice and startles them with the dreaded notice. The messenger is always a ventriloquist and the sound comes as from the bottomless pit. The women wrap their children up and cover their faces. The men turn out and signify by significant noises their audience of Diabolus's legate. Should the individual summoned to attend fail to appear at the proper time, the message is repeated with threatenings of vengeance. No other indulgence can ever be granted. If he continue disobedient—the messenger is sent the third time; but he now carries with him three or four masks similar to those he wears on his face—called by the natives Devil, and creeping up to the town at night, he throws these visors or masks into it and retires. All the inhabitants are de facto placed under the ban of the country. They can be captured sold or slain and their property confiscated by any and every one. Indeed they are then lawful prey, and seeing they lie under the malediction of the devil in whose good graces all these people are fond of securing a place the whole country will eagerly combine against them. Under any circumstances it is death for a woman to see the devil, and the man who should show a woman one of these devils would surely have to give the devil satisfaction for exposing him to the curious gaze of a female. African devils are like devils every where else. However they may simper and smile and flatter when they have no power, they are terrible when once they have infixed their claws. We once witnessed a devil palaver from which the victim escaped only by the payment of twenty slaves: and although the amount was paid by Bah Gay, the man to release whom he paid it is now leagued against him. We resolved at once to go on the beach and made a requisition on our baskets for strength for the task. Bah Gay promised to follow us, tomorrow. Having dashed the king a few bars of tobacco and piled our baggage on the boys' heads we commenced to trace a path which we had been told was "good too much and have no more one water to cross." This latter we soon found to be nearly literally true. The path a great part of the way is neither more nor less than a gutter which the water has made for itself, in which it lay in filthy alliance with its own depth of black mud, threatening indelible darkness to whatsoever may come in contact with it. We enquired whether there was any way to avoid the water, when being assured there was not we trudged on affecting no little fun in wading. The path lay along a ravine which was in days of yore an extensive morass but now partly filled up by decayed vegetation and debris from the adjacent elevations. These lowlands offer excellent sites for plantations of rice and all kinds of succulent vegetables. Emerging from this gloomy and filthy canal we found a firmer dry path forming all sorts of angles through a forest of ancient trees, whose abundant drapery completely canopied us, and concealed the sun from our view. About two miles brought us to a grass field, where we were exposed to the full force of a fiery sun. Such was the fury with which sol shot his beams upon us that it seemed as if he was paying us for the shelter we had just enjoyed. Perhaps it was the sudden transition from the invigorating shade of embowering trees to exposure to the direct rays of the sun that rendered the heat so oppressive.

"We could now distinctly hear the surf beating its everlasting symhony upon the beach, and knew therefrom that 'we close ketch em', and a walk of fifteen minutes brought us in full view of the old atlantic.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean—roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain;
Man marks the earth with ruin—his control
Stops with the shore;—upon the watery plain
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
Without a grave, unknelled, uncoffined, & unknown.

"We turned our eyes in the direction of the factories, and there they were, basking in the sun at a distance of about two miles. Inspirited by the sound of the surf and refreshed by the spray which was continually thrown upon us, we soon measured the distance, and reached the factories about 5 o'clock P. M. Anxious to execute our mission, we dispatched a messenger to each head-man—and to each we sent a little tobacco and a fathom of white cloth, charging each one to say Mess. Teage and Mess. Brown give you service. Dey come for bring Gubnor word—dey want for see you beach tomorrow.

Having done Mr. Ferguson, whose factory was our hotel, all the harm we could by eating one half of his fowls for supper and threatened him with eating the remainder "tomorrow," we then betook ourselves to rest.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

A TRULY GREAT MAN.

A few years since, a gentleman in travelling in Virginia, at the close of the day stopped at a public house to pass the night. He had but just alighted, when an old man arrived in his gig, with the apparent intention of becoming his fellow guest. The courtesies of plain honest strangers passed between them, and they entered the tavern. Soon after, an addition of several young gentlemen was made to their number. As soon as they were a little rested and refreshed, the conversation was turned by one of these to an eloquent harangue that day made at the bar. It was replied by another of the young men, that he witnessed the same day an exhibition of eloquence no doubt equal, but that it was from the pulpit. Something like a sarcastic rejoinder was made to the eloquence of the pulpit: and a debate ensued in which the merits of the Christian religion were very freely discussed. Meanwhile the old gentleman listened with all the meekness of a child; as if adding new treasures to the stores of his own mind; or perhaps with patriotic emotion reflecting on the future destinies of his country, and the rising generation upon whom these destinies must develve, when he should be sleeping with the honored dead. Or, most probably, with a sentiment of moral and religious concern and benevolence, he was adjusting an argument, which, (characteristic of himself,) no sophistry would be able to resist. The traveller first named remained a spectator, taking no part in what was said.

At length, one of the young men, remarking that it was vain to combat with the prejudices of early education, wheeled round, and with an air of familiarity exclaimed, "Well my old gentleman, what think you of these things?" "If, says the traveller, a flash of lightning from heaven had come upon them, their amazement could not have been greater, than it was with what followed. Such an overwhelming strain of calm, affectionate, clear and dignified eloquence, as proceeded from the old man, he and probably his young companions had never before heard. Every argument which had been advanced against Christianity, was fully overthrown; Hume's sophistry on the subject of miracles, was, if possible, more completely answered, than it had been by Campbell. And in this timely lecture of the old man, there was so much of honest simplicity and energy, such affectionate pathos and sublimity, that not a word in reply was uttered.

It was now matter of deep curiosity and wonder who this old gentleman could be. The first impression of the traveller was that it must be the preacher, from whom the pulpit eloquence had been heard. But no—it was not he—nor the blind preacher of Virginia, so eloquently described by Wirt—it was John Marshall, Chief Justice of the United States!

These well authenticated incidents in the history of a great man, are surely worthy of being reiterated; especially as a memento to the young and proud. How many writings of science, intoxicated, perhaps, by "a little learning," might be profited for both worlds, by investigating this all important subject with something of the modesty, simplicity and patience which ever characterized that distinguished man!—How many, now living comparatively useless, and aiming at nothing generous or noble, might be preparing, like him, to enjoy the confidence and gratitude of their generation, and, like him, to shine forever among the purest and wisest of celestial intelligences!—N. Y. Jour. of Com.

THE MOSS ROSE.

A German poet thus explains the origin of that elegant flower, the Moss Rose:

"The angel of the flowers one day
Beneath a rose tree sleeping lay;
That spirit to whose charge is given
To bathe young buds in dews from heaven;
Awaking from his light repose,
The angel whispered to the rose—
'O, loadest object of my care!
'Still fairest found where all are fair,
'For the sweet shade thou'st given to me,
'Ask what thou will, 'tis granted thee
'Then,' said the rose, with deepened glow,
'On me another grace bestow.'
The spirit paused in silent thought—
What grace was there that flower had not!
'T was but a moment—o'er the rose
A veil of moss the angel throws,
And, robed in nature's simplest weed,
Could there a flower, that rose exceed?"

EDUCATION.

Read thou first and well approve the books thou givest to thy child;

But remember the weakness of his thought, and that wisdom to him must be diluted.

In the honied water of infant tales, let him taste the strong wine of truth:

Pathetic stories soften the heart, but legends of terror breed midnight misery:

Fairy fictions cram the mind with folly, and knowledge of evil tempteth to like evil.

Be not loath to curb imagination, nor be fearful that truths will depress it.

And for evil, he will learn it soon enough; be not thou the devil's envoy.

Indulge not precocity of intellect, for so wouldst thou nourish vanity;

Neither can a plant, forced in a hot-bed, stand against the frozen breath of winter:

The mind is made wealthy by ideas, but the multitude of words is a clogging weight;

Therefore be understood in thy teaching, and instruct to the measure of capacity.

Analogy is milk for babes, but abstract truths are strong meat.

Precepts and rules are repulsive to a child, but happy illustration winneth him.

In vain shalt thou preach industry and prudence, till he learn of the bee and the ant.

He will fear God in thunder, and worship his loveliness in flowers.

And parables shall charm his heart, while doctrines seem dead mystery.

And if thou train him to trust thee, he will not withhold his reliance from the Lord.

Fearest thou the dark, poor child? I would not have thee left to thy terrors;

Darkness is the semblance of evil, and nature regardeth it with dread.

Yet know thy fathers' God is with thee still, to guard thee.

It is a simple lesson of dependence, but let thy tost mind anchor upon Him.

Did a sudden noise affright thee? Lo! this or that caused it.—

Things undefined are full of dread, and stagger stouter nerves;

The seeds of misery and madness have been sowed in the nights of infancy,

Therefore be careful that ghastly fears be not the night companions of thy child.

POPULAR ERRORS.

It is an error to suppose, that, because you silence a man, you convince him, or because he declines to answer you, that he lacks the power.

It is an error to fancy that, because a woman looks at you, she is in love with you, or because she sighs when you are by, that she is dying for you. Sighing is a well bred modification of yawning, and as often betrays weariness, as anxiety or solicitude.

It is an error to imagine, that, because a man smiles on you, he is your friend, or, because he covets your society, that he cares a fig about you. Smiles and professions are now the cheapest things in the market, except patriotism.

It is an error to dream that, because you happen to love your wife during the honey moon, you will be the happiest man in the world for the rest of your life. Matrimony is like a glass of soda water—very sparkling when it is first carried to the lips, but palpably tasting of acid, before it is half swallowed.

It is an error to believe that, because beauty dazzles you, it is the sole repository of virtue. There is many a flower growing beneath an ugly hedge.

It is an error to convince yourself that, because you do a generous action, you are charitable and unselfish. A close analysis will show, that every impulse of the human heart is somewhat selfish.

It is an error to imagine that, because you attend church and say long prayers, you are on the way to Heaven. There are many who never saw a church, that have equal claims with yourself.

It is an error to fancy that, because a woman can play a piano and embroider, she is accomplished, or because she speaks in a low voice and rolls up her eyes with tenderness, she is amiable.

It is an error to imagine that, because a monkey chatters, he possesses reason, and it is equally an error to suppose that loud talkers have common sense.

It is an error to believe that, because a man has lived many years, he is wise and experienced, for we all know that white hairs will grow on the head of a jackass.

It is an error to suppose that, because men dress with great elegance, they are useful members of society. The beautiful peacock is absolutely good for nothing but to look at.—Noah's Messenger.

POWER OF STEAM.—A steam doctor, in a North Carolina paper, boasts that he has discovered a system by which he can make out of an old man an entire young man, and have enough left to make a small dog!

A QUIETUS.—A married lady lately found her two sons quarrelling, and, in the hope of putting an end to the difference, uttered the following threat:—"You young rascals, if you don't desist directly, I'll tell both your fathers."

WALTZING.—A lady in Nashville being asked to waltz, gave the following sensible and appropriate answer:—"No, thank ye, sir, I have hugging enough at home."

TWICE SMITTEN.—A gentleman in Shelby county, Kentucky, fell desperately in love the other day with a girl, at first sight, and attempted to kiss her whereupon she knocked him down.

A SIMILE.—A jeweller advertising that he has a number of precious stones to dispose of, adds, that they sparkle like the tears of a young widow.

CAUSES OF MARRIAGE.—One man marries a woman because she looks well when she dances—she never dances afterwards. Another man marries because she has a handsome foot and ancle—which after marriage he never takes the trouble to admire. A third marries for love—which wastes with the honey-moon. A fourth for money—and finds that his wife does not choose to die, to complete his satisfaction. A fifth, being old in wisdom and years, marries a young woman, who soon becomes a suitable match for him by growing old with grief.

ELOQUENCE IN KENTUCKY.—The following powerful elegant, and classic appeal was made in a court of justice somewhere in Kentucky, by one of the "learned heads" of the bar:—"Gentlemen of the jury,—Do you think my client, who lives in the pleasant valley of Kentucky, where the land is rich, and soil are fertile, would be guilty of steaming clearing little skains of cotting? I think not, gentlemen. And I guess, Gentlemen of the Jury, that you had better bring my client in not guily, for if you convict him, he and his son John will lick the whole of you!"

GRASSHOPPERS.—"The grasshoppers are happy fellows—they have dumb wives. It is the male insect only that sings." So says the editor of the Louisville Journal. We wonder if that gentleman was ever henpecked!

HOW TO COMMIT MURDER QUIETLY.—Take a young lady—tell her she has a pretty foot—she will wear a small shoe—go out in wet spring weather—catch a cold—then a fever—and die in a month. This recipe never fails.

There is a man in Vermont who is so tall that he can't tell when his toes are cold!

TO MAKE SHOES WATERPROOF.—Take a pound and a half of rose-pink, an ounce of camphor, with a quart of the liquid in which a rabbit has been boiled; stir these gently together, and pour the shoes full of the mixture when you go to bed at night.

TO TAKE STAINS OUT OF TABLE-LINEN.—Spread the damask cloth on the table, and with a sharp pair of scissors cut holes half an inch in each direction beyond the edge of the stain. There is another, but more expensive method, which is, simply, to put the linen into the fire.

A DELICATE LIP-SALVE.—Wash and grate four carrots, add to these a dram of assafœtida, and two ounces of Norway tar; tie it down close, and put into a small saucepan with as much water and ground oyster-shells as will come nearly to the top of the gallipot. Do not let it boil over; pour into small boxes for present use.

PASTE FOR CHAPPED HANDS.—At the full of the moon, take a pound and a half of coarse brown sugar, immerse it in a pint of aquafortis, one ounce of gum benjamim, one ounce of Florence iris; simmer these ingredients in a gall-bladder for an hour, then pour off into gallipots. The application will not only whiten the hands, but produce double joints, which are so much admired.—Charivari.

POETRY

SHAKESPEARE'S SEVEN AGES.

(IN RHYME.)

By "sticks" of the N. Y. Mercury.

The world is nothing but a stage,
The men and women players,
From infancy to drivilleng age—
From clowns to kings and mayors.
They have their offs and ons, and starts,
Kings, loafers, squirers and pages;
And every one plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages.

First, the infant in the nurse's arms,
Crying, muling, puking, squalling;—
The lazy school-boy next, like snail
To school so slowly crawling;
His red and well scrub'd morning face
Like thrifty butcher's shining;—
O, mark his slow and creeping pace,
His whimpering, sniveling, whining.

And then the lover, wo-beg ne,
Like any furnace sighing;
Making ballads to his maid's eyebrow
The pen he's ever plying;
Or sometimes strolling here and there,
As pensive as a shepherd.
Then a soldier, full of strange round oaths,
And bearded like a leopard—

Jealous in honor, in quarrel quick—
Seeks in bumble reputation
In the cannon's mouth, for his own dear sake,
And the glory of the nation;
And then the justice, in belly round,
With turtle and cannout cram'd;
With eyes severe as an auctioneer's,
Yet all his sternness sham'd

With beard of such a formal cut;
With wise saws running over;
While better men must work and starve,
He thrives like pigs in clover.
And so he plays his useless part,
As every scene doth vary;—
Indeed, he's not actor, but
A supernumerary.

The sixth age shifts into the lean
And slipper'd pantaloon.
With spectacles upon his nose,
Old age's priceless boon.
With pouch on side, and his youthful hose
Well sav'd, tho, darn'd and rusty,
A world too wide for his shrunken shanks,
Which once were fat and lusty.

His voice, so big and manly once.
Now broken, crack'd and feeble.
Doth pipe and whistle in his sound,
And turns to childish treble.
With shrivel'd frame and palsied limbs,
He feebly totters on,
'Till every faculty is dead,
And all his vigor gone.

Let's view the last sad scene of all
That ends this history
So strange; then let the curtain fall
And hide its misery.
'Tis second childishness, and mere
Oblivion; the spring
Of life dried up; sans teeth, sans eyes,
Sans taste, sans everything.

THE BAPTISM OF THE APOSTLES.

The question is often asked, who baptized the Apostles? I know not why it is asked, unless it be to under value the ordinance of baptism, and as they say, no explicit mention is made of their baptism, therefore it cannot be of great importance, and we may live in the neglect of obedience to this law of the kingdom.—So far as my recollection serves me, we only know the name of one whom John baptized, or rather the name of one only is expressly mentioned in connexion with baptism, and that is the Lord Jesus. But can we not establish the fact, that an individual has been baptized, without knowing his name? It would seem to me, that there is no difficulty upon this point. Suppose I ascertain the fact, that an individual is a member of the Baptist church, without knowing his name, do I not at the same time obtain positive evidence of his baptism? Assuredly, because it is the established custom, never deviated from, either to gratify the rich or please the poor that baptism must be submitted to, before connexion with the church can be enjoyed. Now, let us apply facts to the case of the Apostles, and we shall find that they were baptized by John, or during the continuance of John's ministry.

The fact that they followed the Lord, is evidence that they had been John's disciples.—Will a man receive the Lord before he is made ready or prepared for it? If not, then these individuals were prepared for the coming of the Lord by John. This was the very design of John's ministry. We find it so recorded in Luke i. 17: "And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." If the Saviour did not choose from the fruits of John's labor, it would seem that he did not comply with the appointment of heaven.

2. Did the Saviour approve in another, what he could not approve in himself? Here is an appointment of heaven. John is commissioned by God to preach and baptize. The Saviour came to do the will of God. Could he then, as our teacher, by example, pass by this institution of heaven? We see he could not; for when objection is made, he overcomes it with, thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness; it is proper in you, and in me, and in all, to observe the appointments of God. If the Saviour selected from those who had not been baptized, would he not act in direct opposition to his own reasoning? Would he not give countenance to disobedience in others, when he could not disobey himself? Take in connexion with this what the Saviour says about John's baptism in Luke vii. 29, 30, and the conclusion is inevitable that they were baptized, or that he chose for his Apostles wicked men, enemies to God.—"And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." Would the Saviour receive as his Apostles those who openly rejected the counsel of God? Then let us learn obedience.

In the next place, we have the names of some of the Apostles, who are known to have been John's disciples. John i. 35—49 Again, the next day after John stood, and two of his disciples; and looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God! And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus. Then Jesus turned and saw them following, and saith unto them, what seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou? He saith unto them, come and see They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day, for it was about the tenth hour. One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother. He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, we have found the Messias, which is being interpreted, the Christ. And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, thou art Simon, the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, a stone. The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, follow me. Now Philip was of Bethsaida' the city of Andrew and Peter. Philip findeth Nathaniel and saith unto him, we have found him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph. And Nathaniel said unto him, can any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip said unto him, come and see.—Jesus saw Nathaniel coming to him, and saith of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile! Nathaniel saith unto him,—Whence knowest thou me? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee. Nathaniel answered and said unto him' Rabbi, thou art the son of God; thou art the King of Israel." In this history we have no less than five of the Apostles brought to our view, as waiting upon the ministry of John. They were of Galilee, but yet we find them at the Jordan waiting upon the ministry of him who was to make ready a people for the Lord. Five of his disciples—John, the writer of this account, is one, as he generally omits his name when writing of himself, Andrew, Simon Peter, Philip, Nathaniel or Bartholomew, for it is generally admitted that they are one and the same person. He who was an Israelite indeed, would surely submit to the counsel of heaven. The readiness with which they followed, implies that they were prepared to receive him, and John and Andrew are said to be John's disciples.

Lastly, the Apostles themselves, assembled together, acknowledge themselves to have been John's disciples. See Acts i. 21, 22. The Apostles were assembled together, and when assembled, Peter spoke about the propriety of supplying the place of Judas, who by transgression, fell from the apostleship. From what people must his place be supplied; The answer is,—Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out amongst us, Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. They date their present association from the baptism of John, and none but those who submitted to this institution were qualified for the place. Did the Apostles require more of another than was to be found in themselves? If not it is an acknowledgement from their own lips of their individual baptism. Let none therefore say, baptism is a non essential, since Jesus, who had no sins to wash away, has marked out the path of obedience as fulfilling all righteousness, since the Apostles acknowledge their own submission to this ordinance, and declare, in the election of one to fill the place of Judas, that none but the baptized are qualified to enjoy all the privileges of the kingdom of grace.

A. B. S.

A VERY EASY THING.

To get yourself into such an attitude towards your neighbor that you can neither do nor say any thing for his edification, or he for yours, is the easiest thing in the world.

When under the influence of excited feeling, he drops some hasty expression which may be construed to an injurious reflection upon you, just keep it at a distance from him and turn it over in your mind, till, like a snow ball, it has swelled to an enormous insult. Then whisper about it to one friend after another, that is, tell it as a matter which you do not wish to spread abroad, until you have yourself circulated it all over town. Your friends will follow your example, and communicate it confidentially to their friends, till the whole community is filled with the hum of scandal.

Your neighbor will soon hear the report, in an exaggerated form of course, will in turn, utter harsh words against you; and these will come to your ears in a still harsher form. In a word, you will find yourself involved in a hot quarrel with him, and when you meet, instead of the former open countenance, there will be the hard wrinkled brow, and leering glance of jealousy and enmity.

You will have placed yourselves in an attitude in which you cannot help, but must greatly hinder each other's piety and usefulness; and it will be well if your private quarrel does not poison the whole atmosphere of the community

All this mischief might have been prevented by a little Christian manliness and frankness—An explanation of five minutes would have parted good friends and fellow helpers in the Lord's work—O. Obs.

FOLLOWING CHRIST.

We are directed in the Scriptures to follow Christ; to walk in him; to abide in him. These directions, varying in expression, signify the same. Christ is our pattern—our wisdom—our spiritual life. How then may we walk in his footsteps—how estrayed from him as we are, can we be made like him?

Let a rude child be taken to dwell in a well disciplined and regulated family, and it will not be so much by set rules and restrictions that he will become like the members of his family, as by the power of example which he shall see and feel in them. It is not hearing Christ preached—in reading of his deeds—in being called by his name; it is not by abstractedly considering the rules of Christianity, or our duty to observe them because we have been so commanded; it is not thus that we are to become Christians. No; it is by keeping so near the Saviour in the exhibition of his character—dwelling so much where his spirit abounds—feeling its influence bearing us outward, not by constraint, but with a willing mind; it is thus that we gradually become like him—it is thus that we are changed into his image in our minds.—Gospel Teacher.

TO CHURCH MEMBERS.

The rule of Scripture is this: "First pure then peaceable." Let this be your rule There is scarcely any blessing more desirable than peace, true, well grounded peace. It is so intimately connected with prosperity. Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces. The Hebrew word is the same in both instances. —Rev. A. Fuller.

Guard against a touchy temper. Charity is not soon angry.

From every strife scorn to take offence,
It either shows great pride or little sense.

Encourage no tale-bearers. Persons that make it their business, and feel it their delight to go about telling secrets to the disadvantage of their neighbors, deserve the deepest marks of censure Are you at variance with a brother? Mark the man who, by his insinuations and inuendoes, would make the breach wider, and shun him.—Ib.

Whenever your concern is in the truths of the gospel, let love be acted in it; and that is the means whereby you convey your supplies from evey joint and part unto the whole. Truth requires our pity, compassion, admonition, exhortation, forbearance, and the like: do it all in love. A church full of love, is a church well built up. I had rather see a church filled with love a thousand times, than filled with the best, the highest, and most glorious gifts and parts that any man in this world may be made partaker of. Could they go beyond and exceed all we aim at or desire; could they speak with the tongues of men and angels; it is ten thousand times more for the glory of God and our own comfort, to be with a company of poor saints who are full of love, than with those of the highest attainments without it. —Dr. Owmen.

The blessings of a future world are ever represented in the Scripture as the final end and scope of the Christian profession: the doctrines which it embraces, the duties which it enjoins, represented as terminating in that as its ultimate object. * * * The church of Christ is unquestionably ordained merely as one of the instruments of qualifying its members for the possession of eternal life; but for this it would have no existence.—Rev. Robert Hall.

PETER DOWSE.

Rev. C. M. Fuller, our agent in Massachusetts, gives the following account of a colored man of the above name, and his wife, whom he found while visiting in Billerica with a ministering brother, their pastor:

Peter is poor, all he possesses on earth not being worth, probably, more than $200, but he is respected by all the inhabitants of the town. He receives but seventeen dollars per month for his labor, boading himself, yet he pays twenty dollars per annum for horse hire to carry his wife to meeting, (the place of worship being over five miles distant, and she being unable to walk so far,) and fifteen towards his minister's support.

His wife can do but little, yet she contrives to aid in carrying out the benevolent plans of her husband. Her principal dependence is upon the berries, which, when they are ripe, she picks and sends to market, and by the avails is enabled to contribute to several charitable objects.

When introduced, I was welcomed almost as an angel of light, each of them expressing great thankfulness for the privilege of seeing an agent of the Home Mission Society in their house, and contributing to so important an object. I had asked for nothing, and expected nothing, but their pastor told me they loved to work for Christ. I ascertained, however, that they had already been liberal in contributing to the Foreign Mission cause; and they both desired to become regular subscribers on my books of two cents a week each; which will make their joint subscription for Foreign and Home Missions, ten dollars a year.

How large the amount compared with their income, or with the subscriptions of some rich men!

I inquired of her how she expected to fulfil all her pledges, and she replied, 'the Lord will prosper me to do it.' She then told me that she became a little discouraged last year, on account of the scarcity of berries, but a neighboring farmer unexpectedly gave her the privilege of picking in a lot of his where they were abundant, and from which he excluded all other persons, thus enabling her to pay her annual donations, and encouraging her to believe that always, hereafter, "The Lord will provide."

The above is a simple story, but it illustrates, in an unusual degree, the piety, the faith and benevolence which may sometimes be found among the lowly disciples of Jesus What an example do these poor people set before us. On what rich spiritual luxuries must they subsist in their obscurity from the world—their proximity to the throne of grace—loved retreat from worldly ambition and vanity. O, that their Christian spirit may pervade the whole Church of Christ

BENJAMIN M. HILL, Cor. Sec.

A REASONABLE HUSBAND.—Late one evening Drunken Davy, after spending his day's earnings at a grocery, set out for home. "Well," said he, "if I find my wife up, I'll lick her—what business has she to sit up, and waste fire and light, eh? and if I find her in bed, I'll lick her—what business has she to go to bed before I get home!'

VERY SINGULAR INDEED.—A horse at Mayfield, Sussex, being terribly pestered with flies, kicked his hind foot into his mouth in such a manner as to require the aid of a blacksmith ere the limb could be extracted.

TO CATCH RABBITS.—Schoolboys in the old country think themselves mighty clever when they catch birds by putting salt on their tails. Jonathan, however, goes ahead; witness the following novel mode of catching rabbits. Place apples in the parts where the rabbits frequent, after sprinkling them with snuff, and when they come to smell, the sudden effort to sneeze which they make, never fails to break their necks, and even in some cases has been known to cause them to tumble heels over head at a considerable distance!

A friend of ours says, he is growing weaker and weaker every day. He has got so weak now that he can't raise five dollars.

"PRODIGIOUS!"—By a series of interesting experiments lately made in Philadelphia, a woman's tongue has been found capable of moving one thousand nine hundred and twenty times in a minute! Think of that and weep!

"SASSENGERS."—The Denham Gazettee says that sassengers made of red flannel and turnips eat very well; but when brown paper is added, they are hardly fit for dogs.

LUSUS NATURE.—We have been credibly informed that there is now living in Vermont, a man whose feet are so large that he is necessitated to draw on his inexpressibles over his head!

RECIPROCITY.—"Will you lend father you newspaper, sir?—he only wants to read it? "Yes, my boy—and ask him to lend me his dinner.—I only want to eat it!"

EXTEMPORANEOUS PREACHING.

The following extracts from an article on Preaching in the Christian Examiner of May, will be read with interest by that portion of our readers for whom they are designed.

It is becoming an important practical question, whether the power of the pulpit would not be promoted by the more frequent introduction of extemporaneous preaching. Before the Protestant Reformation written sermons were almost unknown. In England they were established in the reign of Henry VIII., as a safe-guard against imprudence of speech or heresy of doctrine. They coincided with the subsequent intellectual character of Protestanism, and elaborate discourses from accomplished scholars soon displaced the off-hand harangues of ranting friars. Charles II. seems to have disliked the use of manuscripts in the pulpit, and issued a degree to the University of Cambridge, dated 1674, in which he commands the preachers to deliver their sermons without books under penalty of his Majesty's displeasure. Yet Charles probably had in view memoriter, rather than extemproe, preaching. However, his decree has had no great influence upon the English Church. Perhaps among other relics of other days, it may be disinterred by the pious antiquarians who are now so busy in the mother country, and whose chief saints is of the Stuart race. Whatever be the cause, preaching without notes is becoming more common in England.

In this country it is evidently increasing in prevalence, although the majority of educated preachers still use manuscripts, and reverse the example of the clergy of the Catholic Church, who read their prayers and extemporize their sermons, by extemporizing their prayers and reading their sermons. The increase of political and philanthropic questions has raised up a host of ready extemporaneous speakers, who have tended to give a taste to the people for a more fervent and spontaneous manner than generally accompanies the use of a manuscript. The pastoral addresses of several ecclesiastical Associations have expressly mentioned the evil, that has accrued to their preachers, from the contrast of their deliberate composition and manner with the free and fervid utterance of the host of agents and lecturers, who travel the country to declaim against our social evil. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has recommended to its members to discontinue the use of manuscripts in the pulpit, and in some cases, we learn, the recommendation has not been without effect. The Methodists are earnestly discussing the best mode of preaching, and whilst some advocate written sermons, the majority firmly abide by the extemporaneous mode; and a sensible article in their Quarterly Review, from the pen of one of their most gifted preachers, disapproves even of the slightest brief being carried into the pulpit.

It is obviously becoming the duty of every minister to be independent of his manuscript, and acquire such a habit of extemporaneous speech, that he can use it whenever he chooses. There will be times when he will be much crippled and mortified unless he can do so, and not a month will pass that does not show him the convenience and power of the gift. We take no extreme ground; we make no war against written sermons, much less would we advocate impromptu preparation for the pulpit, if preparation it can be called. A man must write well if he would speak correctly, and speak freely if he would write fluently. What Quintillian says upon this point in reference to the orator, is doubly true of the preacher. Perhaps it would be best for the readiest speaker to write half his sermons and use his manuscript, unless he has the rare gift of remembering his own composition without the drudgery of learning it by rote, and can speak it without the air of a school-boy saying a lesson. We must have a habit of accurate and regular writing, else our literary culture is in great peril; and it is generally much better to preach from the manuscript than to try to remember it,—a work much more difficult, than to speak without trying to remember. As to impromptu preparation for the pulpit, if such there can be, it should be entirely condemned, unless in cases where necessity is the excuse. By extempore speaking, we mean the utterance of premeditated thoughts in such language as presents itself at the time of speaking.

All will allow that this is the most natural and effective mode, other things being equal. A child perceives at once the difference in our tone, when we cease speaking to him and begin of read. His languid attention marks the effect to the transition. The same result appears in all popular meetings, where some of the debaters read, and others speak as they are moved. Why should the pulpit be an exception to the general law, and a practice be held indispensable there, that would be the ruin of the orator of the bar or senate-hall?

Almost all the objections brought against extemporaneous preaching are unjust, because directed against abuses rather than fair speciments of the art. No man should try to speak in the pulpit, until he has learned the rudiments of the art. And it is from the failure of those who have not learned, that the art is condemned by so many. Let men follow up the culture of extempore preaching as assiduously as that of composition, and it will be found that there is no more difference between preachers in their faculty of speaking than of writing, and that all may learn to speak extemporaneously as easily at least as they learn to compose.

Indeed the action of the mind in preparing for a speech, is far more natural than in the labor of composition. Thoughts present themselver much more spontaneously and fall into their proper places. They volunteer at the call of the living voice, whereas they must often be forcibly impressed into the service of the pen. These volunteer troops are indeed sometimes rather too volatile to stand much serious service, but not unfrequently they will prove themselves as solid as they are prompt. Henry Ware has so well exhibited the advantages of extempore preaching that it is unnecessary to say much upon this point, although he has not spoken so much of the effect of this mode upon the speaker's preparation as upon the manner and effect of his delivery. We say, as we leave this branch of the subject, that we have no doubt, that if our young men who enter the ministry cultivated this habit as carefully as that of writing, and gave the same thought to their extemporaneous as to their written sermons, they would speak without notes as wisely as they write, and far more effectively, besides saving the time and labor that are given to the mechanical work of the pen. They will not indeed be able to treasure up their sermons for future use as safely as when given to paper, but most ministers have old sermons enough, and a few notes of the chief points of a discourse will suffice to call it to mind again, even in subsequent years.

Those who have practised extempore preaching must be aware that many dangers are incident to this mode, and some dangers such are not usually considered. The liability, or temptation to neglect careful preparation, and rely too much upon the inspiration of the moment; to run into exaggeration, and mistake warmth of blood for fervor of feeling or strength of conviction; to suppose from the excitement of our own minds, that we are interesting the audience as much as we interest ourselves; to commit sins againt good taste by exhortations, reproaches and appeals, such as a cooler head would condemn; to repeat the same words or ideas, to the weariness of the hearers; to ramble from subject to subject without unity, and continue speaking after we ought to stop; these are perils that the extemporaneous preacher understands better than his severest critics, for he is the greatest sufferer by them.

As to bodily fatigue and nervous exhaustion, it may be, that there is more expenditure of strength in the extempore than the manuscript method. But the former gives a much more natural and healthful play of the system than the latter. Of any given number of preachers who might be selected to show the effects of the two modes of speaking upon the organs of the voice, we think that those who practise the former method would bear the more favorable testimony; and very few cases would be adduced in which easy extemporisers have been troubled with that scourge of the profession, bronchitis. Most persons can talk two hours with less fatigue of lungs and throat than is felt in reading a quarter of an hour. The same principle must apply, in a measure, to public speaking. Yet nothing is more wearing to body as well as mind than to speak with anxiety, doubting whether we shall get through, and drifting about in the fog uncertain of a landing-place.

The preparation for extempore speaking may be much more healthful than the task of writing. It is the sedentary labor and confinement of the study, that brings so many ministers to a premature grave. Extempore speaking turns the sedentary student into a cheerful peripatetic. On a summer's day he may walk in a pleasant garden or a shady grove, and find a pleasure in arranging for the next Sunday a sermon, that would have vexed his mind and body beyond measure, if he had been bent over his desk, the slave, not of the oar, but of the pen. There is something wrong in our clerical life. They that have the noblest of all professions ought not to prove by their languid and short lives, that they are at harmony with the regular order of Providence.

An exact method will present all anxiety. The preacher should be far more careful in the arrangement of his subject for the extemporaneous than the written discourse. He should be sure of his main points and illustrations, and see his way clearly to the end. The end is the most difficult part, and therefore should be most carefully considered. Many men who can make a very good speech in the main, ruin themselves at the close. They remind one of a vessel which makes a most expeditious and satisfactory voyage, and at last puts the passengers in an agony of suspense by attemps to reach the wharf. She courses to and fro, and at last with great difficulty, and with many a thump, is moored to her resting-place. How to end, is the chief accomplishment of the extempore preacher. However indefinite other parts of his discourse may be, he should be sure of an appropriate conclusion. He should trust to his stars for the beginning rather than the end of his discourse. Sometimes indeed a better peroration will occur to him while speaking than before: but it is dangerous to rely on such angel visitators.

To avoid the danger of repetition from Sunday to Sunday— the great sin of extempore preachers in the judgment of their hearers—care should be taken to select subjects that shall not tempt the preacher to routine.—Vague exhortation and theological common-places should be avoided, and some topic from Scripture history or bigraphy, some fact or illustration, should be taken that will be sure to give an air of freshness and a careful division of its branches should make the discourse individual and unlike former discourses.

It is sometimes the case, that men of remarkable powers of extemporaneous speaking weary their own congregations with the same discourse that thril other congregations to the quick. The probable reason is, that a preacher's own people have sometimes been troubled by his intensity and exageration, and always remember some of his excesses of speech, whilst strangers have no such reminiscences and are borne along by the full tide of spontaneous eloquence. Preachers therefore should beware of compromising their influence with the judicious of their congregations by any extravagances of speech, and should make it certain that good sense shall never fall a sacrifice to the craving for eloquence. Nothing wears so well as good sense. Eloquent folly may charm for a time, but good sense always resumes its place. It is very important, that whenever a minister is to address himself personally to his people, especially to rebuke their personal degligence, he should use well chosen language, and by being sure of all his points shun the danger of scolding instead of preaching, and of uttering words that afterwards are coals of fire that burn his own conscience rather than influence their piety.

None of the writers upon the subject of extemporaneous preaching mention the study of the ancient classics as a part of the culture of the extempore speaker. Notwithstanding the prevalent disposition to decry their value now, we maintain that they are essential to a speaker's education, not so much as giving models of oratory, as supplying ample and appropriate language. There is no mode of acquiring copiousness and precision of speech so good in the outset, as the habit of faithfully and elegantly rendering the Greek and Latin classics into appropriate English. The force of the original is apprehended, and the affluence of our own tongue mastered. This way of studying the dead languages has a worth that is forgotten by many, who declaim against studies that have been their own great benefactors. It is a fact worthy of note, that all the great extempore orators have been good classical scholars. Eton, with its dead languages, has given no small share of living eloquence to the British Parliament,

Our New England has not been remarkable for the extemporaneous elopuence in the pulpit. Our cautiousness and acute intellect do not favor such a spontaneous mode. Edwards produced his revivals by reading long sermons full of systematic divinity, without any of the orator's arts. The fastidious scholarship of the early liberal divines hardly allowed them to indulge in any adventurous fights. Yet there is nothing in the severest intellect or, the most finished scholarship, that need shrink from free utterance of thought. The most profound and logical preacher of modern Germany never wrote his sermons, and it is only through the short-hand notes of his pupils that Schleiermacher's four volumes of discourses have been preserved to us. Robert Hall's most powerful and efficient efforts were extemporaneous. The advice of one of the most illustrious divines of the English Church, Bishop Burnet, is backed by his example. He always trusted to the moment for his language, and owed much of his power to this fact. His biographer mentions an occasion of great importance, when the regular preacher was taken sick, and the Archbishop of Canterbury called upon Dr. Burnet to enter the pulpit and supply the vacant place, which was done to the wonder and approval of all. The Archbishop declared that he had never heard a better sermon in his life.

But the great trouble with most preachers is, that they do not give time enough to the preparation of their sermons. This difficulty might certainly be obviated by economising labor, and lessening the time spent with the pen in the drudgery of mechanical composition. If a minister must prepare two fresh sermons a week, he will be able to give them both much more meditation by writing only one, and devoting to earnest thought the time spared from penning the other. No man should write more than one sermon a week, and one in a fortnight would perhaps come nearer the true rule. Paley recommends one a month. But we are inclined to think that if this rule were adopted, sermons would not be better than now, since the ample time would rather encourage indolence and delay than stimulate to higher achievement. Those preachers who wrire the smallest number in the course of the year are by no means the most exemplary models of fidelity to the highest standard of preaching. The hurry of a crowded week, and the tempting leisure of months, are alike perilous to faihful preparation. The hurry of the week may often be spared by quitting the drudgery of the pen, and faithfully preparing the outlines of an unwritten sermon. Yet no week should pass without careful exercise in composition.

OF THE EIGHT COMMANDMENT.

SEC. I. Exod. xx. 15. "Thou shalt not steal." This commandment implies two things; first that individuals have exclusive rights to property of various descriptions; and secondly, that there is a disposition in natural men to deprive each other of their rights unjustly, that they may appropriate to themselves their neighbour's possessions. If men had no exclusive rights to any species of temporal wealth, there would be no propriety in the commandment, not to steal; and it would have been useless, on the supposition that mankind are habitually predisposed to respect each other's immunities.

The experience and history of every age would prove, that mankind are prone to injustice, fraud, plunder, robbery, over-reaching, infidelity to trusts, criminal bankruptcies, nominal assignments, smuggling, and every species of stealing: and the eight commandment forbids all these crimes. Stealing is any unrighteous despoiling our neighbour of his property, whether it be done openly with violence, or secretly by deceit, trick, flattery, exaggeration, decrying of a thing, or stealth. "Thou shalt not steal in any way."

SEC. II. This part of the decalogue is violated by children, when without the known pleasure, or habitual indulgence of their parents, they take and use the money or other goods of their father or mother. Theft frequently begins here, which is consumated in highway robbery, and ignominiously punished on the gallows. Prov. xxviii. 24. "Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same is the companion of a destroyer."

This crime parents should use every proper method of correcting, lest they connive at stealing, and become partakers of the guilt. It will be expedient for first offences, to reprove and admonish them privately, that they may learn the evil of their conduct; and not disgrace them at once before their companions. Many have been beaten into the practice of lying and theiving, when they might have been reformed by tender treatment, and by exciting their fear and shame. When nothing else but corporal punishment will deter them from repeating this offence, if thou spare the rod, or apply it but lightly, or use it in passion, you commonly spoil the child.

SEC. II. Servants think it no harm, to take now and then something belonging to their masters; but it is stealing, if they could not take the same with permission. Would you lay your hand upon the thing, where the eyes of your employer upon you? Withdraw it, then, for if conscience makes your hand tremble, touch not, taste not; it is theft. "But it is of no great value; and our masters will not miss it." Is it worth taking? Then it is valuable: you know not what are their designs, or what may be its consequence, under particular circumstances. Ask for it: if they are willing to spare it, you will gain lawful possession: for otherwise you are as guilty, for taking the value of three cents, as of three hundred dolars. "Exhort servants to be obedient to their own masters; not purlonging, but showing all good fidelity." Tit. ii. 9, 10.

Sec. IV. Stewards, executors of wills, civil officers, and agents generally, who knowingly misuse, waste, or keep back the property of others, violate the eighth commandment. I Cor. iv. 2. "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful." "A certain rich man had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods:" (Luke xvi. I.) the charge was verified; and he was a thief.

A certain executer retained the property of some orhan children in his own hands, to the detriment of their estate; he did not, when able, refund the sums he had received, with lawful interest; the heirs were satisfied, because they supposed they had received their due; when in fact they were cheated: that executor was a thief, an oppressor of the fatherless.

A certain civil officer took, by virtue of attachment, the property of his neighbour, but to favour himself, or a friend, did not dispose of it to the best of his ability: he was a thief.

A certain judge promoted his own interest to the disadvantage of another, when the forms of law gave him a veil to cover the deception; and was found guilty;—not by a jury of his countrymen; but by his own conscience,—of willfully injuring another, in his estate.

A consignee received the property of one in distressed circumstances, and because the owner of the goods could not fully investigate the matter, cheated him out of a part, by informing him they sold for less than they actually did. This man was a thief.

Another agent did not make accurate returns, estimated goods at a higher price than he actually paid out of his employer's money: took pay for his labour, and in addition, secretly, profit upon the articles purchased. This is stealing.

Children sometimes commence this wicked practice, by defrauding their parents or matters, when sent to purchase some article, to which they affix a higher price than they gave, and keep their gains of dishonesty for private expenditures.

Sec. V. To conceal and devote to private use any public property is stealing. In many instances public money must be left in the care of individuals, and there are many ways of embezzlement. It is as unjust secretly to take the property of the community, as of any individual; and the only difference is this; in private theft you injure one; in taking public treasure, you injure many. Should you designedly keep back duties, which have been received upon certain taxable articles, it is stealing from the state treasury; and it would be no greater crime privately to unlock the iron chest, and carry away that which has been paid into the funds, than to be silent, and retain what is justly due to the community. "Render, therefore, to all their dues; tribute, to whom tribute is due; custom, to whom custom." Our Lord and Saviour, who never wrought a miracle for unimportant ends, performed one to pay a public tax. "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and unto God, the things that are God's." Many public expenses will accrue, of which each man ought to bear his proportion, in some manner agreeable to the public body. We are indebted one to another: we are commanded to "owe no man any thing," when able to satisfy his equitable demands: and one might as well put his hand into his neighbour's pocket, and take a dollar, as retain dues, or pay taxes by idleness, when professing to discharge them by labour. If you designedly cheat one or many persons, the manner cannot alter the crime, or diminish the turpitude. It is direct theft. Because a man was blind, would you pay him five dollars, and take his acquittance for fifty? Or because the public cannot always exact justice, would you profess to pay all, and pocket a part?

Fraudulently to alienate or take away any thing devoted to the church, is called sacrilege, which is particularly reprobated in the word of God. "Thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacriledge?" "It is a snare to a man to devour that which is holy;" or consecrated to religious purposes. "Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me: but ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me: even this whole nation." Tithes and offerings were demanded by God for the support of his ministers. and the sacrifices in the temple. To withhold from pastors a competent support, when the flock is able to give it, is robbery of God.

Sec. VI. Forcibly to carry away a man's children. his money, or goods, or person, except by a righteous civil process, is high handed stealing. What can any one steal of more value than our persons and friends! Yet there are stealers of men, even in this our enlightened country. "The law is not made for a righteous man;" who is influenced to duty by love; "but for the lawless and disobedient, for murderers, for man-slayers, for whoremongers, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons. "He that stealeth a man and selleth him, shall surely be put to death."

The men of Shechem concealed themselves in the mountains and robbed all that came along by them: Barrabas was a robber: but this is the curse which goeth forth over the face of the whole earth; for every one that stealeth shall be cut off; and the curse shall enter into the house of the thief. "As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not! so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool." "Go to now, ye rich men," who have obtained your substance unlawfully, "weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you: ye have heaped treasure together for the last days."

Sec. VII. All forgeries, which are designed to defraud a man of property, are theft. If his name be affixed to bonds of any description contrary to his knowledge and consent, either he, or the person receiving such forgery, is liable to suffer.

How often are tales of woe peddled from door to door by a vagrant crew, for no other reason but to work upon the pity of the industrious, and filch from them support for the lazy, intemperate straggler! Memoirs of raged, idle, drinking personages, are often handed about, setting forth their distresses and good character, for no other purpose but that of pilfering. It is difficult to tell who is most guilty; the person who hands about the recommendation, which perhaps he cannot read; or the writer of the imposing piece. Indeed so common are such modes of stealing, that it seems best to feed begging strangers if hungery and send them on their journey; for if they really wish to reach any assignable place, there are compassionate persons enough in our land who will afford them the same relief. If they will not work, and travel for the gratification of restless curiosity, they surely deserve not enough to keep them from starving; for the scriptures say that they should not eat.

Sec. VIII. To retain and use lost property, without seeking the lawful owner, is theft: for all the profit thus derived, belongs to another, and who is wiltully deprived of it. "Thou shalt not see thy brother's ox or his sheep go astray, and hide thyself from them; thou shalt in any case bring them again to thy brother. In like manner shalt thou do with his rainment, and with all lost things of thy brother's which thou hast found." "Stop in the beginning of evil," is a wise maxim, and therefore I feel it a duty to revert to sins of youth, to the commencement of iniquity, that children may be warned against breaking the commandments of a great and holy God. Children, the future hope of society, should never keep any thing secretly which belongs to a companion.

Any who have concealed some play-thing found at school or elsewhere, and used as if it were their own, have afterwards become more daring thieves. From the concealing of a pen-knife, which has peculiar charms for children, they have gone to the robbing of a pear-tree; from pilfering out of gardens the tempting melons, to the plundering of a cornfield, a cellar, or store-house; and from house-breaking to murder and the scaffold.

Sec. IX. To conceal theft in others, or share the fruit of their iniquity, is another species of this odious vice. "Cast in thy lot among us," is the language of pilferers; "let us all have one purse." "When thou sawest a thief thou consentedst with him." but "whoso is partner with a thief, hateth his own soul." Whoever can willingly see his neighbour defrauded, or does not desire, by all lawful means, to detect rogues, is not far from plundering with his own hand. Purchase no article when you suspect to be stolen, however cheap it may be, for this encourages evil practices; and may put the real owner to expense in redeeming it. Our pawnbrokers' offices are, in many instances, the most public encouragements to stealing.

Sec. X. More property is stolen under the pretence of trade, than in every other manner. The merchant too often bows obsequiously, has the best of every thing, tells you none of his neighbours will deal so fairly by you as himself; and asserts that every thing you may please to fancy is the very best in his collection of merchandize.

Prov. xx. 14. "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth." To a man of good sense all this is folly, for the design is on one side to obtain more than the articles are really worth, and on the other less. Lev. xxv. 14. "If thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buyest aught of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not oppress one another." God commands "that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter; because the Lord is the avenger of all such." Whatever a man in his right mind, seriously thinks it will be profitable for him to give, I may lawfully receive; if he misjudges, I know not his circumstances; it is not my fault: but if I intoxicate him with vanity, or wine, that I may overreach; if I tell him lies to get away his substance, call me a robber, and hunt me from the society of men. Trade is often mutually profitable, but designedly to make a hard bargain, is a very artful mode of stealing under the protection of the law.

Deut. xxv. 13, 15. "Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and small. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have." Prov. xi. I. "A false balance is an abomination to the Lord; but a just weight is his delight." Micah vi. 10, 11. "Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and the scant measure which is abominable! Shall I count them pure with wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights?" Lev. xix. 11. "Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another." "Let your conversation be without covetousness." Make no uncommon pretensions to friendship in trade, for there is knavery in such kindness. Any one who purchases without an intention of paying, or without seeing probable means of satisfying just demands upon him, is really no better than a person who should come in the night and drive your oxen from their stalls. Yet it is the maxim of some, "if you must sink, sink in deep water;" or in other words, if you must break and cannot pay all your debts, make as many more, and cheat as many persons as possible. Be as much a knave as possible! These principles of iniquity have become very fashionable, in some well-dressed thieves, that strut at large, and tell you, by their daily expenses, that they closed their business to retire from the bustle of the world and live like gentlemen of pleasure. Under the solemnity of an oath, in the name of God, what are these persons! Thieves and robbers! For knowingly to involve an innocent man under the pretence of trade, is carrying away, contrary to his consent and knowledge, his hard earned interest, to support our extravagance.

To procure bondsmen, when your own credit is no good, when you know they must advance the money, is stealing from the man who desires kindly to assist you: this is a mixture of ingratitude and theft! To practise fraud in procuring a policy of insurance; or to destroy privately the articles insured is theft; plain, shameful theft.

To take undue advantage of a person's distress, is a very heinous, but common mode of pilfering. "Rob not the poor, because he is poor, neither oppress the afflicted,"—for the Lord will plead his cause. "Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail; falsifying the balances by deceit, to buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes, and sell the refuse of the wheat. The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, surely I will never forget any of their works."

Sec. XI. Unnecessary delay in the settlement of accounts, and in the payment of debts, often takes away, contrary to his consent, our neighbour's property. Punctuality is not only the life of business, but honesty; for one negligent man may derange a great many payments, and put numbers to needless expense. Hired servants are most likely to suffer from this source, for there are many esteemed "a good sort of people," who think it no part of honesty to be just to servants. I have known domestics, who have made themselves slaves for years, without being able to bring their employers to a settlement, or to find themselves convenient apparel for public worship. What could they do? they are helpless, they have kept no book account; and are unable to employ an attorney and purchase justice: they must suffer, or their employers must be just men, rendering to every one what is due. "The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again." "The wages of him that is hired, shall not abide with thee all night until the morning," was a general rule for the Jews, that the day-labourer's family might not suffer hunger.

Sec. XII. Unlawful arts for getting the money of the ignorant; unlawful contracts, particularly simony, and bribery, are violations of this commandment. Many whom used curious arts, such as fortune-telling, astrology and the like deceptions, when converted by the apostles, brought their books together, and burnt them openly. "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money." Hence, the purchasing of ecclesiastical preferment, and the selling of pardons for sin, are called simony, from Simon, who would have given money for miraculous power. To a judge it is said, "thou shalt take no gift; for the gift blindeth the wise;" and those who love gifts judge not the fatherless; neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them. To withhold justice is to take away property unlawfully.

Sec. XII. To remove land-marks, to alter deeds, wills, or any conveyances; to suffer one's servants children or cattle, to injure the possessions of another; or in any manner, knowingly to diminish his estate, unless to obtain by lawful means what is due, is theft.

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even the same to them."

Sec. XIV. That we may observe the eighth commandment faithfully, we should avoid all temptations to dishonesty. Of course we ought to be diligent in the use of those worldly things, that we may have a competence of worldly good, and "provide things honest in the sight of all men." Rom. xii. 17. We ought to be contented and frugal. Heb. xiii. 5. "Discretion shall preserve thee, and understanding shall keep thee." Prov. xiii. 11. "Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished, but he that gathereth by labour shall increase." Prov. x. 22. "The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it." Eph. iv. 28. "Let him that stole, steal no more: but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth." Prov. xxx. 7—9. "Two things have I required of thee; deny me them not before I die: remove far from me vanity and lies: give me neither poverty nor riches: feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of God in vain." Prov. xxiii 21. "The drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty." Prov. xxviii, 19, 22. "He that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough." He that hasteth to be rich, hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him." Prov. xxiii, 21. "Drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags."

Finally, if men would keep clear of strong temptations to dishonesty, let them moderate their desires after wealth, and keep clear of the ruinous system of endorsements, and of credit without confidence. 1. Cor, vii, 32. "I would have you without carefulness," or anxious solicitude. Prov. xxii, 26, 27. "Be not thou one of them that strike hands, or of them that are sureties for debts. If thou hast nothing to pay, why should he take away thy bed from under thee?"

COMMUNICATIONS.

FOR THE LIBERIA HERALD.

The Liberian colonies occupy at this moment a position at once very interesting and very critical. The great experiment which it was the object of the Colonization Society to make has been made and has proved successful. Against all the obstacles presented by the want of ample means, the mismanagement of agents, the unhealthiness of the African climate, the previous character of those who have emigrated and the prejudices and passions of Americans at home, it has successfully been tried; and it may be considered as settled that people of color from the United States, may be transported to the coast and settled at an expense of time, money, life, and labor not much greater than would attend their emigration from New England to the more distant western states. We have called this a great experiment: the term is well applied: it is great in every point of view: great as to the emigrants: for it has raised them from a degraded and servile position to the elevation and dignity of freemen, with the means of indefinite improvement in intellect, morals and religion: great as to the race: for it points out to them a sure asylum from the indignities and evils which fall so heavily upon them in America: great as to the continent: a little one may become a strong nation: colonies are the roots from which nations and kindreds and people and tongues have sprung and must spring. Who can tell how near the time may be when nations may find it expedient at least, to send back to their ancestral land those who were taken from it by their fathers hand: the question as to what must be done with the descendants of Africa in the lands of the whites presses closer and closer every day and every hour; it must be both met and answered. And it may be so answered, as that emigrants shall flock to these shores like as doves to their windows. He shows little thought and wisdom, that who turns with disdain from the consideration of these Liberian colonies.

The Society has done all that can reasonably be expected of it: it has planted the colonies and continues yearly to add to their inhabitants; but the prosperity of these settlements must be dependent mainly on the character and conduct of the colonists themselves: a truth which cannot be too frequently repeated. Every thing depends on the industry intelligence and moral character of the Liberians themselves. Circumstances render it quite probable that it may soon be necessary for these colonies to assume another character: as they increase in population and importance, it will become more and more requisite that they should assume some definite political position. Either as recognized colonies of the United States of America or as an independent state. They cantot long continue as mere settlements under the protection of the Colonization Society: that Society having of itself no independent political rights can confer none upon these colonies: and these colonies cannot long expect to find their laws respected by men of other nations: because their political character is not one recognized by the laws of nations. As colonies of the United States their position would be definite, and their laws respected and obeyed; but there is hardly the remotest probability that that government will ever recognise them as such: it is contrary to the policy of that nation. It remains therefore as the only alternative that at some no distant period these colonies must govern themselves; whether this event is desired by the colonists or not, whether it is upon the whole desirable or not is of no consequence: the event itself may be looked upon as certain. How vastly important is it then that every man in this colony should remember continually that the prosperity of his country depends to a certain extent upon his own intelligence, industry and good conduct; that if this colony is to be prosperous and happy it must be because you my friend and your children deserve to be so; and that on the contrary if it is to be a feeble failing wretched settlement it must be simply because you and those around are lazy and worthless. Think of this, act as though it was in your mind always, and these colonies will yet grow up and prosper to be a blessing to mankind.

SMALL DUTIES COMPENSATE BY THEIR REPETITION, FOR WHAT IS WANTING TO THEIR IMPORTANCE.

We are not called every day to make great sacrifices to order, we are seldom required to set up the standard of the cross in barbarous climes, to sound the gospel to the ends of the world, and to accomplish the promises made to Jesus Christ, that he should have the heathen for his inheritance; and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, Ps. 2. 8. Seldom are we called to dare executioners to triumph in cruel sufferings and death, to confess Christ amidst fires and flames. We are rarely called to the great actions that make heroes: to die for our neighbours; to sacrifice ourselves for the public good, and to devote ourselves for our country.

If we are seldom required to perform great duties, thanks be to God we are seldom tempted to commit great crimes, to deceive a friend, to betray a trust,—to reveal a state—secret,—to make a sale of justice,—to perpetrate murder, or to persecute innocence. But in what moment of each day do we not meet with opportunities to commit little sins, and to perform duties of comparatively small importance.

Are you confined at home? You have little inconveniencies to suffer, little perverse humours to bear with, little disgusts to endure.

Are you in company? You have a few cautious tempers to manage, idle reports to discountenance, a few pernicious maxims to combat, profane jests to censure, sometimes you are obliged to resist iniquity openly, and sometimes hints to affect to tolerate it, in order to obtain an opportunity to oppose it with a future opportunity with great probability of success.

Do you prosper! What a source of little sins prosperity, if we sincerely love virtue! And what a source of little sins, if we are not always on our guard against the temptations to vice. Now a man is surrounded by multitudes to solicitude them a little kindness by little impeds to society. Where a little necessary expense must be incurred, there also a little expense must be avoided. Here some thing is due to rank, and must be observed, there rank would be disgraced, and some thing must be omitted.

Are you in adversity, under misfortunes, or sickness! How many miserable comforters! How many disgustful remedies! What intolerable weariness! So many articles, so many occasions to perform little duties, and to commit little sins.

Opportunities to commit little sins return every day, I may almost say, every moment of every day. A little sin is a little poison, slow indeed, but continually insinuating itself into the soul, till by degrees it issues in death. A man who does not watch against little sins, is liable to provoke God as often as an occasion to commit them presents itself. On the contrary, a man who makes conscience of practising little duties as well as great ones, finds every day, and every moment, opportunities of giving God proofs of his love. He has only a religion of times and circumstances, which is sometimes justly suspected, but a religion of influence that diffuses itself into every part of his life. There is not a moment in which he does not make some progress in his heavenly course. By his attention to every little duty, he discharges the greatest of all duties, that which St. Paul prescribes to all christians "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," 1. Cor. 10. 31. He is an exact imitator of Jesus Christ, "the author and finisher of his faith, who went about doing good," Heb. 12, 2, like him he can say, "I have set the Lord always before me; because he is at my right hand I shall never be moved" Ps. 16, 8. Had I not reason to affirm, that little duties compensate, by the frequency of their return, for what is wanting to constitute their importance.

The Luminary of March 25. contains what purports to be an "original letter No. 1" directed to a "son." In this letter there is a very objectionable sentence. I will not undertake to defend the author of the fire brand nor to save the brand from the stream of "contempt it met with. I will content myself with observing that the "contempt" swelled to a "stream," only in the estimation of those who essayed to pour it forth. The mild substitute which was all that was intended to be carried met with equal hostility; but was carried and ordered to be farwarded to the board of managers. It was agreed in the legislature that no publication should be made of the resolutions until sufficient time should have been given for the society to act upon them. The mass of the people cannot therefore be acquainted with them. To say then that they are unpopular, is to say the least, presuming upon conjecture or assuming the sentiment of an individual as the sentiment of the community. So far as I have ascertained the state of public feeling I have regarded the resolutions as exceedingly popular.

SOMETHING NEW.

Not long ago a deer was killed at Cape Palmas of an unusual collor and very singularly marked, being white from the top of the fore shoulders backward, including the fore and hind legs. Forward of that point, the head, neck, and ears down to the brisket, were all perfectly black; in appearance at first sight, like a black cape thrown over those parts.

The horns were smooth, and dangerously sharp, as some of the dogs pursuing him had sorry experience, two of them being killed. On being started, he betook himself immediately to the water from he could be dislodged only after death.—Africa's Luminary.

Mr. Editor:—In the last number of "Africa's Luminary" I observed a peice headed "Something New," which I think is quite new to the Editor and the world. I have therefore concluded to ask through one of the columns of your paper the following query.

If the deer's fore shoulders were white, what was the colour of his hind shoulders.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, MARCH 31th, 1845

Having an unusual press of business on hand this month, and also having to "be away" for a time, Rev. A. W. Anderson has kindly consented to act the Editor for us in geting out our March number of the Herald.

H. Teage.

EDUCATION

So soon as we were solicited to take the temporary charge of the "Herald" (for this month) we doubted our ability in conducting it in that manner that would be likely to give general satisfaction to its numerous readers we however were concluded to enter on the arduous duties of arranging, and extracting matter for this paper.

Having finished this department of our labour, the next thing that presented itself to our mind was, what subject should we choose for the editorial department, here we became not a little confused, owing to a variety of circumstances, all of which, we deem it unnecessary here to mention. But a few of them will perhaps be required. First, we being not acquainted with the business of editing or writing for news papers. Secondly, That our attainments in a literary point of view is very small, and thirdly: That we were at a loss for any one particular subject to write on. Said we to ourself it is as nothing at all to write the account of a "Tour" that has been made without reference to authorship, for in this one would imagine that you are merely gratifying the curiosity of your friends, or what is still better, that you are performing a public duty in disseminating a knowledge of certain facts met with in your journey. One would appear as a man telling a story, either in answer to the questions of the company, or simply because he believes it to be worth relating. But said we to write expressly and exclusively for a "News paper" is all together an other affair. We had no little trouble in bringing our mind to bear on any one particular subject and as purchance, the subject of education almost involuntarily stole in upon our mind, think's we this is certainly a good subject, we shall attempt it at any rate. Thus we commences, in the following strain.

There is perhaps, nothing of more importance to the human race, and which has a more direct bearing on the happiness of all ranks, than the cultivation of the mental faculties, and the acquisition of substantial knowledge.

Whether we consider man as a transitory inhabitant of this lower world, or as in a state of progression to another region of existence—it is of the utmost importance that he be thoroughly acquainted with the great author of his existence, with the general structure of the universe in which he is placed, with the relations in which he stands to his fellow men, and the other beings which surround him, with the duties he ought to discharge to his Creator, and to his own species, with the nature of that eternal world to which he is destined, and with that train of action and of contemplation which will prepare him for the enjoyments of a future and eternal state of existence.

All the other subjects which can employ the attention of the human mind must evidently be viewed as in some degree subordinable to this. For on the acquisition of the knowledge to which we allude, and the corresponding course of conduct to which it leads, depends the happiness of man, considered both as an individual, and as a member of the great family to which he belongs—his happiness both in the present life and in the life to come when we consider the mass of depravity which hovers around us, the deplorable ignorance, the superstitious notions, the false conceptions in regard to many important truths, the evil passions, and the grovelling affections, which so generally prevail, we must acknowledge that much indeed remains to be accomplished, before the great body of the people be thoroughly enlightened in the knowledge of all those subjects in which they are interested. And especially when it is remembered that the virtue of our children, must be the basis on which our political, as well as domestic happiness will be established,—if established at all, surely then it is of the first importance, to educate our children, to nurture the smallest bud of their juvenile virtue to its full blossom. This is certainly the only true and sure way to raise Liberia to a state of eminence and respectability among the nations of the earth. We repeat educate your children at all hazards, at all events, educate them, you will erect for them an impregnable rampart, a formidable bulwork for the defence of posterity. As man is a being compounded of a corporal organized structure, and a system of intellectual powers, is evident, and it is very apparent from what little acquaintance we have of human nature that our Creator intended that man should be frequently employed both in action, and in contemplation. But when his physical powers only are set in motion, and the principal object of his activity is to suppy the wants of his animal frame, he can be considered as little superior to the lower order of animated existence, and must in a great measure, frustrate the end of his creator in bestowing upon him the faculties of his rational nature. We regret to say that almost every thing else is attempted to be accurately adjusted, while the moral and intellectual improvements of the mass of the community is left either to the direction of chance or to the injudicious schemes of weak and ignorant minds. This is wrong it should not be so, a few days ago we in conversation with a few friends suggested the propriety of this subject as being paramount to all other earthly consideration, we were laughed at and told that we are not in a prepared state to attend to this subject. Why not said we, shall we wait until our land is delluged with ignorance,—shall we wait until we become wealthy—shall we pospone to an indefinite period what must ultimately be established, if society is expected to go on in its progress towards perfection. No no, let it not be said, we must awake from our slumbers, and do all that we can to educate our children. Did the one half of the people of this commonwealth really know the importance of a good education, they certainly would not treat a subject of so much magnitude so slightly and indifferently Did they know that the ignorance of any people is the certain prelude to their poverty and slavery, they would speak and act differently.

We affirm that nothing short of a comprehensive and efficent system of education should be the model after which we ought to copy, and to which all our arrangements should gradually, but steadily, approximate,

It may be thought a degree of arrogance and presumption to carry our suggestion on a subject of such delicacy and importance, any further. But waving an extreme sensibility to diffidence and reserve, we shall further suggest that a special regard to this subject must be paid. It is to be feared that other subjects than that, of education, has engrossed our attention and detached our mind off from what ought to be most contemplated. It is also to be feared that we have learned too well, the old Proverbial saying "to get what you can, and keep what you have got" this is a mode a fundamental maxim with all classes. Nor is it very strange that this maxim is so steadily pursued. Since it is regarded as the only clue to wealth and respectability. But not so, we regard a well educated man, or set of people, as possessing within his or their reach, wisdom, knowledge, riches, power, and all the esentials of a well regulated government. Here we must define what we mean by an educated man, or set of men. And as the term is equivocal we must generalize. We mean that a man or set of people must not only be acquainted with a little smattering of English grammer and arithmetic, not only write his or their own names. But must become acquainted with at least the outlines of the georgraphy of his own country its climate, the manners of its people, the cultivation of its soil, its products, its history &c. &., all of these we believe are comprehended in the term education, any thing short of this attainment is not properly speaking education. If this be true, says one please to inform us how and when shall we ever be able to educate our children. We answer, tax yourselves for this purpose—What! tax ourselves do you say, yes tax yourselves, we reply. This is monsterous, why we are already taxed to our eyes, for every thing we consume, why our tariff is already too oppressive, besides all this we have too many other matters equally important to be accomplished first. But we rejoin, no not so, we insist that to educate your children is by far more paramount to any other earthly consideration. Believe us when we tell you that every remark contrary to this truth will only flow from a spirit of misanthropy, and are intended, if possible, to fix the moral world in a quiescent state, as the material world was supposed to be in former times, and damp every exertion that ought to be made to promote the improvement and the happiness of our race, we further remark that they are likewise inconsistent with the dictates of divine revalation, which plainly declares that "the knowledge of Jehovah shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the chanels of the sea" and that, "all shall know him, from the least to the greatest. If ever this important object is to be accomplished—which the predictions of ancient prophecy abundantly testify, and of which we are left no room to doubt. It is high time that we arrouse ourselves from our slumbers and engage with increased activity and zeal in the work of reformation and of rational instruction.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

WHY IGNORANCE AND CRIME ARE CONNECTED.

1. Man is made to know. This is the object of his being: and if he is not educated, he cannot fulfil this high destiny, and must necessarily from the very nature of his existence, go through life unprepared, dissatisfied, and miserable. And the miserable easily fall into vice.

2 Doctor Johnson was once asked—"who is the most unhappy man." The reply of the sage was "the man who cannot read on a rainy day."

The wisdom of this saying came from close observation and a thorough knowledge of our nature.

3. We may lay it down as an universal maxim—having as few exceptions as any of the general truths which men have recorded—that uneducated minds is educated vice. The ignorant man is shunned by the better part of the community and left in low society; left ignorant of his own nature, of his institutions, and of his Creator. He haves an error for the truth, he knows not.

4. I was once walking in a Park with a friend and on one of the trees was nailed this notice—"All dogs found in this Park will be shot"—said my friend "if dogs cannot read, they are pretty badly off here." Now the Creator has written his laws not only on trees, but in the arching heavens, on the green earth and unto the very mind and form of man: and if man cannot read he is pretty banly off here—worse off than the dog for he has a master to read for him, but man owns no master.

5. If in the darkness of night the sun should stop and be seen no more, how soon would men devour each other, and desolation reign. So if knowledge should sink from the earth and men no more have the light of education, how sudden would we change to savages. It is education that gives liberty to nations, and virtue and happiness to individuals.

6. There is a voice coming from every tomb and every living tongue which tells us that man needs knowledge to govern his apetites and posistion and to render him happy.—Common School Assistant.

LOTS WIFE.

Mr. Lolemin in his agricultural address last week, illustrated the folly of modern female education by an anecdote. A young man who had for a long while remained in that useless state assignated by "a half pair of cissors," at last determined he would procure him a wife. He got the refusal" of one who was beautiful and fashionably accomplished, and took her upon trial to his home. Soon learning that she knew nothing, either how to darn a stocking, or boil a potatoe, or roast a bit of beef, he returned her to her father's house, as having been weighed in the ballance and found wanting.

A suit was commenced by the good lady, but the husband alleged that she was not "up to the sample," and of course the obligation to retain the commodity was not binding. The jury inflicted a fine of a few dollars, but he would have given a fortune rather than not to be liberated from such an irksome engagement.

"As well might the farmer have the original vesuvio Midicis placed in his kitchen," said the orator "as some of the modern fashionable women."

"Indeed" continued he, "it would be much better to have Lot's wife standing here, for she might answer one useful purpose: she might salt his bacon.—Common School Assistant.

THE ODD FAMILY.

In the reign of William the Third, there lived in Ipswich, in Suffolk, a family, which, from the number of pecularities belonging to it, was distinguished by the name of the Odd Family. Every event remarkably good or bad happened to this family on an odd day of the month, and every one of them had something odd in his or her person, manner, and behaviour; the very letters in their christian names always happened to be an odd number. The husband's name was Peter, and the wife's Rabah; they had seven children, all boys, viz Solomon, Roger, James, Matthew, Jonas, David, and Ezekiel. The husband had but one leg, his wife but one arm. Solomon was born blind of the left eye, and Roger lost his right eye by accident; James had his left ear pulled off by a boy in a quarrel, and Matthew was born with only three fingers on his right hand; Jonas had a stump foot, and David was hump-backed; all these, except David, were remarkably short, while Ezekiel was six feet two inches high at the age of nineteen; the stump-footed Jonas, and the hump-backed David, got wives of fortune; but no girl would listen to the addresses of the rest. The husband's hair was as black as jet, and the wife's remarkably white, yet every one of the children's was red. The husband had the peculiar misfortune of falling into a deep saw-pit, where he was starved to death in the year 1701; and his wife, refusing all kinds of sustenance, died in five days after him. In the year 1703, Ezekiel enlisted as a grenadier, and although he was afterwards wounded in twenty-three places he recovered. Roger, James, Matthew, Jonas, and David, died at different places on the same day in 1713, and Solomon and Ezekiel were drowned together in crossing the Thames, in the year 1723.

CONFUSION OF THE SENSES.

Some years ago there was a woman residing in the neighbourhood of Lyons, who seemed to have the quality of one sense transferred to another. A very learned physician, a writer in the Journal de Saute, gives an account of having visited this woman at Lyons. He says,—"To believe in apparent impossibilities is often the necessity of men of science; but it is their good fortune likewise to discover, that the world contains many more miracles than is at first imagined; that nothing is impossible, as referred to the omnipotence of the Deity; and that impossibilities are much rarer in the combination of human life than the vanity of science will acknowledge.

"The woman whom I visited, and to whom I presented several sorts of medicines, powders, simples, compounds, and many other substances, which I am convinced she never saw before, told me their several tastes, as nearly, and with as much precision, as taste could pronounce. She described them, indeed, with astonishing exactness, and frequently when my own palate was confounded.

"Her eyes were next bound with a thick bandage, and I drew from my pockets several sorts of silk ribbands. All those that differed in the original colors she immediately told me. It was in vain to attempt puzzling her; she made no mistake; she passed the ribband merely through her hand, and immediately decided on its peculiar color. She could in fact, discover the quality of any thing by the touch or taste as accurately as I could do with my eyes.

"The organs of hearing were then closed, as well as the contrivance of stuffing the ears would answer the purpose. I then commenced a conversation with a friend in the apartment, and spoke in almost inaudible whispers. She repeated, with great power of memory, every word of the conversation. In short, I came away a convert; in other words, believed what I had seen. A philosopher knows the fallibility of the senses; but he should know, likewise, that science ought not to reject because it cannot have demonstration."

SHORT SAYINGS.

An ignorant man contented, is a degraded man.

To leave a man uneducated, is to paralyze his soul, blot out his reason, and crush his upward aspirations—It is murder in the first degree.

[illegible] only can draw off that "exterminating thunder" of ignorant mass.

[illegible]

You may place man where you please—you may oppress him as you please—you may dry up to the uttermost the fountains of his feeling, the springs of his thought—and the idea that he was born to know and learn, will survive it all. It is allied to his hope of immortality—it is the ethereal part of his nature which freezing ignorance cannot reach. God made man to know—society is obligated to teach him, and he looks to the nature which God has given him, and to the obligations of society, can raise his honest head and demand an education.

BY J. S. BUCKINGHAM.

Hail! Sovereign of the world of Floods! whose majesty and might
First dazzles—then enraptures—then o'crawes the aching sight;
The pomp of Kings and Emperors, in every clime and zone,
Grows dim beneath the splendors of thy glorious watery throne.

2.

No fleets can stop thy progress—no armies bid thee stay—
But onward—onward—onward—thy march still holds its way;
The rising mist that veils thee—as thine herald, goes before—
And the music that proclaims thee—is the thundering Cateract's roar.

3.

Thy diadem is an emerald green, of the purest brightest hue.
Set around with waves of snow-white foam, in spay of feathery dew,
While tresses of the brightest pearls float o'er thine ample sheet,
And the Rainbow lays its gorgeous gems, in tribute, at thy feet.

4.

Thy reign is of the ancient days, thy sceptre from on high—
Thy birth was when the morning stars together sang with joy;
The Sun, the Moon, and all the Orbs that shine upon thee now,
Saw the first wreath of glory which entwin'd thine infant brow.

5.

And, from that hour to this, in which I gaze upon thy stream,
From age to age, in Winter's frost, or Summer's sultry beam,
By day, by night, without a pause, thy waves, with loud acclaim,
In caseless sounds, have still proclaimed the Great Eternal's Name.

6.

For whether, on thy forest banks, the Indian of the Wood,
Or, since his days, the Red Man's foe, on his father land have stood,
Whoe'er has seen thine incense rise, or heard thy torrents' roar,
Must have bent before the God of All! to worship and adore.

7.

Accept, then, O! Supremely Great! O! Infinite!—O! God!
From this primeval Altar, the green and virgin sod,
The humble homage fleet my soul in gratitude would pay
[illegible] guarded me through all my
[illegible]
[illegible] bought, in the hollow of thy hand.
[illegible] the vaults of the bright firmament, thy balance, girdle of sand;
If Niagara's rolling flood seems great to us who lowly bow,
O! great Creator of the whole! how passing Great art Thou!

9.

Yet tho' thy power is greater than the finite mind can scan,
Still greater is thy Mercy shown to weak, dependant man;
For him, thou fill'st the teeming fields with abundance yielding seed,
For him, the woods the lakes, the seas, supply his hourly need.

10.

Around, on high—or far, or near—the universal whole
Proclaims thy glory, as the orbs in their fixed courses roll;
And from Creation's greatful voice, the hymn ascends above,
While Heaven re-echoes back to Earth, the chorus, "God is Love."

"I STRIKE MY FLAG."

These were the dying word of Commodore Hull. Rev. Walter Colton gives the following beautiful poem on this striking exclamation of the expiring hero:

I strike! not to the sceptred king—
A man of mortal breath—
A weak, imperious, guilty thing:
I strike to thee, O Death!

I strike that flag which, in the fight,
The hope of millions hailed;
That flag which threw its meteor light
Where England's lion quailed.

I strike to thee, whose mandates fall
Alike on king and slave;
Whose livery is the shroud and pall,
And palace court, the grave.

Thy captives crowd the caverned earth,
They fill the rolling sea;
From court and camp, the wave and hearth,
All, all have bowed to thee.

But thou, stern Death, must yet resign
Thy sceptre o'er this dust,
The Power that makes the mortal thine.
Will yet remand his trust.

That mighty voice shall reach this ear,
Beneath the grave's cold clod;
This form, these features re-appear
In life before their God.

Origin of the name "Old Dominion,"

AS APPLIED TO VIRGINIA.

There is, in the possession of the Massachusetts Historical Society, a coin of the following description. On one side is a head, and the words "Georgius III. Rex." On the other side is a shield, on which are quartered the arms of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Virginia. The whole surmounted by a crown, and encircled with the word "Virginia 1773."

A similar coin was dug up a few years since, and the following statement was published with the description of it. "During the usurpation of Cromwell, the colony of Virginia refused to acknowledge his authority, and declared itself independent. Shortly after, finding that Cromwell threatened to send a fleet and army to reduce Virginia to subjection, and fearing the ability of this feeble state to withstand this force, she sent over in a small ship, a messenger to Charles II., then an exile at Breda, in Flanders. Charles accepted the invitation to come over, and be King of Virginia, and was on the eve of embarking when he was recalled to the crown of England. As soon as he was restored to the throne of England, in gratitude for the loyalty of Virginia, he caused her coat of arms to be quartered with those of England, Scotland, and Ireland, as an independent member of the Empire.

The above coin is clearly confirmatory of these facts. Hence the origin of the phrase "Old Dominion," frequently applied to Virginia.

History does not confirm all these statements, though it establishes some; and sufficiently discloses in the conduct of Virginia, during the Protectorate of Cromwell, a cause for the origin of the name, "Old Dominion." The facts as gathered from a variety of reliable historians appear to be these

After the death of king Charles I., and the installation of Oliver Cromwell as Protector, the colony of Virginia, refused to acknowledge his authority, and parliament having subdued opposition elsewhere, were not disposed to submit to such a resistance of its authority by the twenty thousand inhabitants of Virginia. It issued an ordinance declaring them notorious robbers and traitors; prohibited all intercourse with the refractory colonists, either by the people of England, the inhabitants of the other American settlements, or with foreign nations; and finally, sent over a fleet under Sir George Ayscue, "to overpower the provincial royalists, and extinguish the last traces of monarchical authority; that still lingered in the extremities of the empire" The commissioners "appointed to accompany this expedition" were empowered to try in the first instance the efficacy of pardons and other conciliatory propositions in reducing the colonists to obedience; but if their pacific overtures should prove ineffectual, they were then to employ every species of hostile operation, &c.

From Barbadoes, Sir, George Ayscue despatched Capt. Dennis with a small squadron of ships to the Chesapeake to land his forces, and drive Sir William Berkley out of Virginia; for during the whole preceding struggle of Charles I., and the parliament, the Virginians were firm on the side of the King, and enacted a declaration, "that they were born under a monarcy, and would never degenerate from the condition of their births, by being subject to any other government." After the King was beheaded, they acknowledged the authority of the fugitive Prince, and actually continued the Provincial government under a commission, which he sent to Sir William Burkley, from this retreat at Breda. The young Prince was not however actually invited over to establish a kingdom in Virginia; though according to Clarendon, Sir William Berkley was so assured of the loyalty of the inhabitants and so impressed with confidence of success, that he wrote to him almost inviting him to America." In these acts consisted the enmity of the Parliament, to the Governor; and for this open defiance of its power, Virginia was to be ravaged by a fleet on her waters, and insidious assassins on her soil. Historians differ greatly as to the proceedings of Sir William, after the arrival of the fleet within the capes of Virginia, several, as Beverly, (p. 54) Old mixon (i. 375) Burke (European settlements (ii. 223) Grahame (i. 99) have asserted that he made a great show of resistance, assisted by the Dutch ships in the harbour, and the royalists, who were the majority of the population.

Bancroft however, (i. 223) citing contemporary authorities of the highest value, says, "no sooner had the Guinea frigate anchored in the waters of the Chesapeake, than (quoting from Clarendon,) "all thoughts of resistance were laid aside." It marks continues Bancroft, the character of the Virginians; that they refused to surrender to force, but yielded by a voluntary deed and mutual compact." "By the articles of surrender, a complete indemnity was stipulated for all past offences; and the colonists, recognizing the authority, were admitted into the bosom of the English commonwealth, and expressly assured of an equal participation in all the privileges of the free people of England. In particular, it provided that the provincial Assembly should retain its wonted functions, and that "the people of Virginia shall have as free trade as the people of England, to all places and with all nations?" and "shall be free from all taxes, customs and impositions whatsoever, without the consent of their own assembly." Berkley disdained to make any stipulation for himself, with those whom his principles of loyalty taught him to regard as usurpers. Without leaving Virginia, he withdrew to a retired situation, where he continued to reside as a private individual, universally beloved and respected, till a new revolution was to summon him once more to defy the republican forces of England and restore the ascendency of royalty in the colony.

This was in March, 1652. And affairs continued much in this state until 1660. In mean time, Richard Bennet, Edward Diggs, and Samuel Matthews had been severally elected by the Burgesses, Governor of Virginia, under allegiance to Oliver Cromwell, and on his death in 1658, to Richard Cromwell. But in 1660, Gov. Matthews died, and the people discontented with some commercial restriction imposed by the Protectorate, did not wait for a new commission from England, but elected Sir Wm. Berkley, and "by an obliging violence, compelled him to accept the Government." He however, refused to act under the usurpation of the Cromwell's and would not consent, unless they "joined with him in venturing their lives and fortunes for the King, who was then an exile."

"This" says Beverly, "was their dearest wish, and therefore, with an unanimous voice, they told him that they were ready to hazzard all for the king."—Now, this was actually before the King's return to England, and proceeded from a brave principle of loyalty, for which they had no example. Sir William Burkly embraced their choice, and forthwith proclaimed Charles II, king of England, Scotland, Ireland and Virginia, and caused all process to be issued in his name. Thus His Majesty was actually King of Virginia before he was in England." On the restoration of the King, he sent Sir William a new commission, and granted him permission to visit England.

He was received by the monarch with which kindness' and there is recorded a tradition that the King in compliment to the colony, wore at his coronation, a robe made of the silk which was sent from thence. —such is a condensed narrative of the causes and incidents which gave to Virginia the honored title of "The Old Dominion."—Savannah Georgian.

THAT HOLE IN THE POCKET.

Miss Martineau has written any quantity of matter more tiresome than the following, which we clip from the Cincinati Cronicle—but she never compressed so much good sense in so short a space in her life.—The author is Mr. James H. Perkins, one of the vigorous writers of the young West, whose sketches, collected in a volume, would make a book alike readable and useful.

In this lies the true secret of economy—the care of sixpenses. Many people throw them away without remorse or consideration—not reflecting that a penny a day is more than three dollars a year. We should complain loudly if a head tax to that amount were laid upon us; but when we came to add that we uselessly tax ourselves for our penny expenses, we shall find that we waste in this way, annually, quite enough to supply a family with winter fuel.

"It is now about a year since my wife said to me, one day, 'Pray, Mr, Slackwater, have you that half dollar about you that I gave you this morning?' I felt in my waiscoat pocket, and I felt in my breeches pocket, and I turned my purse inside out, but it was all empty space—which is very different from specie; so I said to Mrs. Slackwater, 'I've lost it, my dear, positively, there must be a hole in my pocket—'I'l sew it up,' said she.

"An hour or two after, I met Tom Snibbins.—'How did that ice cream set?' said Tom. 'It set,' said I, 'like the sun, gloriously.' And, as I spoke, it flashed upon me that my missing half dollar had paid for those ice creams; however, I held my peace, for Mrs. Slackwater sometimes makes remarks; and even when she assured me at breakfast, next morning, that there was no hole in my pocket, what could I do but lift up my brow and say, 'Ah! isn't there! really!"

"Before a week had gone by, my wife, like a dutiful helpmare, as she is always, gave me her loose change to keep, called for a 25 cent piece that had been deposited in my sub-treasury for safe keeping; 'there was a poor womon at the door,' she said, 'that she had promised it to, for certain." 'Well, wait a moment,' I cried; so I pushed inquiries first in this direction, then in that, and then in the other—but vacancy returned a horrid groan. 'On my soul,' said I, thinking it best to show a bold front, 'you must keep my pockets in better repair, Mrs. Slackwater: this piece, with I know not how many more, is lost, because some corner or seam in my plaguy pockets is left open.'

"'Are you sure?' said Mrs. Slackwater.

"'Sure! aye, that I am; it's gone, totally gone.'

"My wife dismissed her promise, and then, in her quiet way, asked me to change my pantaloons before I went out, and, to bar all argument, laid another pair on my knees.

"That evening, allow me to remark, gentlemen of the species 'husband,' I was very loathe to go home to tea: I had half a mind to bore some bachelor friend; and when hunger and habit, in their unassuming manner, one on each side, walked me up to my own door, the touch of the brass knob made my blood run cold. But do not thing Mrs. Slackwater is a Tartar, my good friends, because I thus shrunk from home; the fact was, that I had, while abroad, called to him the fate of her 25 cent piece, which I had invested in smoke—that is to say, cigars; and I feared to think of her comments on my pantaloon pockets.

"These things went on for some month; we were poor to begin with, and grew poorer, or, at any rate, no richer, fast. Times grew worse and worse; even my poeket book was no longer to be trusted, the rag slipped from it in a manner most incredible to relate—as an Irish song says,

'And such was the fate of poor Paddy O'More,
That his purse had the more rents, as he had the fewer."

"At length one day my wife came in with a subscription paper for the Orphan's Ayslum. I looked at it, and sighed, and picked my teeth, and shook my head, and handed it back to her.

"'Ned Bowen,' said she, 'has put down ten dollars.'

"'The more shame to him,' I replied; 'he can't afford it; he can but just scrape along, any how, and in these times it aint right for him to do it.' My wife smiled in her sad way, and took the paper back to him that brought it.

"The next evening she asked me if I would go with her and see the Bowens, and as I had no objection, we started.

I knew that Ned Bowen did a small business, that would give him about $600 a year, and I thought it would be worth while to see what the sum would do in the way of housekeeping. We were admitted by Ned, and welcomed by Ned's wife a very neat little boy, of whom Mrs Slackwater had told me a great deal, as they had been school mates. All was as nice as wax, and yet substantial as iron—comfort was written all over the room. The evening passed, somehow or other, though we had no refreshment, an article which we never have at home, but always want when elsewhere, and I returned to our own establishment with mingled pleasure and chagrin.

"'What a pity,' said I to my wife, 'that Bowen don't keep within his income.'

"'He does,' she replied,

"'But how can he on $600?' was my answer, 'if he gives $10 to this charity and $5 to that, and live so snug and comfortable, too?'

"'Shall I tell you?' asked Mrs. Slackwater.

"'Certainly if you can.'

"'His wife,' said my wife, 'finds it just as easy to go without twenty or thirty dollars worth of ribbons and laces, as to buy them. They have no fruit but what they raise and have; iven them by country friends, whom they repay by a thousand little acts of kindness. They use no beer, which is not essential to his health as it is to yours; and then he buys no cigars or ice cream, or apples at 100 per cent, on market prices, or oranges at 12 cents a-piece, or candy, or new novels, or rare works that are still more rarely used—in short, my dear Mr. Slackwater, he has no hole in his pocket!'

"It was the first word of suspicion my wife had uttered on the subject, and it cut me to the quick! Cut me? I should rather say it sewed me up, me and my pockets, too: they have never been in holes since that evening

LIBERIA HERALD.

Address delivered by H. Teage before the members of the Liberia Lyceum convened in the Council Chamber on Wednesday evening the 21st, May 1845. In order to understand all the remarks below, it must be borne in mind that a great part of the exercises of our society consists of debates and oral discussions.

GENTLEMEN MEMBERS OF THE LIBERIA LYCEUM:—Called by your partiality to preside over your association for the present year, it has become my duty in obedience to your expressed will on taking the chair to address you on the occasion.

When I look around me—me! as my view is every where, by many so much my superiors in age in experience—in talents, in short in every qualification requisite to discharge with dignity to themselves and advantage to the association, the duties of the office with which you have been pleased to honor me, I could not, were I so disposed, close my eyes to the extreme partiality with which you have regarded me. Accept therefore gentlemen my most hearty thanks, and permit me to assure you that should my future course not sustain the high expectations which you have indulged it shall not be for want of my most strenuous and unremitting endeavours.

In an address of the kind I am called upon to deliver, it would seem that the objects of this institution and the best mode of securing them should be assigned a prominent place: and although another subject of deep, yea of vital importance to our whole community hath engrossed nearly my whole attention, as I doubt not gentlemen it is a subject of deepest solicitude to you also, yet as the ability to discuss this subject successfully, and to avail ourselves of all the benefits legitimately flowing from its successful discussion is one among the other purposes contemplated by your association, I proceed the more readily first to state the objects of the institution.

The constitution of the association in its 6th Article says "the object of this association shall be the diffusion of knowledge throughout the colony as the best method to advance not only general but individual improvement."

The object of our association then is the acquisition of knowledge. We have associated together that we may widen the field of our observation and extend the circle of our information on all subjects with which it is useful or ornamental to be acquainted. The opinions which we have formed and the sentiments we entertain whether derived from observation or imbibed from books, it is the object of this association to submit to a rigid scrutiny and to a close and searching examination; being assured that principles and doctrines that will not endure a proper test should be at once abandoned. Thus our association is intended to have a reflexive action: to confirm us in the information which we fancy we already possess or to convince us of its futility and give it to the winds.

But we also seek to increase our knowledge. Knowledge is derived from without. After all that has been said about innate ideas and principles, it will, I think, be no easy matter for any one to show, that we have one single idea that we did not originally receive by perception or sensation. It is admitted that when ideas are once received into the mind by the avenues of the senses, they may be, and are by every individual combined into forms in which they did not originally enter. What we mean to say is, that were it possible to resolve and analyse these mental combinations into their original and component parts they would be found to be ideas which could enter only by the senses. Mind or rather the capacity of receiving ideas is inherent in our nature—its development and improvement depend upon education and experience. The storehouse of knowledge is created with us, the ideas to adorn and enrich it are imported from abroad. It seems to be a law of our nature that every valuable acquisition is only to be obtained by labour. Eminently is this remark true of mental acquisitions, and as they are of all attainments the most valuable and ennobling so they demand the more constant labour, and unwearied diligent study. It is the possession of mind and its capacity of indefinite enlargement and improvement which imparts to man his dignity. For apart from mind wherein does he differ from the brute? The object of this institution is to educate and discipline this power—to call it into vigorous exercise and to direct it to its legitimate objects: or if I may use a figure, to levy a tribute on nature and art for the necessary furniture with which by a judicious combination and arrangement to adorn the apartment of knowledge.

We proceed in the next place to notice the means by which these objects will be most certainly attained.

The existence of our Lyceum indicates our conviction of the efficiency of associations. A little reflection will show that on this subject our opinion is not ill-founded. We are obeying the impulses of our nature. Man is a social being. God saw that it was not good for man to be alone and gave him woman—to soften down his asperity—to curb his wildness—to call out his sympathies into play and to perpetuate his species. Since men increased upon the earth we have ever found them driven to consociation as by the force of instinct. This disposition was implanted by our creator in the breasts of his rational creatures for the most salutary purposes. Every where and evermore union is strength, has long since pased into a proverb. We must however confine our remarks to the influence of literary and scientific associations on the mind of the student.

In the first place they enlarge the stock of material for the mental artificer. The object of the modern philosopy is to collect facts—unlike the ancient which was to explain phenomena. At each meeting of our institution it is to be expected, that each member will, in addition to the information which he may himself have collected in the interval since the last meeting, have the benefit of the industry and acquirements of every other member during the same period. Whatever each one and every one may have discovered, whether in morals or in politics—in law or in physicks—whether in history or geography—whether it concerns us as a distinct and seperate people or as related to other nations; whatever the discovery may be—it is expected the Lyceum will have the full benefit of it. What an augmentation of power!! and into how many different departments of nature, and art, and science we may thus simultaneously walk!!! Suppose gentlemen our institution should number twenty-five industrious students—men who while they move along in their daily walk, keep their eyes open and their brains at work—who attend regularly our meetings to hand over to the common stock their weekly gathering of facts and observations: each member would, in every one week, have the benefit of twenty-five weeks of observation and study. Not only have we no assurance that any one member would in the space of twice twenty-five weeks reap the same collection of facts in the field of observation or gather them from meditation and reflection, the offspring of observation; but on the contrary the probability is strong against the supposition. Nature's book, it is true is every where open, presenting to the enquiring eye lessons of wisdom and goodness; but she does not teach systems—or rather her lessons are not given in a systematic form. Systems are ours. Their utility results from the feebleness of our powers and the contraction of our vision. Overcome by partial antipathies, and bewildered by variety and profusion we need the uniformity of classification and the simplicity of systematic arrangement in order to clear and distinct comprehension.

I have already remarked that all our knowledge is acquired originally by the senses. If this remark be true the world at large must be our field—not indeed the harvest field of matured fruit, but the forest of Lebonan yielding abundant material to the skilful artisan, or the quarry whence to bring the varigated marble to adorn and beautify the edifice. It is characteristic of the student that his mind is ever in motion. Whether he be engaged in pursuits exclusively literary and directs his mind to the acquisition of languages; to their structure and idiomatic peculiarities; to philosophy—to history or to chronology—or whether he be more especially a student of nature and examines and analyses the material subsistances around him, ascertains their uses and powers as they are now found, or their effects in different combinations, still the world is his field.

The fixed employment of most men astricting them as it necessarily does to a degree of sameness in their daily walk and daily train of thought, precludes the opportunity of regular extensive excursions and deplorably contracts their sphere of observation. The minds of men are differently constituted and diverse in their character. Facts and phenomena which would altogether elude minds of one class would be instantly detected by those of another. The poetry of nature awakens the devotion and kindles the rapture of one, the utility and benevolence of her arrangements feed the contemplation of an other. The one revels in whatever is grand and whatever is beautiful, the other dwells with pleasure only on what is beneficent. Utility is the food of one—sublimity the element of the other. In the same field where the man of highly imaginative mind would kindle into extacy, the cold, friged, but equally intellectual man would find nothing to arouse his energies. The faculty of observation is not only strengthened by exercise, but becomes stronger and keener in proportion as it is continuously directed to a particular subject; and each one will be found to possess a greater acuteness of perception of all the shades of phenonema which fall more especially within his particular province of study. Thus an association by bringing together men from various walks of life and engaged in different departments of study—men varied in their mental constitution and diverse in their habits and modes of thought, widens the sphere of observation to an extent altogether incalculable.

In enumerating the advantages offered by our society I would by no means overlook the arena it presents for intellectual gladiatorship. In some respects the mind resembles some of the members of the body. Its energy and dexterity are both increased by exercise; and in no kind of exertion in which the mind is capable of enjoying does it find so great benefit as in collision with mind. Much exertion it is confessed, is sometimes requisite to carry the works of some frowning proposition; and we occasionally find our patience, and our dexterity and acuteness too, heavily taxed to detect a subtle and specious written sophism—to strip it of its garb and to expose its hollowness and hypocricy. But when in our opinion we have triumphed, the work is once and forever completed, and in the dethroned usurper at our feet we behold a trophy of our prowess. Wonderful victory! frequently the mere maniac exultation of ignorance over its own folly, or the mad laugh of inanity at its own stolidity! Many such a visionary victory has no doubt quickened the pulse of the victor and circled a wreath of glory around his brow as he sat silently and complacently in his study!! A victory wrought in the field of actual combat may be, and frequently is an altogether different thing from a victory achieved in the silent meditation of the study. In debate we encounter the living combatant, not the mere passive proposition. As anxious to defend as we are to overthrow, he parrys our blow and eludes its force—rapidly and dexterously changes his position, concentrates his whole force in the defence of the assailable points in his works, and frequently by an unexpected and furious sortie diverts our force and throws us on the defensive by becoming in his turn the assailant. "The mind of the controvertist" says an eloquent writer "warmed and agitated is turned to every quarter." He explores the whole ground of debate, detects with readiness the weak points of an opposing argument, and like a skilful tactician brings down upon them the whole pressure of his force.

It is to be regretted that in the eager strife of debate truth is too often forgotten in the anxiety for triumph. This is to be deplored; and it should become a maxim with every one to enter upon a discussion with no other design than to elicit truth, and to pursue it no further than the object demands; for frequent, protracted and violent struggles for the mere purpose of triumph while at the same time our secret conviction is that truth lies on the opposite side, may operate to produce in our mind a deplorable confusion of ideas of the value of that which alone gives to victory its importance—namely truth. But after allowing to this, and to every other objection which can be urged against debates and oral discussions all the force they are entitled to, still it must be conceded the benefits of such exercises are of the very first importance. It is a species of engagement in which the mind acquires dexterity of movement and elasticity of force; in which its faculty of perception is whetted and edged, and its facility of detecting differences and discovering analogies wonderfully increased. The enemy is met in the open field and grappled with hand to hand. The conspicuousness of the theatre—the gaze of congregated spectators—the fire of the eager eye and the hope of the approving award all combined, wakens in the mind an ardor, and kindles in it an enthusiasm, and imparts to it an energy it can never hope to feel in the seclusion of the cloister. It is in these keen conflicts that the doublings and evasions of sophistry are unravelled and exposed, and specious and imposing paradoxes laid bare. It is in these shocks that the sparks of truth are struck out.

It would seem proper that we should now glance, as all the time will allow us to do is merely to glance at some of the benefits resulting from a sound education, or from an improved, onlightened and disciplined mind.

I have already remarked that man is a social being, and that in obedience to the law under which he is created he is every where found seeking the association of his kind. Convenience and utility have diversified their peculiar character in subordination to the great object of all which is the felicity and perfection of human nature. From these associations spring new and peculiar duties and obligations. The family and the social, the political and the ecclesiastical association have each its peculiar rights and obligations: and each political association as a member of the great family of man is reciprocally bound to all the others by the relation of a common nature, and to the discharge of the duties therefrom arising. The happiness of each individual of any association and as a consequence the felicity of the whole, will evermore be found in proportion to the fidelity with which each performs his appropriate duties and sustains his appropriate obligations: and when there is no defect in ability it may be assumed as certain, that each will faithfully perform his part in proportion as he is convinced of its personal utility. Ignorance is the hot-bed of vice—the rank and prolific soil in which most of the vices grow, which afflict society. It is the educated and disciplined mind that comprehends the whole system of duties—examines them in all their details, surveys them in all their relations and foresees the certain beneficial effect of their performance upon society. These are the subjects upon which the mind may expend all its force. Here is the element in which it may rise, and soar, and expatiate until it attains an angel's size, and an angel's elevation. For duty to our God our neighbour and ourselves comprehends the sum of human obligation.

In the use of the term education however, I would not be misunderstood, and at the risk of taxing your patience a moment I must here explain myself.

I by no means use the term education in that sense in which it was used by the ancients and in which it is now used by many of the moderns. Holding the term in this sense you would, no doubt, confront me with many splendid exceptions, of both ancient and modern date. The present day presents us with many unhappy instances of highly cultivated minds exerting a most disastrous influence upon the human family; and while it is acknowledged that no nation was more refined or highly cultivated than the Greeks, it will not be denied, that none did less for the moral renovation of the world. The grand error of both the instances we have noticed lies in this—that while they pay all anention to mental cultivation, they entirely overlook man's moral nature or deplorably misconceive it. The ancients had it is true their ethics, their systems of morals. But having no certain first principles, firmly and authoritively planted as a basis, the superstructures erected were unsubstantial and insecure, and invariably yielded to the raging elements of unchastened human passions. Their systems were mere speculations, always vague, frequently contradictory and as numerous as their abettors. Modern sophists have assumed for disguise a more decent and unpretending title—they adopt for their motto the fitness of things, and which fitness we will find upon examination to depend entirely upon the taste of the writer.

I pass that numerous class of writers called novelists to which the frivolity and sickly sentimentalism of the age pay such obsequious court and so much fulsome adulation, with the remark, that while the mental vigor, close observation and commanding eloquence which some of them display are worthy of all admiration, their degenerate and licentious sentiments should be an insuperable barrier to their introduction into well ordered society. Many of Bulwar's most brilliant sentences are gilded infidelity and the productions of Paul de Kock are gross licentiousness!!

The education of which I speak regards man not only as an actor on the present scene, but relates to the whole duration of his being. It regards his future well being as dependent upon his present conduct, and it seeks to regulate this conduct accordingly. You will perceive then at once, that I entertain no sympathy for that system of education in which the principles inculcated in the bible have no place. Every such system is radically defective. Its teachings cannot penetrate into the depths of man's being—for as it is only in his moral nature that responsibilities are founded, so the only instruction that can permanently benefit him is that which enlightens his moral nature to sustain those obligations. To persuade men to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God, should be the end of all instruction. Thus the education we recommend and advocate is that which aims to prepare man for the duties of his station.

The advantages of a sound education are so numerous that in adverting to them I know not scarcely where to begin. Not the least among them is the perennial source of pure and unsophisticated pleasures which it opens to the mind. The educated man is not wholly dependent on others for his happiness. His mind is already the repository of materials on which it is only necessary to make requisitions to enkindle the most delightful emotions. Images long since appropriated and treasured up in the storehouse of memory he has only to bring out, and by a skilful combination and arrangement he can dispose them into endless forms to tempt and gratify the eye of contemplation. He needs not the living companion for instructive maxims and enlivening converse, nor the living example for incentive to action. In the voice of history he listens to the lessons of departed wisdom, while the recorded actions of departed virtue fans in his bosom the fire of a generous emulation. He can ascend to the infancy of nations, when abandoning the plains and forests where as individuals they roamed in all the wildness of an unrestrained freedom, they gradually coalesce into the form and compactedness of political associations—contemplate them as they compose the elements and plant the basis of their future prosperity—move along with them as they advance step by step to their greatness, and look with interest and concern on the elements of destruction evolving in the working of their institutions, acquiring force with their expansion until they explode and scatter the nation to the winds. The pleasure derived from such contemplations are of a private character, the lessons deduced from them are of public utility.

The great destroyer of human institutions era the human passions, and human institutions have a wonderful effect in awakening the passions and in directing their movement, so that they contain a power of mutual generation and mutual destruction. That apparently simplest, and certainly the most unstable of all forms of government; I mean a democracy has been ever found among an ignorant people to be merely an expression of public impatience of control. The ferocity and licentiousness of opinion—the rage and rancour of party spirit—the rabid struggle for place and power—the furious contention for spoil and the swarm of croaking demagogues which we ever find deforming such a constitution are alike its offspring and its destroyer. The instability of this form of society and the evils resulting from it are undoubtedly owing to pride and ignorance—to high notions of natural equality, which in themselves are just, and ignorance of duty. This system awakens the passions and ignorance arms them with fury. Enlighten the people; let them be no longer the dupes of unprincipled political blacklegs, and this system which is now every where the symbol of strife and confusion may become in practice, what it certainly is in theory, the most just and beautiful of all systems. Without deciding upon the claims of any particular form of government, which I by no means regard myself able to do, I feel at liberty to remark, that under all, ignorance is the great enemy of human happiness and human liberty, but that under none can a people be either unhappy or oppressed who are acquainted alike with their rights and their duties. The education of a people then should be an object of primary importance, as upon it depend in a very great degree their own happiness and the stability of their institutions.

Gentlemem we have fallen on momentous times. We have been as asleep—but in the midst of pleasing dreams we are aroused by the din of battle and the clanging trumpet calling us to arms.

Our position is of all positions the most difficult to discribe—it is altogether anomalous, and to the last degree perplexing. We have hitherto enjoyed privileges and exercised rights by sufferance under the patronage of the American Colonization Society. Up to the present period our colony and every thing connected with it have been too insignificant to tempt the cupidity or call forth the opposition of foreign nations. The days of our infancy are passing away—A little one has become a thousand and a strong one a great nation: or to drop the figure, the word Liberia begins to be heard abroad as a name designating a place whence valuable articles of commerce are exported, and which may at no distant day become a still wider door for the introduction of foreign production into Africa, and for the passage of African production into foreign countries. These considerations have no doubt prompted the question "Tell us by what authority thou dost these things." It were idle to enter on the discussion of right abstractedly or speculatively considered. Such arguments have no force with the selfish generations of the present day. We must conform at once to the maxims and settled usages of the world. We must define our rights and assume their correllative responsibilities—must prepare to sustain the one and demand the other. Imposing task—momentous enterprise. Imposing and momentous however as it may be, there is no discharge from this war except to certain death. Like the wanderers from Samaria we shall find it certain death to remain here or to return to the city. Hope can be indulged only in going forward. Let us then not falter, because to falter is to yield. Let us fix our eye upon the prize and advance steadily toward to it. It is a grand and noble object and worthy of the consecration of our entire time and talent. In this struggle union is strength. Let us sink all minor and personal differences in a general concern for the public good. Let all our feelings and all our sympathies be of a public character—let there be perfect harmony in design, perfect unity in action; confident that the true interest of one is the true interest of all. Gentlemen the present generation must not, cannot live for itself. It lives for generations yet to come. To lay broad and deep the foundations of the social edifice, to entail it in all its fair proportions to the generation that succeeds us would be an honor which no other age has witnessed and none but us can hope to enjoy. Rising to a full perception of the work to be accomplished and surveying with a steady eye the field around us let us buckle on our armor for the conflict. "Every battle of the warrior is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood, but this is a keener, a moral conflict—a contest in which truth marshals her legions against error—humanity against avarice and oppression—a contest in which the genius of our holy religion grapples with the powers of darkness. Humanity is on our side—and on our side are truth, morality and religion and all their influences: and God himself is on our side, and if God be for us who can be against us. Ye men of Liberia prove yourselves worthy of these holy alliances. Abandon your dissensions—forget your personal differences. Let there be but one heart and one throb in that heart, and one head and one design in that head. By order and decorum in our social intercourse, by a prompt excision of every excess, by ready submission to wholesome regulations, by a cherished good will for all God's rational creatures and by undue partiality for none—by an entire system of well appointed and well sustained institutions under which justice tempered with mercy shall be equally meted to all, by our respect for constituted authority both here and abroad, by order, industry and virtue let us prove ourselves worthy of the boon we ask—a name, a home, a place in the land of the living. Thus pleading we shall be successful; and Liberia shall live before God and before the nations of the earth; and become the focus where the rays of light emanating from other lands shall meet: hence they shall go out, diverging in every direction as they fly, piercing the darkness which for ages like a sable pall has mantled the generations of our father-land until liberty and law and religion and love shall kindle a blaze of glory in this benighted land.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Liberia Herald.

Mr. Editor,—In my communication to you some time last week I indeavoured to acquaint your readers with some of the facts which cause our grievances as a body of people imposed upon merely because we are incapable of seeking and demanding redress. As my schooner was beating or drifting about opposite our harbour, when I closed my former, article and communication on board from us was forbidden at our peril, I could not have been fully apprized of the particulars of her illegal seizure, nor of the subsequent transactions on board, and consequently could not give you this information which I am certain every well wisher of Liberia is anxious to hear. I know not a more correct and better way to do this than by giving you the statement of the mate who was on board when she was boarded on the 15th inst., and escaped for his life on the following Friday.

STATEMENT OF JEFFRY HORACE, MATE OF THE SCHOONER JOHN SEYS.

We were out of water on the morning of the 15th inst. and as the bar was too bad for the large boat to come off as was intended, I made a special signal for the Captain to have water sent off from the beach. This signal was up when the man of war's boat had approached sufficiently near for me to conclude from the number of men on board that she must be a man of war's boat, I immediately took down the signal and hoisted Colonial colours. The boat soon sailed up and the men boarded the schooner, and the papers were demanded by the commanding officer. I immediately got them and handed him one at the time, he then asked me all the particulars about the vessel and looked at the papers again and said to me I thought you said this vessel belonged to Bassa Cove, how is it that it says Liberia. Here I said to him read on and likely you will see Stephen A. Benson of Bassa Cove mentioned in them. He blundered along some how and said at last I see it. The vessel was overhauled by them and her cargo turned out among which was found sattin stripe, tom coffees, blue baft, romals, bleached and unbleached cottons, prints, brass kettles, tin kettles, tin pans, powder, guns, tobacco, pipes, iron bars, &c. &c., I told him that those goods are such as are used in the oil trade, and are intended for that purpose, and that I could show him papers then on board communicated from Mr. Edward Morris, of Sinoe to the captain when at Sinoe in proof that the same kind of goods were there sold for oil last voyage. The officer then said to me I dont believe you, I believe you to be a slaver from your kettles and pans you have on board, and then turned to his men and said men I think I'll take her any how, will you all bear me out, yes was the answer. He then commanded the sails to be hoisted and the anchor to be weighed. Very soon after this a canoe was seen coming off from toward Bassa Cove, so soon as it got perfectly near I told the officer that the Captain of the schooner was coming off and he would be able to give fuller explanations if necessary and also to see to the vessel and cargo in case, he persisted in carrying her to Sierra Leone. But when the canoe approached little nearer the officer jumped up on the hen coop aft with his double barreled gun and motioned with his hand and said go off, go back or I will put a ball through your canoe. There were two others on each side who really put up their guns in the position of shooting. The canoe stopped, the Kroomen seemed affrighted and after halting some time put back for shore and the schooner continued sailing off. I tried to prevail on the officer to let the Captain come on board or even to admit him along side for justice could not be done to the owner unless the Captain was present, not only to keep an eye to every thing on board the vessel but to make and give the requisite statements and explanations before whatsoever court action might be taken on the case. I told him that one canoe with only two or three americans in it could not retake the vessel. After Captain Horace had almost got ashore the officer seemed to be in deep meditation as if conscious of an erroneous proceeding and said to me why did not your Captain come on board, there was no occasion for his return. I said to him have you forgot that you forbid his approach by motioning with your hand for him to return, and saying at the same time that you would blow a hole through the canoe if he approached any nearer, and that some of your men aimed at them. Oh said he, it was not my intention to have shot, that is the English mode of making a complimentory bow, and of giving a hearty welcome and that he meant no more, I said to him that though I was ignorant yet I was not mistaken in what I heard him say, and saw him do, nor of what it all indicated.

He then with an oath said very sharply to me I dont care what you saw and heard and further if I did not mind he would put a pistol ball through my head. He then asked me if I did not have another set of papers which question he repeated very frequently and teased me to say yes, after he found he could not prevail, he then said you have no manifest or clearance on board to show your cargo and where you were bound, this shows that you are in an illegal trade. I asked him if he did not perceive in the papers that the vessel belonged and hailed from the port of Bassa Cove Grand Bassa, county, and did not know that the schooner was laying in her own port not a half league from shore when he boarded and took her, and did he know in any British port for vessels to procure and have on board their manifest or clearance before they had finished taking in cargo and ready for sea, if he did he must have known more than other men of common sense. Well said he I dont recognize your colours, you are no nation neither are you under the patronage of any nation, the authority that granted your papers is not a recognized one and what right has the damned Yankees to plant colonies on the coast any how, your colony I deem good for nothing.

I gave him to understand he might do as he please about that and stand consequences, that the colonial flag had been respected by all nations both navy and merchantmen and that other men of war had boarded the schooner, that the Rapid's boats had boarded her several times within a week or so and she had no more in her now to conceal her than then and why did not their ambition for fame or promotion induce them to take her, and moreover he would hardly find an English trader on the coast that did not have the same goods. He then seemed to manifest some uneasiness which I thought arose from a consciousness of having acted too precipitately in taking the vessel. Meanwhile he said to me step here forward with me I want a word with you. I wondered what he could want with me and while reflecting he said to me look here if you will only say this vessel is engaged in the slave trade I will give you a doubloon, you need not let the other men hear you, they have nothing to do with what passes between you and me. I got angry immediately to see such an exhibition of meanness and I said to him rather abruptly if this is what you are up to I will have no more to say to you on the subject; you know you have illegally taken the vessel, you begin to fear consequences and now you wish to bribe me to tell a lie. I will answer no more of your questions if you intend carrying us to Sierra Leone I will go and say what I have to say there, I know she will be cleared there for there are scores there that know the vessel and owner too. They continued beating about off the harbour the remainder of the day but made but little headway, they appeared to be somewhat intoxicated or at least to have been drinking too much, the officer frequently jumped upon deck and acted like one partly crazzy and would say I told them so, I told them that I would take the first prize. They were so far out of a right element as that they could not properly work the vessel, they injured several sails by sheeting them aft and bracing them as if they were hoisting on the deck tackle or something else that would require several horse power to move it, they also split some of the blocks and carried away rigging and the first night they had her in charge there was quite a severe blow of wind and the sails were flying and flapping all night for they were only loosely clued. At the leeward they punched a hole through her bulwarks with their boat. When Mr. Lawrence of the brig Ellen Jenkenson of Liverpool who well knows the schooner and is well acquainted with the legality of the trade in which she is engaged came from the leeward and anchored at trade town where they had conveyed the schooner I was told by the gunner that he Mr. L. told the officer that he had done wrong in taking the vessel or interfering with her at all, that he was just as liable to be taken as we were, for he had the same kind of kettles on board which were said to to amount to such strong suspicion in our vessel and that Mr. Lawrence sent for one and showed it and the officer had to confess it was the same and the gunner further said to me that in case he had his way about it he would not have interfered with the vessel at first, and when the officer came on board I heard him and the gunner talking aft and I heard him the officer say I am sorry that I ever interfered with this vessel, I wish I had let her alone. After this he said to me do you know what the expense of this vessel is estimated at per day, I told him no the owner only could tell. A little while after this, he said to me if I dont have you tried as a slaver I will have you tried as a pirate and you will then be hung which will be much worse for you than if you were tried for the slave trade, now you had better give up and acknowledge that you are in the slave trade and join our brig the Lilly, when she comes and I will procure you the station of pilot on board of her which will be better employment than you can find in the colony. You are well acquainted with the coast are you not. I did not answer so abruptly this time as I did before when he offered me the doubloon but said to him I did not know what I might do when the Lilly came. My object for answering so coolly this time was owing to the fact that I began to be alarmed in consequence of what I considered a fuller developement of their true character in the free and unrestrained use they made of Mr. Bensons goods on board, just as if they had bought the vessel and cargo and I thought that if this together with their former course of proceeding did not amount to piracy it would be more difficult for the more discriminating man to show the difference, than for me to split a hair and as such I considered my life in danger for they were just as much justifiable in interfering with the one as the other, I therefore concluded to give them as soft answers as possible, and to make my escape for my life the first chance I saw them open the tobacco cask and not only use but sell it, I also saw them sell his cloth &c., they used his pans and kettles that belonged to the cargo, they split up camwood to burn and his goods were placed in a position where they must nearly or quite all spoil for they were exposed to the rain.

So eager were they to make way with the goods as that he said he must keep up the colonial colours flying so that the natives might know the vessel and be induced to think that she is not taken so that they may bring off trade to sell to us. I told him there was no need of that for Mr. Benson had factories for buying oil at Tabeccanee Young Sees and Trade Town and the natives well knew the vessel and that they will hardly fear to come off for they know she cant be legally condemned and therefore no need of resorting to that stratagem.

This served to confirm me the more in the belief that my life was unsafe and of the propriety of resorting to some stratagem for escape.

On Friday I proposed to them to let me go fishing in a fish canoe, in company with a small fish boy who was steward on board the vessel with me. They asked me if any good fishing ground was near, I said yes, they said you can go I know you will not and cannot run away. So the little boy and I myself got in the canoe We were hardly in before she capsized this confirmed them in the belief no doubt that we were poor Kroomen and thought that in consequence thereof it would be folly for us to attempt an escape while they had the pinnace there; the capsize was quite amusing to them, however, we managed to get in again and pulled directly out to sea, until I perceived we were sufficiently distant to reach shore in a diagonal direction before the pinnace could overtake us and at the same time to be beyond musket shot, we made the attempt; as soon as they discovered us heading toward shore the pinnace put in chase after us and fired several guns but all in vain we reached shore and were at Bassa the following day.

Mr. Editor, suffer me now to say that to the correctness of these statements there is not the least doubt. Jeffry Horace is a young man not more than twenty-one years old, who was raised up amongst us in Bassa Cove, and is well known in this community. I have had him in my service more or less for four years and never knew him to tell me a wilful lie, and I presume there are scores who can testify the same thing, and moreover there are other individuals who have made statements corrobative of some of the most important particulars in his statement.

On the saturday succeeding the capture when I returned home from the woods where I had been surveying land I saw a brig in harbour and soon after the schooner was seen coming up from the leeward. I have been told since that at that time the captors had no interview with the brig—the schooner anchored off some distance and as her captain who was here on shore and others had been previously forbidden to approach her at the peril of their lives we all thought it advisable to await their movement—in fact ever since Mr. Davison of Sierra Leone, left here the most thinking part of the community (so far as in us lie) have been on the look out or defensive so far as terra firma is concerned:—

It is true that the captain of my schooner with a number of other citizens earnestly solicited me on the day and the day after the schooner's capture and he had been forbid to go on board,) to let them them have my large boat the (Fox) to go off and have a little skirmish with them, but to this I would not give my consent from the fact that notwithstanding I really believe they could have retaken her by force (as the mate who was on board says the Lieut. appeared very much affrighted when he saw the canoe coming off with the Captain and said she was coming to retake the vessel—which gave rise to his motioning for her to return and threatening to shoot and of his men really taking aim in order to induce them to return.) Yet I thought the bar too bad for my boat to venture out, and in the next place my vessel is too large to venture across the bar—she would be obliged to remain outside and if any of the Lilly's boat's crew were left to carry the news to their commander they could frame just such a tale as would serve the purpose of exonerating them from the predicament in which their ambition and tyranny had placed them—represent our men as being the aggressors and the schooner likely be retaken by virtue of this false representation.

Though I cannot say positively for I may be mistaken yet, I had been, was then and am still more now under the impression that the English (or a part at least) have concerted a deep plan for the accomplishment of a certain object—a part of their plan I believe to be this, to make use of such means in their intercourse with us either by act or word as will have a tendency to know and make us feel our weakness—our want of recognition—our want of protection till we are necessitated to petition to them for this protection or recognition and thus have the object accomplished of having us in their insatiable clutches—or to aggravate us by their incessant impositions till we are constrained to commit an act of violence on some of their subjects which will be for them a justifiable plea for taking possession of the placce.

A few more facts in support of this opinion and I will close with a few remarks about the schooner.

On Sunday, which was the following day after the first brig anchored, another man of war the Water Witch came in and anchored,—there was no communication to shore that day to my knowledge,—from what I could see with the glass I thought some of their boats were sounding the harbour—the following morning the schooner was off by times for Sierra Leone, and six men of war boats soon after came in the river in successive order, some went to Edina, some to Bexley, and some to Bassa Cove,—as some of the Lilly's officers were among those that visited Bassa Cove I introduced the subject of the illegal seizure or capture of the vessel, and thought if I would not be allowed to go on board to give explanations relative to the schooner I might venture to do so on shore, but I soon found that the officer who took her had made up a false tale to report to his commander, as I expected, for notwithstanding three Americans were in the canoe beside the Kroomen all of whom testify the same, they and we who were spying with our glass could almost see every movement, yet that officer who ever he was declared to his commander that he never forbid the approach of the canoe, and moreover the mate of the schooner after this escape upon his first arrival made the same statement that the captain and these men made before, he had not had any private interview with them.

This officer with whom I was in conversation said repeatedly in the presence of Messrs Jno Hauson, James H. Stevens, S. S. Herring, A. W. Gardner and a number more beside myself that the papers and colors under which my vesel sailed were useless and illegal because the authority that granted them is not recognized, this he repeated in conversation to my knowledge three times until asked by the officer of the Water Witch whether the authorities of the colony was not really recognized, to his certain knowledge. About this time it was brought to his mind that he had told us previously that he knew nothing about these colonies, nor of their existence before he left England, and that he was direct from England with the exception that the commander had had an interview with Commodore Jones at the windward, but as to himself he had no knowledge of the existence of these colonies until he arrived here.

Now from whence could he have procured his information relative to the colonial authority not being recognized—he did not learn it on shore here for he had just landed, he knew nothing about it when he left home, and thus he found himself brought into straits to tell where he got his information from, and was forced to retract so far as to deny having spoken positively, but said it was his opinion. But how may we account for this discrepancy, I cannot say positively, but I can think and leave others to think—nothing need be more evident to me than that this information was received about the time of the interview with the Commodore at the windward, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that this information was immately connected with the instructions that were given prior to coming down the coast, so it seems that their whole course of procedure is premeditated—was duly consulted and arranged for the accomplishment of an object too evident. These officers asked many questions about the colony, its limits—the line of coast it embraces the relation sustains to Monrovia and then to the United States—asked whether we had the United States flag here, and whether allowed to use it, and the gentleman from the Lilly remarked several times what a pleasant place this is—how desirable a situation—surely you have little sickness here? If not superior to ascension, I would like to live here very well. I told him we were very well satisfied with our home and would feel ourselves a happy people if they would only let us occupy and enjoy it unmolestedly, which induced them to laugh very heartily and say in answer that all this would have a tendency to bring matters to a focus and bring about a better understanding between Great Britain and the colony.

I mentioned that six boats came in—some of these came for water, others for vegetables and fresh—one was the flag boat, which preceeded I think the one in which the two commanders came ashore in. The commanders did not tarry at the lower settlements long, but proceeded to Bexley,—returned in the afternoon and went on board. I am told that they were both very civil and gentlemanly. The commander of the Water Witch especially was very highly spoken of by those who visited them.

It was something quite novel with us at Bassa, who seldom see a man of war, to see so many boats in our river at once, and for commanding officers to manifest so much interest for our colony as to ascend seven miles to visit the upper settlements.

As to my schooner I am told she is sent to Sierra Leone, of course it would be folly to take her to Monrovia where there is no recognized authority. Well then I think we had as well make wrapping paper of our colonial laws, and send no more representatives to make laws for us, if we are not to be tried by them—if England is to be lawgiver.

All the authority used in our courts too are illegal, for our courts are instituted by this same authority that is not recognized. I hope British subjects will remember this and not have the effrontery to seek any redress in our colony (whether the case be civil or criminal) until they recognize the authority that instituted these courts through which they seek this redress.

Now I ask the question what chance is there for my vessel to be cleared at Sierra Leone even were it right for her to be taken there: in the first place they forbid the Captain and others from going on board, who should appear as evidences in behalf of the schooner, and who should be on board to prevent any thing from being smuggled on board in order to condemn her. Again it is likely that some of the very things consumed or confiscated by that officer and his crew would have proved a most powerful evidence in favour of the schooner.

And again can we doubt for a moment that a man who was mean enough to try and bribe my mate to tell a lie in order to exonerate him from a difficulty in which after he had got sober he found his ambition had led him, would when he found the vessel in his own hands and no one to inform on him, do any and every thing to effect her condemnation—this is too evident to admit of a doubt.

Again I am told that such has become the desire to condemn the vessel thus taken to Sierra Leone as that the most dishonest intrigues are resorted to at times to effect this, and that by some of whom such a thing should not be expected. Mr. Anthony

W. Gardner, who left this place last January on a visit to Sierra Leone, and returned a few weeks ago, informs us for a fact, that on the week he arrived there, they put a fellow in prison for conveying slave irons on board a vessel they had been trying to condemn for sometime but could not find sufficient evidence. This poor fellow had to bear the blame but it is certain that he would not have derived so much benefit from her condemnation (yet he bore the blame.) Now taking these things under consideration would it not be miraculous for her to escape condemnation (should they consider themselves justifiable in trying her,) and is it not too much for freemen to be thus imposed upon—to labour so hard for the accumulation of property and have it thus confiscated. I had nearly all the trade goods I possessed on board, besides some freight to Sinoe for some Americans, but this is not all, I have thousands of gallons oil at the leeward which will be sold to the first English vessel that calls there, after they hear of the schooner's capture and as soon as the oil season is over I can never get it in afterward. But it is folly for any man to imagine that I will suffer my property to be thus squandered without seeking and having redress should my life be spared long enough. We wish those who are so fond of falsely styling Liberians a bandith of roubers and take delight in their misrepresenting our characters in England to speak now and do too or else forever hereafter hold your peace.

Yours Truly,

STEPHEN A. BENSON.

THE EDITOR OF AFRICA'S LUMINARY CORRECTED.

MR. TEAGE,—You will oblige me by lending me a small space in one of your columns, merely to put the Editor of Africa's Luminary in his proper place. In the Luminary of April 23rd, he comes out with an editorial under the head of Mistake, in which he has taken much pains in slandering me, and making statements which are unbecoming a christian minister, as they are not founded on facts. We care nothing for the charge "rude," as all that we have said is strictly true. We can with equal propriety say that the coarse of Brother Burns towards us as Editor of the Luminary is ungentlemanly and basely wicked We could make bro. Burns appear very little were we disposed to do so. But we will refrain. Suffice it to say, that Mr. Burns does not bear the character of being the most consistent among his brethren. Brother Burns has sustained us in what we said to him in the last number of the Herald, as he seems to be actuated from a solemn conviction to publish in the Luminary the instructions given by the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to their missionaries. Though the publication in the Luminary be contrary to a rule of the Liberia Annual Conference. Take care my brother, forget not thy former inconsistences. Mercy has been often shown you, by the Liberia Annual Conferences. I advise you, to take care, lest justice should take the seat of mercy. In the concluding part of your editorial you tried very hard, Mr. Burns to make it appear, that the board has been displeased with my political conduct. This I am prepared to disprove. It is well known to the public and the board, that I have been the choice of the people for a succession of years. My election has been declared in the Luminary, and from the Luminary published in the Christian Advocate and Journal; the principal paper of the M. E. Church, which shows clearly there could have been no disapproval. But on the other hand, we have good reason to surmise, that the board have not been very well pleased, with brother Burns political meddling. The Christian Advocate Journal, we read with avidity. Among the many excellent things that we saw in its columns were the names of several that were ordained and a colored missionary from Africa by the newly elected a Bishop Jane Now did we not know who that colored missionary was we should have been at a loss to find out his name. Can brother Burns tell us why his name was not put down as the names of the other members who were ordained. If he cannot we would not be acting amiss to come to this conclusion, that brother Burns has meddled too much with politics which the board and the editor of the Advocate is aware of; and brother Burns has long since felt their indignation. To save bro Burns from entirely sinking I must bring this subject to a close, and satisfy myself with this slight castigation. Brother Burns I am now done with you. But before I throw down my pen I will make one remark I expect the writer of the so styled Original Letters, to give us a real blowing up This he is welcome to do as we do not visit Billingsgate Therefore all that he may say will be received by us with silent contempt.

The hatred of favourites is nothing more than the love of favour. Our indignation at not possessing it ourselves, is soothed and mitigated by the contempt we express for those who do; and we refuse them our good will because we are not able to deprive them of that something which procures them the good will of every one else.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, MAY 31st, 1845

The present condition of our colony, and the aspect of every thing connected with it irresistibly impel the mind of every thinking colonist forward, and agitate it with a painful anxiety to pierce the future unknown. The most meagre acquaintance with the science of political economy, or more plainly, with those circumstances which constitute the elements of national prosperity must apprize every one that we are not now on the highway to glory. The permanent and substantial prosperity of a country consists in a happy and increasing population. We say increasing, because where the people are contented and happy their number will increase. The happiness of a population in the sense we are speaking depends upon the supply of the means of subsistence. Universally the supply of the means of subsistence regulates population. It follows that where the supply of conveniences of life (not to say of natural wants, as men will not be contented with that, but of such a supply as will render them contented) is inadequate to the demand, there can be no permanent prosperity. In order to render the supply certain the means of obtaining it must exist in the country. The people must raise their food or they must procure it from abroad. Of course when it is obtained from others something must be given in exchange for it. The methods by which the articles for exchange are obtained are various; but the most ruinous of them all is that, in which the price of the articles given in exchange for provisions bears the least proportion to the original cost, or has given employment to the least number of persons. Let us now illustrate this everlasting truth by an example, and let that example be ourselves.

What have we to give in return for our provisions. Nothing absolutely nothing! What do we give in exchange for beef, pork, hams, butter, sugar, tea, coffee, soap, hats, shoes and cotton and woolen clothing? The answer is at hand. We procure by barter with the natives camwood, palm oil and ivory, and these articles we give in exchange for our provisions. We send them off in the same state in which they are procured excepting a small drawback in the shape of leakage, dryage &c., so that the employment when this mode of paying for our foreign commodities gives to the people is not to be mentioned. The proportion which the annual purchase of provision bears to the whole annual importation may we think be safely put down at two fifths. Assuming for the mere purpose of estimation $100,000 as the amount of our annual importation we have an annual expenditure of $40,000 for which we have no earthly return; literally and absolutely none. If we paid it in articles of whose value only a portion was of our own production—say for instance in soap made from the oil—in coloring matter extracted from the wood or in articles of use made of the ivory, there would be some deduction from the loss; if we gave in exchange coffee, cotton, sugar, dyes arrow-root, ginger or any thing else of our own raising, by raising as much in the colony as we send out the account would balance itself and thus far there would be no loss. And if we raised our own food and paid these articles for other things the whole amount would be so much clear gain. But being consumed by a people, who, while they are consuming are producing nothing the whole amount paid, over and above its cost from the natives is a total loss to the colony. Nor may it be supposed the people are otherwise engaged in profitable employment. The first object of men is the supply of their immediate and pressing wants; until this is done they will find neither time nor inclination to engage in other pursuits.

Nor is this the only evil. We do not export our own commerce in our own bottoms and thus save the benefit of freight and give employment to our own people. This advantage is engrossed by others, as is also that of the advanced price of produce in foreign markets and of the freight and advanced price of articles imported.

What is the result of this mode of supplying our wants? Surely we need not tell our readers what they already know by bitter experience, that the end of every three months during which we have had no supply from abroad has invariably found our stock deplorably short.

Now let us test what we have assumed as an unalterable principle. Are our people contented and happy? does our population increase? For an answer to the first question enquire at the upper settlements, and in regard to the second consult the census.

He who should throw a cursory glance over this settlement and then resolutely close his eyes and his ears, might perhaps, draw an inference adverse to our position. A house going up here and there might be to him indicative of prosperity; and it might be true of those individual builders. But if he could be prevailed upon to open his eyes and estimate the proportion which these builders bear to the whole population he would unhesitatingly form a different conclusion.

Turn which way we will the ghostly question stares us in the face. What is to be done? Let us face it. The people must have employment; such employment as in its returns will not only supply their immediate and pressing wants, but such as will awaken in them hope, excite their ambition for a comfortable and easy condition of life, and thus by engendering self-respect nerve them with an energy to persevere. The vast resources of our own country must be explored and drawn forth, and in this employment the people must be engaged. But labour such as we can employ unaided by capital cannot be made the basis of a commerce with foreign nations. And capital we have not. The question then returns. What is to be done? Why we must obtain capital from those who have it. But to impute all our difficulties to the want of capital and in the next breath to say, we must get it, without pointing out the means by which it may be done seems worse than begging the question. There are three modes by which men ordinarily obtain money. The first is by rendering personal service—the second is by giving the production of labor, and the third and last is by loan on a guaranty mutually agreed on. As the first and second mode are in our case out of the question, we have no alternative. It becomes then an interesting question: is the last mode practicable, and if so would it be safe to resort to it.

A boat belonging to the Water Witch by some means went on shore a few days ago at Little Bassa and was knocked to peices. She had been in chase of a slaver.

Accident. The large building of stone and brick owned by Mr. S. Benedict came down on the 28th, with a thundering crash. The walls of this edifice had been just completed but not being protected from the weather, the heavy rain which has recently fallen is supposed to have caused the catastrophe. Fortunately no one was injured.

HARD TIMES. No rice, no flour; cassado and potatoes nearly exhausted. Will our brother of the Luminary tell us what we shall "substitute?"

The natives at Cape Mount are said to have fished from the wreck of the Manchester a box containing gold in doubloons and trinkets; but unfortunately while others handle them we are doomed only to write about them.

MAGNANIMITY.

A boat belonging to H. B. M. ship Waterwitch with a crew of nine men became by some means seperated from the ship. Near night a heavy squall came on and they made the best of their way to one of our little colonial crafts lying at Teembo. They reached her half drowned with rain and solicited a supper and lodging. The latter was readily granted as also the former would have been if the rain would have permitted them to cook. Early next morning breakfast was provided for the guests of the best there was on board The guests remained to dinner. Afterward espying a vessel which supposing to be one of their squadron they put off for. A heavy squall came on and drove them back. They again lodged on board the colonial craft. Next morning they were provided with another breakfast, of which when they had partaken they they prepared to take their leave. Before doing so however they expressed very much thanks for the kind hospitality they had been treated with, and advised the commander of the colonial craft to run into Trade Town should he be in want of provisions and assured him he should be abundantly supplied from the Waterwitch. A few days afterward the craft was on her way home when she espied the Water witch bearing down for her. A shot which very nearly struck him brought him to. They compelled the little craft to dodge about after them until she was nearly ashore on a reef of rocks. As they could not tell how long they would be detained they sent a canoe to ask for a little provisions. The canoe returned with the message go to H——and the Water witch was making her way out to sea.

A large vessel has been dismasted at sea. The hull with a boat towing astern drifted into Teembo some days ago—but the wind and current changing went again to sea.

SELECTED EXTRACTS.

From a work published in 1633.

A GLASSE FOR GENTLEWOMEN TO DRESSE THEMSELUES BY.

Because I know that sundry women fearing God faile in the matter of their attire and ornament, because they want direction, which might lead their consciences in stead of the common errour of riotous times: And because it is requisite that all that professe the Name of God, should bee more carefull of adorning their profession, than their persons: I have here set downe a few briefe directions in generall for their helpe that are willing to be ruled by God and his word; and are morse desirous to approue themselues, or others, with his high displeasure,

I.

First then, such must know, that the practice of godlinesse depriueth no person of the good creatures of God, neither of the necessary, nor delightfull fruition of them (for, it onely giueth right, and liberty in them, but it ordereth the vse of them, and the vse of them; and setteth them in the due place of their godnesse, wherein onely they are beautiful and lawful. Rebecca, a woman fearing God, wore ornaments So Ioseph and Mordeca, Ester 8,2. and Daniel 5. 29.

II.

Know, that we are not at our owne hand in the vse of outward ornament, vnder rule and appointment. God prescribes women how to dresse their heads, 1. Pet. 3. 3 and taketh order for the habit of the body, and findeth fault with the dressings of the daughters of Sion Isay 3. And threatning the princes and Kings children cloathed with strange apparell Zeph. 1. 8. speaketh to our Gallants that build towers vpon their heads, or erect them as with large hornes, or any way take vp an unlimited liberty in their dresses, with some special vanity, and offence. For such dressing of the haire, the Lord threateneth the dainty women with baldnesse and shame, Isa 3.

III.

Such must know, that as the kingdome of God standeth not in any of these outward things, so they must not bee suffered to hinder the kingdome of God in ourselves or others: And though they being things so indifferent in themselues, as they commend vs not to God; yet in the vse of them all, wee must exercise certaine vertues in which wee must be acceptable to God; and auoyed such vices in the abusing of them, as will else discommend vs before him. For suppose they be things in their nature neithe good nor euil, neither commanded nor forbidden; as, Whether I should weare cloth or leather, whether a plain band or a ruffe, whether single or double, whether white or yellow; yet in the vse of any of these outward and indifferent things, my action is either good or euill, according to my exercise of virtue or vice in it. Neither can any thing be so indifferent in it selfe, but it may become euill and sinne in me many wayes: as,

1. By my election and choyce of it without assurance of my libity in Christ, or with doubting whether I doe well in vsing it, or no.

2. By my intention, which may be corrupt and vicious in my selfe, preiudiciall to others.

3. By many accidentary euents: as, if others bee by my vse of lawfull and outward liberties occasioned to sinne, or thrust forward in carnal licentiousnesse. All which I rather propound to be wisely considered for the removing of that common obiction and conoet, That the things are not great, and God cares not so much for the dressing of the body, so I keepe my heart to him and giue him content in my soule. As if these persons conceiued, that the body is not the Lords as well as the soule, or that that soule can bee Gods, when the diuell hath the dressing of the body.

THE LEGEND OF KING ROBERT OF SICILY.

BY LEIGH HUNT.

Writers informs us that King Robert of Sicily, brother of Pope Urban and of the Emperor Ademond, was a prince of great valor and renown, but of a temper so proud and impatient that he did not like to bend his knee to heaven itself, but would sit twirling his beard, and and looking with something worse than indifference round about him during the gravest services of the church.

One day, while he was present at vespers on the eve of St. John, his attention was excited to some words in the Magnificat, in consequence of a sudden dropping of the choristers' voices. The words were these: "Deposuit potentes de sede, et exaltavit humiles." (He has put down the mighty from their seat, and hath exalted the humble.) Being far too great and warlike a prince to know anything of Latin, he asked a chaplain near him the meaning of these words; and being told what it was, observed that such expressions were no better than an old song, since men like himself were not so easily pulled down, much less supplanted by poor creatures whom people called "humble."

The chaplain, doubtless out of pure astonishment and horror, made no reply; and his Majesty to relieve himself from the rest of the service, fell asleep.

After some lapse of time, the royal "sitter in the seat of the scornful," owing, as he thought, to the sound of the organ, but in reality to a great droning fly in the ear, woke up in more than his usual state of impatience; and he was preparing to vent it, when, to his astonishment, he perceived the church empty. Every soul was gone, excepting a deaf old woman who was turning up the cushions. He addressed her to no purpose: he spoke louder and louder, and was proceeding, as well as rage and amaze would let him, try if he could walk of the out church without a dozen lords before him, when suddenly catching sight of his face, the old woman uttered a cry 'Thieves' and shuffled away, first closing the door behind her.

King Robert, looked at the door in silence, then round about him at the empty church, then at himself. His cloak of ermine was gone. The coronet was taken from his cap. The very jewels from his fingers. "Thieves, verily," thought the king, turning white for shame and rage." "Here is conspiracy—rebellion! This is that sanctified traitor, the duke. Horses shall tear them all to pieces! What ho, there! Open the door for the king!"

"For the constable, you mean," said a voice through the keyhole. "You're a pretty fellow!"

The king said nothing.

'Thinking to escape, in the king's name," said the voice, "after hiding to plunder his closet We've got you."

Still the king said nothing:

The sexton could not refrain from another jibe at his prisoner.

"I see you there," said he—"by the big lamb, grinning like a rat in a trap. How do you like your bacon?"

Now whether King Robert was of the blood of that Norman chief who felled his enemy's horse with a blow of his fist, we know not; but certain it is, that the only answer he made the sexton was by dashing his enormous foot against the door, and bursting it open in his teeth. The sexton, who felt as if a horse had given him a blow in the face, fainted away; and the king, as far as a sense of dignity allowed him, hurried to his palace, which was close by.

"Well," said the porter "what do you want?"

"Stand aside, fellow!" roared the king, pushing back the door with the same gigantic foot.

"Go to the devil!" said the porter, who was a stout fellow too, and pushed the king back before he expected resistance. The king, however, was too much for him. He felled him to the ground; and half strode, half rushed in the palace, followed by the exasperated janitor.

"Seize him," cried the porter.

"On your lives," cried the king. "Look at me, fellow:—who am I?"

"A mad beast and fool; that's what you are," cried the porter; "and you're a dead man, for coming drunk into the palace, and hitting the king's servants. Hold him fast."

In came the guards, with an officer at their head, who was going to visit his ministers, and had been dressing his curls at a looking-glass. He had the looking-glass in his hand.

"Captain Francavilla," said the king, "is the world run mad? or what is it? Do your rebels pretend not even to know me. Go before me, sir, to my rooms." And as he spoke, the king shook off his assailants, as a lion does curs, and moved onwards.

Captain Francavilla put his finger gently before the king to stop him; and then looking with a sort of staring indifference in his face, said in very mild tone, "Some madam."

King Robert tore the looking glass from the captain's hand, and looked himself in the face. It was not his own face. It was another man's face, very hot and vulgar; and had something in it at once melancholy and ridiculous.

"By the living God!" exclaimed Robert, here is witchcraft! I am changed!" And for the first time in his life, a sensation of fear came upon him, but nothing so great as the rage and fury that remained. All the world believed in witchcraft, as well as King Robert; but they had still more certain proofs of the existence of drunkenness and madness; and the king's household had seen the king come forth from church as usual, and were ready to split their sides for laughter at the figment of his raving imposter, pretending to be King Robert changed!

"Bring him in!" "bring him in!" now exclaimed other voices, the news having got to the royal apartment; "the king wants to see him."

King Robert was brought in; and there, amidst roars of laughter, (for courts were not quite such well bred places then as they are now,) he found himself face to face with another King Robert, seated on his throne, and as alike his former self as he himself was unlike, but with more dignity.

"Hideous in person!" exclaimed robert rushing forward to tear him down.

The court, at the word "hideous," roared with greater laughter than before; for the king, in spite of his pride, was at all times a hand-some man; and there was a strong feeling at present that he had never in his life looked so well

Robert, when half way to the throne, felt as if a palsy had struck him. He stoopped, and essayed to vent his rage, but could not speak

The figure on the throne looked him steadily in the face. Robert thought it was a wizard, but hated far more than he feared him; for he was of great courage.

It was an angel.

But the angel was not going to disclose himself yet, nor for a long time. Meanwhile, he behaved, on the occasion, very much like a man; we mean, like a man of ordinary feelings and resentments, though still mixed with a dignity beyond what had been before observed in the Sicilian monarch. Some of the countries attributed it to a sort of royal instinct of contrast excited by the claims of the impostor; but others (by the angel's contrivance) had seen him, as he came out of the church, halt suddenly, with an abashed and altered visage, before the shrine of St. Thomas, as if supernaturally struck with some visitation from Heaven for his pride and unbelief. The rumor flew about on the instant, and was confirmed, by an order given from the throne, the moment the angel seated himself upon it, for a gift of hitherto unheard of amount to the shrine itself.

"Since thou art royal mad," said the new sovereign, "and in truth a very king of idiots, thou shalt be crowned and sceptred with a cap and bauble, and be my fool."

Robert was still tongue tied. He tried in vain to speak—to roar out his disgust and defiance; and half mad, indeed, with the inability, pointed with his quivering finger to the inside of his mouth, as if in apology to the beholders for not doing it. Fresh shouts of laughter made his brain seem to reel within him.

"Fetch the cap and bauble," said the sovereign "and let the king of fools have his coronation."

Robert felt that he must submit to what he thought the power of the devil; and began to have glimpses of a real though hesitating sense of the advantage of securing friendship on the side of Heaven. But rage and indignation were uppermost; and while the attendants were shaving his head, fixing the cap, and jeeringly dignifying him with the bauble sceptre, he was racking his brains for schemes of vengeance. What exasperated him most of all, next to the shaving, was to observe that those who had flattered him most when a king, were the loudest in their contempt now that he was the court-zany.

One pompous lord in particular, with a high and ridiculous voice, which continued to laugh when all the rest had done, and produced fresh peals by the continuance was so excessively provoking, that Robert, who felt his vocal and muscular powers restored to him as if for the occasion, could not help shaking his fist at the grinning slave, and crying out, "Thou beast, Terranova;" which, in all but the person so addressed, only produced additional merriment. At length, the king ordered the fool to be taken away, in order to sup with dogs. Robert was stupified, but he found himself hungry against his will, and gnawed the bones which had been chucked away by his nobles.

The proud king Robert of Sicily lived in this way for two years, always raging in his mind, always sullen in his manners, and subjected to every indignity that his quondam favorites could heap on him, without the power to resent it; for the new monarch seemed unjust to him only.

He had all the humiliations without any of the privileges, of the cap and bells, and was the dullest fool ever heard of. All the notice the king took of him consisted in his asking, now and then, in full court, when everything was silent, "Well, fool, art thou still a king?" Robert for some weeks, loudly answered that he was; but, finding that the answer was but a signal for a roar of laughter, converted his speech into the silent dignity of a haughty and royal attitude; this dumb show, he ingeniously adopted a manner which expressed neither defiance nor acquiescence, and the angel for some time let him alone.

Meantime, everybody but the unhappy Robert blessed the new, or, as they supposed him, the altered king; for everything in the mode of government was changed. Taxes were light; the poor had plenty; work was reasonable; the nobles themselves were expected to work after their fashion—to study, to watch zealously over the interests of their tenants, to travel, and bring home new books and innocent luxuries Half the day throughout Sicily was given to industry, and half to healthy and intellectual enjoyment; and the inhabitants became at once the manliest and tenderest, the gayest and most studious people in the world. Wherever the king went, he was loaded with benedictions; and the fool heard them and began to wonder what the devil the devil had to do with appearances so extraordinary. And thus, for the space of time we have mentioned, he lived wondering, and sullen, and hating, and hated, and despised.

At the expiration of those two years, or nearly so, the king announced his intention of paying a visit to his brother, the Pope, and his brother, the Emperor, the latter agreeing to come to Rome for the purpose. He went, accordingly, with a great train, clad in the most magnificent garments, all but the fool, who was arrayed in foxtails, and put side by side with an ape, dressed like himself The people poured out of their houses and fields and vineyards, all struggling to get a sight of the king's face and to bless it, the ladies strewing flowers, and the peasants' wives holding up their rosy children, which last sight seemed particularly to delight the sovereign—The fool, bewildered, came after the court pages, by the side of his ape, exciting shouts of laughter, and, in some bosoms, not a little astonishment, to think how a monarch so kind and considerate to all the rest of the world, should be so hard upon a sorry fool. But it was told them, that this fool was the most perverse and insolent of men towards the prince himself; and then, although their wonder hardly ceased, it was full of indignation against the unhappy wretch, and he was to deal with every kind of scorn and abuse. The reigning Robert seemed the only blot and disgrace upon the island.

The fool had still a hope, that when his holiness the Pope saw him, the magician's arts would be at an end; for, though he had no religion at all, properly speaking, he had retained something even of a superstitious faith in the highest worldly form of it. The good Pope, however, beheld him without the least recognition; so did the emperor; and when he saw them both gazing with unfeigned admiration at the exalted beauty of his former altered self, and not with the old faces of good-will and secret dislike, a sense of awe and humility, for the first time, fell gently upon him. Instead of getting as far as possible from his companion the ape, he approached him closer and closer, partly that he might shroud himself under the very shadow of his insignificance, partly from a feeling of absolute sympathy, and a desire to possess, if not one friend in the world, at least one associate who was not an enemy.

It happened that day that it was the eve of St. John, the same on which, two years ago Robert had heard and scorned the words in the Magnificat. Vespers were performed before the Pope, and two sovereigns; the music and the soft voices fell softer as they came to the words—and Robert again heard, but with far different feelings—Deposuit potentis de sede, et exaltvait humiles; "He hath put down the mighty from their seat, and exalted the humble." Tears gushed into his eyes; and, to the astonishment of the court, the late sullen and brutal fool was seen with his hands reverently clasped upon his bosom in prayer, and the water pouring down his face in floods of penitence. Something of holier feelings than usual had turned all hearts that day The king's own favorite chaplain had preached from the text which declares charity to be greater than faith or hope. The emperor began to think mankind really his brothers. The Pope wished that some new council of the church would authorize him to set up over the Jewish ten commandments, and in more glorious letters, the new eleventh, or great christian commandment,—'Behold, I give unto you a new commandment, LOVE ONE ANOTHER." In short, Rome felt that day like angel-governed Sicily.

When the service was over, and the sovereigns had retired to their apartments, the unknown King Robert's behaviour was reported to the unsuspected King-Angel, who had seen it, but said nothing. The sacred interloper announced his intention of giving the fool a trial in some better office, and he sent for him accordingly, having first dismissed every other person. King Robert came in his fool's-cap and bells, and stood humbly at a distance before the strange, great, charitable unknown, looking on the floor and blushing. He had the ape by the hand, who had long courted his good will and who, having now obtained it, clung to his human friend in a way that, to a Roman, might have seemed ridiculous, but to the angel, was affecting.

"Art thou still a king?" said the angel, putting the old question, but without the word "fool."

"I am a fool," said king Robert, "and no king."

"What wouldst thou, Robert?" returned the angel, in a mild voice.

King Robert trembled from head to foot, and said, "Even what thou wouldst, O mighty and good stranger, whom I know not how to name—hardly to look at!"

The stranger laid his hand on the shoulder of King Robert, who felt an inexpressible calm suddenly diffuse itself over his whole being. He knelt down, and clasped his hands to thank him.

"Not to me," interrupted the angel, in a grave but sweet voice; and kneeling down by the side of Robert, he said, as if in church, "Let us pray."

King Robert prayed, and the angel prayed, and after a few moments, the king looked up, and the angel was gone; and then the king knew that it was an angel indeed.

And his own likeness returned to King Robert but never an atom of his pride; and after a blessed reign, he died, disclosing this history to his weeping nobles, and requesting that it might be recorded in the Sicilian annals.

WEDDING CARDS.

There is a fashion both here and in New York to issue invitations to a wedding thus:—"Mr. & Mrs. Charles Jones, at home, No. 265—— street, Thursday evening, November 28th" In the left hand corner is placed the name of the gentleman and the maiden name of the lady. Now this is wrong Such a card may be very proper to issue after marriage: but those who are invited to witness the ceremony, should receive a card with the maiden name of the lady, and if the marriage takes place at her father's, or guardian's, or friend's house, the card should be issued in such a person's name, and that of his wife, if he has one.

The N. Y Mirror pursues the etiquette of this matter still further, and Willis says:—The first proper use of the wedded name is to send it with pieces of wedding-cake, the morning after the ceremony, to friends and persons ceased as visiting acquaintances. This is considered an excusable advance on the part of persons entering newly upon life, and the promptness with which a return card is left upon the bride is an indication of the degree of pleasure with which the proposition of acquaintance is received. Another advantage of cake and cards:—the etiquette (exacting that a new name should be given in all acquaintances that are to be kept up) gives a ready and delicate mode to drop, without offence, such acquaintances of each, as are respectively undesirable—persons inseparably from the set in which the lady has lived, who are not agreeable to the bridegroom, and bachelor acquaintances of the bridegroom who may be thought too free for fire-side Wedded life is thus begun with a "cull'd posy of friendship," the door of society open before, mischief-makers shut out behind

DON'T BE PROUD.

Don't be proud! We will not say that abject humility is desirable; for a man must have some notion of his own importance, or else every one, finding him ready, will give him a kick. But then don't run into the other extreme, especially if you are poor. Pride has starved more men than famine. Never be too good to do any thing that is honest; saw wood if you can't drive a trade, and break stones on the turnpike if you cant saw wood. There is no greater force than the cant about respectable pursuits. Many a bad lawyer might have made a good clerk, and we know indifferent merchants who would have grown rich as mechanics. Proud people start in life with more show than they can afford; and so insure for themselves a constant struggle with poverty. They ruin their fortunes and shipwreck their happiness, to dress as well as their neighbours, or give parties to people who quiz them for it. Pride is bailiff to bankruptcy. Go to our alms-houses: they are full of your proud people, who have always spent their incomes and are now, in old age, come to beggary. Go to the wretched alleys of our great cities, and look into that rickety old frame, from which the rags stuffed in the broken pane cannot keep out the winter snow; nine chances to ten, you will find there some decayed mechanic. who spent all he could make while he had work, and who now eats the bitter bread of dependence or trusts to a stranger's charity. Take our advice! Seek some honest pursuit where you are sure of a living, and content yourself with a little, if that little is certainty. Better have a dollar in the pocket than a gold peice at the top of a pole. Be prudent and contented, and you will be out of debt and happy. Then you can walk the streets feeling that no man is your superior. Old age will find you with a comfortable home, the result of a life's savings; and you can shake hands with death contentedly, satisfied that no pauper hearse will hurry you to your grave.

Describing his heroine, a writer says that she possesed in a great degree the strawberry of modesty and the hot corn of affection.

"Sir, am I not a little pale?"

"I don't know, sir, you may be a tub, or a keg, firkin, or a bucket, for aught I know."

THE MAN OF THE WORLD.

IF you are fond of hearing hair-breadth" scapes, my history must certainly please; for I have been for twenty years upon the very verge of starving, without ever being starved.

My father, the youngest son of a good family, was possessed of a small living in the church. His education was above his fortune, and his generosity greater than his education. Poor as he was, he had his flatterers still poorer than myself; for every dinner he gave them, they returned him an equivalent in praise; and this was all he wanted. The same ambition that actuates a monarch at the head of an army, influenced my father at the head of his table: he told the story of the ivy-tree, and that was laughed at; he repeated the jest of the two scholars and one pair breeches, and the company laughed at that; but the story of Taffy in the sedan chair, was sure to set the table in a roar. Thus his pleasure increased in proportion to the pleasure he gave: he loved all the world, and he fancied all the world loved him.

As his fortune was but small, he lived up to the very extent of it; he had no intentions of leaving his children money, for that was dross; he was resolved they should have learning, for learning, he used to observe, was better than silver or gold. For this purpose he undertook to instruct us himself; and took as much pains [illegible] as to improve our understanding. We were told that universal benevolence was what first cemented society: we were taught to consider all the wants of mankind as our own; to regard the human face divine with affection: he would say that the greatest [illegible] in the midst of [illegible] distress; in a word, we were instructed in the art of giving away thousands before we were taught the more necessary principles of getting a farthing.

[illegible] beginning, that, thus refined by [illegible] all my suspicion, and divested [illegible] cunning which nature had [illegible], I resembled, upon my first entrance [illegible] busy and assiduous world, one of those gladiators who were exposed without armour in the amphitheatre at Rome. My father, however, who had only seen the world on one side, seemed to triumph in my superior discernment; though my whole stock of wisdom consisted in being able to talk like himself upon subjects that once were useful, because they were then topics of the busy world, but that now were utterly useless, because connected with the busy world no longer.

The first opportunity he had of finding his expectations disappointed, was at the very middling figure I made in the University: he had flattered himself that he should soon see me rising into the foremost rank in literary reputation, but was mortified to find me utterly unnoticed and unknown. His disappointment might have been partly ascribed to his having overrated my talents, and partly to my dislike of mathematical reasonings, at a time when my imagination and memory, yet unsatisfied, were more eager after new objects, than desirous of reasoning upon those I knew. This did not, however, please my tutors, who observed, indeed, that I seemed to be very good-natured, and had no harm in me.

After I had resided at college seven years, my father died, and left me—his blessing. Thus shoved from shore without ill-nature to protect, cunning to guide, or proper stores to subsist me in so dangerous a voyage I was obliged to embark in the wide world at twenty-two. But in order to settle in life, my friends advised (for they always advise when they begin to despise us) they advised me, I say, to go into orders.

To be obliged to wear a long wig, when I liked a short one, or a black coat, when I generally dressed in brown, I thought was such a restraint upon my liberty, that I absolutely rejected the proposal. A priest in England, is not the same mortified creature with a bonze in China; with us, not he that fasts best, but eats most, is reckoned the best liver: yet I rejected a life of luxury, indolence, and ease, from no other consideration but that boyish one of dress: so that my friends were now perfectly satisfied I was undone; and yet they thought it a pity for one who had not the least harm in him, and was so very good natured.

Poverty naturally begets dependence, and I was admitted as flatterer to a great man. At first I was surprised, that the situation of a flatterer at a great man's table could be thought disagreeable; there was no great trouble in listening attentively when his lordship spoke and, laughing when he looked round for applause. This even good manners might have obliged me to perform. I found, however, too soon, that his lordship was a greater dunce than myself; and from that very moment my power of flattery was at an end. I now rather aimed at setting him right, than at receiving his absurdities with submission. To flatter those we do not know, is an easy task; but to flatter our intimate acquaintances, all whose foibles are strongly in our eye, is drudgery insupportable. Every time I now opened my lips in praise, my falsehood went to my conscience; his lordship soon perceived me to be unfit for service; I was therefore discharged; my patron at the same time being graciously pleased to observe, that he believed I was tolerably good-natured, and had not the least harm in me.

Disappointed in ambition I had recourse to love. A young lady who lived with her aunt, and was possessed of a pretty fortune in her own disposal, had given me, as I fancied, some reasons to expect success. The symptoms by which I was guided were striking: she had always laughed with me at her awkward acquaintance, and at her aunt among the number; she always observed that a man of sense would make a better husband than a fool, and I as constantly applied the observation in my own favour. She continually talked in my company of friendship, and the beauties of the mind, and spoke of Mr. Shrimp my rival's high-heel'd shoes with detestation. These were circumstances which I thought strongly in my favour; so, after resolving, and re-resolving, I had courage enough to tell her my mind. Miss heard my proposal with serenity, seeming at the same time to study the figures of her fan. Out at last it came. There was but one small objection to complete our happiness, which was no more than—that she was married three months before to Mr. Shrimp with high-heel'd shoes! By way of consolation, however, she observed, that, though I was disappointed in her, my address to her aunt would probably kindle her into sensibility; as the lady always allowed me to be very good-natured, and had not the least share of harm in me.

Yet still I had friends, numerous as friends; and to them I was resolved to apply. O Friendship! thou fond soother of the human breast! to thee we fly in every calamity: to thee the wretched seek for succour; on thee the care-tired son of misery fondly relies; from thy kind assistance the unfortunate always hopes relief, and may be ever sure of—disappointment? My first application was to a city scrivener, who had frequently offered to lend me money, when he knew I did not want it. I informed him, that now was the time to put his friendship to the test; that I wanted to borrow a couple of hundreds for a certain occasion, and was resolved to take up from him. And pray, Sir, cried my fried, do you want all this money? Indeed I never wanted it more, returned I. I am sorry for that, cries the scrivener, with all my heart; for they who want money when they come to borrow, will always want money when they should come to pay.

From him I flew with indignation to one of the best friends I had in the world, and made the same request. Indeed, Mr. Dry-bone, cries my friend, I always tho't it would come to this. You know, Sir, I would not advise you but for your own good; but your conduct has hitherto been ridiculous in the highest degree, and some of your acquaintance always thought you a very silly fellow. Let me see—you want two hundred pounds; do you want only two hundred, Sir, exactly? To confess a truth, returned I, I shall want three hundred: but then I have another friend, from whom I can borrow the rest. Why then, replied my friend, if you would take my advice—and you know I should not presume to advise you but for your own good—I would recommend it to you to borrow the whole sum from that other friend; and then one note will serve for all, you know.

Poverty now began to come fast upon me; yet, instead of growing more provident or cautious as I grew poor, I became every day more indolent and simple. A friend was arrested for fifty pounds; I was unable to extricate him, except by becoming his bail. When at liberty, he fled from his creditors, and left me to take his place. In prison I expected greater satisfaction than I had enjoyed at large. I hoped to converse with men in this new world, simple and believing like myself; but I found them as cunning and as cautious as those in the world I had left behind. They sponged up my money whilst it lasted; borrowed my coals, and never paid them; and cheated me when I played at cribbage. All this was done because they believed me to be very good-natured, & knew that I had no harm in me.

Upon my first entrance into the mansion, which is to some the abode of despair, I felt no sensations different from those I experienced abroad. I was now on one side the door, and those who were uncontined were on the other; this was all the difference between us. At first I felt some uneasiness, in considering how I should be able to provide this week for the week ensuing; but, after some time, I found myself sure of eating one day, I never troubled my head how I was to be supplied another. I seized every precarious meal with the utmost good-humour, indulged no rants of spleen at my situation, never called down Heaven and all the stars to behold me dining upon an halfpenny-worth of radishes; my very companions were taught to believe that I liked sallad better than mutton. I contented myself with thinking, that all my life I should either eat white bread or brown; considered that all that happened was best, laughed when I was not in pain, took the world as it went, and read Tacitus often, for want of more books and company.

How long I might have continued in this torpid state of simplicity I cannot tell, had I not been roused by seeing an old acquaintance, whom I knew to be a prudent blockhead, preferred to a place in the government. I now found that I had pursued a wrong track, and that the true way of being able to relieve others, was to aim at independence myself. My immediate care, therefore, was to leave my present habitation, and make an entire reformation in my conduct and behaviour. For a free, open, undesigning deportment, I put on that of closeness, prudence, and economy. One of the most heroic actions I ever performed, and for which I shall praise myself as long as I live, was the refusing half-a-crown to an old acquaintance, at the time when he wanted it, and I had it to spare; for this alone I deserve to be decreed an ovation.

I now, therefore pursued a course of uninterrupted frugality, seldom wanted a dinner, and was consequently invited to twenty. I soon began to get the character of a saving hunks that had money: and insensibly grew into esteem. Neighbours have asked my advice in the disposal of their daughters, and I have always taken care not to give any. I have contracted a friendship with an alderman, only by observing, that if we take a farthing from a thousand pounds it will be a thousand pounds no longer. I have been invited to a pawn-broker's table, by pretending to hate gravy; and am now actually upon treaty of marriage with a rich widow, for only having observed that bread was rising. If ever I am asked a question, whether I know it or not, instead of answering, I only smile, and look wise. If a charity is proposed I go about with the hat, but put nothing in myself. If a wretch solicits my pity, I observe, that the world is filled with impostors; and take a certain method of not being deceived by never relieving. In short, I now find the truest way of finding esteem, even from the indigent, is to give away nothing, and thus have much in our power to give.

DECREASE OF THE COLORED POPULATION OF THE SOUTH AND WEST.

Medical Institute of Louisville,
November 15th, 1844.

DEAR SIR:—Since our interview in Cincinnati, I have been so much engaged, in entering on my duties for the winter, as to be unable till now, to comply with your request, for some notice of the diseases of the coloured population of the South-West. As I told you then, my inquiries were chiefly made in Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisanna, in the spring and summer of 1843 and '44. Of the diseases which I am about to mention, I witnessed most of the varieties, but the greater and better part of my information, was derived from conversations with physicians, planters, and overseers, carefully noted down at the time. By referring to these, I give you the following statement:

1. Many infants die of trismus, or lock-jaw, when they are but a few days old; after that early age, convulsions, and summer sickness (cholera infantum) and worms, carry off quite a number.

2. They are liable to measles and scarlet fever, both of which were prevailing, (but especially the former,) on many plantations which I visited; which diseases seem to be as fatal to them as to the whites.

3. Scrofula or king's-evil is of frequent occurrence; and consumption, or cachexia africana as it has been called, is prevalent and always fatal.

4. On many plantations the strange habit of eating dirt or clay, the common soil of the fields, particularly that of the Mississippi bottoms, produces serious and fatal diseases. I was told of one estate in South Alabama, on which 14 slaves had died from this cause, and visited another in Louisanna, on which I saw nearly half that number unable to work from the same practice.

5. A disease of the heart, conjectured to arise from dirt-eating, destroys quite a number. I met [illegible] several cases, and heard of a plantation on Red [illegible] more than thirty died from this mala-

[illegible] lock-jaw from wounds, is extreme[illegible] almost uniformly fatal. Some cases occur without previous wounds. A physician in Alabama, told me he had, in 15 years, met with at least 50 cases, nearly all in coloured people, and all but one mortal. I met with several young physicians in the smaller towns, who had, respectively, met with more cases, than have occured in Cincinati from its first settlement.

7. Diarrhœa and dysentery, of frequent occurrence are often fatal.

8. When the cholera was epidemic, in 1832, 3 and 4, it swept off great numbers—was more destructive, in fact, to the coloured than the white people of the South-West.

9. Epidemic erysipelas, or black tongue, has prevailed on many plantations, within the past year. I was told of one, in Mississippi, on which seven had died of it.

10. The coloured people are not proof against the cause of yellow fever; but as they are not numerous in the cities and towns, where only it prevails, the mortality from this disease is not great.

11. Acute inflammations of the lungs, are among the most destructive diseases of the coloured population. These are catarrh, croup, bronchitis, pleurisy and pneumonia, or inflammations of the lungs, which is the most frequent and fatal of the whole. These maladies often destroy life in a few days; but sometimes the patient recovers with his lungs rendered permanently unsound. I saw many cases of this kind. This group of diseases, produced by changes of weather in winter and early spring, occasion more death than any other, except the next.

12. Intermittent and remittent fevers—simple, and malignant or congestive—are the greatest outlets of human life among the people of whom I am speaking. They return every year in the latter part of summer and in autumn, and one attack is no security against another. When they do not prove fatal, they leave behind them diseases of the spleen, and dropsy. In the following winter those who were down in autumn, are tender and often die of inflamation of the lungs.

In addition to the diseases I have named, others occur now and then, with considerable frequency, of which I may mention: rheumatism, epilepsy, collic, hysteria and several infirmities peculiar to women.

From this catalogue, you will perceive that the coloured population of the South-West, are by no means exempt from a variety of formidable diseases. As we come further north tetanus and autumnal fever get less, but consumption and inflamations of the lungs increase. All over the region of which I have spoken, the greater part of the practice of every country physician, is among the coloured people. A gentleman in Louisianna, told me that he received a salary of $1200 a year, for attending, on a single plantation. From all I have read and heard on the diseases of Liberia; my impression is that if half the coloured population of a South-Western plantation, were sent to the colony, they and their descendants, in 10 years, would number more than those left behind.

With great respect, I remain, dear sir, your obedient servant,
DAN DRAKE.
Mr. PINNEY.

REMINISCENCES. Whereas it hath pleased many of our fellow editors, in sundry places, to inform their readers of the things which happened in the ancient time, whereby all those that hunger and thirst after knowledge, may be satisfied,—it hath also seemed good unto us, having had perfect knowledge in the premises, to instruct the rising generation in certain things which once were in our town of Boston.

About the close of the last century, there stood fronting the "Old Granary Burying Ground," and on the spot which is now occupied by the buildings yclepled Bumstead Place, a spacious wooden edifice, used as a repository for the wonders of nature and art, and known to all the country ladies and gentlemen who visited Boston to buy bonnets and gowns, and looking glasses, and table linen, and other necessaries, wanted by those who were about to unite in the bands of holy wedlock, by the style and title of "the Columbian Museum." Adjoining this stately pile was an edifice of somewhat more modest pretensions, and which did not tower much above those in these degenerate days called ten-footers. This was the resort of the bon-vivants of the day, where they celebrated the praises of Othello Pollard, and poured out bountiful libations in honour of his skill in the art of mingling saccharines and acids. Othello, like his name-sake of Venice, was black, and, if we recollect right, a little declined in the vale of years, but here the parallel ends. Our Othello's Desdemona was as begrimed as his own visage. The audience which frequented his mansion did it' not with greedy ear to devour up his discourse, but with other organs than those which decorate, the head, to devour things far sweeter than the eloquent discoursing of the sable African. Othello suffered a hair-breadth escape by the fire which in 1802 destroyed the Columbian Museum, and was driven to seek an asylum in some other part of the town; but he never recovered the run of custom, which that unlucky hour deprived him of. Like a sensitive plant, removed from its native soil, he flourished not as in former time. Suffice it to say, that in a short time Othello's occupation was gone, and both he, and his fair Desdemona with it.

A few days since, an old friend dropped into our editorial closet, and handed from his pocket-book, where it had lain for years in obscurity and neglect, one of Othello's Bills, of which the following is a copy. And we feel it to be our duty to rescue from unmerited oblivion, the name and character of the renowned Othello, by inscribing them on our columns, together with the Bill itself, which will be a sufficient voucher to posterity that he was a man of wit, wisdom and valour, and not unworthy to be immortalized by the verse of some future Shakspeare.

MY COUSINS' VISIT TO THE NAIL WORKS.

A BRANDY-FIRE NEW SONG, BY THE AUTHOR OF—WAVERLY.

Tune—Tid-re I.

Say, have you seen a Nail Machine?
'Tis all the people's wonder,—O;
It thumps away, both night and day,
And makes a noise, like thunder—O,
The cranks and cams, like battering rams,
Do keep such pelting, pouncing—O,
That all the ground is shook around
By reason of the jouncing—O!

Recitative.—Now you must know that I'd a lot of cousins, that "com'd all the way down from Varmount to larm the fashions, and to hear and see all the cute and curious thigumajigs of the Old Colony." "By jolly," said Zachery Diggins, I insign to see the nail works if it costs me my fire-ball colt. Uncle Fife told us as how they had ten thousand rattle-traps, and kept up a tarnation sort of a

"Rattlety bang, and clatterty clang;
"And rattlety clatterty bang they go!"

So, off we sat with Tom and Bet,
Young Stephen Bumps and Dolly—O;
And Jo and Josh and Bill Magoshi;
Ned Shacklefoot, the jolly—O;
And Suzy Nud and Minny Judd,
(They rode behind on pillions—O,)
And Starky Slack. They made such clack,
You'd thought there were a million—O!

Recitative.—We scamp'd along through mud and mire quite in the style of the fashionables, till we were brought up, all standing, full but before 'squire Clinker's nail works, and were soon genteelly escorted into the very bowels of his great establishment; when out squealed cousin Betty Diggins, as loud as a shriek-owl, "O, the wonderation, what a nation sight of jiggermarees!" "Yes, faith," quoth Ned, "and as thick as seven bumblebees in a punkin-blow!" "Rabbit ye, Betty, an be darn'd, and hold your gab there," bawled Zachery. "O, the old sneezer, now they shell 'em out!" cried Josh. And then cousin Dolly, the school-dame, she was all sensitive. "O, the hurry and living mighty," said Dol, "I'll be souzed in a butter tub, if ever I seed such curious thingums in all my born days. Jiggs and cathips, I'm all over goose pimples!" "Admiration," said out Tom, 'now they chop the iron up!" Then Bet, taking his turn, exclaim'd "the Lord and Buttons! uncle Jeremy's threshing mill is no touch to it. Take care, Stephen, or you'll have your gaberd ripp'd out by the machinery there, as quick as a pig can eat a worm!"—Now all this was very delightful, accompanied to the dynatose of the whirling machinery as it very delicately touched on its

Rattlety bang, and clatterty clang;
And rattlety, clatterty bang we go!

Then up went Jo, and thought as how
He'd like to try the riggle—O,
But all this jerks and awkward quirks
Soon set them in a giggle—O
"Poh, Jo, you coot," cries Shacklefoot,
You'd better come to halting—O,
And stop the noise of these rude boys,
By paying of the malting—O

Rectative.—Now, you know that, in a print shop, if a meddler should happen to burn his fingers a bit by dabbling with their big primer, pica or black balls then look out for a brace of printer's devils about his ears! The like it was with poor cousin Josy. He had never before been beyond his father's farm to learn the tricks played upon the travellers. The lad was most surely in for't, and a treat of whiskey was now the only remedy to place him in respectable standing again, and to put a stop to their continual

Giggletty gab, and ribblety rab,
And giggletty, giglety, gabble—O,

O, then they got a two quart pot,
That shined like conchmen's brasses—O;
And Jo put in a quart of gin
And fill'd it up with lusses—O,
He pass'd it round and all did swig,
Till they had got a plenty—O;
And each became a merry grig!
O, there were nearly twenty—O.

Recitative.—By the way, it has been slanderously reported that some of the pretty girls got a little fuddled with all; but, mind ye, I'll never be hanged for defamation. All I can tell ye about the matter is that it set the deel into their slippery tongues, whose confounded gibberjabber out-rattled and rumbled the deep tonation of the machinery with their abominable

Clickity clack, and lickity whack,
And whickity, clickity clack we go.

Then came the blerk, a brisk young spark,
All bowing to each lady—O,
All questions all, both great and small,
To answer he was ready—O,
The girls were pleas'd, for them he squeezed!
(They hardly could deny him—O;)
But Sarry Slack, she got a smack!
Unless they did belie them—O.

Recitative.—This little bit of an animal, the clerk, was a sort of a would-be-dandy; having the bottom of his waist pinched up to the size of a quart pot, and thus resembling in shape what we call a mud wasp He wore eleven capes to his coat; and had over the place where his brains should be, a jockey cap of caskin, and carried a mock gold watch with two seals, each as big as a premium turnip; O, these dear, sweet creatures are always vastly attentive to the ladies. They may be easily distinguished from other animals by the above description, and their singular gait which is a sort of a

Tippity bob, and tippity bob;
"O, I am all the tippy—O!"

So round we went with mind, intent
On all this mighty working—O.
'Twas "tarnal queer, such wond'rous gear;
"And, O, such jams and jerking—O!"
At length says Tom, "let's strike for home;
To night, you know's the dancing—O!"
"O, yes" cries Zach, "if we go back,
It's time we were a prancing—O."

Recitative.—So each lad of us took his lass, and then in comely mode we all departed. It was however thought by most of the ladies, that Mr. Tippy showed too much attention to Miss Sary Slack, considering that cousin Sary was no better; and to be sure I will say no worse than the rest of them. But the school-dame, we all thought, was quite too severe on the occasion, for she declared by the jumping Moses, that such indication ought to be carried to the highest court of juncture, for they quite annihilated all satisfaction of the visit at on. But all hard thought and hard words were soon dissipated by the frolick and fun on the road as we jovially drove home with Merrily, ho! whisp, dobbin, ge, O!

Galloping gaily and cheery—O,

Then home we got by gallop and trot,
In season for he junket—O.
And there was Sam and Katy Cram.
And cousin David Plunket—O.
Now hark around the cheering sound
Of Peg and Pero's scraping—O!
In merry plight we spend the night
In frolicking and cap'ring—O!

Recitative.—Now, as this was probably the last time we should all be together under such pleasant circumstances, we were resolved to keep till the cows come home, as cousin Minny said. And, to be sure, so we did right merrily with Hunt the Squirrel, Barrel of Sugar, Jack on the Green, Jo Barker, &c. Here, however, was none of your dandy pidgeon wings shausees or rigeradoons, but the good old fashioned

Riggletty scuffley thump and shuffley thump,
And shuffley clump we go.

Somebody, who has doubtless had experience remarks that "the labor of an editor's life is not so much in what he has to write, as in what he has to read.

A patient complained of a pain in his stamach —"What hast thou been eating?" said the physician.—Bread that was burnt, replied the man. Upon this the Doctor gave him a collyrium for his eyes. "I told you I had the colic said the man! "True answered the physician—'but had thy eye sight been good, thou wouldst have seen that thy bread was burnt.'

A THOUGHT ON THE PRESENT AS WELL AS THE FUTURE DESTINY OF LIBERIA.

The following reflections, are particularly addressed to the more intelligent department of these colonies. The members of the various branches of the government composes that portion of our people, to whom the friends of philanthrophy and christianity look with like concern, for the fulfilment of their best hopes. To you my honored friends, the guardianship and watchful care of Liberia's present and future prosperity is intrusted, a trust, solemn and interesting, in the highest degree. To be called especially and jointly, by the common sufferage of your country to engage in this noblest of all earthly causes, is a privilege and an honour which you can never adequately prise. If we make the estimate of it which we ought and which we must necessarily, do we would at all times be somewhat prepared to meet our countries calls, with augmented pleasure and zeal, and never be at a loss to carry out the legitimate, and designed end of our government.

Whatever there may be of promise or of alarm in the present posture of our affairs, the responsibilities for the issue rests with but a few. This fact is deeply to be lamented, we need not stop here to assign any reason why the cause is thus, we will only request the reader to recur to that class of immigrants that has been sent to these colonies from time to time to build it up, and he will there find the reason fully developed; we are well aware that in all forms of government there is always a greater proportion of the people unenlightened, and of consequence, that portion of people never will give the politics of their government scarcely a thought, and if they do, they never fail to entertain wild and fanciful ideas of it embracing almost an unlimited field for differences of opinion and variety of action: but there are certain great and general principles, and some too most important objects connected with that form of government under which we have been living, and from which we are pretty certain we shall never depart intirely. In a government founded on the public will, where the voice of the people can build up or pull down at pleasure, that will must be under the regulation and control of sound and enlightened principles, or virtue will very soon have no defence and vice no check.

In no age of the brief history of these colonies has there been greater need of high moral and political sagacity than at the present, whatever means, then can be efficiently applied or resorted to, to prepare and mould us for a national character, deserves the serious consideration of all who love Liberia.

A great experiment is shortly to be made to ascertain whether the perpetuity of our civil, social, and political institutions can be reconciled with universal sufferage, without which the anticipated destiny of our infant republic with all its present and future prospects must go down and leave us in a state of inexorable despotism and bondage. But where shall we begin the work, from whence shall we derive intelligence suited to the arduous task, From what history shall we be enabled to gather sufficient light. In vain you consult past history. The light of history unveils to us nothing corresponding with our present position. It is true that from past history we may trace the origin and operation, and of course, the excellencies and defects of the various forms of government. From the grand monarchies of Cyrus, Alexander, Dido, and Ceazar, we may, pass down to those of China Turkey, and Russia as they now are or from the republic, of ancient, to those of modern times, and when we shall have made deep and lasting researches, still we find not a parallel, to Liberia, when, where and at what time, and under what circumstances did any set of people like unto us were ever driven to the extremities we are. Driven by the galling yoke of oppression from our homes to take up our abode in a land of darkness and death, to be exiled forever from our parents, our children, our friends, and all we hold dear and near, merely in consequence of a thin veil, a sable cast that covers an immortal intellectual mind. Yes O righteous heaven it is for this we are thus deprived of the dearest pledge of our existence. And still yet we are an eyesore to British and other unhallowed ambition. Still yet, attempts are making to force us out of this world into a strange, and perhaps a new undiscoverable planet, the discovery of which depends upon the fanciful imagination of some of our half hearted friends. A replete history of aggressions practiced upon us by christian powers, and by individuals, can be very easily given, fortified by facts which could not be successfully put down, but enough, as we are driven to a "dernier's" resort, our last hope, let us betake ourselves to the work as men, and as christians, relying on Onnipotence as our deliverer and friend. Let us remember that we have reached an appalling crices and the magnitude of the work to be performed, is of no small importance. It is a work that no legislation alone can reach, and nothing but an undivided, earnest, decided, public sentiment can achieve, and that, too, not by supinely and indifferently considering the subject. But by a well systematized voluntary deliberation of the length, and breadth of the gallant, though small ship in which we are sailing. Our alliance of blood and political interest is such, that we cannot stand aloof in the hour of our countries' calamnity. The great question to be decided is, can the exiled people of these colonies be so imbued with intelligence and virtue, as to bring out in laws and their administration a perpetual self preserving energetic form of government. This question we will not attempt to answer, time alone must answer it. But there is one fact with which we will acquaint the world, from which we dare not depart is, when we recall to mind the perils, that surrounds us, the dangers through which we have afflictingly past, and the all important truth that here, and here alone in this our beloved adopted country, man is equal to man, we will prepare to meet the exigencies. It is true that most of our ablest men are looking out on the deep vexed with storms, with great forbordings and failing of heart for fear of the issue, and it is all ready perceptible that a spirit of impatience and distarst is rising, in respect to the perpetuity of any form of government that we may adopt. These fears are no doubt well founded and we are glad that they exist or are even entertained. It is the star of hope in our dark and beclouded political horrizon. These fears are what we need, as the ship needs wind, on a rocking sea, after a storm to prevent foundering, when our fear and our efforts shall correspond with our danger, the danger is past. All that is needed to accomplish the great work upon which we must shortly enter is a firm dependance on Omnippotence, and a virtuous intellectual, and energetic cooperation of moral and political skill. If this principal be acceeded to, and fully carried out Liberia is safe, and the greatest blessing that we will ever be enabled to bequeath to our children will be secured. But if in our haste to become a nation, we ought run our literary abilities, if we entertain and cherish mere superficial notions of what is our duty, and the ability and qualifications of those to whom we must commit the arduous task of constructing a form of government, suited to the feeling and interest of the people, we will soon be enguliphed in a set of difficulties from which we may never be enabled to extricate ourselves. Therefore let no one dream of Liberia's independence without carrying along with him the prerequisite elements of her redemption and preservation. And the experiment will be glorious. The joy of our friends realized. The difficulties of the present times and of the more appaling approaching times, must be steadily and vigorously met and counteracted, or our hopes we repeat, will be blasted, Liberia will be driven like gossamer before a furious tornado, and our only hope will go down, not the morning but the evening star of a world's hope—a world's emancipation. We conclude the present remarks by noticing two verses of a piece of poetry written by Mrs. Sigourney.

"They who would found a state,
On Afric's torid plain,
Should nerve their spirits for the weight,
Of toil, and care and pain.

Sustain each adverse shock
With strength that never can fail,
And, like the sires of Plymoth Rock
Look heavenward and prevail."

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, SEPTEMBER 5th, 1835

THE number of the Liberia Herald, for July was announced as the last, which would be published. Upon that period a mortifying indifference to the paper—whether it lived or died had been manifested almost throughout the colony. When however, it was announced that the paper was discontinued, many who had been before indifferent, became anxious that it should be sustained. The result of this awakened interest has been the transfer of a part of the paper to a company of gentlemen in this town. It is now proposed to conduct it on the joint interest of all the proprietors.

By announcing with the commencement of a New Series of the LIBERIA HERALD, the course intended to be pursued, it is felt that by no possibility can any one be prejudiced but those by whom the paper is conducted; nor can they, unless they fail to sustain the expectations our announcement excites, while at the same time it may attract towards us and towards our colony that attention, which, leading to an examination of our claims upon the sympathy of the world cannot fail to extort a verdict in our favour.

However despicable and unworthy of attention our colony may appear in the eyes of those, who, from prejudice or mental imbecility are incapable of tracing events from their first small beginnings until to the eye of a sagacious foresight, they stand forth in all their full proportions and full effects: and however small and insignificant it may in itself really be, still it is certain, that as an enterprise altogether unique—as an experiment alone in its kind and in all the means employed to accomplish it, it is centering upon it the attention and concern of distant politicians. Nor has it awakened the concern of the mere statesman and politician only, it has also struck a chord in the generous bosom of the philanthropist and the christian. The proof the colony has already given of its ability to sustain a well ordered government—the extent to which it has suppressed the slave trade—the wide circle through which it has shot the kindling rays of civilization—the numerous instances in which it has imbued the "dark untutored mind" with the principles of a heaven born religion, have concurred to beget the opinion now rapidly gaining ground that colonies—christian colonies of colored men—not needy rapacious adventurers—but colonies of colored people rooted to the soil are the most efficient agents for redeeming and regenerating Africa. As such the colony is contemplated with lively interest by nearly all classes of men.

It is therefore a matter of deep importance to us that the affairs of the colony should be made known. Its difficulties and impediments, its facilities and resources, its advancement in art and science, its success in agriculture husbandry and commerce—its possession or want of the means of social happiness, political strength, and religious improvement, should be fully and frankly stated. It will be among the objects of the Herald to notice these subjects from time to time, that our friends may have, when we advance, matter for rejoicing and when we falter monition to aid us.

It is also proposed to throw an occasional glance beyond the limits of the colony and observe on the fashions of our unreclaimed neighbours. Whatever is peculiar and interesting in the manners and customs of natives: whatever is important to be known in the geography and natural history of the country so far as we can ascertain them will be the subject of our notice.

In stating that we shall aim to give our paper a literary character we wish it to be distinctly understood now and evermore, that we use the word "literary" as it is applicable to Liberia. Our utmost vanity cannot inspire us to hope more than to keep on par with Liberia literature. Thus much however we hope to accomplish: and our hope is inspired by the known ability and industry of General J. N. Lewis, and Rev. A. W. Anderson, our co-adjutors in the Editorial department; and to enable us to sustain all these hopes, and to accomplish all these intentions we invoke the aid of our friends by their purse and their pen.

THE LIBERIA HERALD

From late papers we learn that the two great powers of Europe, France and England, are about to invest this coast with a gigantic naval force. The joint armament is to consist of forty sail, and over and above this England has engaged to keep an additional force sufficient to suppress the slave trade. It is certainly within the range of physical possibility to prevent by a naval force the exportation of slaves from Africa; but the present state of the market for human cattle in the christian republics of the west will render it a most difficult experiment.

These movements of France and England are big with interest to us and to Africa generally. They are most likely the last link in a series of fruitless experiments, made only to fail, and to disappoint the projectors; and it is on this account we think they will be important to us.

We are not allowed to doubt that political motives prompt much that is done for Africa, and give strength and tone to the proclamations of philanthropy. In the good of Africa nations find their own account. Her interminable forests in which the woodman's axe has never rung, her soil of unequaled powers in producing valuable staples of commerce, and her unopened mines of metalic wealth offer a tempting field for the operations of commerce, when the slave trade alone, by debasing the people and diverting their attention from legitimate pursuits, prevents European capital from entering. In seeking to suppress the slave trade the powers of Europe are seeking an outlet for the productions of their overstocked artisans, and employment for their immense commercial marine.

We feel assured that a guaranty of of right to the exclusive trade of the coast could not be obtained by any one nation from the others, even on the condition that the favoured nation should effectually suppress the slave trade. A spirit of captious jealousy is now on the alert, and manifests itself too clearly in the treaty between the high contracting powers. The stipulation that neither shall land and break up a slaving establishment without the consent or concurrence of the other, looks so much like a reserved check in the hands of each over the other's power to appropriate territory, that we can hardly regard it in any other light. This stipulation grows out of the opinion now pretty generally entertained, and before the term of this treaty shall have expired will have ripened into conviction, that colonies planted along the coast, will more speedily and effectually than any other means suppress the detestable traffic in slaves, and thus unlock the vast resources of the country. When this conviction shall have been formed and nations desirous to participate in the benefits of the African trade shall prepare to act upon it, the most anxious question which will then present itself will regard the materials with which to form these colonies. Tropical Africa seems to have declared eternal war with the constitution of the white man. If he live here at all it is by such nice circumspection, such systematic abstinence from all service involving fatigue and muscular exertion, and such precise measure and kind of food and raiment that except in a few situations, such as those of a professional and oficial character he can be but of little service to a colony. Nature seems to have decreed that none but the African constitution shall bear up under the pressure of the African climate, and so powerful is its influence upon foreign constitutions that even persons of African descent, born and reared in other climates, however long their residence here rarely if ever become fully acclimated.

The material for these colonies must be procured from America or any other place where civilized and intelligent colored people are to be found. These will impart the lessons of order, industry and civilization to the nations immediately around them, and they in turn will instruct others more remote until the circle of civilization shall bound the whole of Africa.

We do not think it would be extravagant to affirm that one half of the amount which it has cost Britain in the five years last past, to maintain the Squadron stationed between Sierra-Leone and New Cestos, judiciously expended in planting and maintaining colonies, would have effectually rooted out the nefarious traffic within those limits, whereas after all that has been done the trade has still a vigorous existence. Such indeed is our conviction of the efficiency of colonies to root out the slave trade that we think this colony might engage—with safety engage to suppress the trade in five years from Gaboon on the north to New Cestos on the south with the direct assistance of only the amount of the cost of the frigate Penelope.

The wretched remnant of the once numerous Veys are returning to their home. A full congress has been held of all the surviving chiefs and Headmen, a general peace proclaimed and the scattered fugitives invited to return. Few circumstances would afford us more satisfaction than to know that the proclaimed peace is firm and lasting. But as the slave trade which produced the confusion still rages there, we are afraid the peace rests on most precarious basis. Our old friend Sanfish is invested with the horse tail; than whom we know of none who in a greater degree combines want of dignity with shrewdness. We have heard it affirmed that they intend to discontinue the slave trade; than which nothing can be farther from truth. Indeed the expectation that the slave trade will not only continue, but be conducted more vigorously is the great inducement with many to return. An influential and intelligent Vey who fled here some year or two ago for refuge and has been residing here ever since went up, at the general call to the "big palaver." He returned highly elated with the prospects and only waits to harvest his rice to "go him home." A day or two he said to a friend "I go my home now, I go make town Cape Mount, I hope you send money for me. I saboy get plenty wood and plenty ivory, and plenty doubloon too." So much for their intention of abandoning the trade.

Much interest has been felt by our citizens of late as to the circumstances under which the French have taken possession of the Gaboon river, and the territory on its banks, and many exaggerated and incorrect reports have been in circulation here. We have taken some pains therefore to inform ourselves upon this matter, and now lay before our readers some of the more important facts in the case. It is well known that the French about two years since obtained from the native chiefs an acknowledgement of their sovereignty over the whole territory within a few miles of the river's mouth, whether by fair means or foul we are not called upon to say. Some of the native tribes yielded but others have continually protested against the legality of the treaty and have uniformly declined obeying them. Among these were the natives of the "King Glass" territory, where are two mission establishments of the American Board. This territory is within eight miles of the mouth of the river, and contain several native villages of considerable importance to traders as depots for red wood, ivory, and other articles of African trade. It is moreover inhabited by a race of people, more advanced in civilization and more docile than any with which we are acquainted on that part of the coast. The French used every possible effort to induce these people to ratify the treaty made by their chiefs, to surrender their territory and acknowledge French soverenity, but the King Glass people uniformly refused: arguments, entreaties and threats were equally unavailing. The natives declared that they never would surrender their country, and even imposed the penalty of death upon any one who should hoist the French flag there. Capt. Hardrouyre of the French brig Tactique lying in the river gave them notice that he would fire upon and destroy their town and property in case of their continued refusal; which he actually proceeded to do on the 26th July. A party of men from the Tactique was landed, and with a few soldiers from the French fort took possession of the town:—the natives fled in all directions. About a dozen shots were fired from the Tactique which did little or no damage, the French captain evidently being anxious to do as little harm as possible. One ball struck the ground very near the chapel erected by the American missionary the Rev. W. Wilson but no injury was done it. The party which landed did some mischief by breaking down the doors of the house and destroying some furniture: the missionary premises were not molested. Upon the whole the amount of mischief done was slight. It was in the power of the French captain to have destroyed every house in twenty minutes if he had chosen: his object evidently was to frighten the poor natives into submission and in this he succeeded. They acknowledged themselves to be French subjects and their territory French territory. France is now the undisputed sovereign of the whole river and its banks. The greater part of the natives however have retreated into the bush and declare they will not return, but will emigrate to some other part of the coast.

As to the mission establishments one of them has already been abandoned, and the missionaries Mr. and Mrs. Bushnell have arrived at this place on their return to the United States: the other which is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Wilson will probably we think be abandoned also, as the French officers appear to regard them with great distrust. Moreover their usefulness is apparently quite annihilated as the schools are broken up and the natives dispersed. This result we cannot contemplate without sorrow as this mission was one of as fair promise as any on the coast. Some good had already been effected and much more was reasonably hoped for and the missionaries were regarded by the natives with much affection as well as respect.

As to reports in circulation of the insults offered to the American flag we were informed by one of the officers of the Traxton that the French commander had expressly disavowed any such intention.

LOST.

The sloop Gabriel was driven ashore on the Junk bar on the morning of the 29 ult. and totally lost. No lives lost.

An honest man and a just. Ki-Bah a Bassa chief residing on the Junk river just at the point where the camwood from the interior is embarked in canoes for the beach lies dangerously ill. The traders to that region are one and all expressing their grief at his illness, and seem moreover to think his death would be a great calamnity. He is in one sense one of the few men whom the old cynic was seeking when carrying his lantern at noon day. Ki-Bah deals largely with the Americans and "is king of too much people." He is not only prompt and punctual in meeting his own engagements but uses his authority to make his subjects the same. If a man will not pay, he assumes the debt, sells the delinquent and if necessary his family also, for wood, and with the wood pays the debt. If this custom were universally adopted, blacks would not be the only slaves.

A few evenings ago we retired to rest at our usual hour and as we supposed in our usual state of health and spirits. Having long wooed in vain.

"Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep,' we yeilded the reins to imagination and sent her forth to roam in fairy lands. Up she ascended and ranged at large through natures wide extent, and through worlds wider still—her own creation.

Having soared aloft beyond the ken of earth born creatures—gaily tripped o'er dowery mead and skimmed the sunny vale, listened to the soothing sound of distant waterfalls and babbling brooks, laboured up the dark defile of ancient mountain famed in classic lore, looked down the deep profound of awful fissure riven by angry bolt of heaven and poised on fearful crag projecting high o'er oceans thundering wave we reined in our Pegasus to the sober realities of mortal existence.

Whether it was the effect of these discursive flights or whether of too hearty a supper, or of no supper at all (the facility of supper not being always ours) from some cause we soon felt what some have named poetic inspiration: but whether our "eye in a fine frenzy" rolled as we did not happen to see it we shall not undertake to say. The flesh of the head and face became fixed and rigid, the hair stood erect, the muscles of the lower extremities underwent an alternate contraction and dilatation holding the leg and thigh firmly in a direct line, and moving them alternately in a vertical position, at a pace slow solemn, and measured, while a heat so intolerable burned upon the brain that forced us to exclaim at the top of our lungs fire fire!! Alarmed by so startling a cry the boy came rushing into the room with a pail of water. Discovering no cause for the alarm and seeing our singular position, he glanced now around the apartment and then at us, while a countenance made up half of smile and half of terror proved he was arbitrating whether to run or stand. Fire fire! we exclaimed. Where! said the terrified wight, at the same time grasping the pail. Here! we replied, striking our hand on our forehead. The boy concluded we were mad, and was about to test the efficacy of the water on our person. By one desperate leap from the bed we reached the desk, spasmodically grasped the pen and the following ode flowed freely from its point.

1 Dark was the hour: solemn and still,
Nights sable mantle wrapped around,
The moon was vailed—hid every star
Above, below nor voice nor sound.
All's well! All's well the only cry
Of wakeful sentry—caught the ear,
The wearied watchman long'd to lie
And lose in sleep his anxious care

2 As hungry wolf with sudden leap
Springs on the fold at dead of night—
As cowards when the the valiant sleep
The savage foe rushed on the sight.
To arms! to arms a voice arose,
Stern as the blast from northern skies
To arms! to arms? still louder rose
'Till drown'd by savage foemen's cries

3 Onward they rushed. The demon yell—
The clanging horn—the rattling drum
Boomed on the air like sounds from hell
Or of the world the end had come.
Onward! onward! Liberia's cry
Rose high above the storm of strife,
Curse on the wretch who fears to die,
Who basely seeks to save his life.

4 The war grew hot, the battle loud,
Swift winged and thick deaths flew around,
That savage host erst brave and proud
With mangled dead now strews the ground
Advance, advance the cowards flee,
Their broken ranks proclaim defeat:
Advance advance to victory,
A victory glorious as complete.

5 To him that sits upon the throne,
Whom earth and heaven and seas obey,
Him who o'er all is God alone,
Who made their savage foe their prey;
To Him be praise, for not by might
Nor skill did they the victory get;
He nerved them for the fearful fight.
And laid the savage at their feet.

OPINION AND PRACTICE.—A talking lady of that sect that honestly avow their Arminian sentiments, was one evening engaged in a dispute with a gentleman of the opposite opinion, and argued so long and so violently, in defence of the creature's being first in the matter of conversion to God, that, to her surprise, she perceived it was one o'clock in the morning. She started, and said, "Well, I had not thought it was so late; I see I cannot work upon you, and I am sure all you say will not convince me; so good night. "Yes," said the gentleman, "it is time to go to rest. Madam, I wish you a good night. I suppose, however, that when you retire, you think to spend a few minutes between you and God." "Doubtless, sir, I do." "Please then' madam, to tell God what you have just told me." "What is that, sir?" "Why, madam, that you began with him before he began with you." "No, I will not," said she. I knew you would not;" replied the gentleman, "and therefore I reserved this argument to the last; for I never found any person of your opinion, that could address God, in consistency with the language which you hold out so confidently to your fellow-mortals." She was evidently hurt by this simple confusion; went away without answering a word, and never spoke, to him afterwards.

Frugality—Frugality may be termed the daughter of Prudence, the sister of Temperance, and the parent of Liberty. He that is extravagant will quickly become poor, and poverty will enforce dependance, and invite corruption. It will almost always produce, a passive compliance with the wickedness of others, and there are few who do not learn by degrees to practice those crimes which they cease to censure. Johnson.

Mr. Barnes, of New Haven, having just returned from hearing a sermon by Mr. Knapp, while in the act of repeating the text of the sermon—"Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee," fell down a corpse!

The smallness of Bonaparte's mouth does not prevent him from shewing his teeth, even where he cannot bite.—London paper

POETRY

From the Guardian.

NIGH seated where the river flows,
That watereth Babel's thankful plain,
Which then our tears, in pearled rows,
Did help to water with the rain:
The thought of Sion bred such woes,
That though our harps we did retain,
Yet useless and untouched there,
On willows only hang'd they were.

Now while our harps were hanged so,
The men whose captives then we lay,
Did on our griefs insulting go.
And more to grieve us thus did say:
You that of music make such show,
Come sing us now a Sion's lay:
Oh no! we have no voice nor hand
For such a song in such a Land.

Though far I be, sweet Sion hill,
In foreign soil exil'd from thee,
Yet let my hand forget his skill
If ever thou forgotten be;
And let my tongue fast glewed still
Unto my roof, lie mute in me;
If thy neglect within me springf
Or aught I do, but Salem sing.

But thou, O Lord, shalt not forget
To quit the pains of Edom, grace,
Who causelesly, yet hotly set
Thy hollow city to deface,
Did thus the bloody victors whet,
What time they enter'd first the place,
"Down, down with it at any hand,
"Make all a waste, let nothing stand."

And Babylon, that didst us waste,
Thyself shalt one day wasted be:
And happy he, who what thou hast
Unto us done, shall do to thee;
Like bitterness shall make the taste,
Like woeful objects make thee see:
Yea, happy who the little ones
Shall take and dash against the stones.

MISCELLANEOUS

PLEASURES OF RURAL RETIREMENT.

When I reflect on the unambitious retirement in which I passed the earlier part of my life in the country, I cannot avoid feeling some pain in thinking that those happy days are never to return. In that retreat, all nature seemed capable of affording pleasure: I then made no refinements on happiness, but could be pleased with the most aukward efforts of rustic mirth; thought cross-purposes the highest stretch of human wit, and questions and commands the most rational way of spending the evening. Happy could so charming an illusion still continue! I find that age and knowledge only contributes to sour our dispositions. My present enjoyments may be more refined, but they are infinitely less pleasing. The pleasure the best actor gives, can no way compare to that I have received from a country wag who imitated a Quaker's sermon. The music of the finest singer is dissonant to what I felt when our old dairy-maid sung me into tears with Johnny Armstrong's Last Good Night, or the Cruelty of Barbara Allen.

Writers of every age have endeavoured to show that pleasure is in us, and not in the objects offered for our amusement. If the soul be happily disposed every thing becomes capable of affording entertainment; and distress will almost want a name. Every occurrence passes in review like the figures of a procession; some may be aukward, others ill dressed; but none but a fool is for this enraged with the master of the ceremonies.

I remember to have once seen a slave in a fortification in Flanders, who appeared no way touched with his situation. He was mained, deformed, and chained; obliged to toil from the appearance of day till night-fall; and condemned to this for life: yet with all these circumstances of apparent wretchedness, he sang, would have danced, but that he wanted a leg, and appeared the merriest, happiest man of all the garrison. What a practical philosopher was here! An happy constitution supplied philosophy; and, though seemingly destitute of wisdom, he was really wise. No reading or study had contributed to disenchant the fairy land around him: every thing furnished him with an opportunity of mirth; and, though some thought him, from his insensibility, a fool, he was such an idiot as philosophers should wish to imitate: for all philosophy is only forcing the trade of happiness, when nature seems to have denied the means.

They, who like our slave, can place themselves on that side of the world in which every thing appears in a pleasing light, will find something in every occurrence to excite their good-humour. The most calamitous events, either to themselves or others, can bring no new affliction; the whole world is to them a theatre, on which comedies only are acted. All the bustle of heroism, or the rants of ambition, serve only to heighten the absurdity of the scene, and make the humour more poignant. They feel, in short, as little anguish at their own distress, or the complaints of others, as the undertaker, though dressed in black, feels sorrow at a funeral.

Of all the men I ever read of, the famous Cardinal de Retz possessed this happiness of temper in the highest degree. As he was a man of gallantry, and despised all that wore the pedantic appearance of philosophy, wherever pleasure was to be sold, he was generally foremost to raise the auction. Being an universal admirer of the fair sex, when he found one lady cruel, he generally fell in love with another, from whom he expected a more favourable reception: if she too, rejected his addresses, he never thought of retiring into deserts, or pining in hopeless distress: he persuaded himself, that instead of loving the lady, he only fancied that he had loved her; and so all was well again. When Fortune wore her angriest look, and he at last fell into the power of his most deadly enemy, Cardinal Mazarine, (being confined a close prisoner in the castle of Valenciennes) he never attempted to support his distress by wisdom or philosophy, for he pretended to neither. He only laughed at himself and his persecutor, and seemed infinitely pleased at his new situation. In this mansion of distress, though secluded from his friends, though denied all the amusements, and even the conveniences of life, he still retained his good-humour; laughed at all the little spite of his enemies; and carried the jest so far, as to be revenged, by writing the life of his gaoler.

All that the wisdom of the proud can teach, is to be stubborn or sullen under misfortunes. The Cardinal's example will instruct us to be merry in circumstances of the highest affliction. It matters not whether our good-humour be construed by others into insensibility, or even idiotism; it is happiness to ourselves and none but a fool would measure his satisfaction by what the world think of it. For my own part, I never pass by one of our prisons for debt, that I do not envy that felicity which is still going forward among those people, who forget the cares of the world by being shut out from its ambition.

The happiest silly fellow I ever knew, was of the number of those good natured creatures that are said to do no harm to any but themselves. Whenever he fell into any misery, he usually called it, Seeing Life. If his head was broke by a chairman, or his pocket picked by a sharper, he comforted himself by imitating the Hibernian dialect of the one, or the more fashionable cant of the other. Nothing came amiss to him. His inattention to money matters had incenced his father to such a degree, that all the intercession of friends in his favour was fruitless. The old gentleman was on his death-bed. The whole family and Dick among the number, gathered around him. "I leave my second son Andrew," said the expiring miser, "my whole estate, and desire him to be frugal." Andrew, in a sorrowful tone, as is usual on these occasions, prayed Heaven to prolong his life and health to enjoy it himself. "I recommend Simeon, my third son, to the care of his elder brother, and leave him, besides, four thousand pounds." "Ah! father," cried Simeon, (in great affliction to be sure) "May Heaven give you life and health to enjoy it yourself." At last, turning to poor Dick, "As for you, you have always been a sad dog; you'll never come to good; you'll never be rich; I'll leave you a shilling to buy an halter." Ah! father," cries Dick, without any emotion, "May Heaven give you life and health to enjoy it yourself!" This was all the trouble the loss of fortune gave this thoughtless imprudent creature. However, the tenderness of an uncle recompenced the neglect of a father; and my friend is now not only excessively good-humoured, but competently rich.

Yes, let the world cry out at a bankrupt who appears at a ball; at an author who laughs at the public, which pronounces him a dunce; at a general who smiles at the reproach of the vulgar, or the lady who keeps her good-humour in spite of scandal; but such is the wisest behaviour that any of us can possibly assume; it is certainly a better way to oppose calamity by dissipation, than to take up the arms of reason or resolution to oppose it: by the last, we only conceal them from others; by struggling with misfortunes, we are sure to receive some wounds in the conflict; but a sure method to come off victorious, is by running away

Essay 3.

THE NUMBER SEVEN.

Seven is composed of the two first perfect numbers, equal and unequal—three and four; for the number two consisting of repeated unity, which is no number, is not perfect; it comprehends the primary numerical triange, or trine, and is square or squartile; conjunctions considered by the favourers of planetary influence, as of the most benign aspect.

In six days creation was perfected, the 7th was consecrated to rest. On the 7th of the 7th month, a holy observance was ordained to the Chaldees of Israel, who fasted 7 days, and remained 7 days in tents—the 7th year was directed to be a sabbath of rest for all things; and at the end of 7 times 7 years, commenced the grand jubilee—every 7th year the land lay fallow; every seventh year there was a general release from all debts, and all bondsmen were set free. From this law may have originated the custom of our binding young men to 7 years' apprenticeship, and of punishing incorrigible offenders by transportation for 7, twice 7, or three times 7 years—every 7th year the law was directed to be read to the people—Jacob served 7 years for the possession of Rachel, and also another 7 years—Noah had 7 days warning of the flood, and was commanded to take the fowls of the air into the Ark by 7, and the clean beasts by sevens. The Ark touched the ground on the 7th month; and in 7 days a dove was sent; and again in 7 days after. The 7 years of plenty, and the 7 years of famine were foretold in Pharoah's dream, by the 7 fat, and the 7 lean beasts; and the 7 ears of full, and the 7 ears of blasted corn—Nebuchadnezzar was 7 years a beast, and the fiery furnace was heated 7 times hotter to receive Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego. The young of animals were to remain with the dam 7 days, and at the 7th to be taken away. By the old law, man was commanded to forgive his offending brother 7 times; but the meekness of the last revealed religion extended his humility and forbearance to 70 times 7. "If Cain shall be revenged 7 fold, truly Lamech 70 times 7." In the destruction of Jericho 7 priests bare 7 trumpets 7 days. On the 7th they surrounded the walls 7 times, and after the 7th time the walls fell—Balaam prepared 7 bullocks and 7 rams for a sacrifice. Seven of Saul's sons were hanged to stay a famine—Laban pursued Jacob 7 days' journey—Job's friends sat with him 7 days and 7 nights, and offered 7 bullocks and 7 rams as an atonement for their wickedness—In the 7th year of his reign. King Ahasuoras feasted 7 days, and on the 7th directed his 7 Chamberlains to find a Queen, who was allowed 7 maidens to attend her—Miriam was cleansed of her leprosy by being shut up 7 days—Solomon was 7 years building the temple, at the dedication of which he feasted 7 days—In the Tabernacle were 7 lambs—7 days were appointed for an atonement upon the Altar, and the Priest's son was ordained to wear his father's garment 7 days—The children of Israel eat unleavened bread 7 days—Abraham gave 7 ewe lambs to Abimelech as a memorial for a well—Joseph mourned 7 days for Jacob—The Rabbins say that God employed the power of answering this number to perfect the greatness of samuel, his name answering the value of the letters in the Hebrew word which signify 7; whence Hannah his mother in her thanks says, that the barren had brought forth 7? In Scripture are enumerated 7 resurrections—the widow's son by Elias, the Shunamite's son by Elisha, the soldier who touched the bones of the prophet, the daughter of the ruler of the synagogue—The widow's son of Nain Lazarus and our blessed Lord—The Apostles chose 7 deacons—Enoch who was translated, was the 7th after Adam—and Jesus Christ the 77th in a direct line—Our Saviour spoke 7 times from the cross, on which he remained 7 hours; he appeared 7 times after 7 times 7 days sent the Holy Ghost—In the Lord's prayer and 7 petitions contained in 7 times 7 words, omitting those of mere grammatical connection—Within this number are connected all the mysteries of the Apocalypse, revealed to the 7 churches of Asia—There appeared 7 gold candlesticks and 7 stars in the hand of him that was in the midst—Lambs before the 7 spirits of God!—The book with 7 seals—The lamb with 7 horns and 7 eyes—7 Angels with 7 seals—7 kings—7 thunders 7 thousand men slain—The dragon with 7 heads and 7 crowns—The beast with 7 heads—7 Angels bringing 7 plagues, and 7 phials of wrath—The vision of Daniel was 70—There are also numbered 7 heavens, 7 planets, 7 stars, 7 wise men, 7 champions of Christendom, 7 notes in music, 7 primary colours, 7 deadly sins, 7 Sacraments in the Roman Catholic Church—The 7th son was considered as endowed with preeminent powers—The 7th son of a 7th son is still thought to possess the power of healing diseases spontaneously—Perfection is likened to gold 7 times purified in the fire; and we yet say, "you frighten me out of my seven senses." The opposite sides of every face on the dice make 7; whence players at hazard make 7 the main. Hippocrates says that the sentenary number, by its occult virtues, tends to the accomplishment of all things, to be the dispenser of life and fountain of all its changes; and, like Shakespeare, he divides the life of man into 7 ages. In 7 months a child may be born and live, and not before; and anciently it was not named before 7 days not being accounted fully to have life before that periodical day. The teeth spring out in the 7th month, and are shed and renewed in the 7th year when infancy is changed into childhood. At twice 7 years puberity begins; at thrice 7 years the faculties are developed, manhood commences, and we become legally competent to all civil acts. At four times 7 man is in full possession of his strength; at five times 7 he is fit for the business of the world; at six times 7 he becomes grave and wise, or never; at 7 times 7 he is in his apogee, and from that time decays; at eight times 7 he is in his first climacteric; at nine times 7 or 63 he is in his grand climateric, or year of danger; and ten times 7, or three score years and ten, has by the Royal Prophet been pronounced the natural period of human life. "The shield of Ajax consisted of 7 bulls' hides." —There were 7 Chiefs before Thebes—The blood was to be sprinkled 7 times before the Altar—Naaman was to be dipped 7 times in Jordan—Apuleius speaks of dipping the head 7 times in the sea for purification—In all solemn rites of purgation, dedication, and consecration, the oil or water was 7 times sprinked.—The house of wisdom, in Proverbs, had 7 pillars—London paper.

From the Colonization Herald.

OUR COUNTRY—ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

I commence this week a series of brief extracts from the Pennsylvania Gazettee, published in Philadelphia by Benjamin Franklin, a file of which commencing August 30, 1741, more than one hundred years since, is in my possession. I add such comments and explanations as are likely to illustrate the various subjects. The whole will serve to shed light on the darkness of the past.

Aug. 30, 1774, a message from Governor Clinton, Governor of the province of New York, on the opening of the General Assembly of the Colony "Die Lunae," 20 Aug., 1744. It would make perhaps half a column of the Advertiser." In those days Governors confined their Messages strictly to the affairs of their own respective provinces, an example worthy of their successors in the States at the present day. Gov. C. was doubtless of the family with Geo. Clinton, Governor of New York during the early part of this century.

Great Britain being at war with France, the colonies were extensively engaged in privateering, and advertisements of prize vessels with their cargoes make their appearance regularly in the Gazettee." Here is a notice on the same subject.

"To all gentlemen and others that are inclined to go on a privateering voyage against the enemies of the Crown of Great Britain. This is to give notice that the Brigantine Raleigh, now fitting out at Norfolk in Virginia, commanded by Captain Walter Coode, mounting 12 guns with 120 small arms, 120 pair of pistols, 120 pair of cutlashes, and 120 pair cartouche boxes, with all other warlike stores, and six months provisions; to be manned with 120 men, will be in order to receive men on board by the 5th September, and with all expedition will proceed on such a cruise as may be judged likely to prove most advantageous, to all parties concerned. Durham Hall for the company."

"Four likely negro men and one woman, all young, fit for plantation business, to be sold by William Bell, below the drawbridge, near Powell's wharf." Negro slavery existed at that date, it seems in Pennsylvania.

Runaways or convicts sold in the colonies, are advertised as: "An English servant man, Thomas ——, a Welsh servant lad, Morgan Jones, a ——— Scotchman, Patrick O'Cadden." &c. &c.

Fashions of the day. "[illegible] Carrington, stay-maker from London, has removed to the [illegible] near Front street, and keeps the sign [illegible] where all sorts of stays may be had [illegible] time."

"To be made or sold by Matthew [illegible], Perruke makers in Chesnut Street, Philadelphia. Perukes of English hair of any sort, color, or shape, viz. Tyes, Bobs, Majors, Spencers, Fox-tails or Twists. They also make Curls or Tutes, for ladies or others, made of their own or English hair at the shortest notice as cheap as in London."

Pope the poet. "London, May 8, we hear that Alexander Pope, Esq., who died a few days ago, has appointed the Lord Visc. Bolingbroke, and the Earl of Marchmont to be his executors."

The names of vessels on the shipping list are very characteristic of the times, "The Charming Sally, Two Pollies, Rosanna, New Susannah, Increase, Relief, Tryal, Mulberry, Alice and Mary, Delight, Unity, Little Gipsey, Good Itent, Lovely Lass," &c.

"Just published and to be sold by B. Franklin, at the New Printing Office near the Market, The Grand Treaty held at the town of Lancaster with the Indians of the Six Nations, in June, 1744. Price eighteen pence. Also, "The Chronicles of the Kings of England, written in the manner of the Ancient Jewish historians by Nathan Ben Saddi, a priest of the Jews," written, doubtless by Franklin himself.

"To be sold, Curriers Oil, Chockolate, Indigo, &c., by John Leech, near the church, Philadelphia."

It might be hence inferred, that they had but one church in Philadelphia at that date. This was far however, from the fact.

Ancient names and styles of dry goods, "Mantua and paduasoys calimancoes, plain and stripped tammies, hairbines, alapeens, duroys, ribbed druggets, turkets, florettas, nonesopretties, worsted shaggs, shalloons, madrepoors, sawns, chitabully baizes, gurrahs, mamoodies, seersuckers &c., for sale by John Morgan." We need a dictionary of fashions badly. What will the next generation understand by Roorback cassimeres.

"London, July 8. Yesterday the treasure taken by Admiral Anson consisting of 208 chests of silver, 18 chests of gold, and 20 barrels of gold dust, was carried through our city in 32 waggons, preceded by a kettle drum, trumpets, and French horns, guarded by the seamen, commanded by the officers, and was lodged in the tower. On the first waggon was the English colours with the Spanish ensign under it, and every third or fourth waggon carried some trophy of honour taken from the Spaniards in the South Sea as well as the Acapulco ship."

It appears from the face of the "Gazette" and his own autobiography, that franklin set the types, did the press work, mailed and addressed the papers, and as postmaster forwarded them to his subscribers.

Besides all these, an advertisement, "Very good lamblack made and sold by the printer hereof," serves to show that he doubtless made his own printing ink, which is more than can be said of his successors in "the art conservative of arts."

A young lady went the other day to see some friends in Kent, and saying she had never seen a hop garden, the gentleman of the house took her into one. Observing here and there one different from the rest she asked the reason. The gentleman said, "That is the male hop, which——." "Bless me," said the innocent young lady, "I never knew there was such a thing as a male hop before: I shall be very cautious how I drink beer in future."

Perhaps enchanted with the love of fame
He sought the jewel in his neighbors shame."

I remarked, Mr. President, that Mr. J. drew his conclusions from false premises. Now this, to my mind, is very clear; and to every observing mind must be evident; for if we turn our eyes to the U. S., the land of our nativity, the boasted land of liberty, equality, and the rights of man, and what do we behold the condition of the people of color there, especially in the south: precisely the same now, as in Mr. J's day,—the objects of the most abject and cruel Slavery, both of body and of mind;—every avenue stopped that is likely to lead the colored class, —even those of them who are termed free, to education and eminence, the aspiring colored man sins against the white body politic; and like the innocent hare, is soon hunted to the death: and still like the persecuted Israelites, they are required to gather straw for themselves "wherein to make brick;' and yet, "tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon," the stateman and Philosopher, J. . . . . in the kind spirit of Egyptian taskmaster would "lay upon them a full tale of bricks." But let us turn from this tale of woe: and how much better, is the condition of the people of color in the northern and eastern states? the free states of the union? They are but a whit in advance of their brethren in the south; they are there writing under the galling yoke of prejudice—kept under and oppressed, enquring every species of contumily and degradation, debared of every political right. Yes sir, every measure which prejudice can devise, is brought into action against them: in a word, all the powers of this mighty engine, extending from Maine to Louisiand, are put in requisition to sustain this unjust and unnatural warfare. Nor is it in the United States alone, that, that hidra-headed monster, prejudice, swaya its iron rod; its base domination is sorely experienced wherever that human curse, slavery, has existed.

What said Mr. Hamilton, on a certain occasion, whilst declaiming on the subject of the rights of man:—"The people of African decent," says he, "are subject to the most grinding and humiliating of all Slaveries, that of universal and unconquerable prejudice" is this not true, to the very letter, are they not almost every where excluded from the society of the whites; and does it not confirm the argument used by the wises men: "that it is intercourse and commerce that improve the mind; and without them, man would be the most savage and shameless creature in the world!" Yes! and to this alone did even Greece owe her literature and politeness, and to adopt the language of an eminent writer, "the whole may be summed up in this, that man by nature has reason, but reason perfected and endowed with virtue, is owing to discipline and industry." Another author observes, "Life indeed we have from parents, but to live well from learning and education, which are as necessary to the mind as the nurses milk is to the body; and he that wants it, whether a white, or a black man, will prove like a whelp brought up in an old woman's lap, useless and good-for-nothing."

You remember, Mr. President, it is said of Lycurgus, that he brought up a couple of whelps, one to sports in the field, whilst the other was fondled at home; the former proved sagacious and useful in its kind, the latter good for nothing, but to lick a trencher. He afterwards produced them in a full assembly of Spartans, to enforce the necessity of education. Thus you perceive the difference did not proceed from nature, both having the same sire and dame; but from education.

Now Mr. President, when the political disabilities and other disadvantages, with which the people of color, have had to contend, and the few opportunities which they have had to put forth the energies of their mind, are taken into consideration, can any candid man, do otherwise than conceed to them much merit, for the general moral character they have sustained, and for the conspicuous rank many of their class have attained in the field of literature and science:—for, notwithstanding the blighting atmosphere that has surrounded them, we find many, nay, numerous instances, in all ages, and in all climes in which men of color, have given the lie to this hypothesis, and have obtained the highest, as well as the most meritorious honors rendered to talent, public spirit, and moral worth.

Will you indulge me, sir, to cite here a few names, from the long catalogue of individuals, of African descent, who have distinguished themselves in various parts of Europe?

Annabal, a full blooded African, was Lieutenant General in Rusia under Peter the Great, and commanded the engineers, to the entire satisfaction of his sovereign.

Angelo Solinian, was Secretary and companion of the German Prince de-Lebkowitz. and also the preceptor of Prince Lichsternsten.

Amo, Mr. President, whom you have already noticed, was taken from this coast to Holland, and thence to Germany, where he was educated, and became a Doctor of the University of Wittemburg a councillor of the king of Prussia, and was the Author of several disertations, on the rights of his oppressed brethren. He died, I believe, in Holland, where he had been employed for many years, as a teacher, with great success: I have also seen it stated that he returned to and died in his own country. Capetion, was educated by a learned lady in holland. He wrote Latin poems, was a theologian and was sent to Elmina, on this coast, as a missionary.

Francis Williams, was educated at the University of Cambridge. He became professor of mathematics, and wrote poems in Latin and English.

Gustave Vasa, published in London his own memoirs which went through nine editions.

General Dumas, father of the present Alexander, was one of the most skilful and entriped officers in the French line. He was a mulatto, born in St. Domingo.

General Roche, and the brave Colonel Martin, by their bravery, intrepidity and skill, obtained their rank for acts achieved, on the field of battle, and were there decorated with the star of bravery, by the Emperor Napoleon.

M. Laine, was a Peer of France, was a distinguished advocate at Bordeau, and was a Deputy, after the restoration. He was afterwards in the ministry of Louis 18th and was the same Laine who presided over the Legislative Body, during the downfall of Napoleon, after the hundred days.

Jacquis Derham, once a slave in Philadelphia, was master of three languages; and in 1788, became one of the most distinguished Physicians in New Orleans.

Phillis Wheatley is not less deserving of notice. You sir, have read some beautiful poems, the productions of her pen. And need I mention Tousant, Petion, Boyer, or Alexander Dumas, one of the first living authors in France? His dramatic productions are equal to any of the age; and his writings in general are as replete with sound reasoning, and good sense, as the productions of his fairer competitors. He is at present, receiving from a single Editor, an annual sum of eighty thousand frances for the productions of his pen. Esop and Euclid, you know, Mr. President, are supposed to have been blacks; and has the world ever produced greater men? No, sir, and if it were necessary to the refutation of this gross slander, I could name hundreds of individuals of the present day, who are certainly equal, if not superior, to their white brethren, who have not had greater advantages.

Colored men are now holding high and respectable offices of emolument and trust in Europe, the West Indies, the Western Islands, and on this coast, and are discharging the important duties of their station, with a degree of manliness, honor, and veracity, that reflects credit upon the entire race.

I was not a little amused, a few weeks ago, whilst looking over an old American Newspaper: my eyes fell on the following caption in large letters, "Negro Honorables."

The Editor, after naming a number of colored persons who were holding public situations in the British West India Islands, such as magistrates, commandants, consuls, members of council, secretaries, officers of customs, officers in the militia, &c. &c., gravely remarks, "There are thirty-five negroes and mulatoes members of the Legislature making laws to govern their former masters." Monstrous, Mr. President, monstrous, negroes making laws to govern their former masters!

I can imagine, sir, I see that sapient Editor, thrown back in his editorial chair, with his glasses raised, his head thrown back, his eyes turned towards the heavens, and exclaiming, in the deepest agony of soul—with surprise and astonishment, can it be possible, that negroes have souls,—have intellect, and are capable of the same intellectual attainments as the white man; and here, in the 19th, century, preferred to office and distinction, and are actually making laws to govern the whites.

Yes, sir, and were I near him, I would whisper in his ear,—it is even so, it is no fiction, but a Divine reality that Africans have souls, and have intellect too, as capable of improvement as any other class of the human species; and that in the British West Indies especially, since the abolition of slavery, by unremitting application and perseverance, with a determination to excell, their advancement has been rapid and unprecedented: and the unsullied reputation, honorable bearing, and integrity, which they are discharging their important official duties, are approvingly acknowledged and justly appreciated.

I beg, Mr. President, to read here a short extract from an English paper of December 1840, and I venture to assert, if it ever met the eye of my friend the doughty Editor, it must have thrown him into convulsions: It is as follows:—

"The distributions of prizes of the concourse General of the colleges of the university of Paris took place on Monday, under the Presidency of the ministers of public institution. For the first time since the Revolution, the Archbishop assisted at this solemnity which was also attended by Mr. Thiers, and the other ministers present in the capitol, the Prefect of the Department, and the civil and military authorities.

The prize of honor in philosophy was awarded to Julian Gerad, of the college of Bourbourn, the same who, last year gained the prizes of honor in Latin and French composition. This is the first time since the foundation of the concourse General in 1750, that three grand prizes have been obtained by one individual; and the success of the young laureate, is the more remarkable, as he is a son of the African race, a native of Guadalope."

Now, Mr. President, if men so shackled and restrained, amidst the pressure of circumstances so untoward, of prejudices so deeply rooted and violent, and so calculated to enervate the faculties of man have been enabled to attain to such knowledge and distinctions what would have been their proficiency as a class—if extricated from their political thraldom, and permitted the free exercise of their powers, with the same hope of advancement in fortune and in fame as their white brethren? why, instead of one, you would have thousands of Julian Gerads. Let it be universally proclaimed, that men will be respected and preferred according to merit, without regard to color; and I pledge you, Mr. President, that with the same despise and opportunities, the African race will produce as many instances of strong intellectual powers, and genius that will shine forth as resplendedly as any other class.

Yes, sir, it is an incontrovertable fact, founded upon Revelation and Reason, and as clear to my mind as any demonstration in Euclid, that the difference which exists in the knowledge of men, is owing solely to external circumstances and not to nature, and

"The vile traducer knows, or if he knows it not,
The scriptures placed within his reach he ought,
That sould have no discriminating hue—
Alike important in their Maker's view."

Liberians, should loudly and continually ascribe praise to Him, who hath wrought for them so great a deliverance. Here the sons and daughters of America—although once doomed "to lie among the pots" outcasts and degraded in a distant land; "are now becoming as the wings of a dove, covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold." Here, to use an expression frequently quoted by my learned friend, Barrister Cooper,—"every man stands self-poised and self-erect, sitting under his own vine and fig-tree none daring to molest or make him afraid." And as it has been remarked in regard to the government of the U. S. the model after which our own is formed, the sin of slavery excepted. "Among the advantages of democracy, the greatest is perhaps, that all start fair; and the boy, who holds the traveler's horse, as Van Buren is said to have done, may become the President of the U. S." So in Liberia, preferment is not confined to birth or color, but merit will be rewarded though clothed in a sable garment. And have we not in Liberia gems of the first water? Yes, sir, cast your eyes around our own little community, and at a single glance you will find young men possessing strong natural genius, and intellectual capacities, as capable of improvement, as the youth of any community of its size in Christendom, and it only requires the polish of education to give them a lustre, as brilliant and as beautiful as any possessed by the greatest men in Europe or America

It should, however, be remembered, that every man's advancement, depends upon his own exertion. I am aware, and it is to be lamented too, that the young men in Liberia have not the same external advantages, as are enjoyed by those of other countries:—nevertheless, if they wish to become distinguished, and will apply themselves to learning and are studious, the prize is sure.

Reading, not long since a beautiful written article, from the pen of Rev. Mr. Bannister, entitled, "Practical views of mind," I was forcibly impressed with the following remarks, "There are some" says he, "who from precaciousness and morbid development, very early in life give to the world a marvelous exhibition of intellectual power. And there are others too, who from a happy conformation of body, and many favoring external circumstances, joined to an indomitable perseverance, give their names as watch-words, to all who aspire after a gigantic strength of mind. But instead of awarding to these, the exclusive possession of genius, we would affirm, that in respect to power and resources of talent no man is without them." Then, Mr. President, if Africans are men, which fact, I flatter myself, has been fully established, they too possess them. "And the reason why so many," he continues, "have in comparative mediocrity, is because they are content to live merely upon the surface of their souls: It requires toilsome and unremitting labor to dig to the depths of the human spirit and to develop its treasures there. Genius lies too deep in the mind to be got at by ordinary habits of application. Because it comes not up spontaneously to our use; the impression is fixed that we have it not, and we seldom or never make a single exertion to find out our mistake." "But" says he, "any one may astonish himself by the results which protracted and enthusiastic mental efforts will produce. These results may not be seen by him in a day, or a month, or a year; but let an unconquerable determination engage his mind in an energy and power of intellect which he never before imagined he possessed."

Now, sir, if we can bring our minds to believe this, and of its truth there can be no doubt, and will give ourselves the trouble; we may be fitted, not only for the more honorable and efficient discharge of the public duties; to which we may be called, either in church or state; but also better prepared for the study and contemplation of nature and of nature's God. A man, in any community, with a mind well stored with useful knowledge, actuated by virtuous and Religious feelings, prompted by a desire to do good, may truly be termed a centre, from which will radiate light and knowledge, to enlighten and inform the dark understandings of all within its sphere.

And, Mr. President, if any people under the Heavens, are called upon, to arouse themselves to greater exertion, and to bring into action all the powers of their minds, it is the citizens of Liberia; for upon them rests a great responsibility, placed as we are, a Christian community, on the borders of this dark and barbarous continent, surrounded by hundreds of thousands of immortal souls, groping their way to the eternal world, shrouded with the black mantle of superstition and idolatry; and upon whom the colonies are destined to exert a most powerful influence, in its tendency; either to draw them to the light of civilization and Christianity, or to sink them deeper into the abyss of wretchedness and woe: and for which we shall have to account at the judgment seat of Christ.

Besides this, sir, it would seem that the eyes of the whole civilized world are turned upon these colonies, for a proper test of the fact, that all men are equal, and that the African, is as capable of self-government, and the enjoyment of social and political rights, as any other class of the human species.

Then, sir, let us apply our hearts to wisdom, and by diligence, and an indomitable perseverance in well doing; put to silence the calumniating tongues of such benighted theorists, who in the plenitude of their wisdom impiously assert, "That the African by nature, is but a little removed from the brute creation, and not capable of the same intellectual improvement, with which the white man is endowed."

No, Mr. President, God is no respecter of persons, the same unchangable, great I Am, to-day, as when Egypt shone forth in her meridian and unrivaled splendor; black or white, is the same in his sight:—His mercies are ever all his works. But, man, the noblest work of God, the finishing stroke of Creation, for whom all things were made that are made, and who, once bore the immage of his maker; may, yes, awful is the thought, debase himself, and come far short of the high attainments for which he was created. For, sir, when we see a person whether black, or white, content with being ignorant and pursuing folly, his love lost in selfishness, his joys bounded by his senses then it is and only then, sir, we see a corrupt a miserable being but a little removed from the brute creation.

LIBERIA HERALD.

MONROVIA, LIBERIA, OCTOBER 5th, 1845.

UNITED STATES SHIP YORKTOWN.

The U. S. Ship Yorktown, Captain Bell, arrived here from the windward on the 20th, ult. The Governor received despatches by this vessel from the Board, on a subject deeply interesting and highly important to the people of these colonies. The subject will be laid before the people in due time, and will demand calm and deliberate attention, and prudent and careful action. Both precipitancy and hesitancy will be attended with danger, but not in an equal degree—The greatest danger will be on the side of precipitancy. If it be determined to disturb the present relations of the colony, the first question to be decided is, how far, in order to accomplish the end in view is it necessary to disturb them? For it is not to be supposed that any one is desirous of a change merely for sake of change.

In the number of the African Repository for April, there is an excellent article on the Sovereignty of Liberia, said to be from the pen of Rev Mr. Tracy of Boston.

We most fully concur with Mr. Tracy, in the great and fundamental principles he has laid down. They are the same we have hinted at in more than one article in the Herald, and briefly, though distinctly asserted in an article in our number for March. These principles having their foundation in the condition of human nature, and therefore proclaimed by the voice of reason, are wholly unassailable; and if men were accustomed whilst in the mad career of ambition, or influenced by the lust of power or gain, to listen to the voice of reason, it would, perhaps, in any, certainly in our case be sufficient merely to edit her behests. But the reign of principle seems to have past.—This is the age of expediency and policy.

But whilst we concur most cheerfully and heartily with Mr. Tracy in his principles, we cannot assent to all his inferences—or in other words, we do not think all his conclusions flow legitimately from his premises. Especially do we doubt the soundness of the analogical part of his reasoning. It is a capital article of our political faith, that the people of the colony called Liberia, are invested by their Creator, with the right to acquire territory by fair purchases—to employ all the means within their bona fide territorial limits necessary to advance their individual and social happiness and virtue, to arrange the conditions on which strangers may come amongst them—that this right can only be afflicted or alienated by compact, and that until they have restricted themselves by compact—or so long as they do not violate the rights of others, they are accountable for the manner in which they exercise their rights to none but God and themselves. Although we believe this with all the certitude of faith, and cannot consent to blot it from our creed, yet we are unable to discover any analogy between Liberia in its present relations, and the ancient Electorate of Hanover, while under the government of British monarchy of the house of Brunswick.

We are told that the John Seys is cleared, and that her owner Mr. Benson, has been tendered with a bill of some ten or twelve hundred dollars expences!! This is something new under the sun, and capital for the lawyers and office holders. Take a man's vessel, keep her until she is rotten, and then tell him he can have her back by paying all the bills which may be made out against her. This reminds us of an anecdote of a certain justice in Virginia, who, whenever a colored man was carried before him, whom he could not by any torturing or twisting of evidence condemn, was accustomed to conclude, "well I believe the nigger is innocent. constable! whip him and clear him."

Ki Bah, whose illness we mentioned in our last number, has paid the debt of nature. As usual in such cases, the country is in an uproar. Some eight or ten persons in a neighboring village were shot dead, under suspicion of witching his majesty. At one time there was every appearance that the whole Bassa country would be in a general war; but afterward it was concluded in a palaver to stop the war and make a "Devil palaver." This will be an affair of years, and after all perhaps, end in a scrimmage. The people of Little Bassa have agreed to hold no more devil palaver. It would be well to remind them of this agreement, and so keep quietness in our own borders. The population of this country is about ten thousand, and the people having sold us the territory, and transferred the sovereignty to us, we are bound by every consideration of regard to their welfare and our interest, to subject them gradually to our laws, so far as they are applicable to their consition, and in all questions involving war or peace, as well in those likely to lead to these issues, the voice of the colony should be the supreme arbitor.

ACCIDENTS.

The last month has been fruitful in accidents. Messrs Payne and Yates lost their fine boat The Spy, she went on shore near the Bar and was litterally crushed by the surf. A few days afterward at the same place, Mr. Mc Gill's boat—Here she goes, was totally wrecked, after losing an anchor and chain at Digby.

Only a few days afterward a Krooman was mortally wounded by an old gun, which had been loaded some months, and which the Krooman by repeated attempts had not been able to fire. The Krooman survived only one day.

The day after the accident last mentioned occurred, a Fishman was drowned by the upsetting of a boat in the harbour.

The English schooner Dynamyne, Captain Day, just 30 days from Liverpool, struck on a sunken rock, off Rock Cess, and went down in about five fathoms water, about 4 hours afterward. The Captain and crew took to their boats with the nautical instruments and a small stock of clothing, and reached the shore. The natives fell upon them, robbed them of all they had with them, stripping the clothes from their persons. The accident occurred on the 13th ult.

On the evening of the 25th ult. the eastern end of the Presbyterian Church fell in.

Journal of an African Cruiser. This little work is now before us. We have hastily scanned its pages, and think that it is on the whole, as fair and candid a statement of things on the coast as we have lately seen. Of course, we refer to that part of it which refers to places and things with which we are acquainted. The journalist appears to have been free from prejudice for or against the colony, and therefore has put down things as they are and not as fancy would have them. We are pleased with the visits of men of sense and observation; and we have nothing to fear from their testimony. However the statements of truth may occasionally exhibit some of us in a rather ridiculous light, still when all the circumstances of our case are considered, the laugh at our violations of the canon of American and European social and professional etiquette, will not be very loud. There are, however, some inaccuracies which we know the author will allow us to correct.

In chapter fifth the author says, "It being sunday, we attended the Methodist Church, Mr. Teage, Editor of the Liberia Herald, preached, * * * * on occasion of admitting three men and a woman to church-membership, &c. &c. The author is mistaken here. It was at the Baptist Church.

In chapter nineteenth, he says, "Mr. Teage formerly editor of the Liberia Herald, and preacher in the Baptist Church, where his services were most emphatically gratuitous; for he not only ministers without a stipend, but supplied the place of worship—the sacred edifice being his own private property." Mr Teage is still editor of the Liberia Herald—still, in the measure of his ability—ministers in the Baptist Church, where his services are emphatically gratuitous, for he ministers without a stipend; but he does not supply a place of worship, nor is the sacred edifice his own private property.

Bating these minor inaccuracies, the statements, so far as Liberia is concerned, give a fair and correct account of matters and things with us.

We have been informed that nearly all the rice made this year in the Dey Country, and much of what was raised on Bushrod Island, goes northward where it finds a ready market with the slavers.

By the American papers, we learn that fire has been making awful havoc in various parts of America. New York has again been the scene of a dreadful conflagration—property to the amount of $6,000,000 is said to have been consumed by one fire. In Quebec, between 1500 and 2000 houses were destroyed in June, and a number of lives lost. Loss variously estimated—from $1.600,000 to $3.000,000.

Mexico has again suffered from earthquakes. In May last, a town called Valle de Ri Blanco, in Guanajuato, was intirely swaitowed up, leaving only a large cavern where it stood. Upwards of 60 persons were buried with the city.

The famous Patuxent is at length in the toils. The suspicious circumstances which led to her seizure by the Yorktown, will be found in the following extract of a letter from Captain Bell, to Governor Roberts: With us in Africa, there is no doubt as to the character of the vessel and her intended cargo. Whether the very strong and glaring circumstances will be sufficient in American courts to condemn her, we are not prepared to say; as the slave interest has a very strong party there. The case however, will at the least open the eyes of the friends of humanity to the defects not to say absurdity of some parts of the law which affords a loop hole for every miscreant of common sense to escape.

"You have no doubt heard ere this time, of our having captured the American schooner Patuxent, N. T Davis Master. The number of water casks on board when I boarded here, led me to believe there was something wrong about her, and on a further examination at Cape Mount, I found she had African rice, and water casks sufficient for a supply of 40 days for 300 slaves—besides enough of other provisions, (as well as water,) for a much increased crew. She also has in the hold deck plank cut just to fit from one bulk head to the other: with the assistance of her Kroomen alone, a slave deck could have been laid in less than four hours, without saw or axe. She has been in the slave dealers employ ever since her arrival on the coast * * When she sailed from N. York, she brought out to Gallenas Camillo, (who had charge of the Atalanta) and two others, named Manuel and Miguel—also four Kroomen belonging to the Atalanta's crew. She after wards carried Cannot from Cape Mount and Mannel from Gallenas to Sierra Leone, where having made their purchases, she brought them with their goods to Cape Mount."

COMMUNICATION.

Having been informed that despatches of a highly important character, respecting the future posiion of these colonies, in regard to their independency, have been received from the board of Directors of the American Colonization Society; I have therefore, concluded to discontinue, at least for the present, my communication entitled, "A thought on the present as well as the future destiny of Liberia." It is hoped, however, that the hints suggested in that article, which appeared in the last number of this paper, will claim the attention and consideration of every intelligent and reflecting citizen of this commonwealth. The subject to which it refers, however lightly some may be disposed to treat it, is one of vital importance to the future prosperity of these colonies, and claims yea, imperitively demends a calm and dispassionate investigation, by every citizen of this commonwealth. And I trust there is not an enlightened member of this commonwealth, so reckless and regardless of his own interest, indentified as they certainly are, with the interests of Liberia, as to remain altogether indifferent, to what is passing around him; folding his arms, and not willing to engage with his fellow citizens in a work of so much moment and interest. Fellow citizens the present crisis imperiously demands the united efforts of every good citizen:—therefore awake from your lethargy, obey your country's call—enter hearty into the work before you, and by your advice and counsel, assist in piloting our little ship of state safely through the impending storm, that seems to be gathering around us. I am persuaded that the future hopes and prosperity of Liberia depend much, very much upon the action that may be taken by the people of these colonies, in regard to the question now before them: it is a theme equal to the capacities of the most gigantic minds, and should not be treated lightly. In your investigations, you should be actuated by a truly patriotic, free and independent spirit, guarding well the interest of Liberia. And should a change of position be resolved upon—such a change should be to preserve—it should be to rectify and remedy, if possible the almost insurmountable barriers, which have been thrown in our way by the enemies of Liberia, who envy her prosperity. It would not be unwise to follow the examples of the American fathers of 76, so far as political caution and guarded circumspection is concerned. A moral, rather than a complexional timidity was the ruling principle by which they were actuated in all their national deliberations. They acted under a strong impression of the imbecility, ignorance and fallibility of mankind; and he who had made them thus fallible, rewarded them for having in their conduct attended to their nature. Let us therefore, imitate their conduct, if we wish similar results. Construct or add to you please; but, remember to preserve inviolate what you have. Then standing "erect, self poised" on the firm basis of Liberia's constitution, we will be enabled to gaze, admire, and adore the providential hand that planted us here, and fostered means by which we have been haply, though mysteriously sustained to the present period.

THE LOWEL OFFERING.

A LETTER FROM MISS MARTINEAU.

Your interest in this Lowel book can scarcely equal mine; for I have seen the factory girls in their Lyceum, and have gone over the cotton mills at Waltham, and made myself familiar on the spot with factory life in New England; so that in reading the "Offering," I saw again in my memory the street of houses built by the earnings of the girls, themselves trooping to the mill, with their healthy countenances, and their neat dress and quiet manners, resembling those of the tradesman class of our country. My visit to Lowell was merely for one day, in company with Mr Emerson's partly,—he (the pride and boast of New England as an author and philosopher) being engaged by the Lowell factory people to lecture to them, in a winter course of historical biography. Of course the lectures were delivered in the evening, after the mills were closed. The girls were then working seventy hours a week, yet, as I looked at the large audience (and I attended more to them than the lecture) I saw no sign of weariness among any of them. There they sat, row behind row, in their own Lyceum—a large hall, wainscoted with mahogany, the platform carpeted, well lighted, provided with a handsome table, desk, and seat, and adorned with portraits of a few worthies; and as they thus sat listening to their lecturer, all wakeful and interested, all well-dressed and lady-like, I could not but feel my heart swell at the thought of what such a sight would be with us. The difference is not in rank, for these young people were all daughters of parents who earn their bread with their own hands. It is not in the amount of wages, however usual that supposition is, for they were then earning from one to three dollars a week, besides their food; the children one dollar (4*s* 3*d*;) the second-rate workers two dollars, and the best three; the cost of their dress and necessary comforts being much above what the same class expend in this country. It is not in the amount of toil; for, as I have said, they worked seventy clear hours per week. The difference was in their superior culture. Their minds are kept fresh, and strong, and free by knowledge and power of thought; and this is the reason why they are not worn and depressed under their labors. They begin with a poorer chance for health than our people, for the health of the New England women generally is not good, owing to circumstances of climate and other influences; but among the 3800 women and girls in the Lowell mills when I was there, the average of health was not lower than elsewhere; and the disease which was most mischievous was the same that proves most fatal over the whole country—consumption; while there were no complaints peculiar to mill life. At Waltham, where I saw the mills, and conversed with the people, I had an opportunity of observing the invigorating effects of MIND in a life of labor. Twice the wages and half the toil would not have made the girls I saw happy and healthy without that cultivation of mind which afforded them perpetual support, entertainment and motive for activity. They were not highly educated but they pleasure in books and lectures, in correspondence with home; and had their minds so open to fresh ideas, as to be drawn off from thoughts of themselves and their own concerns. When at work they were amused with thinking over the last book they had read, or with planning the account they should write home of the last Sunday's sermon, or with singing over to themselves the song they meant to practise in the evening; and when evening came, nothing was heard of tired limbs and eagerness for bed, but, if it was summer, they sallied out, the moment tea was over, for a walk, and, if it was winter, to the lecture-room, or to the ball-room for a dance, or they got an hour's practice at the piano, or wrote home, or shut themselves up with a new book. It was during the hours of work in the mill that the papers in the "Offering" were meditated, and it was after work in the evenings that they were penned. There is, however, in the case of these girls, a stronger support, a more elastic spring of vigour and cheerfulness, than even an active and cultivated understanding. The institution of factory labor has brought ease of heart to many; and to many occasion for noble and generous deeds. the ease of heart is given to those who were before suffering in silent poverty, from the deficiency of profitable employment for women, which is even greater in America than with us. It used to be understood there that all women were maintained by the men of their families; but the young men of New England are apt to troop off into the West, to settle in new lands, leaving sisters at home. Some few return to fetch a wife, but the greater number do not, and thus a vast over proportion of young women remains; and to a multitude of these the opening of factories was a most welcome event, affording means of honorable maintenance, in exchange for pining poverty at home. As for the noble deeds, it makes one's heart glow to stand in these mills, and hear of the domestic history of some who are working before one's eyes unconscious of being observed or of being the object of any admiration. If one of the sons of a New England farmer shows a love for books and thought, the ambition of an affectionate sister is roused, and she thinks of the glory and honor to the whole family, and the blessing to him if he could have a college education. She ponders this till she tells her parents some day, of her wish to go to Lowell, and earn the means of sending her brother to college. The desire is yet more urgent if the brother has a pious mind, and a wish to enter the ministry. Many a clergyman in America has been prepared for his function by the devoted industry of sisters; and many a scholar and professional man dates his elevation in social rank and usefulness from his sister's, or even some affectionate aunt's entrance upon mill life, for his sake. Many girls, perceiving anxiety in their fathers' faces on account of the farm being incumbered, and age coming on without release from the debt, have gone to Lowell, and worked till the mortgage was paid off, and the little family property free. Such motives may well lighten and sweeten labor; and to such girls labor is light and sweet. Some, who have no such unite the surplus of their earnings to build dwellings for their own residence, six, eight, or twelve living together with the widowed mother, or elderly aunt of one of them to keep house for, and give countenance to the party. I saw a whole street of houses so built and owned at Waltham; pretty frame houses, with the broad piazza, and the green venetian blinds, that give such an air of coolness and pleasantness to American village and country abodes. There is the large airy eating-room, with a few prints hung up, the piano, at one end, and the united libraries of the girls, forming a good looking array of books, the rocking-chairs universal in America, the stove adorned in summer with flowers, and the long dining-table in the middle. The chambers do not answer our English ideas of comfort. There is there a strange absence of the wish for privacy; and more girls are accommodated in one room than we should see any reason for in such comfortable and pretty houses. In the mills the girls have quite the appearance of ladies. They sally forth in the morning, with their umbrellas in threatning weather, their calashes to keep their hair neat, gowns of print or gingham, with a perfect fit, worked collars or pelerines, and waistbands of ribbon. For Sundays and social evenings they have their silk gowns, and neat gloves and shoes. Yet through proper economy,—the economy of educated and thoughtful people,—they are able to lay by for such purposes as I have mentioned above. The deposits in the Lowell Savings' Bank were, in 1834, upwards of 114,000 dollars, the number of operatives being 5000, of whom 3800 were women and girls. I thank you for calling my attention back to this subject. It is one I have pleasure in recurring to.

There is nothing in America which necessitates the prosperity of manufacturers as agriculture, and there is nothing of good in their factory system which may not be emulated elsewhere--equaled elsewhere, when the people employed are so educated as to have the command of themselves and of their lot in life, which is always and everywhere controlled by mind, far more than by outward circumstances. I am &c. H. MARTINEAU.

From the Journal of an African Cruiser.

It is now fourteen months since our ship first visited Monrovia. Within that period there has been a very perceptible improvement in its condition. The houses are in better repair; the gardens under superior cultivation. There is an abundant supply of cattle, which have been purchased from the natives. More merchant vessels now make this their port, bringing goods hither, and creating a market for the commodities of live stock and vegetables, of the colonists. An increased amount of money is in circulation; and the inhabitants find that they can dispose of the products of their industry for something better than the cloth and tobacco, which they were formerly obliged to take in payment. The squadron of United States men of war, if it do no other good, will at least have an essential share in promoting the prosperity of Liberia.

After having seen much, and reflected upon the subject even to weariness, I write down my opinion, that Liberia is firmly planted, and is destined to increase and prosper. This it will do, though all further support from the United States be discontinued. A large part of the present population, it is true, are ignorant, and incompetent to place a just estimate of freedom, or even to comprehend what freedom really is. But they are generally improving in this respect; and there is already a sufficient intermixture of intelligent, enterprising and sagacious men, to give the proper tone to the colony, and insure ultimate success. The great hope, however, is in the generation that will follow these original emigrants. Education is universally diffused among the children; and its advantages, now beginning to be very manifest, will, in a few years, place the destinies of this great enterprise in the hands of men born and bred in Africa. Then, and not till then, will the experiment of African colonization, and of the ability of the colonists for self support and government, have been fairly tried. My belief is firm in a valuable result.

Meantime, it would be wiser in the Colonization Society, and its more zealous members, to moderate their tone, and speak less strongly as to the advantages held out by Liberia. Unquestionably, it is a better country than America, for the colored race. But they will find it very far from a paradise. Men, who expect to become independent and respectable, can only achieve their object here on the same terms as everywhere else. They must cultivate their minds, be willing to exert themselves, and not look for a too easy or too rapid rise of fortune. One thing is certain. People of color have here their fair position in the comparative scale of mankind. The white man, who visits Liberia, be he of what rank he may, and however imbued with the prejudice of hue, associates with the colonists on terms of equality. This would be impossible (speaking not of individuals, but of the general intercourse between the two races) in the United States. The colonist feels his advantage in this respect, and reckons it of greater weight in the balance than all the hardships to which he is obliged to submit, in an unwonted climate and a strange country. He is redeemed from ages of degradation, and rises to the erect stature of humanity. On this soil, sun parched though it be, he gives the laws; and the white man must obey them. In this point of view—as restoring to him his long lost birthright of equality—Liberia may indeed be called the black man's paradise.

It is difficult to lay too great stress on the above consideration. When the white man sets his foot on the shore of Africa, he finds it necessary to throw off his former prejudices. For my own part, I have dined at the tables of many colored men in Liberia, have entertained them on shipboard, worshipped with them at church; walked, rode, and associated with them, as equal with equal, if not as friend with friend. Were I to meet these men in my own town, and among my own relatives I would treat them kindly and hospitably, as they have treated me. My position would give me confidence to do so. But, in another city, where I might be known to few, should I follow the dictates of my head and heart, and there treat these colored men as brethren and equals, it would imply the exercise of greater moral courage than I have ever been conscious of possessing. This is sad; but it shows forcibly what the colored race have to struggle against in America, and how vast an advantage is gained by removing them to another soil!

POETRY

NOT ON THE BATTLE FIELD.

BY JOHN PIERPONT.

"To fall on the battle field fighting for my dear country—that would not be hard."—THE NEIGHBORS

O no, no—let me lie
Not on a field of battle, when I die!
Let not the iron tread
Of the mad war-horse crush my helmed head:
Nor let the reeking knife,
That I have drawn against a brother, s life,
Be in my hand when death
Thunders along, and tramples me beneath
His heavy squadron's heels,
Or gory felloes of his cannon's wheels.

From scuh a dying bed,
Though o'er it float the stripes of white and red,
And the bald Eagle bring
The clustered stars upon his wide-spread wings,
To sparkle in my sight,
O! never let my spirit take her flight!
I know that Beauty's eye
Is all the brighter where gay pennants fly,
And brazen helmets dance,
And sunshine flashes on the lifted lance:
I know that bards have sung,
And people shouted till the welkin rung,
In honour of the brave
Who on the battle-field have found a grave;
I know that o'er their bones
Have grateful hands piled monumental stones.
Some of these piles I've seen:
The one at Lexington upon the green
Where the first blood was shed
That to my country's independence led;
And others, on our shore,
The "Battle Monument" at Baltimore,
And that on Bunker's Hill.
Ay, and abroad, a few more famous still;
Thy "Tomb," Themistocles,
That looks out yet upon the Grecian seas.
And which the waters kiss
That issue from the gulf of Salamis,
And thine, too, have I seen,
Thy mound of earth, Patroclus, robed in green,
That like a natural knoll,
Sheep climb and nibble over, as they stroll,
Watched by some turban'd boy,
Upon the margin of the plain of Troy.

Such honours grace the bed,
I know, whereon the warrior lays his head,
And hears, as life ebbs out,
The conquered flying, and the conqueror's shout.
But, as his eyes grow dim,
What is a column or amound to him?
What, to the parting soul,
The mellow notes of bugles? What the roll
Of drums? No: let me die
Where the blue heaven bends o'er me lovingly.
And the soft summer air,
As it goes by me, stirs my thin white hair,
And from my forehead dries
The death-damp as it gathers, and the skies
Seem waiting to receive
My soul to their clear depths! Or let me leave
The world, when round my bed
Wife, children, weeping friends are gathered,
And the calm voice of prayer
And holy hymning shall my soul prepare
To go and be at rest
With kindred spirits—spirits who have blessed
The human brotherhood
By labours, cares, and counsels for their good.

And in my dying hour,
When riches, fame, and honour have no power
To bear the spirit up,
Or from my lips to turn aside the cup
That all must drink at last,
O! let me draw refreshment from the past!
Then let my soul run back,
With peace and joy, along my earthly track,
And see that all the seeds,
That I have scattered there, in various deeds
Have sprung up, and have given,
Already, fruits of which to taste is heaven!

And though no grassy mound
Or granite pile say 'tis heroic ground
Where my remains repose,
Still will I hope—vain hope, perhaps, that those Whom I have striven to bless,
The wanderer reclaimed, the fatherless,
May stand around my grave,
With the poor prisoner and the poorer slave,
And breathe an humble prayer,
That they may die like him whose bones are mouldering there.

MODESTY seldom resides in a breast that is not enriched with nobler virtue.

MISCELLANEOUS

From the Living Age.

EBEN ELENDER, THE MOOR-FARMER.

EBENEZER ALEXANDER, or, as he was usually called, Eoen Elshender, a native of the north of Scotland, was originally a manufacturer, but not being successful in this line, and falling into low spirits, he went to spend some time at a village where an elder and more prosperous brother had a bleaching establishment, in the hope of recovering the tone of his mind by means of country air and exercise. The place seemed at first sight unlikely to cheer up an invalid of the mind, being situated in a high and sterile district with a northeast exposure, and far from all other human haunts; but things turned out much better than might have been expected, and we shall tell how this came about.
